LETTER OF INSTRUCTIONS.

My Lord,

Whitehall, May 10, 1870.

With reference to allegations which have from time to time been made on the subject of the treatment of prisoners under sentences of penal servitude in convict prisons in England for the crime of treason-felony, I am directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to request that you will, in conjunction with the gentlemen named in the margin, inquire and report to him:—

1. Whether there is anything in the treatment, diet, or discipline of the convict prisons to justify any charges of unnecessary severity or harshness towards the prisoners confined therein; or of neglect of the conditions necessary for the due preservation of the health of the prisoners.

2. Whether the treason-felony prisoners have been subjected to any exceptional treatment in any way, or have suffered any hardships beyond those incident to the condition of a prisoner sentenced to penal servitude.

You are authorized to call before you and examine any person whose evidence may be necessary to enable you to carry out this inquiry, and to call for and examine any prison books which you may desire to inspect.

I am further to request you to communicate with the Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons, who has been instructed to afford you all necessary facilities for making this inquiry.

Mr. Bruce has requested your Lordship to preside at the inquiry as Chairman, and to communicate with the other gentlemen named in regard to the arrangements for carrying it into effect.

I am, my Lord,

Your Lordship's obedient servant,

A. F. O. LIDDELL.

REPORT.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE HENRY AUSTIN BRUCE, HER MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

SIR,

On the 18th day of May 1870, we received the annexed letter written by your direction as Secretary of State for the Home Department, referring to allegations made respecting the treatment of prisoners under sentence of penal servitude in convict prisons in England, for the crime of treason-felony, and requesting us to inquire into and report to you upon the following questions, viz. :—

- 1st. "Whether there is anything in the treatment, diet, or discipline of the convict prisons to justify any charge of unnecessary severity or harshness towards the prisoners confined therein, or of neglect of the conditions necessary for the due preservation of their health; and
- 2ndly. Whether the treason-felony prisoners have been subjected to any exceptional treatment in any way, or have suffered any hardships beyond those incidental to the condition of a prisoner sentenced to penal servitude."

2. We also received from Captain Du Cane, the Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons, a statement showing the number and names of the prisoners of the above description then in English prisons, and the prisons in which they were respectively confined. Our investigation being limited to the cases of treason-felony prisoners confined in English prisons at the date of our appointment, we have abstained from any inquiry either into the Irish prisons in which some of them had been confined previously to their transmission to England, or into the treatment of those who, having been in English prisons, had been already released.

Captain Du Cane,
Questions 12 and 13,
Appendix A.

3. We gave notice, however, as will appear hereafter, that we should be ready to receive the evidence, if tendered, of any released prisoners, so far as it might appear to us to bear upon the subject of our inquiry.

4. From Captain Du Cane's statement it appeared that there were at Woking prison eight treason-felony prisoners, viz. :—

Thomas F. Bourke.
Brian Dillon.
Denis D. Mulcahy.
William F. Rountree.

John Murphy.
Patrick Ryan.
Edward Power.
Richard O'S. Burke, alias Berry.

At Chatham prison six, viz. :—

John Devoy.
C. U. O'Connell.
John McClure.

William Halpin, alias John Hart.
J. O'Donovan Rossa.
Henry Shaw, alias Mullidy.

At Dartmoor prison one, viz. :—
Patrick Lennon.

At Portland prison eleven, viz. :—

George Brown.

W. Mackay.
John O'Leary.
Michael Sheehy.
Mortimer Shea, alias Moriarty.

5. We desire to record at the outset our sense of the readiness shown, as well by the Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons and his colleagues, as by the officers of the several prisons, in supplying us, whether spontaneously or on our request, with all such information as was material to our inquiry, and our conviction that a general desire exists on the part of the Prison Department, and has been uniformly manifested, to facilitate and secure a complete, detailed, and searching investigation.

6. At our first meeting, which took place on the 24th day of May 1870, and also at several subsequent meetings, we had under our careful consideration the mode of conducting our inquiry.

7. Having regard to the fact that our instructions expressly referred to allegations of harsh and unjust treatment made by or on behalf of the treason-felony prisoners, we thought it our duty to secure for them full opportunity of bringing forward and supporting any such allegations, whether of exceptional hardships or of hardships arising from the general operation of the convict system. In cases where individual officers might be incriminated, we felt it no less our duty to give them full opportunity of making any counter statement which they might desire to lay before us. It was also clearly incumbent upon us, under the first head of our inquiry, and apart from any complaints, either general or special, which might be preferred, to examine into the diet, medical attendance, sanitary arrangements, labour, discipline, and religious teaching and worship in each prison, and to form in an independent judgment on the double question, whether the treason-felony prisoners, as a class, had been treated with peculiar harshness, and whether the ordinary conditions of penal servitude, as affecting them individually, were needlessly severe or injurious to health.

8. Proceeding on these principles, we determined to visit each of the above-named prisons, to investigate personally their interior economy and management, and to take such evidence as might be relevant to either branch of our inquiry. The further course of our procedure was the subject of much anxious discussion, and the conclusions at which we ultimately arrived upon it were not adopted without some division of opinion.

9. The first question which engaged our attention was that of permitting counsel to appear before us.

10. It was urged upon us by many of the prisoners, and strong representations to the same effect were on several occasions addressed to us by their friends, that in order to afford to each person, when bringing forward his complaint or charge, all the assistance to which he had a just claim, and to secure a thorough and impartial investigation, it was necessary that counsel should be present during the inquiry and take part in the examination. It was further urged that reporters on behalf of the public press should be allowed to attend and to report the proceedings and evidence.

11. We considered these representations with a single desire to adopt that course which would best tend to the discovery of the truth.

12. Considering, however, the special character of the investigation, our inability to administer an oath, the fact that the employment of counsel on the one side to examine and cross-examine would necessarily involve the employment of counsel on the other with similar functions and powers, and the mischief which would result from the partial and premature publication of evidence, we decided by a majority that it would be inconsistent with the satisfactory conduct of the inquiry to admit the presence of either counsel or reporters. The correspondence which passed on this subject will be found in Appendix B.

13. The second question that arose had reference to the opportunities and means to be allowed to prisoners for preparing and bringing forward their statements. After mature deliberation we decided by a majority on acquainting each prisoner with the facilities afforded by the following regulations, which were also made public by advertisement in newspapers in Ireland.

REGULATIONS as to the FACILITIES to be given to TREASON-FELONY PRISONERS who may wish to make STATEMENTS before the COMMISSIONERS.

1. The prisoners will have full opportunity for making an oral statement to the Commissioners as regards their treatment; such statement to be made in a private room, in the absence of any prison officer, and after a distinct intimation from the Commissioners, to which they will give full effect, that no statement so made will in any way prejudicially affect the prisoners' future position and treatment.

2. They will further have full opportunity for making written statements, and for offering such oral explanations of them as they may desire. Writing materials will be provided for them, and three days' intermission from labour allowed, if wished.

3. The Commissioners will be prepared to receive any statement in writing from any friend of the prisoner, or any person acting on his behalf, and to take the oral evidence of any witness, (including, if desired, any released prisoner), which may appear relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts.

4. The Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State that access to any prisoner, at a reasonable hour and for a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting him in the preparation of his statement, should be allowed to friends of such prisoner, under such regulations and conditions as the Government may think necessary. Application in such case should be made to the Home Office.

5. The evidence will be taken down by a short-hand writer.

6. The report and evidence will be made public.

14. In consequence of the intimation thus given to the prisoners, we received applications from many of them to be allowed to see various documents connected with their prison life, which they alleged to be material, in order to enable them to prepare statements to be submitted to us. These applications were uniformly referred by us to the Board of Directors of Convict Prisons, with an expression of our hope that, as far as considerations of public policy would permit, the documents asked for would be furnished. Such of those documents as the authorities thought could properly be given, were placed in the prisoners' hands. Others, considered to be of a confidential character, were furnished to us for our assistance in the inquiry. Appendix C. contains a list of both classes of documents. Adequate time was of course allowed by us to the prisoners for consideration of the papers so given to them. It was provided also that due notice should be given to each prisoner of the day when the Commissioners would attend for the purpose of receiving his evidence.

15. Having thus stated the nature and character of the preliminary steps taken by us, we proceed to lay before you the subsequent course and results of our inquiry.

16. We visited the following prisons, viz., Millbank, Pentonville, Portland, Chatham, Dartmoor, and Woking, the last two of which are intended for the reception of invalid convicts. Though none of the prisoners included in our inquiry were at the time of our visit inmates of Millbank or Pentonville, they had all (with the exception of Michael Sheehy, and Mortimer Shea, who were transferred from Mountjoy to Portland,) been located in one or other of those prisons on being first brought over from Ireland. They were so located in accordance with the rule under which all prisoners sentenced to penal servitude are in the first instance, and ordinarily for a period of nine months at least, sent to either Millbank or Pentonville, in which the system is one of separate labour and (except in the infirmary) separate cells during the whole period. At Portland, Chatham, Dartmoor, and Woking, while the majority of the prisoners occupy separate sleeping cells, the system of association in labour, and (generally speaking) in exercise, prevails.

17. In each of the prisons thus visited we examined orally such of the prisoners as desired to give evidence, some of whom had previously sent in written statements. We also examined those of the officers whose evidence appeared to us likely to be material.

18. Of the evidence thus given, whether in writing or orally, some portions were general, having reference to the ordinary system of treatment, diet, and discipline in convict prisons; others related specially to the treason-felony prisoners, and bore upon the question whether or not they had been subjected to any exceptional hardship.

19. With regard to the general evidence above referred to, which bears upon the first branch of our inquiry, we desire to observe that we have not considered ourselves directed or authorized to frame a comprehensive report upon the whole subject of convict prisons. The inquiries made by us have simply had for their object to ascertain whether, in the regulations and management of those prisons which it was our duty to visit, there was anything to justify charges of unnecessary severity or of want of due care for the preservation of health.

PART I.

20. Having visited with this view the prisons of Dartmoor, Portland, Chatham, Woking, Millbank, and Pentonville, we feel justified in reporting favourably of their general administration in respect of treatment, diet, and discipline. The governors and other officers appear to us, as a body, well qualified for the discharge of their arduous duties, while careful, frequent, and responsible supervision by the central department is calculated to provide a wholesome safeguard against possible abuses of power. Neither in the system itself nor in its ordinary operation, due regard being had to the fact that convict prisons are intended to be places of penal discipline, did we observe anything to justify charges of unnecessary severity or harshness, or a neglect of the conditions necessary for the due preservation of health. There are, however, certain points upon which we desire to qualify this general opinion, and shall think it right to suggest alteration.

21. The general subject naturally divides itself into the several heads of diet, medical attendance, sanitary arrangements, labour, discipline, and religious teaching and worship, and we propose to deal with these seriatim.

22. We append tables showing the dietary now in use at the various convict prisons, which is founded on the results of an elaborate and exhaustive inquiry conducted by a Royal Commission in 1854. The proportion of solid food was somewhat increased at Chatham on the special report of a committee in 1867, and the difference is believed to be no more than a compensation for the greater exposure and heavier nature of the labour on the Chatham works. Judging from the physical appearance of the convicts, as well as from the evidence of their general healthiness, we see no reason to doubt the sufficiency of the existing dietary in quantity, unless in seasons of unusual severity, or where labour as heavy as that at Chatham is enforced. In such cases, or under other extraordinary circumstances, it seems to us that an increase of diet may be required; and we venture to recommend that hot rations should always be issued instead of cheese for the Sunday dinner, a practice already adopted in some instances.

23. We inquired with care and minuteness into the dietary of the several prisons visited, and the quality of the food, personally inspecting in many instances the provisions in store, tasting the food when dressed, and testing it in the rations of individual prisoners. We see no reason to doubt that, in the vast majority of instances, the food is wholesome and good of its kind. We have carefully inspected the bread in all stages in most of the prisons which we have visited. It is made of best seconds flour, which, when examined, appeared good and wholesome. We have on some occasions observed that the bread did not appear to have been thoroughly leavened, and that the dough had not fully risen; and we also noticed, in some instances, that the bread had not been sufficiently baked. Bread forms such an important staple of the prisoners' diet, that too much care cannot be devoted to its preparation.

24. We tasted the soup in several prisons, and found it good. So far as we could ascertain, however, the skins of beef, which are the chief ingredients in it, are not uniformly subject to the same inspection as other supplies of meat before reception by the storekeepers. The tea supplied to certain classes of the prisoners also attracted our attention; it appeared to us to be of inferior character, owing to its being kept too long in the cauldron before use.

25. With a view to preclude all possible grounds of complaint on the score of bad quality, we recommend that a more frequent and direct supervision of the meat and other articles of diet should form part of the duties of medical officers of prisons.

Medical Attendance, &c.

26. We have every reason to believe that the prisoners receive due care and attention from the medical officers. At the same time, it appears that medical officers of convict prisons are not required to possess qualifications both in medicine and surgery, and that, in some instances and at certain seasons, the sole medical charge of a large infirmary, and of 1,300 or 1,500 convicts out of hospital, devolves upon a single officer, having only one professional qualification. We cannot regard this as satisfactory, and would suggest the expediency of making such regulations in reference to the medical staff of convict prisons as will ensure a thoroughly efficient treatment of all cases, both medical and surgical, at all times, including the period during which the chief medical officer may be absent on temporary leave.

27. We are further of opinion that each prisoner should be medically examined on admission with greater precision than appears to be now the practice, and the result entered in detail upon the paper containing his prison history. A more frequent inspection of those not on the sick list would also be of service in guarding against the risk of a prisoner being employed upon work for which his constitution may be unfit, though he may not have actually complained to the medical officer. For a similar reason, it might be well that all prisoners should be weighed at certain regular intervals of time, and their weights duly registered. Considering the depressing influences of convict life, the statistics of mortality and disease in the prisons are creditable to the medical officers, but it is certain that in order to preserve the working power of convicts from permanent deterioration, unusual precautions are needed. The suggestion and enforcement of such precautions would naturally fall within the province of medical inspection, and we respectfully submit for the consideration of the Government the question of instituting such an inspection of convict prisons at stated periods.

28. We found the infirmary accommodation and the ventilation of the wards, for the most part, sufficient, and all proper provision made for the comfort of patients. We are bound, however, to state that at Pentonville the infirmary wards did not seem to us so suitable for their purpose as those in the other convict prisons. There seems to be no want of liberality in the scale of infirmary dietary, which can be adapted to individual cases at the absolute discretion of the medical officer. But it would probably be more convenient, as well as more conducive to a skilful preparation of food suitable for the sick, that a separate kitchen or cooking department should be appropriated in each prison, to the infirmary, and that all provisions for the infirmary should be subject to regular inspection by the medical officer.

Sanitary Arrangements.

29. With regard to sanitary arrangements, a distinction is to be made not only between the close prisons and public works' prisons, but also between Millbank and Pentonville. In all, cleanliness is scrupulously enforced, and there is a free circulation of air through the corridors. In the close prisons and in the penal-class wards of the public works' prisons the cells are of adequate size, though not, in all cases, so well lighted as might be desired. In the public works' prisons and in parts of the invalid prison at Woking, the cells, being designed mainly for sleeping, are much smaller, and, as we think, too small for health, unless further provision be made for ventilation. All the dark cells, but especially those at Millbank, appeared to us imperfectly ventilated—a defect which the entire exclusion of light renders the more injurious to health.* The plan of having a watercloset in each cell, as in some wards at Pentonville, is open to much objection on sanitary grounds; but it is obvious that, in the absence of this convenience, facilities of access to closets in the wards should be freely granted; and this, we fear, is not always secured by the actual management of convict prisons. We may add that we cannot approve of the custom formerly general, and still prevailing in one or two prisons, whereby two or more prisoners are made to bathe in the same water, or in water which flows under contiguous partitions of the same bath.

Labour.

30. The average amount of labour exacted from convicts at the public works cannot be deemed excessive for able-bodied men, as compared with that performed by an equal number of free labourers. Still, it is probable that some prisoners, though not weakly enough to be exempted on a preliminary medical examination, do actually suffer from the labour imposed, at least so far as to fall off materially in weight. This would easily be detected by periodical weighing and more frequent medical inspection, and, where detected, would be a proper ground for reducing the amount of work or altering its nature. It may also be a subject for consideration whether, after a preliminary stage of probation, a discriminating adjustment of prison labour to the previous habits and individual capacity of prisoners, might not afford a valuable means of rewarding good conduct, and likewise a wholesome reformatory influence on character.

Discipline.

31. There are several subjects under the head of prison discipline on which it appears to us that a revision of the existing rules is requisite.

32. The first of these is the privilege of memorializing the Home Secretary. We found that very conflicting opinions were entertained by directors and governors of convict prisons as to the extent of this privilege, especially where the subject of the memorial is unjust or negligent treatment. We ascertained that in different prisons the practical limitations of the privilege are materially different, and that upon the whole its exercise is too dependent on the discretion of the very authorities whose conduct may be impugned to be of much value as an appeal in the last resort. We think that, whatever may be the proper definition of this right, it ought to be embodied in some distinct rule, and formally explained to every prisoner on his reception.

33. The restrictions now imposed on the writing and receipt of letters may, in our judgment, be somewhat mitigated without prejudice to discipline. A prisoner's health is, of all subjects, the one on which his friends may naturally desire to be kept informed, and we are of opinion that any existing rule which precludes him from communicating with them on this subject, is of doubtful necessity, and calls for further consideration. Nor are we satisfied that it can ever be proper to inflict an absolute prohibition of letter writing for an indefinite time by way of punishment, even where a prisoner has not emerged from the probationary class, or has been relegated into it. We think, moreover, that whenever a letter is suppressed, whether addressed to a prisoner or written by him, the fact and the reasons should be forthwith communicated to him; that, in the latter case, he should be allowed, at least once, to write another letter in lieu of the suppressed letter; and that in the former the letter should be returned to the writer, with a statement of the cause of suppression, the prisoner being also informed of the name of the writer. We are further of opinion that it is deserving of consideration whether a prisoner may not be permitted to write to and receive from his nearest relatives a short letter at more frequent intervals than is at present allowed, and whether the existing privilege of receiving visits may not be extended on a similar principle.

34. The established method of trial and punishment for prison offences has constantly forced itself upon our attention, and we are by no means insensible of the many difficulties which surround the subject. The duty of estimating and dealing with those difficulties must rest with those who are responsible for the government of convict prisons, but we feel bound to specify what seemed to us the doubtful points of the system.

11,317. 13,274.

35. One of these points is the habitual exclusion of one prisoner's testimony in corroboration of a statement made by another, whether on the occasion of a complaint made by a prisoner against an officer, or a report made by an officer against a prisoner. We are fully sensible of the essential importance of avoiding everything which may tend to impair the means of maintaining due discipline, but we nevertheless question whether the practice above referred to (which if not universally in force, is yet observed in the great majority of cases) is consistent with the attainment of that which is the object of all inquiry, viz., the knowledge of the real facts of the case. We do not mean to imply that a prisoner's evidence, if tendered, should always be taken, but we think that it should be always treated as admissible, quantum valeat, in accordance with the rule on the subject contained in the general regulations for convict prisons.

36. The somewhat arbitrary use of handcuffs, as a measure of restraint, calls for notice in this place, though we defer to a later part of our report the observations which arise out of one particular case in which they were employed.

14,335. 14,336. 14,814.
Ac.

37. As to the power of imposing handcuffs, we have taken the evidence of the Chairman of the Directors, and we have also examined several governors and deputy-governors.

39. The imposition of manacles at Millbank is supposed, according to the evidence of the governor, to be restricted to 24 hours, day and night included, with removal only for the purpose of access to the watercloset. At Woking Prison, by an entry of May 1st, 1859, in the Prisoners Misconduct Book, we find that manacles may be imposed for a period of 72 hours, "with the usual period of release, one hour after each 24 hours." We find a very great concurrence of opinion that manacles may be imposed for a period of 72 hours, and no longer, except under a renewed order. Finally, the Chairman, while admitting that the period of 72 hours cannot be exceeded without reference to a director, stated that in his opinion, under a liberal construction of this rule, provided the full period of the order is not exhausted by the continuous imposition of manacles for 72 consecutive hours, day and night, at any one time, a prisoner may, if the governor deems fit, be kept in manacles an indefinite time.

40. In view of this statement we cannot consider that even by the recent standing order, No. 325*, the power of imposition of manacles is defined with sufficient clearness or precision, and we recommend the reconsideration of the subject to the special attention of the authorities.

41. We are, moreover, of opinion, that, except for the immediate control of personal violence, and for a short period, to be defined by the Directors, manacles should not be imposed without the written order of a governor or deputy-governor after a hearing of the case; that in any case in which manacles are imposed, the prisoner should be conveyed with all convenient speed before a governor or deputy-governor; that the order should in all cases specify the manner in which the manacles are to be applied, whether in front or behind, and the period for which they are to be so continued; that a fresh written order be issued for each day on which the same rules are to be applied, and that entries of such punishments should be duly made.

* "The governor will enter in his journal any case of a prisoner being placed under restraint, with the day and hour of that restraint being put on and taken off or changed in manner of application. A prisoner is not to be kept in irons by the governor for a longer period than 72 hours, without the written order of a director, specifying the cause thereof and the time during which the prisoner is to be kept in irons, and whether irons or handcuffs are to be placed in front or behind, which order shall be preserved by the governor as his warrant."

42. We have had under careful consideration the question of the use of dark cells as a means of restraint or punishment. The evidence shows that in the majority of the prisons visited by us they are rarely used, and that their employment is not uniformly regulated by the same rules. At Pentonville and Dartmoor the governors informed us that refractory prisoners are not kept in dark cells for more than four hours, whereas at Chatham we have found that a prisoner has been frequently so confined for a period varying from one to three days. We are not prepared to recommend the entire abolition of dark cells. We are, however, of opinion that confinement in a dark cell is not to be justified as a simple measure of restraint, since the admission of light is consistent with the adoption of every necessary precaution against violence. It is, in fact, a very severe punishment; as such it ought not, we think, to be inflicted without a previous hearing of the case, and a written order of a governor or deputy-governor, nor ought it to be continued beyond 12 hours without a fresh written order. We think also that a prisoner in a dark cell should be allowed to retain his bed, blanket, and rug, while confined therein. The provision for ventilation in dark cells (to which we have already called attention as being in some instances defective) should be thoroughly examined, and, where necessary, improved.

43. Punishment for prison offences by diminution of food, or alteration in the kind given, is common in all the prisons which we visited. Bread-and-water diet under which 1 lb. of bread is allowed daily, is frequently employed for a period of from one to three days by a governor's sentence. It may also be extended to 28 days by the sentence of a director, with penal class diet every fourth day.* Penal class diet may likewise be imposed by a director for six months, and may immediately succeed 28 days bread and water. We cannot but call attention to the very serious consequences which may result from continuing such punishments too long or repeating them too frequently. In our opinion 28 days confinement in a penal cell, on bread and water, varied with penal class diet every fourth day, or penal class diet for six months, can hardly fail to be in some degree injurious to ordinary constitutions. We regard the whole subject as one which needs further consideration, not only from a disciplinary, but also from a physiological, point of view.

Religious Teaching and Worship.

44. The arrangements made for religious instruction and worship, as well as the chapel accommodation, appeared to us satisfactory.

45. We have no reason to doubt (though one or two statements having an opposite tendency were made to us) that due care is taken to prevent interference with the religious creed of each prisoner.

46. We learnt, however, from the evidence, that prisoners under punishment, and in some prisons those in the infirmary, are not allowed to attend divine service.

47. With regard to those in the infirmary, we think that arrangements should be made to facilitate the attendance of all who are able to leave the sick ward; and as regards those under punishment, we entertain grave doubts whether the reason given for the prohibition, viz., that the attendance at chapel would be a temporary mitigation of the punishment enforced, should be allowed to outweigh the spiritual advantages which may accrue to every prisoner from attendance on religious service.

PART II.

48. Proceeding to the second branch of our inquiry, viz.—“Whether the treason-felony prisoners have been subjected to any exceptional treatment in any way, or have suffered any hardships beyond those incidental to the condition of a prisoner sentenced to penal servitude”—we think it more convenient to state first the general allegations applicable to some or all of the treason-felony prisoners, with such remarks upon each as may appear to us necessary.

49. We should premise, however, that certain allegations were made by two of the prisoners in reference to circumstances attending their transmission from Ireland, into which we were not in a position to inquire fully, but which we think of such a character that the attention of the proper authorities should be directed to them. It is alleged that due consideration was not shown by those in charge of the prisoners for the inconveniences incidental to a sea voyage and a long journey. Should it be found that such circumstances occurred as were detailed to us, we think it important that due provision should be made against their recurrence.

50. Searches, &c.—Of the general complaints made by the treason-felony convicts, the first had reference to the practice and mode of searching, as well on their first reception in prison as at certain periods during their confinement. The rules which prescribe and enforce searching are, with slight variations as to the frequency of the periodical searching, common to all convict prisons, and it did not appear to us that the treason-felony prisoners were subjected in this respect to any exceptional treatment, except at Pentonville, where some of them had to undergo weekly searches, as a measure of precaution, for a short period after their first arrival.

51. It was stated strongly to us by all the prison officers whom we questioned on the subject, that the maintenance of the practice of searching is necessary for the exclusion of prohibited articles, and for the personal safety of those who are charged with the custody of the prisoners. The necessity of searching, and of other strict precautions, was fully proved to us by the exhibition of dangerous weapons found concealed on the persons of prisoners, and was lamentably illustrated by the death of a warder, during the sittings of our Commission, from injuries inflicted by a prisoner on the works at Portland, and by the murderous attack lately made upon the governor of Woking Prison. We therefore do not feel justified in suggesting any change, other than that the naked search of a prisoner should not take place in the presence of other prisoners, and should be conducted by selected officers.

52. In the case of some of the treason-felony prisoners, complaint was made that, when at Pentonville, they were obliged at bedtime to put on their day clothes and cell furniture. It was explained to us by the governor that this measure, though somewhat exceptional, was enforced, not as an indignity, but as a precaution against escape; a course uniformly adopted in similar cases.

53. Deprivation of Flannels.—We find that on arrival at Pentonville the flannels supplied to the treason-felony convicts at Mountjoy prison were taken from them. We are of opinion that as they arrived in mid-winter, and as some of them appear to have been men of delicate constitutions, and one was of debilitated and weakly frame, flannels should have been given to them without waiting for the intervention of the medical officer, in lieu of those which they had worn up to that time, and which it was necessary to send back to Mountjoy prison. We are informed that the rule which made the issue of flannels dependant on the recommendation of the medical officer, has since been modified.

54. Association.—Another general complaint of the treason-felony convicts was that, whereas the offence of which they had been convicted was of a special character, implying in their view no moral degradation, they had been associated with other prisoners undergoing the sentence of penal servitude for gross and heinous crimes.

55. Waiving for the present the question of principle involved in this complaint, (to which, however, we shall hereafter advert), we proceed to state the facts.

56. Pentonville and Millbank are close prisons, in which association is neither permitted nor possible.

57. At Dartmoor none of the prisoners have been confined except Mulcahy and Lennon. Mulcahy was transferred to Dartmoor on the 8th of February 1867, and thence to Woking on the 8th of May in the same year. During that period he was associated with the ordinary prisoners. Lennon was transferred to Dartmoor on the 30th of December 1868, and is still there; he also is associated with other prisoners.

58. At Portland a different course was taken at a very early stage of the confinement of the treason-felony convicts.

59. They arrived there on the 14th of May 1866. The governor states as follows:—
 " They remained in the washhouse " (in associated labour) " for only a day or two; I " think it was five days." " I then received instructions to treat them as ordinary prisoners,
 " that is to say, that they were to be sent on to the public works, but they were to be " located by themselves, and they were to be worked in a party separate by themselves,
 " and they were so. This has continued up to the present time." In confirmation of this, we may state that when we visited Portland we saw the treason-felony prisoners placed on the public works under a separate shed, withdrawn from association with the other prisoners. It is right that we should add that though they were under the supervision of a warder they were allowed to remain without doing any work at all. Such, at least, was the case on the day of our visit. The governor, however, has subsequently informed us that since that time several of them have done some light work. We insert in the Appendix a return of work done by them for four months in the present year.

60. At Woking, the treason-felony prisoners have been employed in associated labour up to a comparatively recent period. Of late they have worked as a separate class. 3296, 3296.

61. At Chatham, except in the infirmary, the treason-felony prisoners have, as a rule, not been associated with other convicts, or employed on the public works. It appears, however, that some of these prisoners themselves applied to be allowed to labour on the public works for a short period. J. O'Donovan Rossa was for some time the only treason-felony convict in this prison, and he was then worked in association. On a subsequent occasion, 1st June 1868, as a measure of punishment, he was compelled to labour with ordinary prisoners on the public works. After some days he refused to continue at work, in consequence, as he alleges, of "the unpleasant life he led with them." For this he was reported and awarded three days' bread-and-water punishment.

62. We find that at Portland, Woking, and Chatham, arrangements exist for separation of these prisoners from the ordinary convicts when in attendance on Divine service. 3295.

63. Occupation.—Several complaints were made by these prisoners of their having been obliged to perform certain tasks of work of a degrading character, e.g., to wash the clothes of other prisoners, to clean out cells, and even privies. 3214.

64. It is perfectly true that those who were received at Portland were, on their first arrival and for a few days, pending the receipt of instructions from the central authority, placed in the wash-house, but they were subsequently, as stated above, placed on the public works as a separate party. As regards the other descriptions of work referred to, it is sufficient to say that they are such as are performed in turn by all prisoners. 3273, 3235.

65. Location of the Prisoners.—In reference to the prisoners' cells, we are of opinion, subject to the observations already made in regard to the necessity for enlarged size and improved ventilation in certain cases, that no valid objection can be made to the mode in which the prisoners are lodged. It is true, indeed, that in the winter of 1866, during a storm of unusual severity, the rain was driven in through the walls of Hall D., Portland prison, and the cells occupied by certain of the treason-felony convicts were partially flooded, and their beds and clothes became a good deal wetted. They were, however, promptly removed to other cells, and all useful measures at once adopted. 3123, 3484, 3596, 32, 165.

66. Diet.—We have, as already stated, in the vast majority of instances found the food supplied to the prisoners to be wholesome and good of its kind. Slight improvements of the ordinary diet have been from time to time made in the case of treason-felony prisoners, under the authority of the Home Office. 3235, 3247, 3738, 3443, 3447, 3495, 3468, 3476, 10, 179, Appendix F.

67. In one instance only the Commission detected portions of meat unfit for human use in the supply sent in for the infirmary. This occurred at Chatham on July 4th, 1870, when three pieces of mutton of greenish colour in parts and of very bad smell were pointed out by the Commission. When the attention of the steward was called to this meat, he informed us that the meat in question had not been actually received. It was subsequently condemned by a board of officers. 3533, 3298, 12, 515.

68. Notwithstanding the care which is evinced in superintending each stage of the preparation of the prisoners' food, it is not to be wondered at that in very rare and exceptional instances, and especially in hot seasons, portions of the meat supply have been delivered in a tainted condition, or have become suddenly tainted after they were received. Two medical officers stated to us that they had on very rare occasions in hot weather had to report on rations returned by prisoners as tainted. 3565, 13, 411.

69. We have, therefore, to report that while it is possible that, as alleged by some of them, the treason-felony convicts have on some occasions been served with rations more or less tainted, this did not occur, nor indeed is it alleged by themselves to have occurred, except at few and distant intervals. With reference to the allegations that such foreign substances as a mouse, entrails of a fowl, or other refuse, have found their way into the prisoner's diet, we have to observe that if such articles got accidentally into the soup cauldrons even a few hours before the soup was served, they would be boiled down into a condition in which they could not be recognized. The distribution and weighing of the separate rations is conducted by rotation parties of the prisoners themselves. It must be admitted as barely possible that in transition from the kitchen to the prisoner's cell, by accident or design, a foreign object of small size might find its way into a convict's ration. An object supposed to have been a mouse was on one occasion detected in a prisoner's ration. On careful examination it was found to be a small piece of cowhide with the hair on. We, however, are of opinion that if such occurrences have in any instances taken place, they were purely accidental, and they do not justify any general allegation of want of cleanliness or due attention in the preparation of food. 3425, 3033, 3422, 3423.

70. It is, no doubt, true that some of the treason-felony prisoners have been in the habit, from time to time, of returning various articles of diet, and in some instances their 145, 3764, 3079, 10, 383, 11, 464.

entire rations. To what cause this is to be attributed has not been clearly shown; but, considering that prison fare, though wholesome, must be plain, and of a description to which many prisoners must be unaccustomed, we do not see in this fact any just ground for objection to the food.

71. Work.—We have with much care and minuteness inspected the various classes of work on which the treason-felony convicts have been from time to time employed.

72. The works at Dartmoor, Portland, and Chatham, which are conducted out of doors, and which comprise clearing and trenching land, operations of excavation, and the quarrying, hewing, and dressing of stone, involve, when the prisoner works well, a fair day's work of hard labour. At Portland the prevailing whiteness of the stone and the glare of the sun in hot weather appear to us to require the addition of a good peak to the prisoners' cap, with a shade for those who have weak or tender eyes. In trenching and excavating operations in the open air, greater facilities for shelter against severe weather might perhaps be provided.

73. The treason-felony prisoners having for the most part been employed in comparatively light indoor-work, have not been subjected to as much exposure as ordinary convicts. Nor have many complaints on this score been laid before us. Several of them, however, allege themselves to have been compelled to do work for which the state of their health unfitted them, and we shall hereafter notice this allegation in connexion with individual cases.

74. Various charges have been made which come under the head of medical treatment. They have chiefly had reference to alleged want of proper attention to the prisoners' complaints or calls for medical aid, on the part of the medical officers.

75. We have already expressed our opinion on the general system of medical attendance and for infirmary management in convict prisons, and we shall have occasion to discuss the more important of the specific complaints at a future stage of our report.

76. Having thus dealt with the allegations which relate to the whole body of the treason-felony convicts, we now proceed to examine somewhat more particularly the cases of certain of the prisoners, in regard to whom more full details have been put in evidence before us.

Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa.

77. This prisoner, described as the publisher of the "Irish People" newspaper, was convicted of treason-felony, at Dublin, December 13th, 1865, and sentenced to penal servitude for life. He was received into Mountjoy prison on the same day, and thence transferred to Pentonville, 23rd December 1865. He was removed to Portland on the 14th of May 1866, placed on second probation at Millbank on the 20th of February 1867, and removed to Chatham on the 24th of February 1868. He handed in a written statement, and was on several occasions examined by us upon it.

78. Two special allegations were brought under our notice by this prisoner. The first and more important of them was that he was on one occasion at Chatham kept in handcuffs for 35 days, and that, with the exception of his meals, when his hands were brought to the flout, and during the night, when the handcuffs were taken off altogether, he was manacled behind for that whole period.

79. We examined many witnesses in reference to this allegation. It appeared that, on June 16th, 1868, after numerous and repeated breaches of prison rules, for which he had been almost continuously under punishment since the 1st of May, O'Donovan Rossa committed an assault on the governor, Captain Powell, by throwing at him, on the occasion of his visiting the punishment cells, in discharge of his daily duty, the contents of his chamber vessel.

80. For this he was ordered on the next morning to be "handcuffed behind," and placed under report, to await the consideration of his offence by the visiting director. The director did not visit the prison until the 1st of July. He then heard the case and awarded provisionally a sentence which he submitted for the consideration of the Chairman. Premising that, in the ordinary course, Rossa would be punished for his offence by flogging, he recommended that in case that punishment should not be inflicted, the prisoner should undergo twenty-eight days' punishment diet in close confinement, and be placed in the penal class for six months. He also recommended that all movable articles should be removed from his cell, and that he should be kept in handcuffs in the day time. This sentence was confirmed on the 7th of July, but without mention of handcuffs. The period of 28 days' punishment diet did not take effect until the 20th of July.

81. Captain Powell states that, as he was about to proceed on leave of absence for three days, on the 17th of June, he left Captain Harvey, Deputy-Governor, in charge on the 16th after the assault, directing him to place the prisoner in handcuffs behind, to be removed at night. Captain Powell returned after three days, and was on duty from the 20th of June. He states that as the assault was made upon himself, he abstained from visiting the prisoner, and had no personal knowledge as to how the manacles were applied.

82. The allegation is that O'Donovan Rossa remained, with the exception of nights and meal times with his hands manacled behind him from June 17th to July 20th.

83. We carefully examined, with reference to this allegation, the entries made at the time in the governor's journal, the chief warder's report book, and the separate cell book. These entries substantially tally, and are perfectly conclusive on one point. They place beyond all possible doubt the fact that O'Donovan Rossa had handcuffs on, either before or behind, with the intervals already referred to, for 34 days.

84. Dr. Burns, the medical officer, Principal Warder Alison, Warders Brown, Hibbert, Giddings, and others testify to the fact that for the first three days the prisoner was handcuffed with his hands behind his back, except at meal times, when they were placed in front, and at night, when they were altogether removed. The sworn evidence of assistant warder W. Thompson, given on the 1st July 1868, and recorded in the prison books, leaves no doubt that the prisoner was handcuffed on the 19th June, with his hands behind his back. We are of opinion that it has been fully established that O'Donovan Rossa was so handcuffed with his hands behind his back, except at meal times and at night, for three days.

85. As to whether the handcuffs were during the remaining portion of the 34 days before or behind, the evidence is very conflicting. The first entry in the separate cell book under date of the 17th of June is as follows: "J. O'Donovan Rossa to be placed in handcuffs behind, by order of the governor," but all subsequent entries simply record the removal at night, and re-imposition in the morning of handcuffs, without showing in any way whether they were placed behind or before.

86. Captain Harvey, then one of the deputy governors, speaking from memory only, stated that he visited Rossa's cell frequently during the period referred to, and that Rossa had then no handcuffs on. When shown the entries in the prison books, Captain Harvey declared himself unable to reconcile them with his own recollection, on which he was unwilling to rely in the face of such evidence.

13,436, 13,676,

87. Dr. Burns, though he cannot fix the exact time during which handcuffs were worn, states, though not very confidently, that the prisoner was not handcuffed in either way for so long a time as is alleged. Alison, too, as well as several other warders then employed in various offices about the separate cells, deny, more or less positively, that the handcuffs were continued behind after the first three or four days.

9350 9343, 16,485.

88. On the other hand, the inference to be drawn from the evidence of two of the warders, Hibbert and Giddings, is that the manacles were put on behind for a period of about three or four weeks. These officers were among those whose special duty it was to take off and put on the handcuffs.

9390 9368.

89. Other evidence of a less direct nature has been laid before us, both orally and otherwise; and we have not failed to give due weight to whatever might in any degree throw light upon a transaction which, in the course of the last two years, has been the subject of so many contradictory statements.

90. There are two considerations which greatly weaken, in our judgment, the force of the evidence against the allegation, repeatedly and consistently made by O'Donovan Rossa, that he was manacled with his hands behind for at least 34 days.* In the first place the majority of those who denied that allegation appeared to lay greater stress on the strong improbability of such a measure having been enforced, than upon a clear recollection that it was not enforced. Secondly, we cannot but notice that most of them denied with equal confidence that O'Donovan Rossa could have been manacled at all for so long a period as 34 days, whereas that fact, as we have already stated, has been established by proof which we regard as irrefragable.

91. It is to be borne in mind, too, that there is no entry or other proof of any alteration or modification of the original order, and that, in the absence of any such counter order, the duty of the warders would be to act upon the original one.

12,539, 7594, 8462,

92. On the whole, we are of opinion that the preponderance of testimony is in favour of the supposition that, except at meal times when the handcuffs were placed in front, and at night when they were taken off altogether, O'Donovan Rossa was manacled behind for the period which intervened between June 17th and July 20th.

* The actual statement was, that he was manacled for 35 days. It is to be observed that, having been released from handcuffs at 8 p.m. on July 20th, he was, for a further offence of a grave character committed in the interval, replaced in manacles on the same day at 4.15 p.m., and that they were not finally removed until noon on the 22nd.

93. Whether this continuous use of handcuffs is to be regarded as a measure of restraint or one of punishment has not been clearly shown to us. We are of opinion that handcuffs should never be employed in any case as a measure of punishment, and upon a review of all the circumstances, we fail to discover any sufficient justification for their employment for so long a period as a measure of restraint.

94. The second matter of complaint brought before us by O'Donovan Rossa was as follows:—

95. In November 1866 a letter was found in the Roman Catholic Chapel at Portland Prison, inserted between the leaves of a book of devotion, signed by him, and addressed as follows: "Mrs. Mary Moore." In the corner of the cover, at the back of the letter itself, and also at the foot of the last page in the inside, were written the words: "for Mrs. O'D."

96. O'Donovan Rossa was reported for an attempt to send out a letter surreptitiously, and brought before Mr. Clifton, the Governor, on the morning after that on which the letter was found. That charge he admitted, as well as that time before the Governor as in his evidence taken by us.

97. He complained, however, that the Governor further imputed to him an attempt to carry on an intrigue by letter; that Mr. Clifton so informed Moore, another prisoner, to whose wife the letter was supposed by him to be addressed; that he stated to Messrs. Knox and Pollock, the Commissioners of 1867, that he believed that such was Rossa's intention, and that he told them and also the visiting director and the Secretary of State that he believed the insertion of the words "Mrs. O'D." to be a subterfuge.

98. O'Donovan Rossa entirely denies, and has always denied, this charge, stating that the letter was not intended for anybody but his wife, and he pressed for an inquiry as essential to clear his character from the imputation of any criminal intention.

99. We took the evidence of the Governor on the subject, examined O'Donovan Rossa himself, and inspected the entries in the prison books bearing upon the point.

100. We also compared the intercepted letter with a letter previously sent by Mrs. O'Donovan Rossa to her husband, to which he alleged that the former was a reply, and which certainly contains inquiries to which the former supplies answers. We ascertained, moreover, from Mr. Clifton himself, that O'Donovan Rossa had requested him to communicate to Mrs. O'Donovan Rossa several particulars exactly corresponding with parts of the intercepted letter.

101. The result of our consideration of the subject has been to satisfy us that the Governor acted and spoke under misapprehension in reference to this letter; that the letter was bona fide intended for O'Donovan Rossa's wife; and that O'Donovan Rossa is clear from the imputation of any endeavour to carry on a love intrigue.

102. It is fair to add that Mr. Clifton had not, previously to his examination by us, compared the two letters; but we cannot but express our regret that he did not take that course, since such a comparison, coupled with the strong internal evidence supplied by O'Donovan Rossa's letter, could not have failed to prevent him from harbouring the suspicion, or communicating it to others.

103. We examined O'Donovan Rossa on several other topics of complaint included in his written statement, and we think it right to express our sense of the candid and straightforward manner in which his testimony was given. These topics related almost exclusively to a series of punishments incurred by him during the first three years of his imprisonment. We investigated such points arising out of them as appeared to merit explanation, and the evidence respecting these will be found appended. We consider it, however, less necessary to deal with them here in detail, inasmuch as many of them have been anticipated in our more general remarks; while O'Donovan Rossa himself did not disavow most of the specific offences against prison discipline for which he was punished. What he virtually alleged was that, finding himself a marked man from the first, and branded as a bad character when he was unconscious of deserving it, he was led to assume an independent, not to say defiant, attitude, and thus became involved in a protracted struggle with the prison authorities. It was no part of our duty, nor was it within our power, to follow up this allegation, unless so far as particular acts of supposed injustice might be adduced in support of it. No such acts were established to our satisfaction, except to those to which we have already adverted. At the same time we have much pleasure in recording the fact that an opportune appeal to his better feelings by Capt. Du Cane in October 1868, proved more effectual than a long previous course of penal discipline; and that with one exception, in December of that year, he has not since been subjected to any further punishment.

Charles U. O'Connell.

103. This prisoner was convicted at Cork, and sentenced to ten years penal servitude, in Dec. 1865. He was received into Pentonville prison on the 16th of January 1866, and subsequently transferred to Portland on the 14th of May 1866, to Millbank on the 20th of May 1868, and to Chatham on the 15th of March 1869. He is stated by Dr. Burns, medical officer of Chatham prison, in his evidence before the Commission to be a man of delicate and very irritable constitution and highly nervous temperament. Whilst before the Commission he exhibited a condition of excessive and unceasing nervous tremor, visibly affecting his whole person. Dr. Burns, states this to be usual when he begins to speak or gets excited, and is of opinion that he has a kind of "nervous paralysis of the head occasionally after speaking."

6790. 6824.

104. It is noted in his medical history at Pentonville that he had "slight aortic disease." This opinion is not shared by Dr. Burns, who, however, states that he is subject to palpitation of the heart. The prisoner's weight has varied very much. At one time it was 139 lbs., subsequently 124 lbs.; on arrival at Chatham it was 129 lbs., and it subsequently fell to 119 lbs. (12th May 1870).

5734. 6718. 6794. 6826.

105. He has been for a considerable time in the habit of returning portions of his food unused. His diet has been occasionally changed, but with only temporary improvement of his appetite and general condition.

6725. 6737. 6764. 6813. 6845. 6851. 10,715, &c.

106. It is necessary to state that Dr. Burns is of opinion that this convict's loss of weight is due to his wilful refusal of food, and that he has sometimes been malingering or shamming since the occasion of a visit paid to him in the early part of last year. After having gone fully into the evidence given by the medical officer in support of this view, we are compelled to state that he (Dr. Burns) himself admits that he did not take any special means of testing whether the prisoner was or was not malingering; nor did he lay before us ground sufficient, in our judgment, to warrant this assumption.

107. In the preliminary evidence given before us by this prisoner, he states that he has been frequently placed on bread and water punishment, sometimes for periods of 70 hours. We find, on reference to the prison books, that he has in fact been sentenced on two occasions to close confinement on bread and water for three days, and on four occasions to a like punishment for one day. Assuming that he was then suffering from aortic disease, he would, in our judgment, have been unfit to undergo such discipline.

108. He farther alleges that his father and other members of his family were prevented from communicating with him or receiving news of him for a period of four years, and that four out of five letters written by him to his family have been suppressed. His father is in America. He has placed before us certain of his suppressed letters which he read in full to the Commission.

109. His letter of April 3rd, 1869, was "cancelled by order of director, 3/4/69." It contains allegations against the government and the prison authorities, with much detailed reference to family transactions and friends. On the 14th April he got permission to write another letter "in lieu" of that of April 3rd. This letter also was suppressed and endorsed "not allowed to write in lieu." It is chiefly filled with complaints against prison officials, and charges of ill-treatment of himself and others. On the 16th September 1869 he wrote a letter to his father, which also was suppressed by the director on 25th September. It likewise contains numerous charges of ill-treatment in prison. On the 18th November 1869 he wrote to another relation, and on this occasion his letter, with parts obliterated, was allowed to pass out. On May 12th, 1870, he again wrote a letter to his father which was suppressed; it contained many family allusions, and several charges against the prison discipline and officials.

110. While we in no way desire to recommend any interference with the proper censorship of prisoners' letters, we are of opinion that it would have been better to forward the letters addressed by the prisoner to his nearest relatives, erasing or removing such parts as the prison authorities on due consideration deemed improper to be communicated.

111. In these letters, and in partial statements in his oral evidence, the prisoner makes general allusions to other charges of ill-treatment in the several prisons in which he has been confined. He also refers to the denial of permission to receive visits from his friends. As, however, he finally and deliberately declined to make any general statement of charges, written or oral, to the Commission, and as we have not been furnished with the dates or other details necessary for the full investigation of such allegations, we are not in a position to report upon them, or to state whether or not they are well founded.

112. In conclusion we have to state in regard to this prisoner that his health and condition are such as to make his ultimate location and treatment a question which demands the special attention of the authorities.

Patrick Lennon.

113. This prisoner, aged 27, was convicted and sentenced to 15 years penal servitude, at Dublin on the 10th of Feb. 1868, and was confined at Millbank from the 26th of February 1868 to the 30th of December 1868, when he was removed to Dartmoor. He is the only treason-felony convict at present in that prison, and, so far as we could ascertain, is treated in all respects like an ordinary prisoner. At first he declined the offer of writing materials, but on second thoughts prepared and handed in a short written statement, upon which he was orally examined by us during parts of two successive days.

114. His main complaint is that his lungs were injured by prison fare at Millbank, and that his disease was neglected by the assistant medical officers at Millbank and Dartmoor. Of Mr. Gover, the chief medical officer at Millbank, he spoke with gratitude. He believes himself to be in "a decline," partly brought on by prison labour at Dartmoor, which he represents as peculiarly trying.

115. On reference to his "medical history," we find that he was entered on admission at Millbank as suffering from "debility with phthisical tendency," though Mr. Gover considered him free from actual disease. His weight on admission is not recorded; his weight on discharge was 154 lbs., being some pounds less than, according to his own account, he had formerly weighed in America. He states that he was never sphygmoscopically examined at Millbank till about six weeks before his departure, when he supposes the result to have been unfavourable, but as no detailed notes of the case were procurable, we had not the means of verifying the accuracy of his recollection. He does not, however, appear to have undergone any such examination on his arrival at Dartmoor; an omission which, under the circumstances, it is difficult to understand, although it was justified by the acting medical officer on the ground that he made no complaint of his chest. It is right to add that, according to his own account, he was examined by auscultation a few days later, and again "sounded" on admission to hospital in August 1869.

116. During the early part of 1869, he more than once applied to the governor and expressed himself discontented with his medical treatment. In September his appearance attracted the notice of the medical officer, and he was shortly afterwards admitted to the infirmary for a boil. On the 16th of that month he was ordered to be weighed, and found to have lost 19 lbs. since reception. Between that period and the date of our visit in June he had regained 7 lbs., but he still looks somewhat delicate, and complains of soreness in one side. The assistant medical officer, who at the date of our visit was in sole charge, alleges that he has exhibited no active symptoms of chest disease at Dartmoor, and has been properly treated for temporary ailments. Without questioning either of these allegations, we cannot but express our opinion that a closer examination of his chest would have been desirable when he fell off so remarkably in weight, and that it may be matter for consideration whether he should not be removed from Dartmoor before the coming winter.

117. The other grievances described in Lennon's written statement and oral evidence do not purport to be very serious, and disappeared on close investigation. The language which he candidly owned to having used before the governor, and the fact that he never appealed to a director for redress, make it probable that he deserved the few punishments which he incurred for breaches of prison discipline, and the concurrent testimony of several warders left no reasonable doubt on this point. Indeed, he laid very little stress on anything but the supposed neglect of his health, speaking highly of the consideration shown towards prisoners by the late, and still more by the present governor of Dartmoor.

Patrick Ryan.

118. Patrick Ryan, aged about 25, a boiler maker by trade, was convicted under the Treason Felony Act, at Swansea, March 1868, and sentenced to five years penal servitude. He was sent to Millbank 30th March 1868, and to Woking Invalid Prison 12th May 1869.

119. He was examined before the Commissioners at Woking, July 1st, 1870, and was then in a very weakly condition. It was necessary to provide him with a seat, and to give him refreshments several times during his examination. He was suffering from diarrhoea, to which he seems to have been for a considerable time constitutionally liable.

120. His complaints for the most part referred to the hardships of prison discipline, diet, and clothing.

121. Though frequently under medical care, he does not charge neglect or ill-treatment on the part of the medical officers. He says, "The doctor attended to me pretty well. "I don't believe I have anything to complain of in that respect this present time."

122. Ryan complains of the naked searches to which he was subjected at Millbank and Woking. His statements are not contradicted. We refer to the general observations which we have elsewhere made on this mode of search.

123. Ryan alleges that on one occasion he was brought before the chief warder on a charge of having laughed at an inferior officer; that, though he denied the charge, he was taken to a separate cell and detained there for 24 hours; that he was then brought before the governor, who heard the case, but, while declining to receive the evidence of other prisoners did not think it necessary to impose any punishment. We have not been able to find any record of this transaction in the extracts from the prison books furnished to us, and we are now unable to ascertain how soon the officer reported to the governor that he had removed the prisoner to one of the cells designed for the confinement of a prisoner under report. Circumstances may arise rendering it necessary for a chief or principal warder to adopt immediate measures of restraint or separation on his own responsibility, but we are of opinion that the course so pursued by him ought always immediately to be reported to the governor or deputy governor, and the case adjudicated upon as early as practicable, and, if possible, on the same day.

124. We have elsewhere considered in our general remarks the question of the admissibility of prisoners' evidence.

125. Ryan states that on one occasion only he objected to work. It was on a Sunday when he was about to receive the Holy Communion. He alleges that he mentioned this to the officer, and requested that he should not to be required to work at the pump; but that the officer refused, telling him that to work at the pump "would do him more service." Ryan could not state the name of the officer, and it was not therefore in our power to investigate the complaint. We do not doubt, however, judging from the respect for the religious opinions of the prisoners uniformly manifested by the higher prison authorities, that, if such language had been proved to have been used, the officer who used it would have been severely punished.

126. The arrangements for baths at Millbank and Woking to which Ryan was subjected are a matter of complaint to which we have adverted in our general observations.

127. With respect to work, Ryan appears to have been treated with kindness and consideration. When at Woking, he was first located in the knitting shed. Thinking that this sedentary work did not agree with him, he asked to be removed to outdoor labour, and was so removed. Finding that the work of "drawing cars" was heavy on his chest, and shocked, as he states, by the language of his criminal associates, he requested the governor again to remove him, and his request was immediately granted. In January last he was placed at light pumping work in the open air.

128. Ryan complains frequently of the prison diet. He states that on many occasions he returned his food as bad, but got nothing in place of it. He complains of the Sunday dinner, bread and cheese. He finds fault with the shin of beef soup and the pudding, and states that he once found the dirt of mice in his gruel. He objected to the food, and returned it 30 or 40 times. He took some bad cheese to chief warder Alison, who desired him to get it exchanged, but there was no more to be had. He states, however, that the dietary was improved on the 23rd December, 1869, and he states in reply to the question, "Has your food always been wholesome here (Woking)?" "The food, sir, is very wholesome; in regard of that shin of beef soup and the pudding, that is the only thing I couldn't eat at all." The subject of diet is fully referred to in our general observations, which cover the above specific complaints made by Ryan.

129. Ryan states that the clothing is insufficient in winter. We have examined the clothing with much care at the different prisons, and are of opinion that it is, under ordinary circumstances, sufficient for health. It is possible, no doubt, that when long in use it may become thin, light, and insufficient, and Ryan states that the clothes given to him were dirty and worn out. We had no opportunity of testing the accuracy of this assertion. Ryan himself frankly admitted that the nature of his previous occupation (that of a boiler maker) had rendered him especially sensitive to cold.

130. Ryan states that, having asked for some water at half-past eight o'clock one evening, the warder outside his cell refused it, and called him a "damned Fenian." He did not, however, complain to the governor. Ryan is unable to identify the warder, or to bring any corroborative proof. We were therefore unable to investigate the charge.

131. Ryan complains that, having been convicted at Swansea and not in Ireland, he was originally put upon a different footing from the other treason-felony prisoners. Like most of them, he expressed a strong repugnance to being classed with ordinary criminals, and stated that, at his own earnest request, the governor had consented to remove him from the contaminating influence of association with them.

132. This prisoner's conduct has, on the whole, been excellent. He has never been punished.

John Murphy.

133. This prisoner, now 61 years of age, was convicted at Mullingar on the 17th of July 1865, and was sentenced to seven years penal servitude. He had spent five months in Mountjoy prison before his removal to Pentonville on December 23rd, 1865. He was transferred to Woking on April 20th, 1866, and is now employed with other treason-felony prisoners in outdoor work, at the pump, so light that, as he said himself, "a child could do it." He put in no written statement, but was orally examined by us on two occasions. He made few complaints before us, and disclaimed any wish to complain.

134. His chief anxiety seemed to be that his term of seven years' penal servitude might be considered as dating from his first trial (when no verdict was returned) in March 1865, instead of from his conviction on the 17th of July 1865.

135. Like other treason-felony convicts, he spoke of the frequent stripping for searches at Pentonville, and of having to put his clothes outside his cell at night, as harsh and unusual precautions; and he stated that he had suffered from the deprivation of flannels. The observations which we have already made on this subject apply with special force to a man of his age and with a rheumatic tendency. The prison records show that he was supplied with flannels on January 12th, 1866, so that he was left without them nearly three weeks. He also found some fault with the prison food at Woking, especially with the shin-of-beef soup, the cheese, and the sweet pudding.

136. The only other annoyances which he mentioned were the rough language of one warder, and the vexatious conduct of another (no longer in the prison), who used to wake him up at night, and whom he reported four times to the governor. This annoyance, he stated, was at last stopped on his threatening to report it to the director. On the other hand, there are but two reports against him on the prison books, neither very serious. We learn from his case-sheet that his health in prison has been indifferent, and that he has been frequently under medical treatment for rheumatic affections, though it did not appear that he had been in the infirmary during the present year.

William Francis Roantree.

137. This prisoner, aged 39, was convicted at Dublin on the 24th of January 1866, and was sentenced to 10 years penal servitude. He is described as a butcher or mercantile clerk; but he informed us that he never followed the former occupation. He was received at Pentonville from Mountjoy on the 10th of February 1866, was transferred to Portland on the 4th of May 1866, was invalided to Woking on the 8th of February 1867, and still remains there.

138. Many complaints have been made on behalf of Roantree in various published documents, but they are all embodied in the very full written statement which he handed in to us, and upon which he was orally examined. The material charges therein comprised mainly resolve themselves into allegations of medical neglect or maltreatment, and the want of nutritious food.

139. His own representation is that "since his arrest he got piles;" that he was almost rid of them when he was removed from Mountjoy prison to Pentonville; that at Pentonville they were aggravated by purgatives administered under the doctor's orders; that nevertheless he was an able-bodied man when removed from Pentonville to Portland; that he was there kept working at the quarries while bleeding profusely from the effects of the disease; and that Dr. Blaker, the medical officer, grievously mismanaged him; that he is now, and has been since his removal to Woking three years and a half ago, a confirmed invalid, "with a permanently injured constitution;" and that a studied disregard of the conditions necessary for health has been shown in his case by the prison authorities.

140. The evidence before us distinctly negatives many of the essential parts of this representation. It is not disputed—indeed, the medical records prove—that Roantree has suffered from piles at frequent intervals throughout his imprisonment; but it appears from an entry in his case-sheet that on his reception at Woking he said that he was first troubled with them some years before. At Portland he was three times under treatment for this affection, once for a period of 168 days, and he seems to us to have been treated with all due care by Dr. Blaker. He was invalided to Woking in consequence of piles, and has since been repeatedly subject to bleeding, sometimes complicated with prolapsus. Dr. Campbell does not take the same serious view of the case as the prisoner himself. The infirmary warders and other attendants do not corroborate his statement as to the amount of blood passed at various times. The medical notes covering the whole period of his confinement at Woking, show not only that many small luxuries have been freely allowed him, but that his diet has been repeatedly varied, at his own request, to suit his appetite. Various remedies suitable for hemorrhoids seem to have been from time to time applied by the medical officers under whose charge he has been. For some months past he has not been under treatment for this malady, though retained in the infirmary for the sake of a more generous diet. During his confinement at Pentonville and Portland his weight rose from 155 lbs. to 159 lbs.; it has increased since his reception at Woking from 159 lbs. to 165 lbs. We have no means of judging whether on his arrival at Portland he was in a fit state for working in the quarries, or ought to have been admitted earlier into the infirmary, though it is right to say that there is some evidence to show that bleeding occurred on more than one occasion while he was at work. This labour, however, only continued up to August 24; and from the moment of his admission to the Portland infirmary on that day he has never been subjected to any severe exertion. His employment, as he admits, has been changed from time to time at Woking by his own request, and has usually consisted of light work involving some active exercise, which Dr. Campbell regards as far more suitable than sedentary work for persons affected with piles. During 24 months of his imprisonment at Woking he has been an inmate of the infirmary, performing no work at all, but Dr. Campbell positively states that he is perfectly capable of hard labour, and would be put to it if he were an ordinary prisoner.

141. It would be obviously impossible for us to review his medical treatment in detail, still less can we undertake to pronounce an opinion upon the demeanour or manner of the medical officers and others whom he accuses of unfeeling conduct. We are satisfied, however, that neither Dr. Blaker nor Dr. Campbell is likely to have been consciously guilty of any such conduct; and we find no reason to doubt that he was treated, upon the whole, with due judgment and skill. In forming this conclusion we impute no deliberate misrepresentation to Roastree himself. Patients often conceive a very exaggerated estimate of their own symptoms, and very ill-founded notions of the appropriate remedies. It is very probable that under the depressing influence of prison life Roastree may believe, as he professes to do, that his constitution is utterly broken down by the consequences of mala praxis on the part of prison medical officers. But the result of our inquiries altogether negatives that impression, and convinces us that, unless he were at large, he could hardly be placed under conditions more favourable to health.

142. There are several minor grievances alleged by Roastree which fall within the scope of our remarks on the general treatment of the treason-felony convicts. Such are the deprivation of flannels during the first four days at Pentonville, the constant searching, and the nightly removal of body clothing at the same prison, and the rule of silence, which he represents to have been introduced for the special annoyance of the treason-felony convicts on the Portland works, but which, as we have been assured, was introduced without reference to them, and has since been abandoned. The restrictions to which he was subjected in communicating with his family appear to have been in strict accordance with the regulations which make that privilege dependent on a prisoner's position as to class, and recognize the suspension of it as a legitimate punishment. We have elsewhere commented on this feature of prison discipline; but an inspection of the prison documents, as well as of his own suppressed letters, shows that Roastree was not the subject of any exceptional severity in respect of letter writing. The penalty in respect of diet to which he was sentenced on one occasion appears, it is true, somewhat disproportioned to the offence, and might have called for some further explanation had it been actually enforced, whereas it was remitted the same day by the director, while on another occasion he was exempted from punishment on the interposition of the medical officer. The charge which he brings against a warder of having placed himself so as to overhear a conversation between him and the visiting priest completely broke down on careful inquiry.

Richard O'Sullivan Burke.

143. We have with very great care and anxiety inquired into the case of Richard Burke.

144. He was convicted at the Central Criminal Court in London on the 6th of April 1868, and was sentenced to 15 years' penal servitude. He was received into Newgate on the 6th of March 1868. We find by the statement of the medical officer, Mr. Gibson, that he was considered of sound mind on his removal from that prison. He was transferred to Millbank on the 2nd of May 1868, and was thence removed, after a sojourn of 16 days, to Chatham prison. Mr. Gover, medical officer of Millbank, states that Richard Burke did not manifest any peculiarities while in that prison in May 1868 such as to constitute in his opinion symptoms of insanity. He states that he saw him often, and at each visit found the prisoner writing, and so absorbed in thought that he scarcely noticed his entrance into the cell. When questioned, he returned perfectly rational answers, although he was somewhat impatient as well as absent in manner.

145. From the 18th of May 1868, to the 10th of December 1869, Rickard Burke was an inmate of Chatham prison.

146. The medical officer, Dr. Burns, has been examined by us in regard to the mental and bodily health of the prisoner during the period just referred to. He states that he considers him to have been a strong, healthy man, and possessed of very remarkable intelligence. About May 1869, Dr. Burns states that he observed a decided change in Burke's demeanour immediately subsequent to a visit which he then received. He refused his food, and became peculiar in manner; Dr. Burns attributes this changed demeanour to malingering on the part of the prisoner, the origin of which he appears to trace to hopes of his release inspired by the parting words of his visitors, to the effect that they soon hoped to see him out of prison. Dr. Burns states that no reference to the prisoner's health was made at this interview. He finally states his opinion to be that the prisoner was labouring under hypochondriasis during the latter period of his location at Chatham prison.

147. On the 10th of December 1869, Rickard Burke was transferred to Woking invalid prison. He was under the charge of the principal medical officer, Dr. Campbell, until the 28th of March 1870. Dr. Campbell states that his opinion has been from the first, and still is, that the prisoner is of unsound mind. In a special report to the directors, under the date of December 21st, 1869, Dr. Campbell says, "The medical report" states that he has been losing flesh for some time, and that there was a decrease of "18 pounds on the 8th inst.; that he had delusions about his medicine containing "corrosive sublimate, and that poison had been introduced into his food, and that his "behaviour was otherwise uncertain." In January 1870, Dr. Campbell held two consultations, by the instruction of the directors, with the late Dr. Meyer, of the Broadmoor lunatic asylum, who visited and examined the prisoner at Woking on two occasions, January 3rd and 10th, 1870. This gentleman placed on record his opinion, which has since been made public, that Rickard Burke was then of unsound mind.

148. For the purpose of further observation the prisoner was sent to Millbank on the 28th of March 1870, and until the 1st of May 1870 was for the second time under the care of Mr. Gover, medical officer of that prison.

149. Mr. Gover has been examined by the Commissioners, and he stated that, while he could not affirm that the prisoner was then of sound mind, he was not prepared to say that he was insane.

150. The prisoner was sent back to Woking on 1st May 1870, and has been since under the care of Dr. Campbell.

151. Dr. Campbell has been repeatedly examined by us, and his opinion, at all times the same, is given in his final answer on August 13th, 1870, that he considers Rickard Burke to be of unsound mind. This opinion as he informs us he repeated to the directors in August 1870, in a special report.

152. We have ourselves at our visits to Woking on three separate occasions had interviews with Rickard Burke. We have taken the evidence, as to his general state, of the warder specially in charge of him, who states that he always considered him of unsound mind, and who gave evidence as to the kind and amount of food used and returned by the prisoner. We obtained a record of the food he has returned unused. We have examined treason-felony convict Thomas F. Bourke, who is stated to have most influence over the prisoner, and whose statements in regard to him will be found in the minutes of evidence.

153. Captain Harris, Deputy-Governor, and from the time of the sitting of the Commission Acting-Governor, of Woking prison stated in his evidence that Rickard Burke was not, in his opinion, of sound mind, or in a fit mental state to give evidence before the Commission. The same opinion was expressed by the Rev. Mr. O'Leary, the visiting priest.

154. In view of all the circumstances of this very peculiar and painful case, we thought it right at our sitting of August 13th, 1870, to read to Captain Harris a resolution which the Commission had arrived at, that it would be desirable that Rickard Burke should be placed in association with some of the treason-felony prisoners who are known to have influence with him.

155. We have finally to report that, so far as we have had opportunity of forming a judgment, we are of opinion that a treason-felony convict Rickard Burke is not of sound mind, and that his case demands the immediate consideration of the authorities as to his future location and treatment.

156. We have also to call attention to the opinion of Dr. Campbell who thinks that it would be advisable to remove the prisoner from Woking.

157. As some misapprehension has arisen in regard to the location of this prisoner at a particular date, we have inquired into all the circumstances of his removal from one prison to another, and have procured special certificates of his custody from day to day during the whole period in question; and we have to report that he was not, as stated by mistake in an official letter of February 24th, 1870, at any time an inmate of Broadmoor asylum for criminal lunatics.

David Downing Mulcahy.

158. This prisoner was convicted at Dublin on the 20th of January 1866, and was sentenced to 10 years penal servitude. Having been received into Mountjoy prison on the 19th of January 1866, he was transferred to Pentonville on the 10th of February 1866. He was removed to Portland on the 14th of May 1866. On the 15th of November 1866 he was re-transferred to Mountjoy prison, whence he was sent to Millbank, the 1st of December 1866. He was again sent to Mountjoy prison on the 16th of January 1867, brought back to Millbank on the 26th of January 1867, transferred to Dartmoor on the 8th of February 1867, and finally invalided to Woking on the 11th of May 1867.*

159. He is 30 years of age, 6 ft. 1½ in. in height, and is stated on his prison record to have been a student of medicine. He weighed on his reception at Pentonville 170 lbs., and at Woking, on May the 16th, 1870, 155. He has thus lost weight to the extent of 15½ lbs.

160. This prisoner has been on three occasions before us, but as he finally declined to make any statement embodying specific complaints as to his treatment while in convict prisons, we are in a position to report only on such matters as have been brought under our notice in regard to him in the general allegations preferred on behalf of the treason-felony convicts.

161. When removed to Portland he was returned as fit for "hard labour," and was placed to work at stone-dressing. While so engaged he was attacked by blood-spitting, and we find it officially recorded that on two occasions, the 21st and the 23rd of July 1866, he was labouring under hæmoptysis. He further complained of cough, and was seen and prescribed for at intervals up to September the 7th by Dr. Basson, then assistant surgeon to the prison. He was kept at work during this period, and having regard to the nature of the work upon which he was so employed, and the occurrence of blood-spitting on two occasions, we cannot consider that he was fit to be continued at hard labour, or that due care and caution were exercised in his regard.

162. It is further alleged that in Portland prison this prisoner was served with tainted soup, and that on one occasion he found the entrails of a fowl, and on another a mouse, and "other vermin," in the diet served to him. We have fully considered this charge, in connexion with others of a similar character. The prisoner during his stay in Millbank is recorded to have had "occasional slight cough;" he states that the medical officer, Mr. Gover, examined his chest and informed him that his right lung was weak and that he had abdominal breathing. Mr. Gover, when examined, could not recall this circumstance, and the medical case sheets show no such entry.

163. On his arrival at Dartmoor, he was reported by the medical officer as fit for, and was put on, full labour. He was placed at work on the moor, his occupation being that of treeing and clearing land. It is alleged that he was compelled to carry slabs of stone on his back; and although this is stated by the governor to be contrary to the rule and practice of the prison, we find the allegation fully corroborated by the evidence of principal warder Hodge, who states that it was and is usual to direct prisoners to carry stones on their backs, not, however, on their bare backs, and that he remembers to have seen Mulcahy carry slabs of stone on his back.

164. It does not appear that any well-defined limit exists as to the weight or size of the stone which the prisoners may carry on their backs, though we were informed that no prisoner would be compelled to carry a heavy stone if he should object to do so.

165. After about three weeks at full labour this prisoner's health gave way. The medical notes of his case taken at this period by Mr. Ascham, then medical officer of the prison, have been accidentally mislaid. It is alleged that the prisoner suffered from hæmorrhage from the lungs. He appears to have spent about half his time in this prison in hospital in consequence of the blood-spitting, and on the representation of the medical officer the then governor, Captain Stopford, wrote a report to the directors, and requested "that he should be removed, for the climate might not agree with him." Captain Stopford further adds that Mulcahy while at Dartmoor was never reported for misconduct, nor ever punished. He was invalided to Woking in May 1867, the ground of invaliding being hæmoptysis.

* The several transfers to Mountjoy and Millbank were rendered necessary by the proceedings upon a writ of error in the Court of Queen's Bench in Dublin, and before the House of Lords.

166. It is alleged that during a period of 10 weeks he was unable to consume more than 20 ozs. of solid food daily, and that during this time no sufficient inquiry was instituted by the medical officer as to the cause of his rejecting or not using his food. As the prisoner did not furnish the dates in reference to this charge, and as he finally declined to submit any detailed statement to the Commission, we had no opportunity of going into the particulars of this allegation.

167. The same may be said in reference to the general allegations that he frequently suffered from dyspepsia, diarrhoea, rheumatism, and neuralgia, that he was subject to punishment in consequence of his evidence given before Messrs. Pollock and Knox, and that in the month of February of the current year he suffered much from keen blasts and insufficient clothing.

Brian Dillon.

168. Brian Dillon, described as a law clerk, is a very weak and deformed man, of middle age, and delicate appearance.

169. He was tried at Cork before a special commission on the 14th of December 1865, and sentenced to 10 years' penal servitude. He was removed to Mountjoy prison on the same day. He was transferred to Pentonville on the 16th of January 1866, and he was removed to Woking invalid convict prison on the 11th of April 1866.

170. His weights at different periods of his imprisonment were as follows:—

| | st. | lb. |
|--|-----|------|
| On reception, Pentonville, 16th January 1866 | - | 7 9 |
| 26th August 1869 | - | 8 0 |
| 1st December 1869 | - | 8 0 |
| 27th September 1869 | - | 8 0 |
| 16th May 1870 | - | 7 9 |
| 13th August 1870 | - | 7 4½ |
| Height, 4 feet 10 inches. | | |

171. Dillon laid before us a very voluminous statement. He had been allowed ample time for preparing it, and was subsequently examined orally by us. Some of the complaints contained in the statement appeared to be satisfactorily answered by subsequent passages in the same document. Some referred to the cases of other prisoners which we did not feel to be within the scope of our inquiry. All the more important charges were made the matter of careful inquiry by the oral examination of Dillon and of all who could give relevant testimony.

172. Dillon's complaints may be classified under several heads:—

173. Discipline.—Dillon, in common with other treason-felony prisoners, complains of the naked searches to which he was subjected at Pentonville, which he describes as having been of a very minute and offensive character. He also states as a grievance that when at Pentonville he was obliged to put out his clothes and cell furniture at night. On both these subjects we have already expressed our opinion in our general remarks.

174. Dillon in many parts of his statement complains of the nature and amount of his work. He says that at Pentonville "the long working hours, from 6 in the morning till a quarter to 8 at night, during which he sat at a table sewing," contributed to shatter his health. We must point out that in this statement no account is taken of intermissions for meals and exercise.

175. He states that in the winter of 1867, when at Woking, he was placed to clean a heap of frozen bricks partly covered with snow, and that he suffered much from the cold. From this work, however, he was at his own request removed to the carpenters' shop, where he remained till taken into hospital, on the 21st of February 1868.

176. He states that when discharged from hospital, and still very weak, he was employed to cut bricks in a narrow wooden shed, that the weather was very cold, and that it was necessary to keep the bricks soaking in water. In the summer of 1868 he had to work, he states, when suffering from dysentery, under intense heat, hoisting up bricks by a rope and wheel, and exposed to continual danger by the falling of bricks from the scaffolds.

177. We feel bound to say that some of the work on which Dillon appears to have been from time to time employed was of a nature hardly suitable to his delicate and deformed frame. His weight is 7 stone 4½ lbs., his height is 4 feet 10 inches, and the delicacy of his constitution is clearly shown by his personal appearance, and by his frequent admissions to hospital, especially during the last two years. Dillon's condition, at the time of our visits, in consequence of an accidental fall, appeared to be such as to render him incapable of any manual labour. He is hardly able to walk without assistance.

178. Dillon complains that on his passage from Ireland much suffering was unnecessarily inflicted upon him by being handcuffed with another prisoner affected with sea sickness and diarrhoea, from whom he was not allowed to be even temporarily separated. We have referred to this subject in our general observations.

Paragraph 45.

179. He also complains that on his arrival at Pentonville he got nothing to eat but bread and cheese. The statements on this point are conflicting. The governor and steward state that hot gruel and bread and cheese were issued for all the treason-felony prisoners. The warders generally state that the prisoners were served with hot gruel and bread, but no cheese.

180. Dillon alleges further that, it being the custom to read aloud to the prisoners in the working shed from books selected by the scripture readers, passages were read which were "offensive to Roman Catholics and Irishmen." It appears, however, by Dillon's statement, that upon appeal being made to the board of directors, "the readings were thenceforth stopped."

14,503.

181. He further states that at Pentonville he was forced to bathe in water rendered foul by having been used by other prisoners. Having inquired into the facts, we found this to be substantially true. We have already commented on this practice.

182. Charges against Officials.—Charges against the medical officers constitute the bulk of Dillon's complaints, both written and oral. They extend from his arrival at Pentonville, January 1866, to the date of our visit. Considering the general delicacy of the convict, we have felt it our duty to look with peculiar care into these allegations.

183. It does not appear to us that Dillon's statement with regard to the medical treatment which he experienced during the three months passed at Pentonville call for any remark except this, that it is evident that even at that early period of his imprisonment his health was infirm. A nervous and weakly prisoner expects more individual attention than a large prison can supply, and is apt to attribute his sufferings to the neglect or unkindness of the medical officers.

184. Dillon was removed to Woking invalid prison in April 1866. The medical officers of that prison were Dr. Campbell and Dr. Wilson.

185. Dillon's statements with respect to Dr. Wilson are few. He states that Dr. Wilson, having examined him with the stethoscope shortly after his arrival at Woking, told him that his left lung was not exactly clear, and subsequently gave him medicines which did not agree with him. An examination of the medical case sheets, however, shows that medicines of the usual description were supplied to him.

186. Dr. Campbell has been frequently examined before us, and we willingly express the high opinion which we entertain of him as a careful, diligent, and humane medical officer.

187. Dillon's own statement contains conclusive evidence to prove that on many occasions Dr. Campbell treated him with attention and humanity; but we are bound to remark that a man who, at the commencement of his prison life, was pronounced by the assistant medical officer to be capable of doing a little light work, seems to have been long employed at work of a laborious description, and under much exposure to heat and cold, and this at a period when he was a frequent applicant for medical relief. This occurred in the summer of 1868. On the 6th of August in that year, he was, after several applications, admitted to hospital.

14,465.

188. Dillon complains of insulting language on the part of warders. In particular he cites the case of Warder Scott, September 1869. The complaint was reported to the governor, who received it and investigated it. He also brings charges of a similar nature against Warders Scamwell and Wakeland, but he does not seem to have thought it necessary to bring them before the governor.

189. It is not impossible that the inferior officers of a prison may occasionally lose their temper and use impatient or even offensive language to the prisoners under their charge. Such conduct, however, would be reprehensible and unmanly, and we have received the assurances of the several governors that, if proved, it would be most severely punished.

190. Clothing.—Dillon states, that on his arrival at Pentonville in January 1866, from Mountjoy, he was stripped of his Mountjoy clothing and supplied with a Pentonville suit, in which flannels, such as he had habitually worn, were not included. A reference to this matter of complaint is to be found in our general observations.

191. Location.—Dillon asserts that his cell at Pentonville was very cold. We have had no opportunity of personally observing the temperature of the cells in winter, but, judging from the official records of the prison, we see no reason for believing that they are not sufficiently warm for the maintenance of health in ordinary seasons.

192. Having regard, however, to the elevated and exposed position of some of the prisons, we think that the attention of the officials should be directed in severe winter to the possible necessity for additional bedclothes, especially in the case of delicate prisoners.

193. One of the most frequent complaints put forward by Dillon, as well as by other treason-felony prisoners, is that he was associated with ordinary convicts. We make this most important subject a matter of observation in our general remarks.

14,569.

194. Pending our sittings, a circumstance occurred to which we think it right shortly to advert. In the month of July 1870, a dispute arose between Dillon, then in hospital, and his infirmary nurse. Dillon brought the case before Dr. Campbell. Dillon at this time occupied a small infirmary room together with two other treason-felony convicts, E. Power and D. Mulcahy. A conversation between him and Dr. Campbell occurred, his version of which is given in his evidence. Dillon says that Dr. Campbell's manner was insulting, and meant to intimidate, but we do not see any grounds for this charge. Power interfered, saying to Dr. Campbell that "he was treating the man inhumanly." Dr. Campbell then directed the warder to report Dillon and Power. Mulcahy does not seem to have interfered. Power was reported, Dillon was not. Shortly afterwards Dillon, Power, and Mulcahy were removed from their common dormitory and placed in separate cells in B ward. The removal took place the day after Dillon had handed to the Commissioners his written statement of charges, and is attributed by Dillon to his having taken that course. The change from a common dormitory to a separate cell was undoubtedly in the present instance felt by them to be a privation. We regret that the change should have been made in the case of three prisoners, one of whom was under report for a charge not yet investigated; another, though a party to the transaction, had not been reported; and the third appears to have taken no part. But we do not believe that the governor, in making the change, was at all influenced by the fact of Dillon's having laid complaints before the Commissioners.

14,566.

195. Letters.—Dillon complains that on his arrival at Pentonville he was treated with exceptional severity in not being allowed to write his "reception letter." It was stated to us by the Governor, Mr. Lewis, that he had thought it proper to apply for instructions before he permitted Dillon to write; that, immediately on receiving them, he communicated to Dillon that he was at liberty to write his reception letter; and that he was so permitted within the month allowed by the usual prison regulations for writing such letter. Dillon complains that the governor has erased portions of his letters to his friends at Woking, without letting him know that he had done so. We believe this is not unfrequently done. A letter written to Dillon, on the 3rd of April 1869, was suppressed, and bears the following indorsement, "suppressed by director, the prisoner not to be informed." In our general remarks we have commented upon the practice of suppressing letters, or parts of letters, without informing the writers of the fact and of the reason.

Paragraph 82-95.

196. Diet.—Dillon complains in detail of the diet at Woking. We have carefully inspected the food in that as in other prisons, upon more than one occasion, and have dealt with the subject in our general observations.

197. Other complaints.—On the change in prison clothing from trousers to knickerbockers at Woking, in the winter of 1866-7, Dillon states that, suffering much from cold, he applied to Dr. Campbell for flannel coverings for his legs, and that Dr. Campbell replied that the change was made by the directors, and that he had not any power to order such coverings. Dillon put down his name in the ordinary way to see the director, and informed the governor that his reason for doing so was that he intended to ask for flannel coverings for his legs, as he suffered from rheumatism. He states that the governor then read for him from the doctor's application book Dr. Campbell's remark on his application in the following terms "Not required," and continued, "I can't let you see the director; if I did he would only refer the matter to Dr. Campbell, and he has already decided against you. . . . The governor, as Dillon alleges, persisted in his refusal to let him see the director, and he did not see him.

198. Captain Bramley informs us that he cannot afford accurate information as to this incident. He adds, "I can state that it has always been my practice to recommend a prisoner, more particularly of the class under discussion, to see the director if he felt aggrieved at any decision. It is, however, very possible that I may have told Dillon that, under the circumstances, it would be useless his seeing the director. I have no hesitation in saying that I dare not refuse a prisoner access to the director."

199. Dillon was subsequently allowed the additional covering for which he asked. We are, however, of opinion that the medical officer should possess an absolute power of ordering any exceptional clothing which he considers necessary for health, pending a reference to the prison authorities.

200. A considerable part of Dillon's complaint refers to the treatment of other prisoners. He especially dwells on the case of treason-felony convict Lynch.

201. When Lynch died an inquest was held, at which his prison treatment was considered. Dillon stated before the coroner that Lynch attributed his illness to being deprived of flannels at Pentonville, and that he believed him to have been treated very well by Dr. Campbell at Woking. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of "death from natural causes," and it would be manifestly improper for this Commission, even if legally competent, to re-open the investigation of this case, after a long lapse of time and in the absence of the contemporaneous evidence adduced at the inquest.

202. We have now carefully gone through such of the charges contained in Dillon's paper and oral evidence as we considered of a nature to demand investigation and report from us.

203. Having thus expressed our opinion upon those of the particular allegations made by the several prisoners which we have thought it necessary to deal with specially, we proceed to state our general conclusion on the second head of our inquiry.

204. After a patient and minute investigation, we do not find any ground for the belief that the treason-felony prisoners in English prisons have, as a class, been subjected to any exceptionally severe treatment, or have suffered any hardships beyond those incidental to the condition of a prisoner sentenced to penal servitude.

205. It appears, on the contrary, from the evidence of prison officers, confirmed in certain cases by the evidence of the prisoners themselves, that the prison authorities have sanctioned from time to time certain relaxations of convict discipline in their favour.

206. They have for the most part been formed into separate working parties, and have seldom been associated in labour with other convicts except by way of punishment; they have generally been placed in cells of a superior class; the ordinary restrictions on writing and receiving letters have been often relaxed on their behalf; their diet is slightly better, and their enforced labour is lighter, than in the case of other prisoners under similar sentences. At both Woking and Chatham we learnt that this is the case, and at Portland we saw all the prisoners of this class placed on the public works under a separate shed, apart from the other prisoners, under the charge of a warder, and, as we were informed, allowed to remain there without doing any work at all.

207. It is perhaps inevitable that men in the position of the treason-felony prisoners should resent the degrading though ordinary incidents of convict discipline with peculiar impatience, and the more so if they have received a good education and filled respectable positions in life. The treason-felony convicts have, in fact, never ceased to protest against being classed with criminals, as a moral degradation, and every privilege, however trifling, which they have succeeded in obtaining, has but confirmed their belief in the justice of this demand. Some have nevertheless accepted their lot with resignation, and consistently abstained from any breach of prison rules. Others, brooding, it may be, over the supposed injustice of their sentence, appear to have manifested at the outset a spirit of insubordination, which it was the duty of the prison authorities to repress, though we have already had occasion to remark that, in one notable instance, an opportune remission of punishment, accompanied with a few kindly words of remonstrance, was followed by a marked improvement in conduct which coercive measures had altogether failed to produce. The majority, however, of the treason-felony convicts have seldom, if ever, incurred serious punishment.

208. We have given due consideration to all the other allegations which have been brought under our notice, and have dealt with them in detail in former paragraphs, pointing out in each instance how far, in our opinion, they have or have not had any foundation in fact. There are certain incidents of treatment which we have commented upon with disapprobation in our remarks upon the cases of individual prisoners, but we have no reason to believe that in any of these instances the conduct of the prison authorities was influenced by the fact that the prisoners were treason-felony convicts.

209. A further question was forced on our attention in the course of our inquiries, though it does not strictly fall within the letter of our instructions. It is the question whether prisoners convicted of a crime so exceptional in its nature that it has been thought right to modify prison discipline in their case to a certain extent, might not with advantage be more completely separated from the general body of convicts. We cannot be insensible to the difficulty, not always unattended with danger, of allowing any exceptional indulgences to a few individuals in the midst of a large prison population. Bearing this in mind, we are led to the conclusion that the difficulties attendant upon the location and treatment of political offenders, may perhaps be most readily and effectually overcome by setting apart from time to time a detached portion of some convict prison for prisoners of this class, and we recommend this subject to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

Report on the Case of J. O'D. Rossa, by Dr. Lyons.

London, Sept. 10, 1870.

WHILE I fully concur in, and have appended my signature to, the general Report of the Commission, which includes the case of this prisoner, I think it necessary to call attention in a more especial manner to certain parts of it, and to some considerations of very grave importance which appear to me to arise thereon.

It is necessary to premise, that whereas the assault on the Governor of Chatham Prison by O'Donovan Rossa took place about noon, on the 16th of June 1868, he was not manacled until 8.50 a.m. on the 17th, a lapse of nearly 19 hours. If handcuffs are a means of "restraint" and not of punishment, I fail to recognise the propriety of their use after such an interval, unless called for by a renewed act of violence, which has not been established in this case.

In view of rule 15, hereafter cited, which limits the power of a Governor in the imposition of Manacles to a period of 72 hours without the written order of a Director, I am of opinion that it was beyond the competence of the Governor or Deputy-Governor of Chatham prison to keep the prisoner in handcuffs day after day, from 17th June to 1st July 1868. No renewed acts of violence demanding the continuous employment of Manacles as a measure of restraint, for which purpose only does their use appear to be enjoined and justified by the prison rules, are recorded against the prisoner in that interval. No written or other instruction from a Director to authorize the continuous handcuffing of this prisoner within the days above named has been produced to the Commission, and it was not until 1st July that the prisoner was tried by a visiting Director. The prisoner asserts, and in this he is not contradicted, that the Handcuffs were removed when he was brought before the Director on that day. It is not on record that he had attempted to commit any act of violence since the 16th of June. It is even admitted by the warders that he submitted quietly to the daily imposition of the Manacles. He was notwithstanding ordered by the Director "to be kept in handcuffs" apparently for an indefinite period, as no time is specified. Having regard to the fact that the offence for which he was tried had been committed fifteen days previously, and that no new act of violence is recorded against him in the interval, as also to the consideration that Handcuffs are enjoined to be used as a measure of restraint only, I am of opinion that the Director on this occasion acted ultra vires in ordering the prisoner "to be kept in handcuffs," and that this was an arbitrary and unjustifiable exercise of authority, and that the order itself was defective inasmuch as it did not "Specify the cause thereof, and the time during which the prisoner is to be kept in irons." In the confirmation of the sentence by the Chairman of Directors on 7th July no allusion is made to the Handcuffs.

The sentence at the trial on 1st July, ordering amongst other things that he "be kept in handcuffs" was not confirmed by the Chairman of Directors until 7th July, and it was not communicated to the prisoner until the 20th July, on which last-mentioned day only that part of the same sentence of the 1st July which ordered 28 days punishment diet and six months penal-class diet, commenced to take effect.

I have, therefore, to report that in my opinion both the Governor and the visiting Director exceeded the power and authority entrusted to them, by keeping this prisoner in Handcuffs, under the circumstances above referred to, from 17th June to 20th July, and I further desire to add that it is much to be regretted that more prompt action was not taken by the Directors to secure a speedy trial in a case of such gravity, as pending his trial and the carrying into effect of his sentence the prisoner was kept under the most rigorous restraint, which in itself constitutes a very severe form of punishment, although, as I am fully aware, it is not technically so regarded in prison discipline.

Governor's Powers.

"15. In a case of absolute necessity he" (the governor) "may put a prisoner in irons, not as a punishment but only as a restraint, such irons, however, not to be continued on an offender for a longer period than 72 hours without the written order of a director, specifying the cause thereof, and the time during which the prisoner is to be kept in irons which order shall be preserved by the governor as his warrant."

See rule No. 15, p. 10. of the Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Convict Prisons. Approved by the Secretary of State for the Home Department. 1858.

Director's Powers.

" 11. In cases of necessity a director may, by order in writing, direct any prisoner to be kept in irons, such order to specify the cause thereof, and the time during which the prisoner is to be kept in irons. The irons on ordinary occasions to be common handcuffs."

See rule 11, p. 5. of the Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Convict Prisons. Approved by the Secretary of State for the Home Department. 1858.

Defence of Prisoner ROSA.

" Declines to make any defence except in writing."

Sentence on Prisoner.

" COLONEL HENDERSON,

" This prisoner is without doubt guilty of the very foul and insubordinate conduct alleged in the charge. The governor of Chatham prison is, as is well known, as temperate and judicious a person as it is possible to find; the officers in immediate charge of the department in which the prisoner is are selected for their judgment and fidelity; nevertheless he is, as stated in the evidence, and as his misconduct- sheet shows, constantly committing acts of insubordination and resistance towards his officers, and every available punishment has been tried in his case without effect, nor does kindness have any better influence upon him. He would in the ordinary course be punished for the offence he has committed by flogging, but it is thought that this punishment should not be inflicted without special authority. If it should not be thought advisable to inflict it, I can only suggest that he should be sentenced to 28 days punishment diet in close confinement, and be placed in the penal class for six months; also that to prevent the chance of his repeating outrages of this description on the officers of the prison who are obliged to visit him, all moveable articles and utensils be removed from his cell, and whatever is necessary being made a fixture, and that he be kept in handcuffs in the daytime. It is for consideration whether the prisoner should be allowed to remain in this prison, after having committed such an outrage on the governor, especially if it was decided that the usual punishment for such offences shall not be inflicted.

" (Signed) E. F. DU CANE.

" 1/7/68."

" I am unwilling to resort to corporal punishment in the case of this man, whose conduct savours of imbecility, except in the last resource. Carry out the director's punishment, 28 days' punishment diet in close confinement, and six months' penal class, and remove all moveable articles from his cell.

" (Signed) E. G. W. HENDERSON.

" 7/7/68."

I may be here allowed to observe, that having carefully considered the Acts of Parliament, as well as the Standing Orders and the Rules and Regulations for the Government of Convict Prisons, supplied for the information of the Commission by the Directors, I have not been able to find, and the Prison Department has not succeeded in producing to me Statutory authority for the powers exercised by the Directors of ordering Manacles to be imposed, for, apparently, indefinite periods, and leg-irons, 4½ to 6 lbs. weight, for a period of six months.

I desire further to remark, that the powers deputed by the Directors to Governors, by Standing Order No. 325, of imposing Manacles for a period of 72 hours, are largely in excess of those granted by Act of Parliament to "the Gaolers" of county and other prisons. The Act 2 & 3 Vict. c. 26, in part repealed, limited the Gaoler's power, as to irons, to 24 hours. "The Prison Act, 1865," expressly limits the powers of "the Gaoler" in the imposition of irons to 24 hours without an order in writing from a visiting Justice, see 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, sch. 1. No. 59).

As a constitutional principle of great importance is here involved, I beg leave to recommend that the whole question be referred to the Law Officers of the Crown, with a view that if it should be found necessary, the Powers to be entrusted to the Directors of Convict Prisons may be more clearly defined by Act of Parliament.

I have very fully considered all the charges which this prisoner has brought forward. He candidly admits himself that he has committed numerous prison offences. Some of these have been of considerable gravity, and necessarily entailed, in accordance with prison rules, severe punishments, and the employment of measures of restraint; others of the charges against him have been of a less important character, and I am not satisfied that in certain instances, as, for example, that in connexion with coir picking at Millbank, in July 1867, it was proper to punish him at all.

On various grounds, and in different prisons, O'Donovan Rossa was awarded a very unusual amount of prison punishment during the first three years of his imprisonment. He asserts, and is substantially borne out by the prison records, that he has undergone 123 days of bread-and-water punishment diet, 231 days of penal-class diet in a darkened cell, 28 days in the absolutely dark cell, and that he has been, in all, on 39 days in handcuffs. He admits that he acquired a bad prison character, but he attributes the attitude of resistance to prison discipline which he assumed to the manner and conduct of the authorities towards him. It is, I think, but just to him to add that during a long period when he was almost constantly undergoing report and punishment, his applications to the Governor and the Secretary of State show him to have been frequently asking for books of instruction. It is also worthy of remark that the almost continuous employment of bread-and-water punishment diet in the case of O'Donovan Rossa in the months of May and June 1868, did not prevent him from committing the assault, already referred to, on the Governor, on the 16th June, that the handcuffing which followed from 17th June to 20th July in punishment cell did not prevent him when liberated from committing a further offence, for which he was after an interval of two hours and a quarter again put in handcuffs for two days, and that the infliction of 28 days bread-and-water punishment diet, carried out from 20th July, did not prevent him from committing additional offences, for which he was further reported, and tried by the visiting Director in October 1868. The marked and immediate effect of the few well chosen words of Captain Du Cane, accompanied by a total remission of the punishments undoubtedly incurred by the prisoner's conduct, show in well-defined contrast the influence of moral agency, as against the failure of long-continued measures of coercion, accompanied with a total of more than 40 days bread-and-water diet, spread over the period from May 1st to October 1868. Since the interview of Captain Du Cane with treason felony convict J. O'Donovan Rossa in October 1868, this prisoner has on only one occasion incurred serious report.

I am of opinion that a more discriminating treatment of this prisoner by some of those under whose authority he has been placed would have been in all probability attended with more satisfactory results as to his prison history. But, subject to what has been already specially reported, I have to observe that the officials referred to had no alternative open to them, as their first duty is to carry out the ordinary rules of discipline in regard to those submitted to their charge by superior authority. The signal failure of all repressive measures in this case, furnishes a most forcible illustration of the necessity of separating prisoners of this class from ordinary criminals. Such a conspicuous and successful defiance of discipline is in itself a scandal of prison life, and a most dangerous example to the other convicts. As the consciousness of guilt breaks the spirit of the ordinary convict committed for a crime which involves moral turpitude, and all the more readily if he have been, as sometimes happens, a man of education or position, he recognizes at once and submits to the dictates of prison discipline. But the political prisoner, purely such, is, on the contrary, led to a higher and even exaggerated sense of his position by confinement in association with ordinary criminals. He considers that his sufferings ennoble his acts, and he rebels against prison rule.

The history of the case of J. O'Donovan Rossa in itself furnishes a cogent argument in proof of the necessity of dealing otherwise than as at present with the class of prisoners to whom he belongs. This is a subject to which the Commission has already specially alluded.

ROBERT D. LYONS.

I am of opinion that more frequent and strict supervision of warders in charge of refractory or imbecile prisoners is required, to prevent the possibility of unnecessary force or violence being employed whenever resistance is offered by a convict to the officer in authority over him.

ROBERT D. LYONS.

My Lord,

Loudon, October 31, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith the Memorandum which, as you are aware, on occasion of signing the Report on the Treatment of Treason-felony Convicts in English prisons, I reserved to myself the right of appending to it.

It was with great regret that I found myself unable to concur in all the conclusions arrived at by my colleagues on the Commission; but, after an anxious and impartial reconsideration of the whole bearings of the evidence elicited during our investigation, I have felt it an imperative duty to place upon record my dissent from those recommendations which appear to me either to imply undeserved censure on the ordinary management of convict prisons, or to be unnecessary or undesirable in the treatment of ordinary convicts.

From the suggestion made in the final paragraph of the Report, for the treatment of convicts of the treason-felony class altogether apart from ordinary convicts, I have also felt compelled to dissent; on the ground that, although the mode of carrying out the sentences passed on criminals is a question which must necessarily be considered by the responsible advisers of the Crown, the recommendation of such a question to their consideration did not fall within the limits of our Commission.

I have also thought it necessary to supplement the statements made in the Report with reference to the specific allegations respecting the treatment of the treason-felony convicts, by a further statement of some additional facts, in contradiction or explanation of the several allegations, which appear to me essential to a due vindication of the truth.

I have the honour to be,

My Lord,

Your obedient servant,

E. HEADLAM GREENHOW.

To the Right Honourable the Earl of Devon, Chairman of the Commission of Inquiry into the Treatment of Treason-felony Convicts in English Prisons.

Memorandum.

I have signed the Report on the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons, because I agree entirely in the main conclusions set forth in it; namely,

1. That "neither in the [prison] system itself, nor in its ordinary operation, due regard being had to the fact that convict prisons are intended to be places of penal discipline, did we observe anything to justify charges of unnecessary severity or harshness, or a neglect of the conditions necessary for the due preservation of health." Report, par. 20.
2. That "after a patient and minute investigation, we do not find any ground for the belief that the treason-felony prisoners in English prisons have, as a class, been subjected to any exceptionally severe treatment, or have suffered any hardships beyond those incidental to the condition of a prisoner sentenced to penal servitude." Report, par. 204.
3. That "it appears on the contrary, from the evidence of prison officers, Report, 205.

"confirmed in certain cases by the evidence of the prisoners themselves, that the prison authorities have sanctioned from time to time certain relaxations of convict discipline in their favour."

To the first of these general conclusions, however, certain qualifications are appended, in several of which I am unable to agree, and which seem to me very materially to lessen its weight. Certain suggestions and recommendations are also made in the Report, in which I cannot concur, either because I consider them uncalled for by the circumstances, or else because they refer to matters which seem to me beyond the province of the Commission.

The second of these conclusions is also, I think, deprived of its due force by the want, in the Report, of that clear and categorical dealing with the specific allegations respecting the treatment of the treason-felony prisoners, which the tenour of our instructions seemed to me to require.

I feel bound, therefore, though with much reluctance, to qualify my signature of the report, as I reserved to myself at the time the power of doing, by subjoining to it in this Memorandum an expression of my dissent from some of its minor conclusions; and, also, a further statement of facts in relation to several of the allegations respecting the treatment of treason-felony prisoners, which appear to me necessary to supplement the references made to them in the Report.

Before proceeding to particulars, I think it due to my colleagues on the Commission and just to myself to explain, that after diligently working with them throughout the whole of the investigation, and repeatedly stating my general views on the subject, I was compelled by unavoidable circumstances to be absent from several of the meetings held for the consideration of the Report, and was thereby deprived of the opportunity of pressing my objections, day by day, whilst the details were being discussed.

First, then, as regards some of the qualifications which are appended to the general approval of the working of the prison system, expressed in the passage I have quoted from the Report.

Diet.—No evidence was adduced before the Commission tending, in my opinion, to show that the dietary of the convict prisons is at any season insufficient in quantity for the maintenance of health, except at Portland, where convicts generally lose weight soon after their arrival; and where the medical officer, Mr. Blaker, and Mr. Gover, the medical officer of Millbank prison, who was sent to Portland to make a special inquiry into the subject, agreed in stating that they consider a slight increase of diet desirable. Still less, in my opinion, was there any evidence to lead to the conclusion that, with the exception of more accidents such as occur in all establishments, the food supplied in the convict prisons is over otherwise than wholesome and good of its kind. The bread, in all the prisons visited by the Commissioners, was fully equal in quality and manufacture to the best seconds bread supplied by bakers to the public; the soup was, without exception, highly nutritious; and the food of all kinds undergoes a scrutiny at least equally rigorous with that bestowed on the food supplied to other large public institutions, or to soldiers in the army, and is certainly more than equal, both in quality and quantity, to the diet obtainable by most free labourers. We also found the infirmary diet good, plentiful, and well cooked in every prison we visited.

In these circumstances, I feel obliged to dissent from the several recommendations in the Report for the issue of hot rations on Sundays at all the convict prisons, for the more frequent and direct supervision of articles of diet, and for the establishment of separate infirmary kitchens, as uncalled for; and, especially, as implying reflections upon the present system of prison management not justified in my view by any facts brought to our knowledge.

Labour and Medical Attendance.—All the evidence submitted to us with respect to the regulation of labour in the several convict prisons, where the prisoners are employed on public works, tended in my opinion to show that every reasonable precaution is taken to prevent the convicts suffering from the labour imposed upon them. On reception at every prison they undergo a medical examination before being set to labour, and the medical officer determines the nature of the work they are fit to undertake. Such prisoners as he finds unfit for hard labour or for exposure, are put to light or indoor labour; whilst those who, after having been put to hard labour, become unfit for it, are always on application to the medical officer re-examined and removed to lighter labour or to hospital, as their case may require. That, occasionally, prisoners who do not apply to the medical officer may continue at labour for which they are unfit, until their suffering becomes evident, is quite possible; and that, on the other hand, prisoners may apply for release from labour on grounds which the medical officer deems insufficient, is of course equally liable to occur; but, on the whole, it appeared to me amply proved that prisoners are relieved from hard labour or admitted into hospital whenever due cause is shown, and often for causes and ailments so slight that free workmen would disregard them altogether.

I see, therefore, no sufficient grounds for the recommendations made in the Report for the periodical weighing, and more frequent medical inspection, of those prisoners who are not on the sick list, and have not complained to the medical officer. The carrying out of these measures would necessitate a considerable increase of the medical staff of the convict prisons, which I am of opinion, if efficiently officered, is adequate to the reasonable requirements of the convicts, who have, as a rule, more careful and regular medical attendance, whenever they need it, than any class whatever of working men on the outside of prison walls.

Report, para. 57, 58.

Discipline.—Entertaining, as I do, very strongly the opinions expressed in the Report respecting the injurious effects to health from prolonged bread and water, or penal class diet; and feeling, even more strongly than is expressed in the Report, the desirability of abolishing confinement in absolutely dark cells, on the ground of its being a most unequal and to some temperaments even a dangerous punishment; I am, nevertheless, fully alive to the necessity of retaining in the power of the prison authorities means of punishment sufficient to control refractory prisoners.

I cannot, therefore, concur in the suggestions contained in the Report, that the prohibition of writing and receiving letters, and of attendance at church, for prisoners under punishment, should be removed or relaxed; inasmuch as the prison authorities would be thereby deprived of means of punishment which, whilst they may be expected to have a powerful influence on the feelings of the convicts, are the least likely of any to affect their health injuriously. Neither am I of opinion that the restrictions now imposed on the writing and receipt of letters by the convicts generally could be materially relaxed without prejudice to discipline. According to the regulations at present in force, it is in the power of every convict to earn for himself the privilege of writing and receiving letters, and receiving visits more frequently, by conducting himself well enough to obtain promotion into a higher class; so that the granting any considerable increase of these privileges to all convicts indiscriminately would take away one of the strongest inducements to good conduct that can be held out by the prison authorities.

Report, para. 59, 67.

Secondly, as regards the specific allegations respecting the treatment of the treason-felony convicts in English prisons, which led to the appointment of the Commission.

These are mainly comprised in an unsigned memorial, dated March 1870, addressed to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, but published in the Irish papers with the signatures of Letitia Luby and Catherine Mulcahy; and professing to be based on several declarations on oath, made by released prisoners and others, which were sent to the Home Secretary with the memorial, and together with it were placed by him in the hands of the Commissioners.

The memorial contains thirteen so-called specific allegations, of which the second, third, fourth, and eighth refer to the treatment of released prisoners, into whose cases the Commission did not consider it to be within their province to attempt any inquiry. The twelfth allegation has reference to a prisoner whose name does not appear on the list of treason-felony convicts in English prisons supplied to the Commission.

With the remainder of the thirteen specific allegations I propose to deal seriatim.

The first and fifth allegations refer to the treatment of the treason-felony convict Denis Downing Mulcahy, now in Woking prison. In them it is stated in substance:

1. That Mulcahy has constantly suffered in health from the bad quality of the prison diet, and indeed has constantly been unable to use it.

To this it may be a sufficient answer to state that Mulcahy's weight was as nearly as possible the same at Woking in May 1870 as it had been on his reception at Millbank in January 1867. It is true that between his first reception at Pentonville, in February 1866, and his reception at Millbank, in January 1867 he had lost fifteen pounds in weight; but as, during that period, he had been twice re-transferred to Mountjoy prison, pending law proceedings in the matter of his trial, and had been moved in all five times, it is doubtful whether the harass of mind and body necessarily caused by these frequent changes of prison, and by anxiety as to the result of the law proceedings, may not have had a large share in the loss of flesh sustained at that time.

2. That when confined in Dartmoor prison in January and February 1867, Mulcahy was compelled to perform hard labour in the stone-works and forced to draw heavy carts by means of a collar fastened round his neck. Also that whilst so labouring, he was suffering from hæmorrhage of the lungs.

The facts in the matter of these allegations are, that Mulcahy was not admitted to Dartmoor prison until the 8th of February 1867, and was for a very short time only employed with the ordinary convicts on the public works. It is true that carts containing stones are drawn by the convicts, but the mode of drawing them is never by a collar yoked round the neck, nor by a single convict as implied in the allegation. Mulcahy, however, in less than a fortnight after his arrival at Dartmoor was admitted into hospital, not for hæmoptysis, of which he had then no symptoms, but for an abrasion of the heel; and when that was cured he was put into the light-labour gang and worked in the tailors' shop until the 26th of April, when he had a slight attack of blood-spitting, for the first time at Dartmoor, and was again taken into hospital.

3. That no sufficient medical examination has been made of his case at any time, and that no suitable medicines have been given to him, and no improvement has been made in his food.

These statements are all totally at variance with the truth. The prisoner was examined at Pentonville on May 12th, 1866, and his chest was found to be healthy. He was again carefully examined whilst at Millbank, by Mr. Gover, the medical officer of that prison, who states that he found nothing amiss with his chest. After the occurrence of his spitting blood at Dartmoor, although it amounted only to the appearance of streaks of blood in the sputum, the governor of that prison, on the recommendation of the medical officer, wrote to the Directors of Convict Prisons, requesting that he should be removed as the climate might not agree with him; and he was, in consequence, transferred the following month to Woking, where he has been ever since. A certificate was laid before the Commission, written by Dr. Wilson, the assistant medical officer at Woking, in reply to inquiries made by the authorities in London respecting Mulcahy's state of health. Dr. Wilson certified, that the prisoner, having been invalided from Dartmoor for hæmoptysis, was carefully examined on reception, and that no symptoms of phthisis were detected, nor was the prisoner otherwise than in good general health. Nevertheless proper medicines for his presumed case, cod liver oil and guaiacum, were duly administered to him. Dr. Campbell, the chief medical officer of Woking prison, under whose care Mulcahy has been during his three years residence there, positively affirms that he has not had any traces of blood-spitting during the whole time, and that his chest has been examined on several occasions, with the result of finding it always sound and free from any evidence whatever of phthisis. Dr. Campbell and Dr. Wilson also state that the prisoner has suffered at times from trivial ailments, such as slight dyspepsia and neuralgia, for which he has been admitted into hospital and kept there, as Dr. Campbell explains, for considerable periods, in order to give him the advantage of the change to infirmary diet.

The sixth allegation states that O'Donovan Rossa at Chatham prison had his hands tied behind his back for 35 days.

After the fullest possible investigation of Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa's case we came to the conclusion, as set forth in the Report, that the preponderance of testimony was in favour of this statement being a correct one; excepting that the manacles were always taken off at night and removed from back to front during meal times. It seems, however, to me, only fair to the prison authorities to add, that what was undoubtedly an exceptional and irregular proceeding did not appear, in my opinion, from the evidence, to have been intentional on their part, but to have been a lapse consequent on the misanderstanding of verbal instructions. The governor of the prison, Captain Powell, on his return from a three days' absence, immediately following the gross assault upon himself which caused O'Donovan Rossa to be put in handcuffs, abstained from visiting and taking control of the prisoner whilst he was awaiting his sentence of punishment from the Directors for that offence. Captain Harvey, the deputy governor, who gave over charge of the prisoners on the return of his superior officer, did not consider that he was any longer responsible for the treatment of O'Donovan Rossa. Consequently the warders, receiving no countermand of the original order, continued to apply the handcuffs behind in accordance with it during the time stated. In truth, O'Donovan Rossa's language and conduct throughout his prison course, previous to his assault upon Governor Powell, had been so exceptionally violent and insubordinate, and had made him appear so intractable and mischievous a prisoner, that the warders may perhaps, not unnaturally, have taken for granted as intentional any measure which would keep him quiet without doing him harm. He had on numerous occasions resisted the officers, and once, after breaking his cell-pot, had put the pieces in a towel, so as to make it into a weapon of defence, with which he threatened the first person who entered his cell. He had at different times broken his utensils or furniture, and even the walls or door of his cell, and for several weeks before the day on which he committed the assault upon Governor Powell, by throwing over him the contents of his chamber-vessel, he had been almost constantly under report or punishment for breaches of prison rules, or wilful damage of prison property. On the other hand, it is but justice to O'Donovan Rossa to state, that subsequent to the period in question, up to the time of the investigation of his case by the Commission, his conduct had been good; and, that his honesty in admitting to us most of his prison offences, and his anxiety not to overstate what he considered his prison grievances, made a very favourable impression. Indeed, from what I saw of him, I fully believe that for a certain period he was in a state of ungovernable excitement, in which he committed acts, of which, as he himself said, he would at no other time have believed himself capable.

The seventh allegation affirms that the medical officers of the convict prisons systematically neglect their duties towards the treason-felony prisoners, take no notice of their being unable to use the food, and when applied to by the prisoners, accuse them of shamming.

So far is this from being in accordance with the truth that it was clearly established, by the evidence taken during our investigation, that the medical officers, generally, had paid special attention to the complaints of the treason-felony prisoners, on the understanding, as several of them stated before the Commissioners, that these prisoners were to be treated with consideration. In consequence of this understanding they have, as a class, been allowed changes of food and labour, have been kept in hospital, and recommended for removal from one prison to another on the score of health, on slighter grounds than would have procured the same indulgences for any ordinary prisoners.

The ninth allegation asserts that Richard Burke has been driven mad by inability to use the food in Chatham prison, and by careless medical treatment.

That Richard Burke is now, and has been for a length of time not easy to determine, of unsound mind, seems to be clearly established; but there is not the slightest evidence to show that his mental derangement is traceable in any way either to his food or medical treatment in prison. The medical officer of Millbank, the first convict prison into which he was received, and in which he only stayed sixteen days, states in his evidence that he always found Burke writing, and so absorbed in thought that he scarcely noticed his entrance; and adds, that his manner was somewhat impatient as well as absent. In Chatham prison he refused his food because he was under the delusion, first, that it produced worms; and latterly, that it was poisoned. He also refused his medicine under the morbid idea that it contained bi-chloride of mercury. These were not perhaps at the time sufficient grounds on which to question the man's sanity; but, viewed by the light of the subsequent progress of Richard Burke's case, the evidence, so far as it goes, points in my opinion to the fact of his having manifested symptoms of incipient insanity from a very early period of his imprisonment.

With regard to the medical treatment of Richard Burke, it appears that, in addition to the attendance of the ordinary medical officers of the prisons in which he was successively located, he was twice, when his mental derangement had become more apparent, specially examined at the desire of the London authorities, by the late Dr. Meyer, superintendent of the Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum, in order to determine his real condition. Such cases, however, are sometimes most difficult of decision, and differences of opinion existed, even up to the time of our investigations, among the various medical men who had seen Barke, as to the certainty of his insanity. Meantime he had been treated with care and consideration in the infirmary of Woking prison, and by order of Dr. Campbell, the medical officer, who regarded him as insane, had had special attendance from the wardens to induce him to take his food, which he often refused as poisoned, and to get out of bed, which, like many persons of unsound mind, he constantly resisted doing.

The tenth allegation reiterates the charge of the insufficiency of the convict dietary, and of its being calculated to produce dyspepsia, diarrhoea, and other disorders of the system.

This assertion has been sufficiently answered under the head of diet, except from one point of view. The convict dietary, though good and wholesome of its kind, is not such as can be palatable to men who, like most of the treason-felony prisoners, have belonged to the middle, rather than to the labouring classes. To those among them who had delicate stomachs it could not fail to be highly distasteful, and would be not unlikely to disagree with them, more or less, until they became accustomed to it. But these are hardships necessarily incident to the condition of penal servitude; and, as such, have been suffered in silence and resignation by men of far more delicate breeding than any of the treason-felony prisoners. Nor must it be overlooked that whenever any symptoms of illness have appeared to result from the use of the ordinary prison diet, the medical officers have ordered a change of food, or admission into hospital, exactly as far illness arising from any other cause. This is abundantly shown in the printed evidence; but the conclusive proof that the convict dietary has not in the long run been injurious to the health of the treason-felony prisoners is to be found in the fact that, whilst seven of the twenty-six prisoners included in our inquiry have lost weight, six have remained stationary, and no less than thirteen have decidedly increased in weight, during the period of their imprisonment.

The eleventh allegation refers to Power, a prisoner now at Woking, who is stated to have suffered and to be still suffering much from the prison food and discipline, to have his lungs affected, and to require treatment such as cannot be carried out in the prison.

The fact that Edward Power has progressively gained in weight, to the extent of 21 lbs., between the time of his first reception into an English prison in March 1867 and the time of his last being weighed in May 1870, is a sufficient refutation of the first part of this allegation. With respect to the latter part, it is true that Power, when at Portland in September 1868, showed, in the opinion of the medical officer there, some symptoms of incipient phthisis, for which he was invalided to Woking, where, with the exception of two months at Millbank, he has remained ever since. But although Power is obviously of a strumous constitution, having the scar of an old abscess on the right side of the neck, and belongs to a phthisical family, having lost a sister from that disease; yet, in fact, the symptoms which seemed to indicate incipient phthisis have not become developed. The medical officers under whose care he has been concern in reporting him as in fairly good health, and free from disease of the lungs. Dr. Campbell, of Woking, says that he uses all his food, rarely or never re-breathing, night-sweats, nor any other symptoms of phthisis. Mr. Gover, of Millbank, states that, in March 1870, he was led, by Power's complaints of pains in the chest, to examine him carefully by auscultation several times, and that he could discover no cause to account for the pains, and came to the conclusion that there was no disease of the lungs. Lastly, the prisoner's increasing weight renders it evident that his health has improved rather than deteriorated during the period of his detention, and that his medical treatment has been as successful as could well have been the case had he been at liberty.

The thirteenth allegation recites that O'Connell, Devoy, McClure and Halpin, now at Chatham, all suffer from the bad food and strict discipline; that O'Connell's health has been completely shattered, and he is labouring under heart disease; that Devoy's health has become visibly impaired, and he has had frequent fainting fits; and that M'Clure has also suffered in health and is subject to fainting fits.

These four prisoners, like many of the others, persistently refused to make any statements to the Commissioners regarding their health or treatment; but from their aspect, from the statistics of their weights, and from the reports of the medical officer, it appears that two of them, viz., Devoy and Halpin, are and have been in good health and have gained in weight during their imprisonment, whilst the two others, viz., O'Connell and M'Clure, have been delicate, weakly men throughout their imprisonment, and have progressively lost weight.

Charles Underwood O'Connell, when at Portland in 1866-8, was noted as in tolerable health, with possibly slight aortic disease (?), but was never in hospital. Later, when he was at Millbank, Mr. Gover found no evidence of organic disease, but great nervous debility and dyspepsia, for which he was put on hospital diet and excused from hard work during nine out of his ten months' stay there. In March 1869, he was transferred to Chatham, where he has never been put to out-door labour, but has only gone through the form of mending stockings, and has had his diet frequently changed. Taking into consideration, however, all the facts of this prisoner's case, viz., that he has always been a delicate and nervous man and has now palpitation of the heart and extreme nervous tremour, and is moreover progressively losing weight, I am of opinion that he really is in failing health, and that in a man of his physical temperament such failure may be partly due to mental excitement and anxiety connected with his imprisonment.

John Devoy has not been in bad health at any time during his imprisonment. At Portland he was never in hospital. At Millbank Mr. Gover states that he took him off penal diet, not that he was suffering from it, but that, on account of his being a treason-felony prisoner, he wished to prevent the possibility of injury to his constitution. At Chatham, where he has been since March 1869, he has never been put to hard labour, though he has been in good health, requiring no medical treatment. He has had no fainting fits. On reception at Millbank in 1867 he weighed 140 pounds, whilst on May 12th, 1870, his weight was 146½ pounds.

John M'Clure, according to the statement of the medical officer at Chatham, has had only a single fainting fit, from which he recovered almost immediately; it occurred on May 3rd, 1869, in very hot weather. He has been occasionally in the infirmary, but has required very little medical treatment, though he has frequently refused the food. He has never been put to hard labour at Chatham. Mr. Gover, of Millbank prison, states that he took him off penal diet on the same grounds as Devoy. He is obviously a man of weakly constitution, and has gradually lost weight during his three years' imprisonment to the extent of 17 pounds.

William Halpin has suffered from no ailment, but a slight chronic cough, to which he had been subject for several years. He was in good health whilst at Millbank, only once requiring a dose of ordinary aperient medicine. At Chatham he has frequently complained of the food and refused to work, but he has steadily increased in weight, gaining 17 pounds between November 1867, when he was received at Millbank, and May 1870, when he was last weighed at Chatham.

I have thus gone through the specific allegations in the memorial, and have, I think, made it evident that, whilst many of them have no foundation in the real facts of the case, others groundlessly attribute the facts which really exist to the neglect or cruelty of the prison authorities; as if the condition of penal servitude were the one condition of life in which mental and bodily health cannot fail from natural causes.

Besides the above allegations made on behalf of the treason-felony prisoners, the Commission investigated the allegations of ill-treatment in prison, made by a few of the treason-felony prisoners themselves; the larger number of them, however, having finally declined to make any statements, notwithstanding the extraordinary facilities granted to them for getting up their cases.

The allegations made by different prisoners included complaints of the diet, clothing, labour, medical attendance, discipline, and in fact of every arrangement connected with the prisons in which they have been located. Most of these complaints have been fully dealt with in the report, or in the supplementary statements I have felt bound to make; but there is one complaint, which has been the subject of much animadversion, on which it seems to me that a clearer explanation is desirable.

In the matter of clothing it was alleged that the treason-felony convicts on their arrival at Pentonville, were deprived of the flannels they had brought with them from Mountjoy prison; and that, although their arrival was in mid-winter they were not supplied with others, to the great detriment of their health.

The facts of the matter are these. For obvious reasons prison rules require that the clothing belonging to one prison should not be retained by prisoners transferred to another; and, therefore, on the arrival of the treason-felony prisoners at Pentonville prison, their Mountjoy clothing, which included flannels, was necessarily exchanged for Pentonville clothing. But at Pentonville prison, which is constantly warmed during the winter and the temperature kept up to a fixed minimum, flannels formed no part of the ordinary prison dress, and were only supplied on the recommendation of the medical officer. Consequently it is true that, on the first night of their arrival, none of the treason-felony prisoners got flannels; but, on the following day Bryan Dillon, a deformed and weakly man, was supplied with them; Reantree and Mulcahy obtained them on the fourth day after their arrival, Mulcahy also on application getting an extra rug at night; and out of eight treason-felony prisoners included in our inquiry, who had been located at Pentonville, six were sooner or later, as they appeared to require it, supplied with flannels on the recommendation of the medical officer. Nor was it substantiated that any one of the prisoners had really been injured in health by the deprivation.

In conclusion, I feel compelled to state that I am unable to concur with my colleagues on the Commission in the suggestion made in the final paragraph of the Report, for the setting apart, from time to time, of a detached portion of some convict prison for the reception of prisoners of the treason-felony class. As is stated in the paragraph itself, no such question was comprised in the subjects referred to us for inquiry, and I cannot but regard it as beyond the province of the Commission to recommend to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government a measure involving, as it appears to me, the virtual establishment of a special prison for prisoners of the class of the treason-felony convicts.

CORRESPONDENCE with Mr. BUTT, Q.C., and Mr. NOLAN.

No. 1.

Amnesty Association Rooms, Mechanics' Institute,
My Lord, Dublin, May 21, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to enclose to your lordship copies of a letter addressed by me to Mr. Bruce on behalf of the Committee of the Amnesty Association of Ireland, and of the reply.

I have laid these letters before the Committee, and am desired by them to express an earnest desire that your lordship will accede to their request conveyed in their letter to Mr. Bruce.

They have forbidden addressing the Commission until they had a further opportunity of ascertaining the feelings of the friends and relatives of the political prisoners. They are now able to say on their part that the feeling is universal that the inquiry will not otherwise be satisfactory.

This sentiment is very strongly entertained by the ladies' committee, composed of ladies principally the immediate relatives of the prisoners, for the purpose of administering to the wants of the wives and families of those imprisoned.

The Committee of the Amnesty Association feel confident that it would be the wish of your lordship and your brother Commissioners that the investigation should not only elicit the entire truth, but that its results should satisfy the public that it has done so. The Committee may refer to the result of former inquiries and to the necessity of the appointment of the present Commission as an evidence of the proof of the failure of past investigations to attain their ends.

They think they could easily show that a failure has been caused by the want of some person representing the parties most interested in the inquiry to attend and take part in the investigation.

The Committee believe they are in the possession of facts relative to the treatment of the political prisoners which in the interest of justice they think it only fair to fully investigate.

Hoping that your lordship will accede to the proposal, and requesting the favour of an early reply,

I am, &c.

The Right Hon.
The Earl of Devon. J. NOLAN, Hon. Secretary.

ENCLOSURE No. 1.

Copy.

Amnesty Association Rooms, Mechanics' Institute,
Sir, Dublin, May 7, 1870.

I HAVE been requested by the Committee of the Amnesty Association, both on their behalf and on behalf of the friends of the Irish political prisoners, to address you in relation to the proposed inquiry into their treatment. The public papers have informed us that the Government intend of assenting to Mr. Callan's motion for a Select Committee have resolved on holding an inquiry by commission. The inquiry would certainly be more satisfactory if the friends of the prisoners alleged to have been ill-treated were permitted to take part in it. With this view we take the liberty of asking that the investigation of the Commissioners should be attended by some person on behalf of the friends of the prisoners, who will be permitted to offer evidence and put questions to the witnesses who may be examined. We have no difficulty in assuring you that if this suggestion be adopted the friends of the prisoners will select a person who will be unobjectionable, and whose intervention will have no other object than that of eliciting the whole truth.

Requesting the honour of a reply at your earliest convenience,

I am, &c.

The Right Hon.
The Home Secretary. J. NOLAN, Hon. Secretary.

Sir, Whitehall, May 11, 1870.
I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th inst. requesting, by desire of the Dublin Amnesty Association, that the investigation of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of the Irish political prisoners may be attended by some person on behalf of the friends of the prisoners, who will be permitted to offer evidence and put questions to the witnesses who may be examined; and I am to acquaint you, in reply, that the gentlemen who have been appointed to conduct the inquiry will have full power to investigate the questions submitted to them by the means they consider most effectual for eliciting the truth, and that your application should be addressed to the Earl of Devon, who will preside as chairman at the inquiry.

I am, &c.

J. Nolan, Esq. A. J. O. LEBDELL.

No. 2.

3, Parliament Street, London, S.W.,
May 28, 1870.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Commissioners who have been appointed to inquire into the treatment in convict prisons in England of prisoners under sentence of penal servitude for the crime of treason-felony, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st inst., with its enclosure. You request that during the inquiry some person on behalf of the friends of the prisoners may be permitted to be present, for the purpose of offering evidence and putting questions to the witnesses who may be examined. The Commissioners have given to this proposal full and careful consideration, but they are of opinion that under the circumstances it would not tend to promote the due investigation of the important subject entrusted to them if they were to accede to it. At the same time I am instructed to add, that as it is the desire and intention of the Commissioners to elicit the whole truth, and to avail themselves for the purpose of all means in their power, they will be ready to receive from the friends of the prisoners, or any person acting on their behalf, any statement in writing which it may be wished to submit to them. I am further directed to state that if it be desired by the friends of the prisoners to tender any witnesses for examination, the names of such proposed witnesses, with any explanatory statement sufficient to indicate the points in regard to which it is wished that they should be examined, should be forwarded to this office. The Commissioners will then, if such proposed evidence appear likely to be in any way material, give full opportunity for its production. I am instructed, in conclusion, to inform you that care will be taken to give full notice to such prisoners a reasonable time before his examination, and so to conduct such examination as to enable each man to give his evidence in the most free, full, and unconditional manner.

I am, &c.

J. Nolan, Esq. W. SWINNER OLLIVANT, Secretary, &c.

No. 3.

Amnesty Association Rooms, Mechanics' Institute,
Sir, Dublin, June 1, 1870.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th inst., and I am desired by the Committee of the Amnesty Association to express their regret at the determination of the Commissioners to refuse the request made by them on behalf of the friends and relatives of the political prisoners.

As it is of importance that there should be no misunderstanding as to the nature of their request, the Committee beg to repeat their proposal.

It is that some gentleman of unexceptionable character and position, to be approved of by the Commissioners, should be permitted to be present at the inquiry, to put questions to the witnesses, and to suggest to the Commissioners cases to be inquired into, and the names of witnesses to be called; this interference, of course, to be in all respects subject to the control and discretion of the Commissioners.

With every respect for the high character and justice of the Commissioners, the Committee do not believe that even their character will give weight to the result of an investigation conducted in such and without the assurance which is generally thought essential to a fair inquiry, and leave no person who can be considered a free agent to press the complaints of prisoners against officials who hold over them a power almost literally that of life and death.

The Committee thus remind the Commissioners that the result of one secret and ex-parte inquiry, although conducted by men of high character, is now admitted to have been illusive, and that ministers of the Crown have been induced by the representations of subordinate officers to make statements which have been subsequently admitted to be untrue.

Nothing but the most searching and open investigation can satisfy the public mind, and the Committee believe that the investigation cannot take place in the manner intended by the Commissioners. Indeed, it is generally understood that one gentleman who was named on the Commission refused to take part in it on account of the unsatisfactory character of the proposed inquiry.

The Committee must decline the proposal to send in statements of cases, with full particulars of circumstances and dates, &c., as suggested in your letter. Even if this were possible, by doing so the friends of the prisoners would only lead themselves to creating the delusion that they were parties to the inquiry, when in reality that would not exercise over it any influence whatever.

The Committee think, in justice to the Commissioners, it is right to forward to them a copy of a pamphlet styled "Things not generally known concerning England's Treatment of her Political Prisoners," extremely circulated in Ireland. The Committee are in no way responsible for the publication of this pamphlet, or for the statements it contains, but they believe its publication has the sanction of the Irish Committee, whose immediate relationship with many of the prisoners under them feel acutely any unnecessary persecution or indignity inflicted on their kindred, and the Commissioners will observe that its general statements are endorsed by the signatures of a number of the arrested prisoners, who, while in prison, witnessed or endured what is described.

These statements have been and are generally believed in Ireland, and strong feelings of horror and indignation have been excited in this alleged system of cruelty practiced on Irish political prisoners, which has impaired the reason and rained the health of many, which has driven some insane, and caused the death of others. The Commissioners will see that some of the most startling of its statements rest upon the testimony of witnesses who are now free from prison control, but whose testimony can easily be obtained.

The Committee believe the allegations of the pamphlet, many of which are made with the most minute particularity, may be useful in suggesting points of inquiry upon which the friends of the prisoners, in common with the whole Irish people, are anxious that a full, searching, and open investigation should take place.

The Committee therefore repeat their proposal, in the warmest hope that even at this stage the Commissioners will accede to their request, and allow the inquiry to assume such a course as will be most calculated to satisfy all that is endeavored to elicit the entire truth.

I have, &c.

J. NOLAN,

W. Spencer Olivant, Esq.

Hon. Secretary.

No. 4.

MY LOVE, Eades Street, Dublin, June 6, 1870.

THE Committee of the Irish Amnesty Association have submitted to me, as president of the association, the correspondence which has taken place between them and the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of the Irish political prisoners.

They have at the same time made to me a very warm request that I should consent to represent the friends and relatives of the prisoners at the inquiry, and that I should state to your lordship that I am willing to do so. They are under an impression that such a statement from me may have some influence on the determination of the Commissioners with reference to their application to permit them to be represented.

With some reluctance I have acceded to the latter portion of their request, and I trust that the Commissioners will not consider me as intruding myself on their notice when I say that if the Commissioners accede to the proposal to allow the friends of the prisoners to be represented at the inquiry, I am willing and ready to represent them.

I must, however, do so entirely in the capacity of a person possessing the confidence of those most interested in the inquiry. My position in connection with the Amnesty Association makes it impossible for me to appear in any professional capacity, even if the Commissioners thought the nature of the inquiry admitted of such appearance.

I believe I do so far possess the confidence of the friends of the prisoners and of the portion of the Irish public who take a deep interest in the inquiry that my presence at the investigation would be accepted as a guarantee that the inquiry would be a full and searching one.

I entirely concur in the opinion expressed by the Committee that any inquiry in which the friends of the prisoners are not represented will be regarded by the Irish people as unsatisfactory and illusive.

I need not refer your lordship to the pamphlet already submitted to your lordship by the Committee, and the statements which it contains. These statements have obtained a very wide circulation and a very extensive belief.

It is, I think, of deep concern to the honour of the British Government that the charges which have been made of inhuman treatment of the prisoners should be fully and openly investigated, and that the investigation should be so conducted as to satisfy the public opinion not only of Ireland but of the civilized world that, whatever may be the result of the inquiry, the inquiry has been impartial and complete.

It is only this conviction that induces me to undertake a duty the fulfilment of which involves a very considerable sacrifice and great personal inconvenience, but considering the part I have taken in relation to the political prisoners, I believe I ought not to allow personal considerations to interfere with that which is really the discharge of a public duty.

I will therefore ask of the Commissioners to regard me as personally joining in the request of the Committee that I, or, if the Commissioners have any objection to me, some other person who may be approved of by them, may be permitted to attend the inquiry as the representative of the friends and relatives of the prisoners.

There are some points which would be essential to make the presence of such a representative of any real use.

He should be permitted to put questions to any official of the prison or other witness who might be examined, subject, of course, to the control of the Commissioners as to the nature of the questions to be put.

Subject to the same control he should be at liberty to suggest subjects for inquiry, and to name witnesses to be called.

He should be at liberty to examine the released prisoners as to the treatment they received during their imprisonment.

Thus, of course, assumes that the inquiry should embrace the whole question of the treatment of the political convicts, especially an inquiry into the allegations which those released prisoners have made.

He should be permitted to be present during all the evidence that is taken.

And, lastly, an authentic record of that evidence should be preserved.

To those among the Commissioners who know me I need scarcely offer the assurance that any interference of mine would not be of a character to embarrass in any way the proceedings of the Commissioners. Any such interference would be, in the spirit of this letter, deemed easily by a desire to aid the Commissioners in eliciting the whole truth, and to give public confidence in the result of the inquiry, whatever it might be.

THE RIGHT HON.
THE EARL OF DEVON.

No. 6.

SIR, 3, Parliament Street, June 9, 1870.

I am directed by the Commissioners for inquiring into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons to inform you that they have given careful consideration to the letter which has been addressed by you, as President of the "Irish Amnesty Association," to their chairman, under date of the 4th inst.

In that letter you state that, "if the Commissioners accede to the proposal to allow the friends of the prisoners to be present at the inquiry, you are willing and ready to represent them, not professionally but in the capacity "of a person possessing the confidence of these most interested in the inquiry?" and you further state "that, in your opinion, in order to make the presence of such a representative of any real use, he should be permitted to put questions to any official of the prison, or other witnesses who might be examined, subject, of course, to the control of the Commissioners as to the nature of the questions to be put. Subject to the same control, he should be at liberty to suggest subjects for inquiry, and to name witnesses to be called; and he should be at liberty to examine the released prisoners as to the treatment they received during their imprisonment."

With regard to the last-mentioned point, the Commissioners desire me to point out that, by their appointment, their inquiry is limited to the cases of treason-felony prisoners at present in English prisons, and they have no power to extend its range.

In reliance to the other points alluded to in the above questions from your letter, I am to state that while the Commissioners fully appreciate the earnest and disinterested tone of your communication, and the sense of public duty which has actuated it, they are unable to depart from the principles laid down in their letter to the Amnesty Association of date, as to the mode of conducting the inquiry, and that they must, therefore, decline to permit any person on behalf of the friends of the prisoners to be present during the inquiry for the purpose of putting questions to the witnesses.

It is a satisfaction, however, to them to observe that some of the important suggestions made by you may be substantially carried into effect under the terms of their former letter. The Commissioners desire, therefore, to request their readiness to receive any written statement which it may be deemed by the friends of the prisoners, or any person acting on their behalf, to submit to them, and to examine any witness (including, if it be thought necessary, any released prisoner) who may tender himself for examination, whose evidence may appear likely to have any material bearing on the subject of their inquiry.

It is obvious that by this means it will be competent for yourself, or any other friend of the prisoners, to make also any relevant statement orally before the Commissioners, if such course be desired.

I am further to inform you that the Commissioners have already taken measures for securing to each prisoner adequate leisure for preparing any statement which he may wish to make, and the use of pen, ink, and paper for so doing, and that they will take care that no examination shall take place except after due notice.

If it be wished that any friend of any prisoner shall be allowed to visit him, at a reasonable time and for a reasonable period, in order to assist him in the preparation of his proposed statement, an application for that purpose should be made to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and the Commissioners have recommended that such a request should be acceded to.

In regard to one of the concluding observations in your letter, the Commissioners instruct me to inform you that a competent shorthand writer will be employed, and an authentic account of the evidence thus procured. It will be the duty of the Commissioners that, at the proper time, full publicity shall be given to the evidence thus recorded, as well as to their report, under the conviction, which they share with you, that they only will the result of the inquiry command public confidence.

The Commissioners observe that your letter has been already published in the public journals. They request, therefore, that the same publicity may also be given to their present communication.

I am, &c.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT,
Secretary.

Isaac Butt, Esq., Q.C.,
Eccles Street, Dublin

No. 7.

87a, Eccles Street, Dublin, June 11, 1870.

1. I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th inst., conveying from the Commissioners for inquiry into the treatment of the treason-felony convicts their refusal to accede to the request contained in my letter of the 4th inst., that either I or some other person acting as the representative of the friends of the prisoners should be permitted to be present at said take part in the inquiry.

2. I have sent your letter to the papers, as the Commissioners desire. I am sure the Commissioners will excuse me if I feel it right to advert to some points in that letter. I should be very sorry to be supposed to neglect in the statement that the inquiry will command public confidence.

I regret to be obliged to say that I am quite sure that an inquiry conducted in the manner proposed by the Commissioners will be regarded by the Irish public with very deep distrust. I do not believe it will succeed in alluring the truth.

3. I understand distinctly from your letter that the Commissioners do not intend to make any inquiry into the statements which have been made by some of the released prisoners as to the treatment they received while undergoing their sentences. I take the liberty of pointing out that this is a defect which is so fatal to the entire character of the investigation that, if the present authority of the Commissioners does not warrant that inquiry, they ought to request of the Government to rectify the omission.

4. You will remember that in my letter I asked that a person attending on behalf of the friends of the prisoners should be permitted to examine the released prisoners as to the treatment they received during their imprisonment.

5. This is met by a positive and distinct refusal, on the ground that the inquiry of the Commissioners "is limited to the cases of treason-felony prisoners at present in English prisons, and they have no power to extend its range." It appears to me that the refusal to receive such evidence is in itself a stifling of all inquiry.

6. The Commissioners have before them the pamphlet submitted by the Committee of the Amnesty Association. They have observed, no doubt, that in that pamphlet very distinct and positive statements are made upon the authority of released prisoners who are named. These statements disclose a system of treatment which I will not describe by any harsher term than inhumanity. It is, of course, true that the released prisoners can only testify to instances of this treatment as it affected themselves. It is not direct or positive evidence that similar cruelties were practiced upon others; but to hold an inquiry into the character of the treatment of the prisoners, and to refuse the evidence of the released prisoners as to their own experience of that treatment, appears to me a proceeding only calculated to deprive the investigation of all authority or value.

7. It is only from the statements of the released prisoners that those taking an interest in the fate of those who are still detained can obtain any full or accurate information as to that which has been done within the prison walls. Considering the position of convicts undergoing penal servitude is a corrupt prison, the impossibility of communicating effectively with them, and the position in which they are placed towards the officers, who exercise over them a power that is practically uncontrolled, it would, I think, naturally suggest itself to anyone that the most efficient mode of ascertaining the real character of the prison treatment would be by appealing to the evidence of those persons who would declare their own personal experience of convict life, but who are now in free communication with the world outside the prison walls, and who can make their statements without the fear of provoking renewed ill-treatment from the persons of whose acts they complain. If that evidence is not appealed to, there will really be no investigation at all.

8. I cannot admit that any of the suggestions I have made can be substantially carried into effect under the decision at which the Commissioners have arrived. Those suggestions were all dependent on an auxiliary one—that some one should be permitted to attend the inquiry on the representative of the friends of the prisoners. In the absence of this all the other suggestions are useless.

9. The Commissioners declare their readiness to receive any written statement which it may be desired by the friends of the prisoners, or anyone acting on their behalf, to submit to them, "and to examine any witness, including, if it be thought necessary, any released prisoner who may tender himself for examination, and whose evidence may appear likely to have any material bearing on the subject of this inquiry." It is obvious that by these means it will be competent for yourself or any other friend of the prisoners to make also any relevant statement orally before the Commissioners, if such course be desired.

10. It is obvious from the previous intimation that the examination of the released prisoners would be confined to the very rare instances in which any of them happened to have witnessed ill-treatment of the prisoners who are still detained.

11. I most very respectfully desire to avail myself of the permission to send in a written statement, or even to make a statement orally before the Commissioners. I think that, on reflection, the Commissioners will see that this is a proposal to which it would be impossible to accede. The proposal is an invitation to make to the Commissioners statements that must involve, more or less, charges against individuals without being given the opportunity of proving them. It would appear to me that the very moment the Commissioners permit any man to come before them as an accuser; it ought to follow of necessity that that accuser should not only be permitted but called on to make good his accusation, and to make it good by such evidence and in such a manner as he himself thinks fit. It is only on such terms that any man of right feeling should consent to place himself in the position of an accuser.

12. I cannot help adding that it appears a still more objectionable proceeding to place the prisoners themselves in the position of complainers and accusers against those who are set over them, while they are denied the ordinary privilege which every court of inquiry concedes to those whose complaints they investigate.

13. Anyone acquainted with the ordinary proceedings of the courts of justice will understand at once the wide difference between the permission to send in a written statement to be inquired into by the Commissioners themselves, and the permission to intervene in the inquiry by producing and examining witnesses, and, more than that, by putting questions to the officials, who no doubt will be examined to sustain the propriety of their own conduct.

14. With some little experience in investigations into facts, and with some knowledge of the nature of the case into which the Commissioners are about to inquire, I must state my perfect conviction that no care or anxiety on the part of the Commissioners to elicit the truth can make up for the absence of such a representative of the friends of the prisoners as I have suggested.

15. I cannot, of course, expect now to change the decision of the Commissioners; I say, however, venture to suggest to them that allegations have been made, as to the treatment of the prisoners, of gravity enough to induce the Government to take the extraordinary step of issuing a commission of inquiry. When once this step is taken, it would appear to be a matter of course that those who have made these allegations should be allowed a full opportunity of substantiating them.

16. It is in no spirit of disrespect to the Commissioners that I repeat the expression of my conviction that their refusal to allow this opportunity will destroy all confidence in their proceedings. The effect will certainly not be diminished when it is observed that no reason is assigned for the refusal. It is not even suggested in your letter that the granting of the request which was made could in any way embarrass the proceedings of the Commission, or tend to prevent the ascertainment of the truth. The effect which the Commissioners make of allowing a partial interference with their proceedings will only add to the strength of the impression. It certainly will not tend to weaken it to observe that the interference of the friends of the prisoners is permitted and even invited, subject to the condition that it is to stop at the precise point at which alone that interference could be of the slightest inference or use.

17. It is with deep and unfeigned regret that I am compelled to write thus of an inquiry which I had hoped would see way or other have put an end to a grievous scandal to the Government of the Queen. I have at least the satisfaction of knowing that it is not my fault if a second abortive and illusory inquiry aggravates the reproach and the scandal which nothing but a full, free, and an open investigation ever will remove.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT,
Secretary, &c.

I HAVE, &c.
ISAAC BUTT.

No. 9.

8th, 3, Parliament Street, June 18, 1870.

I AM directed by the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant.

I am also directed to inform you that the Commissioners have weighed fully and carefully the considerations and arguments put forward in your letter, but as not prepared, in regard to the mode of conducting their inquiry, to depart from the course of proceeding which they then marked out for themselves, and have indicated in their former letters. In reference to your application as regards the released prisoner, the Commissioners, while ready to receive any of such persons as witnesses (as they have already stated), must decline to make him one of the subject of separate investigation and formal report. At the same time they will readily receive any evidence relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts in prison in England, though it may not have a direct bearing on any of the cases which form the immediate subject of their inquiry.

The Commissioners feel sure that you will not consider them wanting in courtesy if they forbear to discuss points already dealt with in their former communications.

In conclusion, in order to correct and prevent misapprehension as regards the course which in reference to the prisoners and their friends the Commissioners have taken, and intend to take, they think it desirable to re-enunciate briefly the provisions which they have made for the conduct of the inquiry:

1. The prisoners will have full opportunity for making an oral statement to the Commissioners as regards their treatment; such statement to be made in a private room in the absence of any prison officer; and after a distinct intimation from the Commissioners, to which they will give full effect, that no statement so made will in any way prejudicially affect the prisoner's future position and treatment.
2. They will further have full opportunity for making written statements, and for offering such oral explanations of these as they may desire.
3. The Commissioners will be prepared to receive any statement in writing from any friend of the prisoners acting on his behalf, and to take the oral evidence of any witness (including, if desired, any released prisoner) which may appear to be relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts.
4. The Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State that access to prisoners at a reasonable hour, and for a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting them in the preparation of their statements, should be allowed to friends of such prisoners under such regulations and conditions as the Government may think necessary. Application in such case should be made to the Home Office.
5. The evidence will be taken down by a shorthand writer.
6. The report and evidence will be made public.

The Commissioners confidently believe that under these conditions, which have for their object the discovery of the entire truth, the inquiry will be thoroughly and satisfactorily carried out.

As the Commissioners deem it of much importance that the above provisions for the conduct of the inquiry should be known as generally as possible, they request that you will publish this letter.

I HAVE, &c.

Secretary.

IRISH DESK, ESQ., Q.C.,
FECLES STREET, DUBLIN.

No. 9.

8th, 3, Parliament Street, Dublin, June 19, 1870.

ON my return home this morning from London I received your letter of yesterday.

Knowing the interest which is taken by the Irish people in the subject of that letter, I am unwilling to let even this day pass without sending it to the papers, as the Commissioners desire, accompanying it at the same time with my reply.

While I am bound to express my thanks to the Commissioners for the tone of the communication they have addressed to me, they will forgive me for saying that I cannot now regard myself as in any way entitled to maintain a correspondence with the Commissioners, or called on to be the medium of communicating their views to the public.

I made to the Commissioners a request that I might be permitted to attend the inquiry as a friend in whom some, at least, of the relatives of the prisoners would place confidence.

In refusing this request the Commissioners did me the honour of entering on a discussion of the question, and at the same time desiring that I should give their letter to the public.

The duty of complying with their desire imposed on me the necessity of pointing out at the same time the unsatisfactory character of their reply.

A similar desire expressed in your letter of yesterday again imposes on me the same necessity.

I regret to say that while I admit the anxiety manifested by the Commissioners to elicit full statements from the prisoners, and while I acknowledge the value of the concessions made in your last letter, my opinion is unaltered that while the Commissioners adhere to their present determination no effort of theirs will either gain confidence for their inquiry, or make it successful in eliciting the truth.

The abandonment of the prosecution which the Commissioners are taking is an admission of the absolute necessity of giving aid and protection to the prisoners in making their complaints, and a further admission that the allowance of this aid and protection is not inconsistent with the principle of the Royal Commission with which the Commissioners are entrusted.

This being so I cannot discover even the shadow of a reason why they should not receive that aid and protection in the way in which only all the experience of mankind shows that it can be effected.

The principle once conceded there is but one way of carrying it out. It is to me as simple as it is rational. Some person, whose knowledge and experience fitted him for the task, should be permitted to have free and confidential intercourse with the prisoners; he should be allowed to receive their statements, to examine and sift them in communications with the prisoners above, to use their statements as his own judgment might lead him in the course of the inquiry, to offer evidence in support of them as he thought fit, and above all to put questions to the officials of the prison in relation to them.

Those who have read the statements that have appeared as to former inquiries will know how little of real confidence will be given to the prisoners by an assurance from the Commissioners that nothing they say shall prejudice them. Since our former correspondence I have been shown communications which have come from some of the prisoners. I have been sent statements made by other prisoners to which I cannot more directly allude. A careful consideration of these materials has confirmed me in the conviction, which I now solemnly repeat, that there is no guarantee for the completeness of the investigation, except in the presence of some person who would be put in possession of those materials, and who would be in a position to use them for the purpose of searching out the truth, and testing any adverse statements that may be made.

As this is definitely refused I must decline any further interference in the matter. Whatever be the intentions or motives of the Commissioners, the public mind of Ireland as of the world will never understand why, if they admit the necessity of assistance to the prisoners, that assistance should not be efficacious and complete. It would be an intelligible reason to refuse any inquiry at all. It would be equally intelligible to lay down the rule that all the investigation should originate with the Commissioners themselves, and that no interference on the part of anyone should be permitted. But I am unable to understand any principle upon which interference is permitted to the extent to which the Commissioners are willing to concede it, but denied to the extent which is necessary to make it really effectual—any principle upon which a friend is to be permitted to assist a prisoner in preparing his statements, or to be presumptuously excluded from aiding him in offering evidence, or in putting questions when the Commissioners come to inquire into its truth—above all, any principle which will justify the Commissioners in challenging the unfortunate prisoners to be accused, giving them every aid and facility to place themselves in that position, and leaving them alone and unprotected when they have done so.

My opinion of this mode of conducting an inquiry into the alleged inhumanity of gaols is not founded merely upon abstract principles, as it easily might be. It is founded upon my examination of the facts and circumstances of which information has been obtained. They never can be satisfactorily investigated by any other mode than that of allowing persons acting for the prisoners to conduct their own case. Lord Denham has made classical in relation to Irish affairs the memorable words, "a mockery, a delusion, and a snare." An investigation of complaints without hearing the complainants will, I am sure, be regarded as a mockery and a delusion. To invite any man, above all a prisoner in a convict prison, to become an accused without giving him the simplest power of making good his accusation is, I cannot help thinking, something very like a snare.

I have, &c.

HOSPITAL DIETS FOR MALE AND FEMALE CONVICTS.

Sanctuary Order No. 313.

45, Parliament Street, October 1, 1868.

The following scales have been approved on the future diets to be adopted in the convict hospitals for males and females from and after 1st October next:—

1. The beef and mutton for the various diets are to be of good quality, and must weigh in the raw state, inclusive of bone, the weight specified in the diet table.

2. The meat for half-diet (No. 2, scale for males) may be used for beef tea, so as to make three-fourths of a pint of good beef tea for each patient on such diet. When the barley and flour are not used 2 oz. extra of bread may be given in lieu.

3. When necessary, beef tea will be substituted for all diets for males and females in such quantities as the medical officer may consider necessary.

4. Fowl (weighing not less than 1½ lbs. when trussed ready for cooking) or fish, may be substituted for meat to the patients on half diet at the rate of 8 oz. for each diet.

5. The following items of extra and medical comforts will be sanctioned for issue in such manner and in such quantities as the medical officer may consider necessary for the benefit of the patients:—

| | | |
|------------|----------|-----------------|
| Arrowroot. | Jelly. | Alc. |
| Bacon. | Lemons. | Porter. |
| Barley. | Onions. | Stout, bottled. |
| Beetroot. | Oranges. | Brandy. |
| Butter. | Rice. | Gin. |
| Eggs. | Sago. | Wine. |
| Fruit. | Sauces. | Soda water. |
| Java. | Sugar. | |

6. The meat on scales No. 1, when not baked or roasted, is to be boiled with the vegetables, barley, and flour. The vegetables to consist of carrots, turnips, and onions.

7. The meat, when not made into soup, is to be roasted, baked, or stewed, and 2 oz. extra of bread will be given in lieu of barley and flour, and the vegetables, consisting of carrots and turnips, or cabbage, are to be cooked in milk, and served up to each patient in the proportion specified.

8. For beef diets (sanctified) may be issued in the proportion of 1 oz. per 30 diets, No. 1 scale; and for soup diets, or beef tea, pepper for seasoning will be allowed at the rate of 1½ oz. per 100 diets.

9. When potatoes cannot be procured of a sufficiently good quality either 3 oz. rice, 5 oz. flour, or 8 oz. bread, may be issued in lieu of 16 oz. potatoes.

10. Preserved potatoes, when issued, will be in the proportion of 1 oz. preserved to 5 oz. fresh, and 1 oz. of mixed preserved vegetables in lieu of 10 oz. fresh.

11. Half an ounce of coffee may be substituted for ½ oz. tea at breakfast and supper. Milk, wine, and spirits are to be calculated at 20 oz. to the imperial pint.

APPENDIX F.

PAPER relating to TREASON-FELONY PRISONERS' DIET.

Immediate.

Sir, Whitehall, August 23, 1869.
I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, forwarding petitions from Thomas Burke and Denis D. Mulcahy, two treason-felony convicts in Woking prison, complaining of the insufficiency of their diet, and alleging that their health has suffered in consequence.

It appears from the enclosures accompanying your letter that on a former occasion, under similar circumstances to the present—viz., failure of health from rejection of food—these men were removed to the prison hospital; but it would seem that they do not now seek to return to the hospital, but assert that they should prefer working at the convict prison, if they could get a diet which they could use.

Mr. Bruce gathers from the representations in their memorial that it is not so much a more generous as a different diet which they ask for; and he is of opinion that in the case of these political prisoners, especially when confined for life or a long period of years, some relaxation of the strict rules of diet might, in accordance with the practice of most countries, be allowed.

I am, &c.

Sir, Whitehall, September 7, 1871.
I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, forwarding medical reports in the cases of Thomas Burke and Denis D. Mulcahy in Woking prison, and to state that he wishes these convicts to be placed upon the full hospital diet suggested by Dr. Campbell, consisting of baked beef with vegetables and bread on Tuesday and Friday, and baked mutton, soup, bread, and vegetables on Thursday.

Sir, Whitehall, December 2, 1869.
HAVING laid before Mr. Secretary Bruce your letter of the 24th ultimo, I am directed to signify to you his approval of the recommendation of the medical officer of the Woking male convict prison, that the diet which was authorised by the Secretary of State for treason-felony convicts Thomas Burke and Denis D. Mulcahy should be extended to the other prisoners of that class in confinement in that prison.

EXTRACT FROM MONTHLY MEDICAL REPORT.

Chatham Convict Prison,

September 6, 1869.

On the 23rd August most notice was recommended to be issued in lieu of soup to the treason-felony prisoners on Sundays, Tuesdays, and Fridays, and this change of diet was approved by the directors.

EXTRACT FROM ANNUAL MEDICAL REPORT.

Chatham Convict Prison,

January 12, 1870.

Several of the prisoners have at times refused their food. In May four of the treason-felony prisoners, and in August all the latter, refused portions of the usual diet, and made a general complaint, which on application being made to you, you were pleased to approve, and alter on certain particulars, since which time very few complaints have been made on the subject.

May 27, 1870.

Sir, These treason-felony prisoners being in the constant habit of refusing the meat pudding which constitutes the usual prison diet on Thursday, from its producing indigestion, and this in my opinion being the natural result of want of sufficient exercise at their work, or at the time allowed for that purpose, I beg to recommend the issue of better pudding in the proportions and in the infrequency such as a substitute for the meat pudding supplied to the other prisoners on Thursdays, these prisoners having expressed a desire for such a change.

I am, &c.

JOHN J. D. BURNS.

APPENDIX G.

LETTERS RELATING TO J. O'DONOVAN ROSSA.

(Copy.)

SIR,
 Chatham Prison, May 28, 1869.
 I HAVE the honour to forward extracts from the penal records of O'DONOVAN ROSSA and the other treason-felony convicts now confined in this prison, showing, as accurately as possible, the conduct of these prisoners since the inquiry into their treatment conducted by Messrs. KNOX and POLLOCK, in May 1867; and also showing the particulars awarded them for infraction of prison rules, &c.

I further forward a report to the medical officer relative from the present state of health of these prisoners, and also relative to their diet, in whose remarks I fully concur.

When O'DONOVAN ROSSA was first transferred to this prison from Millbank, on the 24th February 1863, he was then the only convict in the group consisted of treason-felony, and was placed at labour with a party of which every man was specially selected for his good conduct, and with which party he continued to be attached until the arrival of treason-felony convicts HUGHES, WARREN, and COSMIDIO, in the following August, when the treason-felony convicts were ordered to be kept quite apart from the other convicts, and have as kept ever since.

The conduct of O'DONOVAN ROSSA from the time of his arrival at the prison in February 1863, up to the end of September of the same year, was about as bad and outrageous as was possible, as shown to a certain extent by the punished offences recorded against him; but those passed over, and not recorded, were far more numerous than not so serious.

I forbear saying more with regard to the conduct of this prisoner at this time, lest I should be considered prejudiced against him in consequence of the unprovoked and disgusting assault he committed on myself in June of the same year. I am, however, glad to say that he has kept the promise of untroubled conduct he made to Captain DU CANE last November, having since that period been the best behaviourer of the whole number of these convicts.

The feeling of one and all of these prisoners appears to be to give as much trouble as possible to every individual with whom they in any way come in contact, to do as little work as they can help, to oppose the orders given them as far as they dare, or consider prudent, and to imagine that they are ill-treated because the ordinary rules of the prison are not strictly dispensed with in their cases and they are not allowed a different diet to other prisoners; and I regret to add, that in stating their supposed grievances an adherence to facts appears to be one of the last things considered requisite.

I am, &c.

(Signed) T. F. POWELL, Governor.

Wm. Fegins, Esq.

(Copy.)

SIR,
 Chatham Prison, June 4, 1869.
 WITH reference to your telegram requesting to know how many days (Reg. No. 3,543) JEREMIAH O'DONOVAN ROSSA was placed in handcuffs after his assault upon me, I have the honour to inform you that he was placed in them on the morning of the 17th of June, and kept in them each successive day as a measure of precaution to prevent his repeating a similar act when visited by other myself or any officer of the prison, till the 26th July; the handcuffs being invariably removed each day at 7.45 p.m., and not replaced till the following morning.

At 2 p.m. on the 30th July he was released from them, when he at once commenced to damage his cell, and at 4.15 p.m. I was compelled to place them on him again, to restrain him from committing further damage; he was released at night, and placed in them on the following day till night time. On the 22nd he was finally released from them at 12 at noon.

This prisoner's conduct at this time was most outrageous, and perhaps no stronger proof of the necessity of the precaution could be adduced, than that immediately on his being released from the handcuffs on the 26th July he commenced destroying his cell.

I have, &c.

COPY OF REPLIES TO THE STATEMENT EXTENDED FROM THE "IRISHMAN" NEWSPAPER.

PRISONER O'DONOVAN ROSSA has been employed for more than two months in mending stockings, but previously he had been employed since last November in cutting up small pieces of refuse wool for the purpose of lighting fires, worked occasionally by sawing to weed the yards of the prison. Since his reception at this prison his weight has increased from 163½ lbs. to 176 lbs., and his appearance betokens the improvement shown by his increased weight.

After the unprovoked and disgusting assault the prisoner committed on myself last June, as a measure of precaution he was restrained in handcuffs during the day, in order to prevent his repeating such disgusting conduct when visited by other myself or any other officer of the prison, but they were invariably taken off at night, and with the exception of the first day, when his hands were placed in front to assist of his seeing his meals, his hands were not placed behind his back during the whole period, neither was he ever during that period placed in a dark cell, and he was receiving during the whole of the time the ordinary light labour diet of the prison; but some few days after he was released from the handcuffs he destroyed all the fittings of his cell, and while the cell was under repair he was placed in a dark cell (being a place in which he could do no further injury) for the time, a period of three days, but he was not then restrained in handcuffs. According to the rules laid down for my guidance, prisoner O'DONOVAN ROSSA has up to the present time only been entitled to write one letter since his reception into this prison, though owing to the consideration of the directors, an opportunity has been given to him of writing no less than five, but in consequence of the false statements he has persisted in making in all of them they have been compelled to suppress them. Of the charge stated to have been made against him of intruding with another man's wife, I know nothing whatever. No such charge has ever been made here or ever thought of.

I am, &c.

SIR,
 Chatham Prison, August 19, 1869.
 IN compliance with your instructions I beg to state that I was present at the interview which took place between Messrs. McCarty Downing, M.P., and Blake, M.P., and treason-felony convict J. O'D. ROSSA, at this prison, on the 30th of July last, and that at that interview the prisoner O'DONOVAN ROSSA stated that he had had to eat some of his meals on his knees or his belly, like a dog or a beast, or words to that effect, as his hands were manacled behind; but he also said, in reply to questions put to him by these gentlemen, that after a time, when the handcuffs were in front, he could see a spoon.

After the interview with prisoner O'D. ROSSA these gentlemen accompanied Captain HARDY to his office, to have an interview with treason-felony prisoner BURKE, as I was ordered to be present with ROSSA before the Commissioners from Ireland, who were visiting to take his evidence in a case of libel.

I also beg to forward a statement from Captain HARDY on this subject, and to return the accompanying Home Office papers.

I am, &c.

JAMES FARMERHURST, Deputy Governor.

Captain Stopped, &c. &c.

SIR,
 Chatham Prison, August 19, 1869.
 I HAVE the honour to inform you, with reference to the recent visit of Messrs. Blake and Downing, M.P.'s, to this prison, that I was not present at the interview between these gentlemen and prisoner J. O'D. ROSSA as was intimated. I had some conversation with them in my office on the subject of the restraint in handcuffs behind his back; and when Mr. Downing informed me that the prisoner had distinctly stated to him that he had been so handcuffed for the whole period of 38 days, I assured him that it was not the case, and offered to set the matter at rest by sending for the separate cell book. On reflection, however, I felt that I was not warranted in showing person records to any stranger in the absence of the governor, and told Mr. Dwyer to go on return to the office.

With reference to my evidence, recently taken by the director, I wish to rectify a mistake I made with regard to my visiting the separate cells. Instead of visiting them on alternate days with Captain Harvey, it was on alternate weeks.

I have, &c.
C. HARDY,
Deputy Governor.

Captain Stephen,
Director of Convict Prisons.

(Copy.)

SIR, Addingham Viaduct, September 3, 1893.
In consequence of my having arrived here two days later than I had previously anticipated, I did not receive your communication of the 30th inst. forwarding the enclosed Home Office letter, till after past time last night, or it should have reached an earlier reply.

With regard to its contents, I can but state that, to the best of my recollection and belief, witness-fugitive convict O'Donovan Rossa was not handcuffed behind at all after my return from here on the 20th of June 1893.

I have perfect recollection on the 14th of that month, previous to going on leave for three days, giving Captain Harvey authority to place prisoner O'Donovan Rossa in handcuffs behind during the day if he considered it desirable, distinctly stating that the handcuffs must be removed altogether at night, whether the prisoner was handcuffed before or behind; and I am perfectly satisfied, from all the testimony I have received, that this order was complied with, and that the second entry in the separate cell book does not imply that "at 7.30 p.m. on the 17th of June the handcuffs were only removed from behind to before," but that they were removed altogether for the night.

I feel satisfied that my positive orders on such a subject would not have been disregarded, and I am further led to the same conclusion by there being other entries of a similar character in the separate cell book, when prisoners have been released altogether from being handcuffed behind.

When the question was first raised in May last, the evidence of warden Brown (the warden doing duty in the separate cells at the time O'Donovan Rossa was placed in handcuffs), backed, as it appears to me to be, by the entries in the chief warden's communique book and the separate cell book, left me no doubt in my mind at the time that the prisoner was not kept in handcuffs behind for more than the 17th June, and I remarked accordingly; but from the evidence that has lately been adduced, there appears some reason for doubt whether the prisoner was or was not so kept, for one, two, or three days, during the day, meal times excepted, but no reliable evidence whatever that he was thus kept beyond that period.

That there should be this doubt after having stated on evidence that I believed at the time to be perfectly conclusive that he was only thus retained for one day, has been a source of unprofitable amazement and anxiety to me, however unintentionally I may have been led into the error, if an error it should be, though it still appears to me doubtful whether such is the case.

I have, &c.
T. FOLLISBY POWELL,
Governor, Chatham Prison.

APPENDIX II.

EXTRACT FROM OFFICIAL RECORD OF SENTENCE ON J. O'DONOVAN ROSSA, dated July 1, 1893.

DEFENCE OF PRISONER ROSSA.

"Declines to make any defence except in writing."

Sentence.

COLONEL HENDERSON.

"This prisoner is without doubt guilty of the very foul and inhumanly brutal attack alleged in the charge. The Governor of Chatham prison is, as is well known, an temperate and judicious person so it is possible to find, the officers in immediate charge of the department in which the prisoner is now detained for their judgment and fidelity; nevertheless he is, as stated in the evidence, and as his misconduct shows, constantly committing acts of insubordination and resistance towards his officers, and every available punishment has been tried in his case without effect, nor does kindness have any better influence upon him. He would in the ordinary course be punished for the offence he has committed by flogging, but it is thought that this punishment should not be inflicted without special authority. If it should not be thought advisable to inflict it, I can only suggest that he should be sentenced to 28 days punishment diet in close confinement, and be placed in the penal class for six months; also that to prevent the chance of his reporting outrages of this description on the officers of the prison who are obliged to visit him, all movable articles and utensils be removed from his cell, and whatever is necessary being made a fixture, and that he be kept in handcuffs in the daytime. It is for consideration whether the prisoner should be allowed to remain in this prison, after having committed such an outrage on the governor, especially if it was decided that the usual punishment for such offences shall not be inflicted.

"(Signed) E. F. DU CANS."
"1/7/94."

"I am unwilling to resort to corporal punishment in the case of this man, whose conduct warrants of leniency, except in the last resource. Carry out the director's punishment, 28 days punishment diet in close confinement, and six months penal class, and remove all movable articles from his cell.

"(Signed) E. Y. W. HENDERSON."

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE COMMISSION

APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE

TREATMENT OF TREASON-FELONY CONVICTS IN ENGLISH PRISONS.

No. 3, Parliament Street, Friday, 27th May 1870.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HONORABLE THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HONORABLE G. C. BROOKING.
S. E. DE VRIES, Esq.

DR. LYON.
DR. GREENHOW.

W. SPENCER OLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

Captain EDMUND FREDERICK DU CANE, examined.

Capt. E. F.
Du Cane.

27 May 1870.

1. (Chairman.) You are Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons I believe?—I am.

2. How many convict prisons are there in England?—There are 11.

3. Will you give the names of them?—Millbank, Pentonville, Chatham, Portsmouth, Portland, Woking, Dartmoor, Parkhurst, Brixton. Those are all male prisons. Then there are Woking and Fulham, which are female prisons.

4. Confining yourself to those prisons in which males are received, is the system of discipline the same in all those prisons which you have named?—At Millbank and Pentonville what is called the probation period is carried out, and the discipline is to a certain extent different; but the general rules applicable to the relations between the convicts and their officers are the same in all those prisons.

5. Confining yourself to the case of the convicts sentenced to penal servitude, is the mode of treatment the same in all the prisons?—The convicts are all sentenced to penal servitude in those prisons.

6. Then is it the case that in all of them there is a probationary period of nine months?—That applies to all convicts; it is carried out at Millbank and Pentonville.

7. That is separate confinement, is it not?—Yes.

8. Then, ordinarily speaking, Pentonville and Millbank will be the prisons to which a prisoner sentenced by any court to penal servitude will be taken first?—They are all brought there first.

9. After the period of nine months is passed, what regulates the mode in which they are allocated to the different prisons?—Several of these prisons, Dartmoor, Parkhurst, and Woking, are invalid prisons, to which only prisoners of a certain constitutional disposition, or in a certain state of health are sent. To the others, Portland, Chatham, and Portsmouth, only able-bodied men, that is to say, men who are able to do heavy work are sent.

10. You are aware, are you not, of the object of our inquiry?—Certainly.

11. That is has special reference to the prisoners convicted of treason-felony, under sentence of penal servitude, and in confinement in gaols in England?—Yes.

12. Have you in your possession any list showing the number of prisoners coming under that designation at the present time?—I have.

13. Will you be kind enough to hand it in?—I will. (The same was handed in.)

14. It would be convenient if you would just state shortly what particulars that return shows. First of all, will you give us the total number at present in the prisons within the scope of this inquiry?—There are 26 now in the prisons who come under that designation.

15. Does that return show where those 26 prisoners are located?—It does. It shows every place where they have ever been since they were first received.

16. Will you just state shortly the heads of those columns?—This return gives first their "names or surnames," next their "bodily description," "date and place of birth," "married or single," and "number of children," "name and residence of family or next of kin," "date and place of conviction," "crime, with particulars," "date of previous convictions," and "character," "religion," and "state of education." Then all the transfers from the date of committed up to the present time.

17. Then we may take it that all these prisoners were in the first instance placed either at Millbank or Pentonville?—Generally, but there were some who were not placed at either, but were sent at once over from Ireland.

18. Having undergone a probationary treatment there?—I think that that is doubtful, but I have no information upon that point.

19. But the great majority were received either at Millbank or Pentonville in the first instance?—Yes.

20. (Dr. Lyon.) Can you name those that were not?—I think this return gives those who were never at Millbank or Pentonville. Michael Sheehy went straight from Meenjer Prison to Portland, Mortimer Sheehy, alias Mortimer, did so too. I think some of the others who did so were probably amongst those who have been pardoned or otherwise disposed of. Those are the only two now in prison who were not at first at Millbank or Pentonville.

21. When those prisoners were first placed in Millbank or Pentonville, were any special instructions

A

Capt. E. S.
Du Cann.
27 May 1870.

given by the Home Office, or by your department, to the officers in charge of these respective prisons with regard to them?—No, nothing out of the ordinary.

22. Are special instructions at all were given?—No.

23. At what period was it that complaints if any were made by or on behalf of any prisoners as to their treatment?—I cannot tell you the date of the first report, but they will be found in the books of the prison, and I could easily get it and lay it before you if you desire it.

24. My question referred to the complaints made to your department?—I cannot give the date. It is nearly five years ago since these prisoners were convicted, but the prisoners made their complaints in the ordinary way, and it would be recorded in the books of the prison. Perhaps, however, your question referred to complaints from outside on any point.

25. I meant complaints made by the prisoners themselves?—The complaints made by the prisoners themselves will be found in the books of the prison. I could get that information.

26. Then is point of fact, as far as regards any instructions that have emanated from your department, there was nothing to lead to any difference in the mode of treatment of those prisoners from that of prisoners under similar sentences for other crimes?—No, not when they were first received.

27. When were different instructions given?—Small indulgence have been allowed them from time to time; I cannot specify any precise date when they commenced, but such little things as can be allowed in a prison have frequently been allowed.

28. Have these been allowed by the direction of your department?—By the authority of the Secretary of State always.

29. Those we shall find recorded in the different prisons I suppose?—Yes, certainly. There are some things which would take a great deal of trouble for you to hear out, because there are small individual licences of various kinds granted on a prisoner's application, and to hunt out every individual case like that would be very difficult. I can only say that they have been frequent, and cases could be referred to show what kind of things they are.

30. With regard to the diet of the convict prisons, that is uniform, as I understand, except in the case of Chatham?—Except in the case of Chatham and the invalid prisons, which have their own particular diet.

31. With regard to the operation of the dietary, as far as you can tell, upon the health of the prisoners, should you be able from the returns to place before us a comparative statement showing the rate of mortality in prisons as compared with that prevalent among persons of the same age not within the walls of prisons?—Certainly I could.

32. Will you kindly do so?—I will.

33. Are you prepared to hand in any paper which will give us what is technically called the medical history of the prisoners whilst in prison?—I can hand in a paper which will give the medical history of each of the prisoners since he has been received, all the observations the doctor has made upon his constitution and health, with the details of every case in which he has been under treatment in the hospital. These are the returns in question (producing the same). They also give the weight at the time the prisoners were first received into the prisons, and the weight which I have had inserted up to a few days ago, and the weight at every prison that they were transferred to.

34. Have you a statement of the scale of diet?—This is the scale of the diets of all the prisons (producing the same).

35. Will you hand that in?—I will. (The same was handed in).

36. (Dr. Lysons.) Were the treason-felony prisoners in any way recognised as different from the other services under the charge of your department?—In small ways: they were kept separate as far as possible.

37. How were they distinguished?—They were not distinguished, except by being kept separate from others at work, and being kept together more or less, but there was no outward difference or external distinction at all.

38. And with reference to the special indulgence you speak of, how were the persons to whom these indulgence were to be granted recognised from other prisoners?—The governor of course knows perfectly well what a man is in prison for. He knows that these men are treason-felony convicts, and when one of these men desired some small indulgence it would be asked for, and of course it was known by those who asked for it for him, and by these who were asked, that he was a treason-felony prisoner.

39. Could you specify what these indulgence were?—Such things as these; the visits that a prisoner is allowed to have in the ordinary way are according to certain rules, and are not very frequent, but that rule has been very materially relaxed in the case of the treason-felony prisoners. The rules with reference to the letters they were allowed to write have been also materially relaxed in some cases; in fact in all cases now. Their diet, I think, is better than that of other prisoners.

40. In what respects is it better, as to quantity or quality?—At Woking they get what is called full hospital diet, which is only given to ordinary prisoners when actually in hospital. These men are allowed full hospital diet without being actually under treatment. At Chatham also there is a little variation made in their diet in small ways. I could detail what they have exactly if you wish me to do so.

41. Are those relaxations applied to Chatham and Woking only?—The relaxations in general have been applied to only of the treason-felony prisoners; but those of the diet, so far as I have a memorandum on the subject at present, are only applied to Chatham and Woking. I think, however, it is very likely that they have also been applied to the other prisons.

42. (Chatham.) You will be able to find that out in detail, and inform us what the fact is?—Certainly.

43. (Dr. Lysons.) Can you specify any other kind of indulgence which you say has been allowed to the treason-felony prisoners?—I think that they have not been obliged or expected always to work quite so hard as the others; they were allowed to be more moderate and to take it more easily with regard to their work.

44. How was that accomplished; was it done by a direction to the warders?—No, it is only that if they work rather easily, without any extreme exertion, they would not be reported; that is all.

45. Did the warders understand that of themselves, or was it intimated to them in any way?—They must have been told it, or given to understand it, or something of that kind; probably they were told it.

46. Then in a certain sense, however small, these prisoners were in some degree treated differently from other prisoners?—I think so.

47. Does that apply to all the prisons?—I think so, certainly.

48. May I ask what has been the general character of the prisoners?—I think the majority of them have conducted themselves very well. I can give you a return of the offences that all of them have committed, but some of these have repeatedly committed offences. That has been the case with them as it is generally amongst all prisoners. These who resist the rules of the prison are the same time after time. It is always found that a large number of offences are committed by a small number of prisoners.

49. Have these offences had any other character than that of breaking the prison rules, and infringing the prison discipline?—These are the only offences they could commit. They have tried to get clandestine communications, to corrupt the warders, and to resist authority in many ways.

50. When you speak of "corrupting" the warders, what do you mean?—To get them to take out letters.

51. And anything else?—That is the only thing they could do.

52. To get in anything?—Yes.

53. (Chairman.) To get in extra provisions or liquor, I suppose you mean?—It would not be that; it would be letters and things of that kind.

54. (Dr. Lysons.) Then you use the term "corrupt" in a sense different from that in which it is ordinarily used?—I mean to say making him not do his duty.

55. As far as you know, what has been the health of the prisoners in general?—I think it has been very good. Some of them who are weakly men have not, of course, been so well, but I think as a general rule they have been very well. That fact would be shown precisely in the medical returns.

56. What was the total number of treason-felony prisoners received into English prisons?—There are 26 in English prisons now; 45 were sent to Western Australia, two have been discharged on license, and one is dead. One was transferred to Mountjoy prison, and 16 have received conditional pardons, that makes 59 as the total number who have passed through the English prisons.

57. Ninety-one is the total number of treason-felony prisoners who have passed through English prisons?—Yes.

58. What has been the mortality in that number of prisoners?—I only find one returned as having died.

59. What was his name?—Patrick Lynch.

60. Are you aware of any having died after they left the prison?—No, I cannot at this moment say that I know of any. I should not necessarily know of it.

61. Would such a fact come within the cognizance of the officials of your department?—No, not officially.

62. (Mr. De Vere.) Were any of those who were discharged, discharged because their state of health was such that they could not be kept in prison without injury?—I think there were two discharged on account of their health.

63. (Dr. Lysons.) Could you furnish as with the exact number of those who were discharged on account of ill health?—The return I have here shows only one.

64. What was his name?—He is named Cary, but I am under the impression that there must be a mistake about that. I think there must be an omission, because I recollect another. I see he is put down here amongst those who received pardons.

65. What became of Cary?—Cary was transferred to Mountjoy Prison on account of ill health, and I believe he was finally discharged. Another man named Kearns was also under the same conditions, he is put down here as having received conditional pardon without reference to his health.

66. Could you by looking over your papers afterwards ascertain exactly how many of those prisoners were discharged in consequence of ill health?—I will do so.

67. Perhaps you will be good enough to furnish a return of that?—I will.

68. Will you also furnish a return showing how many of the treason-felony prisoners have died since their admission to the English convict prisons?—I will make an official return of that.

69. What supervision of the diet and discipline of these prisons is exercised by your department?—The governor, the steward, and the doctor are all bound to see that the provisions are good and full in their quantity. The director, also, has periodically to visit the prison, and to satisfy himself that the diet is good and sufficient. But besides that, the best check that there is, is that of the prisoners themselves, who are very exacting as regards the quantity and quality of the diet supplied to them; and they have freely the privilege of complaining if they do not think it is sufficient.

70. Now may I ask you how these complaints can be made by the prisoners?—When the diet is served round (which process you might see when you go up to Pentonville, if you chose to do so), the prisoner is obliged to examine it to a certain extent before he takes it in. If he thinks it is insufficient he says so at once. It is then taken and weighed, or he is taken down into the hall or into the kitchen, as the case may be, and it is weighed and examined in his presence, to satisfy him, or to satisfy whoever may be concerned in it, as to whether the complaint is well founded or not.

71. Would a prisoner who made complaints of that kind more than once be exposed to any possible source of annoyance from the warders or otherwise?—No, I do not think so. Sometimes men get into a habit of perpetually objecting to their diet and it is perpetually found that there is nothing in it. In those cases it is made disagreeable to a man—that is to say, he is made to stand out for a while—if there are half a dozen of these they stand out until all the other business is done, and then the diet is examined; so that a man may be obliged to eat his dinner in a hurry, or in some way or other it is discouraged in the case of men making a practice of complaining in that way. But that only happens when prisoners get a kind of turn in that direction and are giving a vast deal of unnecessary trouble. It is not the usual thing.

72. Do you think that those measures could be improperly used by the warders to deter prisoners from making complaints?—It does not depend upon the warders at all.

73. Upon whom does it depend?—It depends on the deputy-governor or the governor. I think you will see perfectly that that is only done when there comes to be an abuse of the privilege. It is a mild kind of check.

74. Has it come within the knowledge of your department that any irregularities as to diet have occurred during the period when these prisoners have been under sentence?—I do not know of any irregularities at all.

75. Has it come to the knowledge of your department that there has been any irregularity as to the treatment of the prisoners by the warders or other officers?—No, certainly not. The treatment of all these men has been extremely forwarding.

76. Do you think it possible that such things as are alleged by the prisoners' friends could have taken place with regard to their diet?—I do not quite know. Some of the things which I have seen alleged by the prisoners' friends are more ordinary incidents of prison life. As to those I should say, yes, they have happened. There are others which would be abuses, and those I should say have not happened.

77. Do you think it possible that such irregularities as there could have occurred, that the contents of a bowl, a mouse, or other vermin, could have got into the soup of the prisoners?—That would be quite impossible.

78. Do you think it possible that the meat could have been removed from the bones from which the soup is made before the soup was made from them?—The habit is to get in the meat on the meat days, and to take the meat off the bone, so as to give to them so many ounces of actual meat which they can eat, for the bone is not weighed in in the diet sent to them. Therefore in that sense the meat is taken off the bone before it is used for making soup.

79. Do you believe that either the meat or the bones, or both, could have been tainted before being boiled?—Certainly not.

80. Do you think it possible that the meat could have been rancid when it was used in making soup?—I believe it would be quite impossible. The diets are inspected so narrowly, and by so many people, that I do not think that that would be possible.

81. Was the period of nine months' solitary confinement enforced against any or all of the political prisoners?—No, none of them went through the full nine months.

82. Did the prisoners who were in Kilmainham or Mountjoy prison for any period get credit for the time so spent in solitary confinement, against their period of solitary confinement in England?—Certainly they would do so. I can show you instances on the first page of this return. For instance, a man named Brian Dillon was received at Mountjoy Prison on the 14th of December 1865. He was received at Pentonville on the 15th of January 1866, and he was sent down to Woking on the 11th of April 1866. That would be in four months, or thereabouts, after he was first received.

83. (Mr. Broadrick) Would he not be sent down to Woking on the ground of ill health?—The treason-felony prisoners were all allowed a shorter period of solitary confinement than the rest of the prisoners, and this man was sent to Woking, as he would have been under any circumstances, on account of his health being such as to make Woking suitable for him.

84. (Dr. Lyons.) What number of prisoners have had to be sent to invalid prisons in consequence of the deterioration of their health?—That will be found in this return. I can give it to you in the form of a number if you wish to have it so.

85. Out of the whole 91, will you state how many have been removed to an invalid prison, and out of those who have been so removed, how many had been first in an able-bodied prison?—Yes, I will state how many have been placed in invalid prisons, and then how many have been removed to invalid prisons after having been at public work prisons. I will put in returns giving those numbers.

86. Will you state what period of each man's sentence since he has been in prison has been spent in an invalid prison?—That will be shown in the case of every individual man on this return.

87. In a separate column?—The actual prisons that he has been in are shown in this return in a separate column, and therefore the time he has spent in each of them will be seen.

88. We could arrive at it by a process of deduction, but we should like to have it stated if it is not too much trouble?—I will give you in a return showing how much time each man has spent in an invalid prison. Some, a large number in fact, have spent the whole of their period in an invalid prison.

89. It would be very important to show that?—Here are four, including Mulcahy, who have passed the whole of their time in an invalid prison.

90. (Mr. De Vere.) I think Mulcahy was at Portland, was he not?—Yes, you are right, Mulcahy was at Portland for a few months, as shown on the return.

91. (Dr. Lyons.) What are the punishments in the shape of diminution of diet that are in use in the prisons?—There are two classes of diets which a man may be subjected to, one is called punishment diet, that consists of bread and water for three days, and another class of diet, which is called penal class diet, following upon it. I have given in a statement of these scales of diet.

92. What is the longest period for which a bread and water diet can be enforced in accordance with the rules of the prison?—The bread and water diet can be enforced for no more than three days at one time; but the punishment diet, which includes this penal class diet on every fourth day, may be continued for 28 days.

93. Is it possible that a very prolonged period of bread and water diet could have been enforced, as was alleged by some of the friends of the political prisoners?—They could not have been longer than 28 days on punishment diet certainly, but they might have been on penal class diet for six months.

94. Are you aware of any ill effects having arisen from a prolonged enforcement of penal class diet on the constitution of the prisoners?—I am not. The medical officer has to visit all these men daily, and it would be his business to report any case in which the punishment in any way was telling upon a man's health, and if he reported anything of the kind his report would be attended to without the smallest hesitation.

95. Have any reports been made to your department by medical officers as to the health of the prisoners suffering from a prolongation of their servitude, or a continuance of penal diet?—I do not remember any case. I may say, certainly not. The medical officers have reported upon the health of these men from time to time and recommended certain things, but no case of a punishment that they have been subjected to affecting their health has been reported.

96. Have any of the treason-felony convicts suffered mentally, or exhibited signs of mental deterioration during their period of servitude?—Yes, they have. I will put in a return of those who have been mentally affected.

97. Will you also name these prisoners?—I will.

98. Besides those who were more or less distinctly mentally affected, are you aware of any of the prisoners having suffered from mental dejection, melancholy, or unusual depression of spirits?—It is difficult to say that. I should think that the great majority of the prisoners who come into any prison suffer more or less from depression of spirits and influences of that kind. I suppose these prisoners probably would suffer as much as anybody else, but there has been nothing out of the ordinary way in their case, nothing to be the subject of a report.

99. It has not been remarked or noted in the department that these men have suffered from depression of spirits or melancholy more than ordinary convicts?—No, not more than prisoners do ordinarily.

100. (Chairman.) You say that you can lead in a statement showing how many of the treason-felony convicts, namely the 91, were from considerations of health removed to invalid prisons?—Yes.

101. Can you accompany that with a return showing how many of a similar number of prisoners of other classes imprisoned during the same period were removed to invalid prisons from similar causes?—I will do so.

102. (Mr. De Vere.) Has there been any increase in the mortality in the other prisons besides Clinton as compared with what the mortality was before the change of dietary in 1864; how does it compare with the general mortality rate of the country previously to the change of dietary?—I will put in a return upon that point which will be more precise than any answer I can give you now.

103. Do the returns you have been as good as to put in contain a record of all the political prisoners, including those who are not now in confinement?—Certainly; there is a list of them, but the return I have put in is full refers only to those now in prisons. I have a list of all those who have been in prison at all.

104. Does the medical history that you have put in contain a record of those who have died or been discharged?—I think the medical histories refer only to those now in prison, but I will get the medical histories of those who have died or been discharged.

105. (Mr. Broadrick) Those who have been discharged for ill-health, you mean?—I will furnish a medical history of all the 91.

106. (Mr. De Vere.) You have spoken of certain indulgences which you allowed to those treason-felony prisoners. Were any of those indulgences of the nature of relieving them from any parts of the discipline which might be considered of a degrading character to an educated man?—Their employment has been more or less, as far as possible, selected in such a way as not to be of the description which you allude to.

107. Has there been a difference made in the nature of the employment as between the political prisoners and other prisoners under similar sentences?—There have been in all the prisons other men employed in the same way as these men; employment has not been made specially for them, but it has been made, as far as we could do so, suitable to them. It is of course impossible to make employment suitable to a man whose business was that of an editor of a newspaper or works of that kind, but as far as the prison meant would allow that point has been considered with regard to them.

108. Have any complaints reached you officially of the degrading nature of the employment or the punishment to which they have been subjected?—Some prisoners have objected to doing certain work. One man objected to wheeling a barrow, and things of that kind. Other employment has been found for him.

109. In any remissions or indulgences which have been given to these prisoners, has that question of giving them a punishment which was more suitable to the condition of an educated man than an ordinary convict, been taken into account?—In the cases of all of them, as far as we could do so, we have given them employments suitable to their particular condition.

110. Are you aware whether in that respect any peculiar indulgence or changes were made in the case of Mr. Russell?—No change was made in his case at all.

111. Was Mr. Russell subjected to the same system of discipline as an ordinary prisoner incurring a similar sentence?—Certainly he was. I have seen him myself dragging chains about Portsmouth dockyard, and cleaning them.

112. That the same principle which was applied to the punishment of Russell has been applied to the Irish political prisoners?—No; I think the employment of the Irish political prisoners has been to a certain extent considered as a point to be attended to, which it was not in the case of Russell.

113. Then this question of degrading employment, or of work that was unsuitable to men of their particular position, has been more favourably considered in the case of the Irish political prisoners than it was in the case of Russell?—Most certainly; I have no hesitation at all in saying that.

114. Is a part of the discipline of a prison to clean out the privies?—A man has of course to attend to those things for himself in his own cell. He has got in his own cell a water-closet, which works for itself. He would have to sweep out his cell.

115. (Dr. Lush.) It is alleged that the prisoners have been made to clean privies other than their own; has that been the case?—I think what that refers to is this. When these prisoners are at work out on the works at Portland, there is a certain privy which is set apart for the use of the prisoners on the works. I recollect some question about that, but precisely what it was I cannot say. I can inquire if you wish me to do so.

116. Perhaps you will inquire?—Certainly; but perhaps it would be better if you would inquire about that on the spot.

117. Is the work of cleaning privies within the discipline of any of the prisons?—In an ordinary way, while at work, the prisoners would take it in turn in the ordinary routine to do any work of that kind in the way of cleaning out the privy used by their party. You will see it perhaps on the works better than I can explain it to you. A certain little place is knocked up for the use of these prisoners, and if that place had to be moved, or if the privy had to be moved, I suppose something like covering up would be necessary, or something of that kind.

118. (Mr. Dr. Merv.) You have spoken of an attempt to corrupt the warders?—Yes.

119. Do you mean to say by that, that there was any attempt to corrupt them for the purpose of making an escape?—I think that the prisoners certainly have succeeded in getting communications in and out at certain times, and I dare say they would not have been above saying if they could have done so, some of them at least.

120. Have you any reason to believe that there was any attempt on the part of any of these prisoners to bribe the warders to assist them to escape?—I am quite certain that they have on certain occasions got communications illicitly in and out.

121. Had those communications reference to escaping from prison, as far as you are aware?—I do not know that there is anything that could be brought forward in the shape of direct evidence, but there have been very suspicious circumstances.

122. Have treason-felony prisoners been more difficult to satisfy as to the quality of their diet than the other prisoners?—I think they have.

123. Have their complaints, as far as you are aware, been met in the same mode as those of any other prison?—They have been met by a different mode inasmuch as they have been treated rather more liberally; they are now receiving a better diet at Chatham, and a better diet at Woking. Whether they are at the other prisons or not I do not quite know, I think most likely they are.

124. (Dr. Greenham.) I see by a return you have put in that some of the treason-felony prisoners have been removed from one prison to another; on what account has that been done?—On a different account as regards every prisoner. I can go through them and state the reason in the case of any one if you wish, in order to give you an idea of it.

125. I understand that you sometimes remove them on account of health?—Yes.

126. But I see that they have been removed not only on account of health but also for some other reason?—Yes, for instance Mulesby was received in an English prison at Pentonville. He was sent down to Portland in the ordinary course. Then there came a writ of error which had to be pleaded, and he was sent to the Mountjoy Prison on that account. When he came back he was sent to Millbank, from thence he had to be sent again to Mountjoy, and then again back to Millbank. After that the state of his health was such as to fit him more for an invalid prison, and he was accordingly sent to Dartmoor. From there he was sent to Woking, a prison for invalids of a different class, which was thought for medical reasons more suitable to him at that time. I have the case of another man Ransome. He was sent from Portland to Woking also for medical reasons. Then I find several other men who have not been removed at all. Another man named Power has been removed from Portland to Woking because he said, or his friends said, that the condition of his chest was such as to require his removal to Woking. He was sent there on that account. Whether there was any foundation for that statement or not I cannot tell. John Derry was first of all sent to Portland; he was then sent to Millbank, because his behaviour at Portland was very bad. He was sent to Millbank for a second period of probation, and after that he was sent to Chatham.

127. You have spoken of the treason-felony prisoners having been treated with great consideration as regards their occupations; will you tell us what their occupations have been, as far as you can recollect?—At Chatham they have done such work as chopping up wood—light work. The best thing that we have been able to do for them was to employ them at easy kinds of work, in which they could be kept together, and not necessarily thrown in amongst all the body of prisoners. What they are doing now, as I think you will find when you go down, is knitting stockings. They have been doing the same kind of thing at Woking. At Portland they have been dressing stone, and so forth.

128. Is the present position of a prisoner considered with regard to his occupation; for instance, would a man who had not been accustomed to work with his hands be put to hew stone, or would he be put to knit stockings?—In the case of an ordinary prisoner that would not be thought of at all.

129. Has it been considered in the case of the treason-felony prisoners?—Yes. In their case, as far as it is possible to do so in a prison, that kind of thing has been considered. I believe the prisoners at Portland have taken rather an interest in some of the work they have had to do, particularly in stone cutting; they have made an altar.

130. You have spoken of these prisoners being weighed; how often is it usual for prisoners to be weighed?—Usually they are only weighed when they arrive at a prison and when they leave it, but questions have very often been raised about these prisoners by their friends outside, and in one way or another reports have been called for as to their state of health, and in making those reports the medical officer has generally weighed the prisoner. That would account for the number of times that the prisoners appear by these returns to have been weighed. In a general way it is only when a prisoner leaves a prison or arrives at it that he is weighed.

131. Is it a rule that a prisoner should be weighed when he arrives and when he goes away?—Yes.

132. How frequently are prisoners not on the sick list inspected by the medical officer?—Once a week the doctor is bound to see everybody.

133. How are they inspected? Are they inspected in their cells, or in the courtyard?—The doctor can inspect them in any way he likes, or in any way that he thinks sufficient for his purpose. I believe it is generally done on parade, or in hall, as the case may be.

134. When prisoners are ill, how do they announce their illness to the doctor?—They give their names in to the warden, and the prisoner's name would be returned by the warden to the medical officer, who would come at the proper time to see him.

135. (Mr. De Vere.) What remedy would a prisoner have if the warden neglected to transmit the report?—He would appeal to the governor.

136. (Dr. Greenwood.) Has he ample opportunity for doing that?—He has ample opportunity for doing it, and he does it freely.

137. Does a prisoner see the governor every day?—He usually sees the governor, or the deputy governor, every day.

138. How often is it the duty of the doctor to examine prisoners who are on penal diet?—Daily he has to examine all prisoners who are under special punishment.

139. And if he sees occasion to do so, can he order additions to be made to the penal diet?—He would report to the governor that the man was suffering from the diet, and the governor would take him off that diet, or do what was thought necessary.

140. Without reference to the director of the prison?—Certainly.

141. If hard labour he found too laborious, or if a prisoner complains that it is too laborious, can the doctor do anything for him?—The doctor can desire that he may be put upon light work, and that would be done.

142. What power has the doctor of ordering extras; can he order extras of diet in case of illness?—The prisoner must come into hospital to be treated, in order to get extras.

143. Is there a hospital in every prison?—Yes, in every prison.

144. Would a prisoner who was suffering from indigestion, and found oatmeal good disagree with him, be obliged to go into hospital to obtain a change of diet?—These treason-felony prisoners were allowed other diet without going into hospital, because the medical officers thought it was desirable that they should have it, and therefore the diet was changed in their case.

145. If a man does not eat the food given to him, what happens; suppose he returns his diet, is it reported in any way?—It is noted. But it is such a rare case that I hardly know how to answer the question. The prisoners almost always eat their diet. These treason-felony prisoners have returned their diet in some cases, and their diet has been altered.

146. It has been altered in consequence of their returning it?—Yes, I have already stated that at Woking and at Chatham they have been put on a different class of diet for that reason.

147. Do prisoners when on penal diet, or on bread and water, go on with their usual labour?—No, they have no employment whilst they are in solitary confinement.

148. Are they always in solitary confinement when put on penal diet?—Yes, always, when they are on penal diet, or on bread and water; when they are on penal diet they do cotton picking; when they are on bread and water they do nothing.

149. Are prisoners, when in solitary confinement, allowed to converse at all with the warders?—No.

150. Is absolute silence enforced?—Yes.

151. For how long a time may a man be kept in his cell, restricted to absolute silence?—He would be three days in that way, but it would be broken by the visits of the medical officer, and of the chaplain or priest, who visit all those men regularly.

152. Do they visit these daily?—Yes.

153. What are the regulations with regard to communication between the prisoners; when on public works, are they allowed to converse together?—They are not allowed to converse except on subjects connected with their duties when they are on the works. On Sundays, when they are taking their ordinary exercise, they are allowed to talk together about anything, so long as they do not make a noise.

154. What amount of open-air exercise is allowed for prisoners who are in solitary confinement?—Those who are under punishment for these three days, in the manner I have referred to, get no exercise. During the probation period, they get an hour's exercise every day.

155. What are the regulations with regard to letters being received by prisoners?—There are certain periods in which they are allowed letters, according to the class they are in. I can read to you the terms of the order upon the subject, if you please, or I can state the effect of the regulations.

156. Will you state what the system is?—The system is this: in the first place, a prisoner, whenever he comes into prison, or changes his prison, is allowed to write one letter to his friends, and to receive one letter. Then, besides that, when he is in what is called the probation class, which is the first period, he is allowed to write one letter.

157. That is to say, he is allowed to write one letter in nine months?—Yes, he is allowed to write one letter in those nine months; then he goes into the third class; he receives one visit every six months during that period, and he is allowed to receive, and to write, a letter once in six months, provided his conduct in that class has been good, at least, two previous consecutive months; that class lasts for a year. Then he gets into the second class, and he may then receive a visit, and receive, and write a letter once in four months. Then he gets into the first class, and he may receive a longer visit, and receive and write a letter, once in three months; so it goes on until the end of his term of imprisonment.

158. Are the letters which prisoners receive or send, seen by anyone?—They are all inspected.

159. Every one?—Every one.

160. When the prisoners receive friends, do they see their friends alone, or do they see them in the presence of a warden?—They see them in the presence of a warden, or the deputy-governor, or some other official.

161. You spoke just now of a longer visit being allowed to prisoners in the first class. Is the length of the visit specified?—Yes, 20 minutes is the general rule, and a prisoner in the higher class is allowed half an hour. It has often happened with regard to those treason-felony prisoners, that they have been allowed still longer visits. They have been allowed visits and letters more frequently than their class would have entitled them to.

162. Do you happen to know whether, when a prisoner is admitted into a prison, he is examined with regard to the state of his lungs and heart?—The medical officer examines him in all these points, I believe, and puts it down in this paper, which I have handed in.

163. I see there is nothing here, specially, as to the lungs and heart?—I see that say hereditary tendency to phthisis is to be reported.

164. That is only hearsay, apparently. The medical officer asks the prisoner questions on those subjects, but I wanted to ascertain whether there is any physical examination of the prisoner?—It would be better to ask the doctor that question when you visit the prisons.

163. With regard to dress, have these prisoners been dressed in the same way as other prisoners?—They have been dressed the same as all other prisoners.

164. What does that dress consist of?—A woollen short coat, waistcoat, knickerbockers, stockings and shoes, and a cap.

165. Is there nothing underneath the short coat; is there no shirt?—Yes, they wear a shirt, and if the medical officer thinks it is proper, they wear a flannel.

166. Have they no flannel supplied to them unless the medical officer says it is necessary?—Not unless the medical officer says that they ought to have it.

167. Then a man who had been accustomed to wear a flannel before coming to the prison would not wear one in the prison unless the medical officer said that it was necessary?—No.

170. (Dr. Lyons.) Are their heads shaved?—No; their hair is cut occasionally, but in the case of these political prisoners, we have not had their hair cut so often as other prisoners.

171. (Dr. Greenhalgh.) With regard to the bedding, what number of blankets are allowed to the prisoners?—There is a certain scale. I think it is two or three blankets, but I can put in a return showing that.

172. If a man complained of not having sufficient bed-clothing, would more be granted to him?—I think if the doctor said that it was necessary for him specially, it would be allowed to him.

173. But not otherwise?—No, not on a man's own complaint.

174. You are going to favour us with some returns of mortality; may I ask upon what basis these returns are estimated, that is to say, are these returns based upon the actual number of prisoners in a prison during a year, or are they based upon the average number?—Upon the average number.

175. Of course that makes a great difference, and renders the returns much more accurate?—Certainly; but our returns have been altered in the last four years, so as to bring them into accordance with the general returns throughout the kingdom, so that if you find the previous returns less full than will account for it. You will see there what is the statistical return as regards deaths, and all the information bearing upon that subject (amounting to a return).

176. I think I understood you to say that the diet was the same in all the prisons except Chatham?—Yes.

177. At Portland, for instance, where the situation is bleak and the air keen, and where people are likely to have better appetites, have the prisoners the same diet as at Pentonville or at Portsmouth?—Yes.

178. The situation of the prison is not taken into consideration?—No. The rules laid down by the Medical Commission have made certain recommendations on the subject here been carried out. We have always thought that it was a medical question and not one for us to entertain all.

179. (Chairman.) When did the Medical Commission sit?—It reported in 1854.

180. You stated that although a flannel was not ordinarily worn, still if a medical officer thought it desirable for a prisoner to wear a flannel he would recommend it?—Yes.

181. Would that recommendation be at once acted upon?—Yes, it would be at once acted upon.

182. (Mr. Broadbent.) I think I understood you to say that no special instructions had been received from the Home Office with reference to the treatment of these prisoners?—No, no instructions had been received to treat them in any way differently from others.

183. By what authority then was their period of separate confinement shortened?—By the authority of the Secretary of State; it could not have been done without that. Either his verbal or his written authority was given, probably both.

184. By what authority then is it determined whether a prisoner is sent to Pentonville or to Millbank?—That depends upon the Home Office. It depends mainly upon the remedies that there may happen to be, with this exception, that at Pentonville only prisoners in full health have been generally received, while at Millbank prisoners of all kinds have been received.

185. I perceive there is a considerable difference in respect of healthiness between these two prisons, is there not?—I suppose the duration of Pentonville would be thought the best as far as health goes.

186. Is it within your knowledge that in respect to mortality and disease there is a very marked difference between them?—There must be, because only very healthy prisoners have been received at Pentonville, whereas prisoners of all classes have been received at Millbank; that must make a great difference.

187. Have we before us any statistics of the comparative sanitary condition of these prisons?—The last published report of the directors will give the medical officers' opinion of them all.

188. That is for the year 1863, is it not?—Yes; I can give you the medical officers' reports on prisons for the year 1863; they are in proof now, they have not been published.

189. I understand that the treason-felony prisoners were never formed into a special class?—No, they have been kept to a certain extent separate in labour, and there have been the distinctions with regard to the indulgences that I have referred to, but they have never been in our records and so on treated as a different set of men altogether.

190. Is not work sometimes assigned to a prisoner with some reference to his previous occupations?—In the general way in the case of an ordinary prisoner, if we can make use of his knowledge of any trade we should certainly do so; but we do not pretend to find work for all the men in accordance with their previous habits for that would be impossible. We have only got certain work to do, and we must distribute that work amongst the prisoners as we can.

191. Are men of higher education and sedentary habits ever employed as clerks, for instance?—No, we never employ prisoners as clerks.

192. (Mr. De Vere.) Is printing done in any of the convict prisons?—No, not at present. I want to introduce it.

193. (Mr. Broadbent.) It is your opinion that it would be possible and expedient to adapt labour somewhat more than has been the custom, to the previous occupation of the convict?—I do not know that one could do so more than is done at present. The best mode of employment of the prisoners, that is to say, that which pays the Government best, is to employ them on all public works such as those at Portland, the excavations at Portsmouth and Chatham, and so on. In that case it is impossible to find work suitable to what the prisoners previous habits have been. In fact taking the case of the first man I have in this return he was a commission merchant, there is nothing that he could be employed at except clerk's work, and that we never allow prisoners to be employed at. Here is another man who was a medical student, that is what he is described as.

194. (Dr. Lyons.) What is his name?—Edward Power. And then there are the following: newspaper correspondent, law clerk, medical student, butcher, mercantile clerk, builder—that man I dare say might be employed in his usual trade.

195. (Mr. Broadbent.) It is a fact, is it not, that clerk's work is sometimes done by convicts in county prisons?—It may be in county prisons, I think that is very likely.

196. (Chairman.) Are you aware of that as a fact?—No, I should not like to say that as a fact, but I think it is most likely.

197. (Mr. Broadbent.) I will take another point—what power would a prisoner have of appealing against any sort of bullying on the part of a warder. What course would such a case take supposing a prisoner believes himself to have been spoiled and bullied by a warder; what remedy would he have?—He would appeal to the first superior officer of that warder that he happened to see. He is constantly seen by the principal warder, the deputy-governor, the governor, the chaplain or priest, the doctor; he could mention it to any of the officials.

198. To whom would the complaint go?—His right is to appeal to the governor; the governor sits every day for the purpose of hearing anything a prisoner has to say to him; and further than that, if he chooses, the prisoner can appeal against the governor.

199. What is his means of appealing against the governor?—He has to put his name down, and when the director comes round to inspect the prison, he has to hear any complaint the prisoner makes, or anything he has to say; in fact, any question he has to ask him.

200. (Chairman.) How frequently does the director come?—He goes to the distant prisons every month, and to the prisons about London every week, or oftener if necessary.

201. (Mr. Broadrick.) Is it the right of a prisoner to put his name down to see the director?—It is the right of a prisoner to put his name down to see the director.

202. What would take place upon that appeal to the director?—He appears before the director, who takes down in writing what the subject of his interview is, and records his decision at once in the same book.

203. In the case of an appeal against the governor himself, would the governor be present?—As a matter of fact he always is present; but with regard to his appealing against the governor, if he did so and expressed a wish to see the director privately, that would be allowed. I have myself turned out an officer from the room if the prisoner expressed a desire to see me without the presence of that officer.

204. Have there been cases in which any of these treason-felony prisoners have appealed against the governor to a director?—Frequently.

205. Is there any further appeal beyond the director?—Yes, to the Secretary of State. The prisoner has the power of petitioning the Secretary of State.

206. Is that power without limit? Can a prisoner insist on his petition to the Secretary of State being forwarded by the governor of the prison?—Yes. You must understand that this petitioning is a very common thing. A prisoner's first petition is always forwarded. If he is not satisfied with that, and petitions for precisely the same thing over again, it is not thought proper to trouble the Secretary of State by perpetually forwarding these petitions for no purpose whatever, but after a certain interval of time has elapsed, even that same petition would be forwarded again.

207. (Dr. Lyons.) How does the prisoner get access to writing materials for the purpose of petitioning?—He puts his name down, and pen, ink, and paper are given to him to write the petition, or if he is unable to write, it is written for him to his dictation.

208. (Mr. Broadrick.) Would it be possible for a prisoner, by way of punishment, to be deprived of his appeal to the Home Secretary?—No, certainly not; it is as much as the place of anybody connected with the prison is worth to do so.

209. With respect to the visits the prisoners may receive, are those visits always made in the presence of a warder?—They are always made in the presence of an officer of some kind whether a warder, or the deputy governor.

210. Would that apply to his intercourse with the chaplain?—No, the chaplain sees him privately in his own cell.

211. And the doctor?—The doctor sees him privately in his own cell too.

212. As a matter of fact, are there Roman Catholic chaplains at all the convict prisons, and if not, at which are there such chaplains?—There are Roman Catholic chaplains at all the convict prisons where there are Roman Catholics. I can furnish you with a return of the prisons where there are Roman Catholic chaplains, if you please.

213. Is there, for instance, a Roman Catholic chaplain at Portland?—Yes. And at Chatham, and at Woking, and at Millbank, and when these prisoners were at Pentonville, a Roman Catholic chaplain visited specially for them.

214. (Chairman.) How is it at Dartmoor?—There is a Roman Catholic chaplain there too.

215. (Mr. Broadrick.) Then the only legitimate means of communication which the convicts would have with the outer world would be through letters?—Yes.

216. Which letters are perused, of course?—Yes.

217. Both those which they send and those which they receive?—Certainly.

218. Would it often happen that a letter was stopped; is that a thing of common occurrence?—With some of these prisoners it has been, I am sorry to say. In the case of ordinary prisoners, if a man writes something which he is not allowed to write by the rules, that is to say, matters which concern the internal affairs of the prison and such subjects, the letter would be stopped, and he would not be allowed to write another. In the case of these prisoners the letter has been stopped, but the prisoner has been allowed to write another over and over again.

219. By way of illustration, will you tell us, would O'Donovan Rossa have heard of his election for Tipperary?—I happened to be down at Chatham just after he was elected, and he asked me whether he was returned, or not.

220. Then he was aware that he was a candidate?—Yes, he was aware that he was a candidate, because he had had a visit from one of his friends. I told him that I was not authorised to give him any information of a political nature at all. Then he asked me whether if he was elected, he might be allowed to come to Millbank in order that he might be convenient for taking his seat. I told him I presumed every consideration would be shown him.

221. As we have mentioned him, I do not know that there is any impropriety in my asking whether there has been any change in his prison character of late?—It has very much improved. He now conducts himself uncommonly well; as well as anybody. Up to the middle of the year 1868 he was a very difficult man to manage, and was always doing something against the rules; but I was fortunate myself in being able in some way or other to produce a little change in him.

222. Can you attribute the change in O'Donovan Rossa's conduct to any greater indulgence in his treatment?—No; I think that he commenced his good conduct first, and then it was encouraged by any little things that one could do to preserve that state of things.

223. (Dr. De Vere.) By little indulgence?—Little considerations. He was allowed to see his child, or his wife, when he would not ordinarily have been permitted to do so.

224. (Mr. Broadrick.) Of course we know that it has been stated that he was subjected to corporal punishment; has he ever been subjected to corporal punishment?—Never.

225. Have any of the treason-felony prisoners?—None of the treason-felony prisoners have ever been subjected to corporal punishment.

226. Are you aware that any of the treason-felony prisoners have complained of their previous treatment in Irish prisons?—I have no recollection of it at present.

227. It is not within your knowledge?—No, I do not think so.

228. As to the bed clothing, would there be no different rule for the clothing in summer and winter? It is all done according to a certain scale; I think very likely they do get a double blanket in winter. I had better make a return of the scale of bedding.

229. I believe complaints have been made with regard to the exposure of some of the prisoners while working on the public works, what are the rules on that subject? Supposing it rained hard, would they be kept out at work or otherwise?—The benefit we have been able to lay down for all the prisoners is that they should be taken in when free labourers would be taken in; but they all have shelter sheds which they go to to keep them as dry as possible. All the treason felony prisoners at Portland work wet or dry under a shed. At Chatham they work in a room. At Woking they work sometimes out of doors, sometimes indoors, it varies, but there is no exposure, and no chance of anything wrong happening from that cause.

230. Does not it sometimes happen that where convicts are working side by side with free labourers, the convicts are put under shelter, and the free labourers go on working?—That was said to be the case some years ago, and we tried to prevent anything of that kind being said, and I believe we succeeded. They used to be taken in much more freely than it was thought was necessary.

231. (Chairman.) It was said to be so at Dartmoor, was it not?—That was said to be the case of Dartmoor, and at other prisons, but it is not so now.

232. You mentioned the case of a man of the name of Devoy having a second period of probation. Am I to infer from that, that in certain cases those who have once passed through nine months of separate confinement, and have been at the close of it sent to other prisons where they work in gangs, have afterwards undergone a second period of probation?—In that case it was so.

233. That convict was sent to undergo a second period of probation?—Yes.

234. How long might that second period of probation last?—It would not last longer than nine months.

235. Then a prisoner might have a second full period of probation?—Yes.

236. (Dr. Greenwood.) Are prisoners made acquainted with their privileges, such as their power of appeal to the Secretary of State, as well as to the governor and director of the prison?—Yes, there are directions hung up in the prisons which tell them all those things, and they know it both in convict prisons and in other prisons too.

237. They have it actually put before them, so that it is not a mere matter of tradition?—Directions are hung up, they know it well.

238. (Chairman.) I think you stated, and indeed it is obvious, that there would be a material difference of climate between certain of the prisons?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

Dartmoor Prison, Friday, 10th June 1870.

The Commission resumed its inquiry at half-past 9 o'clock a.m.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HONORABLE THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HONORABLE G. C. BRODRICK,
S. E. DE VIER, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENHOW.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

CAPTAIN STOPFORD, Director of Convict Prisons, examined.

239. (Chairman.) You were governor of this prison, I believe?—Yes, for nearly three years.

1869.—11.

239. Dartmoor for instance, would have a different climate probably from Chatham?—Yes.

240. Is there any difference of clothing arranged in consequence of that difference of climate?—The clothing is made of the same material at all the prisons; I suppose probably at Dartmoor, if the medical officer thought it proper, it would be more general to use flannels, but that is a matter for him to consider.

241. But with regard to bedclothing, should you be of opinion that as a colder climate more bedclothing would be given?—I doubt it. I do not think it is so because the prisons are all warmed, and supposed to be all of an equal temperature.

242. That is indoors?—Yes.

243. You have mentioned certain cases in which letters have been stopped in consequence of the nature of the communications which they contained. Can you tell us, by way of illustration, what these communications were?—If a prisoner filled his letter with abuse against the governor, or with false statements as to his treatment inside the prison, or wrote and said that he was dying when he was perfectly well, and that kind of thing, his letter would be stopped.

244. (Mr. Brodrick.) But the false statements about his treatment would not be stopped if they were in a petition to the Home Secretary?—To the Home Secretary he could write anything he liked.

245. (Chairman.) Is there anything else you wish to tell us?—No.

246. (Dr. Lyons.) I suppose you are aware of the general nature of the allegations which have been made, and which have been submitted to the Home Secretary in regard to these prisoners?—Yes.

247. Do you think it possible that such a thing as this could have occurred, that Kitchin for two years had for supper nothing but 6 ounces of bread and a pint of water, and for a considerable period could eat no dinner, except upon three days of the week, in consequence of the badness of the soup and the rancid character of the meat?—No; I should say that that was quite impossible.

248. You have sufficient confidence in the whole management of the prison arrangements to think that impossible?—I am sure that that is impossible.

249. Will you furnish us with the cost per annum to the State of each political prisoner?—I cannot distinguish political prisoners from others. I can give you the cost of the prisoners in the lump, and the average cost per head.

250. Perhaps you could give us the cost per annum to the State of the prisoners confined in the prisons in which the political prisoners are?—Yes, I could do so.

251. (Chairman.) The cost of all the prisoners?—Yes.

252. (Dr. Lyons.) Distinguishing the cost of maintenance from the establishment charges?—Yes, we have the whole thing in a statistical form.

Capt. E. F.
De Case.

17 May 1870.

Capt. Stopford.

10 June 1870.

Capt. Suggs. appointment here. In September 1866 I think I came here.

255. And you left in 1868?—I left in 1868.

256. And you are now director of convict prisons?

—I went from here to Portsmouth convict prisons?

257. And you are now director of convict prisons?

—Yes.

258. You are, I suppose, aware of the object of this Commission?—I am.

259. I think it would be convenient if you would, if you please, state to us first what number of prisoners were under your charge while you were here?—On an average about 680.

260. Will you give us some details as to the classes to which the prisoners belong; how those in the prison were divided?—They were located in the prison by their classes for conduct. For instance a man joins in the probation class first, all the probation men are located together; a man must be one year in that class, and he is a year in the third class, and they merge from that into the second and then into the first. In the first and other classes all the men are located in separate wards.

261. Is every man on his first admission put into the probation class?—Yes.

262. Then they are classed as probationers here, are they?—They are located. They are not employed in classes, only located in prison.

263. As to the employment of those different classes, will you inform us in what way they are set to work?—Well, the rule has been this, that when a batch of men are received from separate confinement, this being an invalid prison, they are first inspected by the medical officer, and he selects those men who are fit only for light labour, and those fit for full labour. Full labour men are sent to work in the works, and light labour picking oysters and breaking stones in the shed.

264. Will you give us the history of the day of one of those sent out to the bog?—Shall I take the summer hours?

265. The summer hours?—He goes out to the bog at 7, and he works from 7, after he has had his breakfast, to half-past 11 when he comes in to his dinner. They are allowed an hour for their dinner, and about 1 o'clock, or a quarter to 1, after they have dined, they march out to their labour again, and come in at half-past 3, when the bell rings in the summer hours.

266. And then after that what food do they have?—They then come to their tea and get a pint of gruel and a loaf of bread, that is about 6 o'clock, directly after their dinner.

267. After 6 o'clock what is done?—After that they either have schooling or bathing. One half perhaps will do schooling, and another half bathing; the half that will be for bathing one night will be for schooling the next night, and so on until 8 o'clock, when they are locked up.

268. What do they have for tea at 6 o'clock that you have spoken of?—Evening meal I should call it. They have a pint of gruel and a loaf of bread, 8 ounces I think; the dietary scale will show that, and the second class men are allowed to have the option of tea or gruel with an extra 2 ounces of bread.

269. Do I understand that a man is advanced from one class to another according to work?—According to conduct and industry, both. They must earn 2,500 marks in each class.

270. Is the amount of work at which a man is put, different in the different classes?—No.

271. You spoke of men going to the bog, what is the work that they are first put to?—That depends a good deal on the time of the year. Trenching is our principal work here in winter, and then there is picking up stones, clearing the land of small stones and putting them in heaps. We employ men at light labour for that at this time of the year, and later on most of the hands are employed at hay-making and in all farm work. I am speaking of those men outside on the works. They do other work inside in the prison.

272. You spoke of collecting stones and putting them into heaps. Some of those stones are no doubt very large stones?—No, that is a description of light labour, even collecting stones and putting them in heaps. It is work that is only fit for light labour men, but in trenching and draining sometimes we have to break up large stones and to take them up to clear the land.

273. We saw yesterday as we came along some very large stones placed in a row along the walls and evidently removed from the ground?—That is done by sledging.

274. Then the stones are dug up and put on a dredge and carried to their places?—Yes.

275. When a man is employed in that way, if he finds the work too severe for him, what does he do?—He complains to the medical officer.

276. Supposing that at the time he is actually engaged in work he finds it strain him, what would he do?—He would speak to the warden of the party, who ought to bring it under the notice of the principal warden of the district.

277. That would be the warden's duty to do?—It would. It is a warden's business if a man meets any sort of accident in work, to report it at once; and if necessary, if it is a dangerous accident, or he notices himself from the appearance of the man that speaks to him that he is really ill, he ought to send him in at once.

278. Does he make any record of such a complaint?—He is required to send in a written report to the governor in cases of accident.

279. (Mr. De Vere.) That is the medical officer?—No, the warden of the party.

180. (Chairman.) It is the warden's business, if required to send it in to the governor?—Yes.

281. Daily?—No, whenever it happens.

282. As soon as he conveniently can?—Yes.

283. Do you believe that during your time that regulation was carried out?—Yes.

284. You have no reason to doubt that it was carried out?—No, frequently convicts make claims for re-admission on the ground of having met an accident in the work; it is therefore necessary to have a report at the time.

285. Can you tell us who they were?—It is impossible after two or three years to tell that. The reports were brought at the time.

286. You were particular and knew that reports were made at the time?—Yes.

287. I presume that on the receipt of a report you communicated with the medical officer at once?—Directly.

288. Were the prisoners so employed aware that they had an opportunity, in case of need, of complaining of the work, and that their complaint would be brought before the governor?—Yes.

289. Are there rules and regulations of the prison being up in separate cells or in any other part of the prison?—They are hung up in the halls and read to the prisoners.

290. Upon their admission?—Yes, and once a quarter.

291. There are printed forms of dietary I suppose?—There are.

292. Showing, I presume, the amount of food to be given to each class?—Yes, the diet scales will show it to you, and also the different scales for hard and light labour.

293. I understand that the allocation of different sorts of labour to different prisoners takes place on the advice and with the assent of the medical officer?—Quite so.

294. Confining our attention to the class of prisoners with whom we are specially concerned, let me ask you, during the time that you were here were there any treason felony prisoners here?—There was only one here.

295. Was that Milesky?—That was Milesky.

296. Lennon was not here?—Lennon was not here, he was received since I left.

297. Do you recollect at what time was Malinsky received?—He was received on the 8th February 1867.

298. From where?—From Millbank.

299. When he came here what was done with him, what class was he put into?—He came in probation class and was treated as such, and located in it.

300. In which class was he then put for work?—When he was sent to full labour he was reported by the doctor as fit. He was examined by the doctor like all prisoners, and sent to full labour.

301. How long did that continue?—To the best of my belief he remained at full labour for about three weeks.

302. Had you any complaint from him during that time?—No, I had not. I do not think he complained to me at all of his labour at that time. He did to the doctor, I believe.

303. Is the doctor here at present?—No; Doctor Ashham, who knows Malinsky's case and all about it, is now medical officer in charge of Woking female prison, and I suppose that in the event of your going to the male prison you would see him.

304. He was the medical officer here at that time?—He was the medical officer here at that time.

305. In reference to Malinsky, when first, if at all, did you receive any complaint from him?—He made his complaint to the doctor, who at once took him in and put him on light labour. He made no complaint to me about his work to the best of my knowledge. It is so long ago that I do not remember, but there is no record of it.

306. Have you any recollection that he complained of anything besides his work?—No, I have not. He asked me several times for leave to write letters.

307. Was that leave according to the prison rules?—Not according to the prison rules, but he received letters and wrote replies on special grounds when they were not due.

308. How often are prisoners allowed to write letters?—A man in probation class writes one letter on reception to acquaint his friends of his removal. Then again in the third class he writes a letter—once in six months—provided the last two of the six are passed in good conduct. Then in the second class he writes every four months, and in the first class every three months.

309. Do I understand that the leave given to Malinsky was an indulgence which would not have been granted to other prisoners?—No, I do not say that, for sometimes under special circumstances in cases of death, when a prisoner receives an announcement of the death of his wife, I would then take on myself to give him a letter.

310. I should rather say an indulgence, which under the rules of the prison would not be given?—Yes.

311. But in a case of emergency would have been?—Yes.

312. Let me ask you whether you received when that prisoner was sent here, any instructions from the House Office with regard to the treatment of that class?—None whatever.

313. Nor at any time?—None whatever.

314. Have you anything further to state with reference to Malinsky during the time that you were governor here?—Yes. He was here for about three months altogether. About the last half of that time he was in hospital.

315. As to what happened in his case, Dr. Ashham can tell more about it than you?—Dr. Ashham knows more about it than I do; it was on his representation to me that I wrote a report to London to request that he should be removed, for the climate may not agree with him.

316. Then he was removed?—He was removed.

317. To what place was he removed?—To Woking. I believe I reported to the visiting director, who ordered him to be removed. It must be done with the Secretary of State's warrant of course.

318. That was after he had been here about half his time?—After he had been here about three months, but the last half of the three months he was in hospital.

319. Three months was the whole period of his stay?—Yes; he was received on the 8th February 1867, and removed to Woking the 10th May 1867, and I might state, as it may not come out on a question, that he never was reported for misconduct, nor was he ever punished.

320. Is there anything further that you would wish to state in reference to that case?—No, I do not know that there is.

321. It has been stated by him that when at Dartmoor he had to lift great weights; these were probably stones?—Yes, it is quite possible he might have been treading.

322. Might this be the case, that six of these stones were put in a hand-barrow, that is the sledge to which you refer?—No, that is not a hand-barrow.

323. A "barrow without wheels" he calls it?—That might either be intended for the light-labour party collecting stones, and they are called in barrows by two men; but it might be a sledge too. Probably it was the sledge, if he called it "a barrow without wheels." But the officer who was in charge of that party at the time is here.

324. What is his name?—Principal Warder Hodge.

325. He was in charge of the party in which Malinsky worked?—Yes, he was.

326. He would have more personal knowledge than you would?—He would. I can only speak of these things from recollection.

327. I would ask you to describe to us shortly the duties and powers of a director of convict prisons?—My experience is short as a director, but I will give it to you to the best of my ability.

328. How long have you been a director?—I have been a director more than a year now.

329. We should like to know what is the office and what powers has a director. How often do you visit prisons?—Once a month is usual. My duty in coming down here is to see any prisoner that has a complaint to make; to go into his complaint, and to listen in fact to anything he has to say.

330. Do you see every prisoner when you come?—Every prisoner that wishes to see me puts his name down. They are all actually seen by me, but only those in hospital and under punishment, and those whose names have been put down, can speak to me.

331. He knows that he has a right to do that?—He knows he has a right to do that. He goes to the governor and his name is put down.

332. Then when you come you go through the list?—Yes.

333. And hear each prisoner's complaint?—Yes.

334. Do you hear those complaints in the presence of the governor?—Always.

335. You do not see them alone?—Never, and always under an escort. It would not be safe to see these men alone.

336. But you hear everything that they have to say material to the point?—Material to the point. Some of them would talk for hours, and we are obliged to check them often; but I hear everything that is material.

337. Hearing those complaints, what powers have you?—I see the officers connected with him in every way. It may be a complaint against his medical treatment, in which case I would refer to the doctor for his medical report. They also see me about letters, and anything in fact they would like to ask. The governor has no power to prevent a prisoner from seeing the director if he wishes to put his name down. That is with regard to the prisoners seeing me. And with regard to punishment, all cases of severe penalties and insubordination are remanded for the director. When the director comes he takes the evidence down on oath, hears the prisoner's defence, and forms his judgment, and sees any evidence there may be for the prisoner. As to the power of punishment, a director can inflict 28 days close confinement on punishment diet, six months separate confinement in the penal class. I may tell you that in all cases of punishment that there must be an interval of one day between every three, on penal class diet; that is, change of diet every third day, so that the bread and water is not continuous. Then, in addition to that imprisonment, the director can inflict corporal punishment to the extent of 35 lashes, and he can order a man to be placed in cross irons and party coloured dress for six months, or the irons for six months and the dress for a longer period if necessary. Then he can further sentence a prisoner to undergo "loss of remission." Every man is entitled to a certain amount of remission, and the director has the power for offences to forfeit the prisoner so much of his remission as he pleases; he can forfeit the whole of it if he thinks fit.

338. By "remission" you mean, I suppose, lessening the period of imprisonment. Supposing a man sentenced to seven years' penal servitude for good conduct, he would be entitled to be released at the end of two years and three months?—Five years and five months, I believe, if his industry and conduct were satisfactory.

339. But if his conduct is bad, you have the power of depriving him of the advantage of that remission?—Yes.

340. And consequently he should serve his full sentence?—Just so. Five years and five months is the remission.

341. (Mr. Brodrick.) Does a director see any prisoner who does not put his name down to see him?—No; he does not, except those under punishment and in hospital.

342. Is the right of the prisoner to put his name down to see the director in any way dependent on the governor?—He sees the governor and asks to see the director. He puts his name down to see the governor, and the governor records his name in the list for the director.

343. Is it the duty of the governor to put down the name of any prisoner who applies for it?—It is.

344. And does the right of putting his name down to see the director continue up to the moment of the director's arrival?—It could be put down up to that morning, certainly; up to the moment of arrival there would be difficulties.

345. It has been stated in the case of one prisoner not on any list, who applied the day of the director's arrival, that it was refused on that ground?—It is quite possible that it might have been; but as governor, if a prisoner intimated to me on the morning that the director came, that he wished to see him, I would put his name down.

346. Would the director pass through the prison as a matter of course, and look at the general arrangements?—Yes.

347. But the cells are not thrown open so that anyone might appeal to him?—No.

348. Are you aware what the practice is when country jails are visited?—I do not know anything about it.

349. What right of appeal has a prisoner from the director's decision?—He can petition the Secretary of State.

350. Could he petition the Secretary of State against the punishment inflicted by the director; as to the loss of remission, for instance?—He could petition after he had done his punishment. He would not have the chance of petitioning so long as he is under punishment.

351. Then is it a rule that no man under punishment can petition the Secretary of State?—They cannot.

352. The punishment might last, as I understood, for six or nine months, might it not?—Nine months is the extreme.

353. Except so far as this rule may operate, has the director power to stop a prisoner's petitioning the Secretary of State?—No.

354. Is he in any way consulted in the matter?—

The governor can give him leave to petition the Secretary of State; but the rule is, there must be an interval of 12 months between each petition. For instance, if a man petitions to-day and receives an answer from the Secretary of State, he cannot petition again for 12 months. The petition is then forwarded to the director.

355. Supposing a man to petition to-day, say on the ground of his food being insufficient, or bad medical treatment, or whatever his complaint may be, and supposing a totally new grievance arises a month hence, could he petition?—The rules are that he could not petition again for 12 months, but the governor is quite authorised to use his discretion. For instance there might be a fresh grievance turn up with regard to his trial; it would not be fair, it would be very hard, to keep that man waiting 12 months before he could represent this. We have had cases of prisoners who presented fresh evidence relative to their trial which was important to them, and we have always given them liberty to petition. As a general rule there is an interval of 12 months.

356. And that rule of 12 months interval is applicable equally to complaints of the prisoner about his prison treatment and to petitions against the justice of his sentence?—You mean with regard to the interval between them.

357. Yes. Suppose a prisoner to petition against the justice of his sentence to-day, I gather from what you tell me that even if ill-treated, he could not petition on that ground for 12 months?—No, he could not.

358. Although that ground would be quite distinct from that of the justice of his sentence?—Yes.

359. How does a prisoner become aware that he possesses the right of petitioning the Secretary of State?—I cannot tell you that. It is laid down in the general rules I believe.

360. Is it laid down in the rules which are hung up?—There is an abstract here. No, it is not on the abstract of rules.

361. Do you believe it to be universally known to the prisoners that they possess that power of petitioning the Secretary of State?—Oh yes, there is no doubt of that, but how they know it. I can tell you this; in the rules for the principal warders and warders, there is a clause in that which states they are to be careful to report to the governor the moment a prisoner wishes to see a director, and to put his name on the list. There is a clause in the rules to that effect, so that they know by that, the officers know, and it gets from the warders to the prisoners I should imagine in that way; but I cannot tell you that it is exactly laid down for the information of the prisoners.

362. Has the director any power over the privilege of writing letters?—Yes, he has.

363. In what way; how does it come before him?—In the same way, a man puts his name down to see the director, frequently to ask for a letter, which we give them specially under certain conditions, for instance, in case of death, or in a case of emergency.

364. The rule with respect to class applies equally to the right of writing and of receiving letters?—Yes.

365. That is to say a man is allowed to write and receive the same number of letters?—To write and receive.

366. Would the withholding of letters, or the withholding the right of sending letters, ever be imposed as a punishment?—It goes with the punishment. When a man is reported for misconduct he is generally degraded to a lower class, and therefore the privilege of the class goes with it, and writing a letter is a part of the privilege. For instance, if a man is degraded to third class, he loses the privilege to write.

367. Supposing a governor says to a prisoner "A letter has come for you, but for misconducting yourself you won't have it for a week or a fortnight," would that be a legitimate act on the part of the governor?—The man would have to wait a great deal longer than that if he was reported. It depends on the time he was degraded to his class. The governor would say to a man of the third class, "I degrade you to the probation class," he would therefore be deprived of the power of writing for a time. The privileges go with the class. We never use it as a punishment, a special punishment, and say, "We take your letters from you," but "We degrade you to a class," and therefore the privilege of writing is consequently delayed.

368. In your capacity of director, have you ever received complaints from treason felony convicts as to any special severity being exercised towards them?—During any time as director. Never at this prison.

369. As governor, have you received any complaints?—No.

370. When you speak of inflicting nine months separate imprisonment as a punishment, does that imply the prisoner being sent back to Pontonville or Portland?—No, it does not necessarily.

371. He may be imprisoned separately in this prison?—Yes, I should like you to ask me again about complaints of treatment. When I was giving the answer I was thinking of this prison. As director of this prison I have never had complaints from treason-felony prisoners; but in Portland I have had complaints frequently.

372. Since you have been director?—Yes; trifling complaints, not of punishment, but about change of diet, and that sort of thing—that the diet had not been wholesome, and complaints of that kind.

373. Have treason felony convicts ever complained to you of being treated with peculiar harshness as such?—Oh yes; only the other day I had complaints of that at Portland.

374. What peculiar severity was alleged?—Well, the general rule is, they were treated the same as the convicts. That is the complaint that was generally made.

375. That they are treated as other convicts?—That they are treated as other convicts and not exceptionally. I should like to have that question of mine answered again; it seems rather contradictory. When I state I have never heard any complaints of treatment from treason felony prisoners, I mean in this prison; but since I have been director I have had frequent complaints at other prisons.

376. Then do I understand you to say that the complaints actually claimed the right to be treated differently from other convicts?—Yes.

377. At all events, did they expect to be formed into a special class, as it were?—Yes.

378. In your experience of convict prisons has it ever been the practice to adopt the work of a prisoner to his previous occupation?—No, we do not generally do that, except in the case here with shoemakers. We have to make a large number of boots and shoes, and we generally select the men who were shoemakers to do that work; but we do not as a rule employ men according to trades; we could not do it. We employ there inside the prison, such as tailors and cleaners, according to their conduct. When a man gets into second or first class we give him a berth inside, but he must gain it by his conduct outside first.

379. If a man was accustomed to head work rather than hand work, would it be possible to find anything more suitable to him?—It might be. We should treat him the same at first outside. Then if we found by his conduct that he was useful, perhaps as a nurse in the infirmary, we could employ him as such. But there is no employment of the kind you speak of that we could give them.

380. They are never employed in clerks' work, for instance?—No.

381. (Dr. Lyons.) What incident in the punishment of prisoners seems to you to bear most hard upon them, or that they appear to complain most about?—Loss of diet. I suppose you do not allude to corporal punishment. Of course that is what a man would complain of most, if he was subjected to it. They dread that more than anything; next to that loss of diet.

382. You think they dread corporal punishment most?—Yes.

383. Loss of diet next?—Yes, and forfeiture of remission next.

384. Do they seem to suffer much from withholding letters from them, or depriving them of the power of writing letters?—They attach great importance to it, and feel the privilege very much.

385. Would you now on consideration put that before any of the others that you mentioned?—No, I should put it last—corporal punishment, diet, forfeiture of remission, and letter writing.

386. And letter writing last?—I think so.

387. Do you think there is not a difference in the way in which these things would be regarded by prisoners, having in view their previous condition of life?—Certainly; I am only taking the majority of convicts.

388. Do you not think that the withholding of letters—of the privilege of receiving or sending out letters—would fall very heavily on persons of a certain amount of education?—More so than upon the others certainly.

389. In regard to such persons, have you any power of granting to them a greater privilege with regard to the receipt, or the issue of letters?—Yes, I have; and I may state that with regard to the treason felony prisoners at Portland, I have hardly ever refused them a letter when they have asked for it.

390. Is there any difference at all made respecting the class of labour the men are put to, having regard to their previous habits of life?—No.

391. Is there none whatever?—No, none.

392. Would a man of literary and sedentary habits, and who had been in the rank of a gentleman previously, be put to exactly the same kind of physical labour that a man who had previously been of a lower class would?—He would.

393. Is it consistent with your knowledge that this is felt as a degradation and an additional element in the severity of prison discipline in its effects on the prisoner?—Well, I should think it must of course. A man not accustomed to manual labour must feel the physical severity of it no doubt; and we all know this, that a man who has held a better position in life outside feels very keenly having to associate with convicts, with thieves.

394. I was coming to that in a moment?—No doubt.

395. Do they complain of the fact of their being put to labour?—Are you speaking of the treason-felony prisoners?

396. I am speaking generally now, I will come to that particular class again. Do persons in the position of gentlemen, and accustomed to literary and sedentary modes of life, complain of being put to common manual labour?—Yes, they do, occasionally.

397. They do?—They do.

398. Are their complaints attended to in any way?—Perhaps more generally (as they get their classes by good conduct); then if we can possibly find them a berth inside we give it to them. But that depends entirely on their advancement in their classes.

399. Do you consider what is called "hard labour" here to be a really heavy day's work for a man to do?—Hard labour, yes.

400. It is a heavy day's work for a man to get through?—Yes.

401. Trenching and stone lifting?—Trenching and stone lifting, yes. Trenching and stone lifting go together.

402. Is it really hard work, such as would be performed by a labouring man for hire?—It is.

403. Is it as hard work as would be expected of an ordinary labouring man?—No, certainly not, at this prison.

404. It is not?—No.

405. Are they supposed to do as much work as ordinary labourers for their day's work?—Well, it is hard to tell you, because what a labourer does here in this part of Devonshire, I do not think they work much but they are expected to do as much.

Capt. Stappard.

10 MAR 1870.

Capt. Suggs.
10 June 1879.

404. Is your labour here harder than that of the prisoners in the surrounding districts?—No, I believe not.

407. Is it as hard?—It is about the same, though not so hard as at other public works prisons.

408. Well then, I come back to ask you again, do you consider as a hard day's labour the work that a convict is put to here, full labour?—It is.

409. It is a hard day's labour?—Yes.

410. How many hours in the day is a prisoner working at it?—Nine, I think. About nine hours, I think, the longest day. I think that I am right in saying it is about nine hours.

411. Then we will take it that there are nine hours of really hard labour involved in a day's work in full labour?—In the longest days. That is for the level labour.

412. I am asking you of the hard labour?—Yes.

413. Have you any scale by which to measure the amount of work that is done by a gang of men, or by an individual of that gang?—Here we have not. We do not measure our work here. In public works prisons, nearly all the work is measured so far as possible.

414. A convict at labour is under the direction of a warden I suppose?—He is.

415. Has that warden power to make him work up to a certain standard of hard work?—Yes, he has to keep him up to a certain standard.

416. How does he do that?—By his own observation; he knows about what a man ought to do.

417. How does he enforce the labour of a convict who is rather slack in his labour?—Well, the rule is that he would speak to the man, caution him, tell him he is idle, and caution him to go on with his work, and if he disregards that caution he brings it under the notice of the principal warden of the district under whose supervision those parties may do the work in, and then the principal warden reports to the deputy governor, or if the deputy governor is in the charges then he may bring it to his notice. He visits the works for that purpose.

418. Then that warden has a certain power over the men to force them to work?—In that way; in no other way.

419. Then he would stimulate their labour by speaking to them. The fear of being reported would be a stimulus?—Just so.

420. Would it be possible that a warden would go to the length of abusing them, threatening them, or using insults towards them?—He would lose his situation if he did, if it was known.

421. I observe that every warden carries a staff?—Yes.

422. Would it be possible that a warden could use his staff to beat or strike a man?—He does not do it.

423. Has it ever come to your knowledge that it has been done?—No, except in self-defence. I have known them to use it in self-defence. Assaults are frequent in this prison, and they have to use their staffs or swords in self-defence.

424. They are not allowed to use their staffs to stimulate them?—No; a man would lose his situation at once.

425. Does a warden get any special directions with regard to the use of the staff?—Never to use it, except in self-defence.

426. Is that communicated to him orally, or are there written instructions respecting it?—Well, I believe it is communicated to him orally. I do not know of any printed regulations. I do not know if it is in print, except that it is laid down, I believe, that no man is to ill-treat the prisoners, but it does not specify sword or staff.

427. It is stated in some complaints with regard to the political prisoners that objurgations of one kind or another were used against them by wardens, and that such expressions as "You are no longer gentlemen here; you must work," were uttered?—I have not heard of that.

428. You say you have not heard of it?—Yes.

429. No complaints of that kind were made to you by political prisoners?—No.

430. Either here or elsewhere?—No.

431. I think you said that you consider the work here a hard day's work?—Yes.

432. What means are taken to ascertain when a prisoner comes here whether he is fit for that kind of hard work or not?—He is suspected by the medical officer before he is even sent to any work at all, and he is selected then either for full labour or light labour.

433. And the selection rests entirely, I presume, with the medical officer?—Quite so.

434. Now with regard to Mulcahy, a treason-felony prisoner, who was brought here, I think you said that he was put on full labour?—He was.

435. Did he break down at that full labour?—He complained and was removed to light labour.

436. How soon?—About three weeks, I believe, it was.

437. About three weeks?—Yes.

438. If he broke down after three weeks on full labour, would you not think that rather presumptive evidence that he was not fit for full labour in the first instance?—No; frequently we have here hale, heavy men put on full labour, and suddenly they change and come to light labour. They constantly change from full to light.

439. Would you have regarded Mulcahy as a full hale, heavy, vigorous man when he came here?—Yes, certainly, to look at him I should have.

440. You should have?—Certainly; he was a tall, fine looking man.

441. Are you aware that he suffered from blood-spitting here?—Yes; it was on account of blood-spitting that I recommended the visiting director to remove him.

442. Do you think that that blood-spitting was produced in any way by the hard labour that he was put to?—Well, I cannot say; it is a medical question.

443. That did not come before you in any way?—No, I saw him every day in the hospital, and as far as I remember I do not think he began to spit blood until after he had been in hospital some little time.

444. It was brought to your knowledge that he was often spitting blood?—The doctor mentioned it to me.

445. That was an official communication?—Yes, I brought it under the notice of the visiting director, on which he was removed to Woking.

446. It was stated that they were made to carry stones on their backs; is that true?—I have never seen them.

447. It is distinctly alleged that they were made to carry heavy slabs of stone on hand-barrers or on their bare backs, for hundreds of yards, through the bog?—No, never on their bare backs.

448. Then, if not on their "bare backs," were they obliged to carry them on their backs?—No, on sledges in the mode of carrying large stones.

449. Then do you consider it absolutely not the fact, that they were made to carry stones on their bare backs?—I believe it is not the fact.

450. Mulcahy complained to Messrs. Pollock and Knox of his having been made to carry flags on the back, and he rose from his feet and showed them how he was obliged to carry them. Do you think that occurred while he was here?—I do not think it did.

451. (Continued.) The warden would be the man to speak next upon that?—He would. He certainly never complained to me of it, and I never saw it.

452. (Dr. Leeson.) Would you undertake to state with certainty that it did not occur?—I could not, but I think it quite impossible. I have never seen a prisoner do such a thing in my life.

453. Would you undertake to say that it was contrary to the discipline of this prison, and contrary to your convictions of discipline, if a convict was made to carry stones?—On his bare back?

454. On his back, whether bare or not?—Yes.

455. You think it would be?—Yes.

456. Do you think it on the whole not likely to have occurred?—I think it not at all likely.

457. Did you ever hear it mentioned before?—I have known it only by seeing the evidence in the last Commission that sat. That was the first I heard of it.

458. Could you name any warder who was in charge of any of the treason-felony prisoners, who properly could give particulars with regard to that allegation?—I think principal warder Bodge could.

459. Is he in this prison at present?—He is.

460. Is it consistent with your knowledge that any of the prisoners were ever yoked to carts by means of collars fastened round their necks?—Not round their necks; they draw cars with yokes fastened across the shoulder and down across the chest, over the shoulder and under the opposite arm.

461. How many men are so yoked together?—That depends a good deal on the kind they have to draw: about five or six to a small cart.

462. Are there any beasts of burden employed in the prison works?—We have horses employed in drawing for farm purposes; for cleaning measure and that sort of thing for the farm; cart horses.

463. When five or six men are yoked to a cart, what weight are they supposed to draw?—I can hardly tell you the exact weight.

464. Who could tell it?—The warder in charge of the party could tell it. I do not know how much the small carts weigh; or how much they carry. We generally go by the size of the cart.

465. While the prisoners are at work are they supposed to be silent?—Yes.

466. They are not permitted to speak to each other?—No, except as regards the work. It is a very difficult thing to enforce silence on the works, a very difficult thing; but the rule is, they shall not talk except as regards the management of the work.

467. Is the rule with regard to silence a recent one, or has it been long in force?—It came into force to the best of my belief about three years ago.

468. Was it in consequence of Mulohy's health breaking down here that he was sent from this to Woking?—It was in consequence of his spitting blood.

469. You said a while ago that it was not safe for you to see a prisoner alone?—No.

470. Why is that?—There is always a chance of these men swindling one. I should not at all like to be alone. I should not think it advisable to put one's self in the way of these men. Many seem to lose their tempers if they do not get what they want. If I decline a request a man frequently loses his temper, and he might, of course, assault me.

471. With regard to the letters, may I ask you again, did Mulohy apply to you at any time for the privilege to write letters?—Yes, I believe he did.

472. In regard to important family incidents?—I believe he did.

473. Did you accord him that licence?—I always referred him to the directors in London.

474. Can you say if he was refused that privilege?—I believe he was, once or twice.

475. With regard to the penal restrictions of diet, you mentioned, I think, that you had power to put a man on 28 days' bread and water?—Yes, as director.

476. With an interval every fourth day of a return to ordinary diet?—Yes, penal class diet I believe it is.

477. Penal class diet?—Yes. Perhaps you would allow me to satisfy myself by getting the diet scale. Penal class diet I believe it is (hardt in scale of diets).

478. Then it is penal class diet that he would be put on in the interval?—Yes.

479. Has it been often put in practice that a convict has been put for 28 days on this bread and water system?—Not often.

480. Did it occur to any of the treason-felony prisoners?—Never in my experience; I have never known one put for so long.

481. Do you happen to know an instance where a man was put 28 days on bread and water diet?—No. I have sentenced men myself to 21 days, and have hardly ever given 28 days; 21 is about the greatest extent I like to go to, and that is only in cases of gross insubordination.

482. Do they seem to you to suffer physically or constitutionally from such a lengthened restriction of diet?—Yes, I think they do. I think 28 days' punishment diet does affect a man's physical condition for a time; but I do not know that it would afterwards. Continued punishment day after day, and week after week, no doubt would affect a man's constitution.

483. Is the punishment of three days' bread and water frequently used?—Yes, it is.

484. Would you say that it is very frequently used?—Yes.

485. During that period a man gets a pound of bread, and as much water as he likes to drink?—Yes.

486. Have you observed ill effects from nine months' penal diet?—No, I have not.

487. (Mr. De Foe.) You said in reply to a question put by one of the Commissioners, that you have had frequent complaints in other places, though not here, from treason-felony prisoners, but that they generally complained of not being exceptionally treated?—I mean by that, that they complained of being treated as other convicts.

488. Did any of these complain of being treated with exceptional severity, as being treason-felony convicts?—No, not to me as a director; certainly not.

489. Or as a governor?—Or as a governor. You see the complaints that these men would make to me would probably be made against my own treatment as a director, and they have never complained to me of severity, during the time I have been a director. I believe they complained to other persons of their being severely punished—to other directors some time ago, but they have never complained to me of the severity of their treatment.

490. Is there a medical officer at Dartmoor now?—There is an assistant surgeon. The medical officer has recently been removed to the Woking female prison, and his vacancy has not been filled up. But we generally have two here.

491. How long has the vacancy existed here?—About six weeks I think.

492. And during that time the principal medical duties are done by the assistant surgeon?—They devolve on the assistant surgeon.

493. How is the assistant medical officer qualified; what qualifications as a medical man has he?—This present medical officer, or do you mean as a rule?

494. We will take the assistant now in charge?—I can hardly tell you that.

495. Are the rules now in force in this prison the same as when you were governor?—Yes, they are.

496. With regard to Mulohy, you say that for three weeks he was on full labour?—Yes.

497. Can you state what was the actual employment that he had to perform at the time?—To the best of my belief it was trenching, as far as I can remember. It is a very difficult thing to remember a man's labour so long as that; but I only speak from the best of my recollection. I believe it was trenching.

498. After three weeks he was put on light labour?—Yes.

499. Can you state the nature of the light labour in which he was employed?—In the tailor's shop, to the best of my belief.

500. And how long was he employed in that light labour?—About another three weeks, and I think the remainder of his time was in the infirmary. He was here about three months altogether; he was in the hospital 42 days or 43 weeks.

501. If a convict has a complaint to make his first course, I think you stated, is to complain to the warder?—Yes, if on the works.

502. If the warder should not report the complaint,

Capt. Stopford.
30 June 1870.

us it is his duty to do, what means of redress would the convict have?—I should find the warder for his neglect of duty.

503. How would you know that the warder had neglected his duty?—I should make inquiries from the prisoner, or satisfy myself from the general aspect of the case whether it was true or not; inquire to the best of my ability. I am speaking as governor.

504. If a warder failed in forwarding to the governor a complaint made by a prisoner, how would the governor know that the warder had so failed in his duty?—When the prisoner would make a complaint of that kind the governor would naturally ask, "Has this been reported?" If it had not been the warder would be sent for, and if he denied it the principal warder would be sent for, for the prisoner could complain to him also on the works. I should ask him, "Has the prisoner reported to you?" and if both the principal warder and the warden stated to me that the prisoner had not complained, I should accept that.

505. I am now referring to complaints for hardship or ill-treatment. Have the prisoners any way of complaining to the governor, except through the warden?—Yes, he can put his name down to see the governor without giving the warden any reason at all, or he can ask to see the chief warden or the deputy-governor. He is not bound to give his reasons at all.

506. Has a convict any means of knowing whether the warden has forwarded his complaints or not?—No; he can only come up and ask it of the governor. He can find it out in that way.

507. Is it the duty of the governor on receiving a complaint through the warden to give a reply to it?—Yes.

508. Is that obligation recorded in the rules?—No, it is one of those points that, as governor, I consider it a duty to give a prisoner every satisfaction in a point of the kind, to let him know exactly the truth if I can.

509. Is it in the power of a warden to make the labour of one man more severe than that of another?—No.

510. I may put my question perhaps more distinctly. Suppose a number of men are at work, some of them drawing stones and the others trenching the ground, and some of the ground is easier worked than the other portion, would it not be in the power of the warden to put one man to more severe work than another, supposing he had a grudge against him?—It is possible.

511. Have there been any complaints made, that you are aware of, of partial and unjust conduct of wardens in charge of works?—Yes.

512. And in their complaints did prisoners suggest any motive on the part of the warden or officer in charge?—Prisoners commonly complain that their work is harder than that of another man, and that the warden has got a feeling against them.

513. Have they ever stated to you that that partial and unjust treatment was in consequence of their having made complaints against the warden?—That has been stated.

514. When such complaints are made, are they investigated?—Yes.

515. How are they investigated?—By calling for reports from those in authority, whether they have observed any unfair treatment, or any man put to harder work than another, and whether the officer has been overbearing in his conduct towards the men.

516. Is that examination at the works made in presence of the convicts?—No; if I have good reason to believe that a warden is exceeding his duty on the works or anywhere, I do not say anything to him about it; I pay particular attention to him myself, and direct the principal officers to observe him, and then I satisfy myself whether the charge is good or not. It is difficult to take the evidence of convicts as to things of that kind, for they are continually bringing false charges against wardens, so that in charges of this kind it is done more by the governor's own observation, and the observation of those he can trust.

517. Is the evidence of the complainant taken in the presence of the warden or not?—No; the warden is not there.

518. He is not present?—No.

519. When a complaint is made to a director against a governor it is made in the presence of the governor, is it not?—Yes, in the presence of the governor when the director sees the prisoner.

520. If a complaint were made to a director, a complaint generally as to diet, or labour, or anything else, would it be made in the presence of the governor? Is the accusation heard by the director in the presence of the governor?—It is.

521. Whether the governor is himself a party implicated or not?—Yes, because the governor always is present with the director when complaints are heard. It is his duty to attend and explain anything, if called upon to do so.

522. Is it in the power of the governor to make the punishment of one prisoner more severe than that of another?—Yes, by removing him from one kind of employment to another.

523. Have complaints ever been laid before you as a director, of partial treatment by a governor?—Never.

524. Has it ever been suggested to you as a director that a governor's conduct towards a prisoner has been influenced by any charges brought by the prisoner?—Never.

525. Are there any dark cells in Dartmoor?—There are two.

526. On what occasion are they used?—When prisoners become refractory, and disturb the quiet of the other prisoners.

527. For what period can they be used continuously?—72 hours.

528. Are they absolutely dark?—They are absolutely dark.

529. Is confinement in a dark cell inflicted by the governor on his own responsibility?—Yes.

530. Does it require the order of a director?—No, the governor can do it on his own authority.

531. For 72 hours?—For 72 hours.

532. What is the diet in the dark cell?—If a man happened to be on bread-and-water diet, bread-and-water diet would be carried out; if on penal class diet, he would be kept on penal class diet. They are used almost invariably as a means of giving refractory prisoners, men who are making a disturbance.

533. In bedding allowed in the dark cells?—They are allowed their rugs—regular bedding.

534. On what do they lie?—On a board—a wooden bedstead.

535. Are they visited during the night?—Yes.

536. How frequently?—Every hour.

537. Every hour?—Yes.

538. Has any change been made lately as to the periodical visits. I ask you the question because I know that the practice is different in other prisons?—Every hour, I believe it is.

539. (Chairman.) I do not find that you place fetters on the prisoners you put into the dark cells here?—Never.

540. You said, Captain Stopford, with regard to appeals to the Home Office, that an interval of 12 months must elapse between the different petitions?—Yes.

541. Is that a general rule, or does it apply to complaints of the same nature only?—It is general.

542. Then there cannot be a second appeal to the Home Office on any subject whatever until a period of 12 months has elapsed?—That is the rule that we make, but special circumstances may arise where the director would use a discretionary power.

543. But as a matter of right the prisoner has not a right to appeal on any subject whatever, until 12 months have elapsed since his last petition?—Yes.

544. You stated, I think, that during the period of punishment the right of appeal is suspended?—During the period, but for instance, a man undergoing a punishment ordered by the governor, or by the director, can appeal to me as director when I go round, to consider his punishment, to let him off or remit some portion of it.

545. But during the period of punishment he forfeits his right to petition?—He does.

546. And that period of punishment may continue nine months?—In the penal class.

547. Then adding together the nine months, during which he forfeits his right of appeal as being under punishment, to the period of 12 months, the interval which must elapse between two petitions, there may be a period of 21 months during which he has no right of appeal?—No, 12 months altogether.

548. Then the forfeiture of the right of appeal for nine months is not superadded to the 12 months interval?—No.

549. (Mr. Broadrick.) He would then have an absolute right to petition at the end of 12 months, no matter whether he was under punishment or not?—He would.

550. (Mr. De Vere.) Can you state the percentage of those on full work whose health breaks down?—No, I cannot tell you that, but the medical officer may be able to throw some light on it.

551. You may be able to tell us whether the proportion of educated men, whose health breaks down on full labour, is larger than that of the labouring class?—I could not say that for certain either. I can only tell you that I believe they feel it more than the others.

552. But statistically you cannot say whether the proportion is larger or not?—I am not in a position to say.

553. Perhaps you can say whether on comparing the educated class and the ordinary labourer, the removals from full to light labour are more frequent in the case of the educated class than in the case of ordinary labourers?—I could not say for certain, but I think they would be, for I think an educated man feels the punishment more acutely than, for instance, a thief. I should suppose so.

554. In your opinion does the full convict labour affect the health of the educated class more severely than it does the health of the ordinary labourers?—It is more likely to do so, I should think.

555. But practically does it?—I do not know of any instance of it, but I should think it would.

556. (Dr. Greenhow.) You told us that no special instructions were issued for the treatment of treason-felony prisoners?—No.

557. Have they been treated differently from other prisoners?—Speaking generally of treason-felony prisoners during the time that I have been a director I have given them every possible indulgence. I have given them letters almost whenever they have asked provided their conduct has been even tolerably satisfactory.

558. Then in point of fact they have been treated with exceptional leniency?—They have.

559. Is the diet in this prison identically the same with the diet in the other convict prisons?—Identically the same with the other public works prisons.

560. It is the same as in the other public works prisons?—The same.

561. What is the dress of the prisoners here: would you specify the different articles of dress?—A short, knickerbockers, flannel waistcoat, drawers, long stockings, cap, stockings, drab jacket, drab waistcoat, shoes.

562. And the headclothes?—Eng. two blankets, and a pair of sheets. I believe that is the scale.

563. If a man complained of his bed being cold would he have an extra blanket supplied?—No, not as a general rule. They have one extra blanket during winter.

564. Do you give every man an extra blanket during winter?—During winter, and I might also say that they have a hot ration on Sundays, instead of the bread and cheese, when the weather is extremely severe.

565. A hot ration?—A hot ration during the winter months on Sundays instead of bread and cheese.

566. (Mr. Broadrick.) Does that apply to Dartmoor?—Only to Dartmoor.

567. (Dr. Lyman.) Only to Dartmoor?—Only. It was originally introduced on the recommendation of the medical officer.

568. Does that appear on the records anywhere?—I do not think it does. It was done on the recommendation of the medical officer.

569. (Dr. Greenhow.) What are the hours of labour for the prisoners in winter?—We are guided entirely by the length of the day. I may take the shortest day. They go out about 8 o'clock, 8 o'clock to half-past 11, and 1 to half-past 3.

570. You stated some time since that if a man fell ill on the works, or received an injury, or found the work too heavy, on speaking to the warden of the party he would be reported to the governor at once, and remitted from his work. Is there any record of these reports?—What I meant by that was in cases of accident of a sudden character; but for the harshness of the work he would not be remitted at the time, but he would put his name down in the evening to see the governor. But in cases of accident and sudden sickness on the works it is the duty of the warden to bring it before the governor.

571. My object is to ascertain whether reports of these cases are recorded in a book?—They are not reported in a book, because they are separate reports.

572. Are they filed?—They are separate reports. They are filed. You can see them.

573. How does a man become acquainted with the fact that he can appeal to the Secretary of State from the director?—Well, I do not exactly know where it is recorded, but I believe they are always told it on reception. They certainly all know it.

574. Is it not entered in the paper which is read to them once a quarter?—I believe it is not.

575. Then they only find it out in some irregular way?—I cannot say that there is a regular way of telling them. I do not know where it is.

576. I think you stated that under special circumstances you gave permission to prisoners to write more frequently?—Yes.

577. Have the treason-felony prisoners been allowed to write more frequently?—Yes.

578. And what were the special circumstances that induced you to give that indulgence?—My desire has been to encourage these men to behave themselves, and go on the principle rather of giving encouragement of that kind to induce them to obey the prison rules, than have recourse to punishment. I have held out inducements to them and have purposely avoided having recourse to punishment.

579. Are the letters they send and receive always read?—Always.

580. And if the letters they send contain any statements that are untrue, are they withheld?—Not always.

581. For example, if a prisoner in writing to his wife made a statement with regard to the treatment of the prisoners which was untrue, would that letter be forwarded?—Yes, it would.

582. Would it be forwarded as a matter of course?—I forwarded one the other day. I will tell you a case in point where a man complained of his eyes being bad. I did not believe they were; it went on. We generally, as a rule, refer these letters to the Secretary of State for instructions, and are generally guided by him in that case, and they are generally allowed to go on.

583. With regard to letters sent to the prisoners, is there any restriction as to their contents?—Yes, sometimes letters are returned to the writers.

584. On what account?—Frequently we have had correspondence on political matters. I have returned them always, and informed the writers when they are returned the reasons for sending them back.

585. Do you recollect any convict who had been a gentleman, either here or at the Portland prison,

Capt. Staggard,

10 June 1870.

Capt. Staggell.
10 June 1876.

where you acted as governor or director?—Yes, there was Roupel, a member of Parliament, at Poole, and a man who went away from here yesterday morning, a clergyman.

586. For what was that clergyman here?—Embarrassment, I believe.

587. And was he put to hard labour?—To light labour when he first came here, because he was a very old man, and unfit for hard labour.

588. But except on account of physical infirmity he was not treated differently from other convicts?—No, we should never think of treating them exceptionally.

589. What was Roupel's employment?—He is now nurse in the infirmary in Portland. He has got into the first-class, and when they gain this class we put them to employment of this kind.

590. How was he employed at first?—When he first went to Portsmouth he was employed cleaning chains.

591. How long was he employed in that way?—I cannot tell.

592. Is the doctor's report sent with each prisoner who comes here?—The medical history.

593. If a man comes here from another prison his medical history always sent with him?—Yes, but I am afraid that in Mulcahy's case his medical history was sent with him.

594. When a man is put upon penal diet for nine months has he the same diet every day of the nine months. I do not mean bread and water, but penal class diet?—Yes, he has; but I must tell you this, that there is a rule when a man is put on penal class diet, that after he has done three months he may be recommended by the governor to be put on the ordinary diet if his conduct during that time has been good.

595. Does the governor see all the prisoners every day?—He is not obliged to see them every day. He sees them going out to labour on the parade.

596. In what way does a prisoner appeal to the governor?—He gives his name to the warder in charge of his ward, and that is sent to the governor's office, and is entered in the book in the list.

597. Are prisoners' clothes occasionally taken from them at night?—They are.

598. For what reason is that done?—Men who are in parti-coloured dress: men who have attempted to escape; their clothes are taken from them and put outside.

599. Are the clothes taken only from such prisoners?—Yes, only from such.

600. Was that ever done to a treason-felony prisoner here?—No.

601. Do you consider that the work in the tailor's shop is light work?—Yes, certainly.

602. What exercises in the open air have the men who follow that work?—An hour in the morning and an hour in the afternoon.

603. That is two hours a day?—Yes.

604. Who examines the food for the purpose of seeing that it is of fair and proper quality?—The governor sees it every day. During my experience as governor I never missed seeing the rations.

605. Is it possible for the food to be served out in an unwholesome state or rancid?—Quite impossible.

606. Or putrid?—Quite impossible. I have never known it. I know that there have been complaints; for instance, men would complain sometimes of the bread being doughy. But the rations generally speaking very good indeed. I have never known them to be putrid.

607. Then it is not possible for the beef to have been tainted?—No.

608. You have never known the soup to have been made of tainted beef?—No.

609. The shins of beef are never so?—Never. If I saw even one shin of beef tainted in a supply I would send it back; I would not allow it into the prison.

610. (Chairman.) You said that the deputy governor visits the works: does that apply to all the outdoor works in the fields?—Yes.

611. Is it his duty to visit them once a day or more?—Twice a day.

612. So that he is present at different times at all the gangs?—He is continually going round. He visits once inside and once outside.

613. Supposing a warder neglects his duty so far as to refuse to receive a complaint from a prisoner, the prisoner would in that case have an opportunity afforded him at least once a day of communicating with the deputy governor?—Yes.

614. Then is it your belief that the treason-felony prisoners have been treated in all points on the same footing as the others, and that whenever an exception has taken place it has been an indulgence to them?—Just so.

615. In cases of misconduct, I understand that when a prisoner is transferred from a high class to a lower class, he loses to some extent the power of receiving or sending letters. Now, supposing a letter to arrive announcing the death of some relative, or a letter to be written announcing the serious illness of the prisoner himself, would an exception to the rule of prohibition be made in that case?—It would.

616. (Mr. Bredrick.) I think you said that the rule of silence is an obligation which has not been introduced above three years?—I think it is about that time.

617. Is it considered to have greatly increased the severity of the discipline; have you received any complaints from prisoners on that subject?—Yes, it is a severity no doubt.

618. In consequence of what was it introduced?—I do not know really what it was that occasioned it. I was governor here at the time that it was introduced. I fancy that it was in consequence of the amount of idleness that prevailed in the works, and the wasting of time in talking.

619. It has been stated that it was introduced specially with regard to the treason-felony convicts?—No; it was quite independent of them. I believe that it was introduced in consequence of the immense amount of waste of time that took place in the public works with prisoners idling away their time by talking, and therefore the rule was laid down that the prisoners should only talk about their work. I think I could give you the exact date of it. It is in this book.

620. I think it was the 20th July 1866?—Yes, I think that would be about the time. I cannot exactly get the date now, but I know that it is somewhere about that time.

621. With regard to appeals by a prisoner against one of the warders or the governor, do I understand you to say that the prisoner would never be confronted with the person of whose conduct he complained, except when that person was the governor?—As a rule they are not confronted, but there is nothing against it. I have often confronted a prisoner with the warder in his presence. I have often done it, but it is not a regular practice. If I think it necessary to do it there is no rule against it. Prisoners are sometimes given an opportunity of writing out their complaints, in which case their written statements are given to the warder to reply to.

622. Is it your experience that the prisoners complain freely of the governor in his presence to the director?—Oh, they have frequently spoken very freely of me in my presence to the director, and in very strong terms too.

623. With regard to the separate confinement at Millbank or Pentonville, does it ever last beyond nine months in the first instance?—I believe it has.

624. Can you explain the fact that some of the treason-felony prisoners appear to have been confined at Millbank for periods considerably exceeding that?—No.

625. Would they be in separate confinement all that time?—I cannot answer that question.

626. In some instances I observe that they were sent back to Millbank?—Those were men, I suppose, undergoing medical observation.

Capt. Stopford.
10 June 1876.

627. Two or three treason-felony convicts I perceive have been sent back to Millbank, and I presume underwent separate confinement. Were these punishments for bad conduct in Dartmoor prison?—No, not now; we used formerly send them back to spend the last six months in separate confinement.

628. (Dr. Lysons.) With regard to the subject of appeal, about which there appears a little difficulty, I would ask you as a test question, whether you know of any instance of appeal being made to the Home Secretary by a prisoner being successful in getting a wrong rectified that had been complained of by the prisoner?—I have never known of any case, and I cannot name any particular case.

629. Do you think that the system of appeal by the prisoners about alleged wrongs works at all effectually?—Yes, I do.

630. Do you think that a prisoner who had a real grievance to complain of could practically bring that grievance by appeal under the notice of the Home Secretary, and get it properly investigated and rectified if it was a substantial grievance?—I believe he could.

631. But you cannot state from your experience any instance of that having been accomplished?—I can remember in my own experience one or two cases where prisoners had complained of officers not treating them fairly, and where I have found their grievances to be correct and substantiated; cases of officers receiving money, where the officers have lost their situation in consequence. There was a case in point when I was governor here.

632. (Dr. Greenhouse.) When men are in a penal class do they do any work?—They pick osun.

633. Are the doctors' reports kept here of every

The witness withdrew.

Major Hocker examined.

Major Hocker.

641. (Chairman.) You are the governor of this prison?—Yes, my lord.

642. How long have you been here?—Since the 8th of January in this year.

643. What alterations, if any, have been made in the internal regulations of the prison, or the regulations of the works, since you succeeded Captain Stopford?—I succeeded Captain Bates.

644. What alterations have been made since?—No alteration whatever.

645. Is it your belief that if Captain Stopford gave us a detailed account of the mode in which the prisoners were dressed and set to work, that in all probability it would represent the state of things that now exists?—Precisely so, to the best of my belief.

646. Supposing that a prisoner was at work in a gang on the grounds, and that he was to make any complaint, either as regards any physical suffering which the work entailed on him, or any other grounds, to whom does he make it known?—To the officer in command of the gang in which he was at the time.

647. Supposing the officer refuses to receive the complaint, what would be the result?—He would then put his name down to see the governor.

648. That is when he returns from the field?—Exactly so, my lord.

649. In what way would he put his name down?—He would tell the officer in charge of the ward or landing.

650. The officer in charge of the ward would be a different person from the officer in command of the gang?—In all probability he would.

651. But he might be the same person?—He might.

652. Where any mistake occurs would it be a different man?—Certainly. Besides, he is bound to take his name to the principal warder in charge of the hall.

653. Supposing he has some spite against the man?—That would be known at once.

illness of a prisoner; is there a case back?—Well, I believe there is. The doctor will tell you that. I am almost afraid that the medical cases are sent away with them.

634. Does the governor ever examine the medical histories?—Yes; for instance, if any question were to arise of a man's health I should need for the medical history at once.

635. But is there any petitional examination of these medical histories?—No, not by the governor.

636. (Dr. Lysons.) What I intended to ask you was simply this, whether in case of a grievance alleged by a prisoner, and his making an appeal to the Home Secretary, you have ever known the appeal to have been successful, and consequently the complaint rectified. What you stated in reply to my question was, that you had yourself rectified things?—Yes, I remember a case.

637. That was a case of appeal to you as director? An appeal to me as governor it was.

638. But that does not meet the case I put, where a prisoner appeals to the Home Secretary, I want to know whether you are aware of any instance of a grievance having been rectified by direction of the Home Secretary as having been substantiated?—I cannot name one.

639. (Mr. De Vere.) Would there be any irregularity in a convict addressing the deputy governor on the works?—A convict could not step out of the works and address himself to the deputy governor. He could only tell the principal warder, or the warder in charge of his party. He cannot step out, otherwise he might commit an assault.

640. Then, although the deputy-governor inspects the works twice a day, the power of appeal would still be through the warder?—Yes, certainly; or by seeing the governor the next day.

654. How would it be known?—The prisoner would tell me, or tell the principal officer.

655. What opportunity has he of seeing you?—Every day.

656. Where can he see you?—Somewhere about; I am constantly visiting different parts of the prison or works.

657. Could a man step off the works to speak to you?—He could on that ground, if it occurred. It would be a breach of discipline for him to step out; but if he had grounds, he could do it. But I have never heard of a man not having his name put down during my experience of 5½ years, because the penalty would be so great if the officer neglected to do so.

658. We are told that the deputy governor visits the indoor prisoners as well as those at work in the fields?—Yes; that is the chief part of his duty, visiting the parties at labour and seeing that they get justice done there as regards their marks, and seeing that the daily work is carried on properly.

659. Supposing a prisoner is not satisfied with the result of an appeal to you, and wishes to exercise his power of appeal to the Secretary of State, what course is taken?—He must in the first place appeal to the directors, and then they will give him permission to appeal against their decisions to the Secretary of State.

660. Does the director hear the charge?—In the case of an officer charged?

661. Yes?—He would not know what the prisoner wanted to see him for; and then, when it was stated, he would send for the officer.

662. And would he confront the two?—If he thought fit.

663. Then every appeal to the Secretary of State goes through a director?—Yes; the governor could not allow a prisoner to communicate with the Secretary of State, without the authority of the director.

664. How frequently does the director visit the prison?—As nearly as possible once a month.

Major Bishop.
10 June 1870.

663. Is the director brought into direct communication with the prisoners?—Every prisoner who wishes to see the director comes to me, and his name is put down to see him.

666. Does it often happen that a prisoner wishes to see the director?—20 or 30 of those present generally every month.

667. What is your practice with regard to sending or receiving letters for prisoners?—I adhere as strictly as possible to the rules laid down for me. If I see that letters are not very objectionable they are passed in and passed out. Sometimes they are very objectionable letters.

668. Supposing they are objectionable, in the use of objectionable expressions, or things of that sort, what would you do?—If there was only a small part of the letter objectionable I allow the deputy-governor to erase it; but if the whole letter had an immoral tendency, or spoke of any subject not connected with the prison, or political affairs, the letter would be suppressed, and I would send for the prisoner and tell him that it was against the rules; and if he was a good man I would allow him to write another.

669. If a letter comes to the prison having in it expressions tending to encourage insubordination, what would you do?—I should return it to the writer with my reasons for having done so.

670. You have only one treason felony case let here?—Only one, my lord.

671. You found him here?—I found him here upon my coming here.

672. What class is he in?—He is still in the probation class, my lord.

673. What work then would that assign to him?—No particular work, my lord. I put him in probation in the place most suited to his strength and ability. He is placed in the stone cutting.

674. Supposing that a prisoner wrote a letter containing statements that you know to be unfounded as regarded his treatment in prison, what course would you take?—I would sometimes let them go on. As deputy-governor I have. As governor anything of the sort never came across me. I have sometimes let them go on, but as a rule I took them to the governor.

675. As a governor yourself what would you do in such a case?—I would send for the man and ask him did he wish his statement to go on, and if he persisted I would refer it to the director. Whenever I am in doubt I refer it to the director; I find that the safest course.

676. Have you in the case of any of the Fenian prisoners had occasion to consider this point, and ended by allowing the letter to go on?—No, my lord; because the governor of Portland prison himself always retained these letters. The governor kept these himself. They were always sent to his office instead of the deputy-governor's.

677. May we take it that the diet we have seen to-day is the ordinary diet of the prisoners?—On this day of the week.

678. On this day of the week?—Exactly, my lord.

679. (Mr. Brodribb.) With regard to the right of appeal to the Secretary of State, how often might the prisoner exercise it?—The rule is that a man may petition the Secretary of State not oftener than once in a year.

680. When you speak of petitions, do you speak of petitions on the ground that his sentence was unjust, or petitions on the ground of ill-treatment in prison?—Petitions on any subject.

681. Then if he had petitioned on one ground, say as to the justice of his sentence in the present month, would he be unable to petition on any other ground, as for instance, the ground of ill-treatment in prison, within a year?—That would rest with the visiting director, not with me.

682. Then any relaxation of the rule is in the power of the visiting director, and not in yours?—Not in mine.

683. As a matter of fact, is such a permission often granted within a year?—I think not; I think not, except in special cases, because most of the petitions that I have seen regarding the remission of their sentence were for some flaw or simply to wish for a re-investigation of their case. That is chiefly the ground on which they petition the Secretary of State.

684. Practically, then, the director is the highest authority as regards the prisoner's treatment in this respect?—Yes, the power of the governor is very limited.

685. Am I to infer that a petition on the prisoner's treatment rarely reaches the Secretary of State?—It very frequently reaches him.

686. You say the Secretary of State receives many petitions from prisoners with regard to their treatment in prison?—I should say not with regard to their treatment, sir.

687. Would it be possible for a letter to be stopped as a punishment for some prison offence?—Well, a man may forfeit the indulgence by losing his class, and a letter might be forfeited, if a man persisted, after getting the option of writing another letter, in writing in an improper style.

688. Should you feel justified in withholding a letter that might have been received, or in preventing a letter being forwarded, without reducing the prisoner to a lower class?—I certainly should not do so without reporting it to the director, and asking for his approval of what I had done.

689. If a letter written by a prisoner, or one intended for him, was stopped, would he know of it?—Oh, certainly; he would be sent for and told of it.

690. He would be told that a letter had arrived for him?—Yes, and of the improper nature of its contents, and his friends would know that he had not received it by my sending it back to them. In some prisons I believe the custom is that the letter should be retained in the store.

691. What has been the general conduct of Patrick Lennon since you have been here?—I may say fair.

692. Has he been under punishment since you have been here?—He has.

693. What was the nature of the punishment?—I gave him three days' bread and water, and sentenced him to 14 days' penal diet; he and two others with him of the same party.

694. For what offence was that?—For disobedience of orders, for combining and attempting to incite other prisoners to resist authority, in not taking off their jackets while at labour. I looked upon that as a combination between these three men to incite the others to resist authority, and therefore I sentenced him to three days' bread and water diet and 14 days' penal class diet.

695. Were these two distinct sentences, or was that a part of the same sentence?—Part of the same sentence.

696. How long ago was that?—I think it was six weeks ago, the 18th May.

697. Have you ever since you have been appointed governor received complaints from him of his treatment in prison?—I think that on one occasion I did. He asked to see me, and he said that he did not receive proper treatment from the medical officer.

698. The medical officer is, I think, now removed to another prison?—One of them is; but I think that at the time of this complaint the present officer was here.

699. (Chairman.) He is the assistant surgeon, I believe?—He is the assistant surgeon.

700. (Mr. Brodribb.) Was that the only complaint that you received from him?—I think that on another occasion he asked to be removed from his present work. I can tell you exactly the words in which he made his application. On the 17th May he asked for permission to write a petition.

701. That was the day before he was under punishment?—The day before he was brought up. It was granted. "Move me from my work—stone cutting," was his application. "I will see the doctor about it," was my reply. The doctor said it was the lightest work he could have, and the most suitable to his complaint.

702. (Dr. Lyons.) What was his complaint?—I think he complained of his chest. I have spoken to the doctor occasionally about him, and he said that there was no ground for his believing himself so ill as he alleges.

703. What is his work?—A stone cutter.

704. Under shelter?—Under shelter. He also put his name down to see me on the 1st April, but when the time came he said he did not wish it, he changed his mind.

705. (Mr. Brodick.) Do you enter in that book that you have in your hand, or in any other book, the complaints which come to you through the warders?—Not in this book. Any application the prisoner makes to me I write here and my reply.

706. What is that book called?—This is called the governor's application book.

707. Would the warder report any complaint to you in writing or verbally?—A prisoner's complaint?

708. Yes.—He would tell me to put it down.

709. And then the complaint would figure in the form of an application?—Yes. On the 21st March I see Patrick Lennon's name down to see me. He asked me if he could petition, and I told him he could not until after 12 months from the last occasion.

710. Was that to petition the Home Secretary?—Yes. He asked me, "When can I petition again?" and I said about June next.

711. What is the rule about receiving visits?—It is according to the man's class and conduct.

712. Can you state what the rule is with respect to receiving visits?—According to the rules and according to class. (Hands in a copy of the rules.)

713. Is there any rule with respect to appeal to the Secretary of State, except what may appear in those which you hold in your hand?—No, sir.

714. There is nothing about it in them. Then by what authority is the right of a prisoner to petition the Secretary of State restricted to once a year?—I could not tell you, sir. These are the orders that prevail or obtain in the service, that 12 months shall elapse between the petitions.

715. Do you suppose that there is no record of that rule; that it is part of the unwritten law of convict prisons?—Well, I would not take it upon myself to say. I should say that the directors had authority for it; that there are grounds for it, and that they would not take upon themselves to act in that way unless they had some authority for doing so.

716. Then it is from the director you consider that you receive authority not to permit an appeal by a prisoner to the Home Secretary more than once a year?—Without his authority. He can do it if he likes. If a man is not satisfied with any saying that 12 months must elapse from the time of the last petition before he can petition again he would say, "I wish to see the director," and then I would put his name down to see the director, and if the director likes he can grant it.

717. Have you ever received from Lennon complaints of his being treated with exceptional severity as a treason-felony convict?—No, sir; he made a general remark to me the other day when he was charged with this offence that I told you of, disobedience to orders and combining with others to disobey authority. I let him off 10 days of the punishment, as the cells are not sufficiently numerous for the number of men who are committed to them, and therefore I sometimes go round, and if I see three or four men whose sentences I can reasonably remit a portion of I do so. I remitted Lennon 10 days' penal diet. He had undergone three days bread and water, and four days penal diet, but the penal diet is a secondary punishment. I generally put them under it to keep them out of temptation. But in this case of Lennon and the other two, with a fourth man, I let them off the 10 days of penal diet, telling them that I hoped they would conduct themselves better; and then Lennon said to me, "Well, sir, I think this confinement in convict prison is killing me." I said, Major Bickel, "I am sorry for it."

718. He did not allude to the fact of his being a treason-felony convict?—No, never.

719. During your experience at Portland did you receive complaints from prisoners on the ground that they were treated with unusual severity?—During the whole time that I was at Portland I never received such a complaint, because in my capacity of deputy governor I could not do so.

720. Such complaints were made to the governor?—They were made to the governor, but not to me.

721. (Mr. De Vera.) You say that the complaints from the treason-felony convicts did not come before you, but would come before the governor?—Yes, sir.

722. Is that exceptional on account of their being treason-felony convicts?—Oh no; all complaints would go to the governor.

723. Then there was no special rule as to the complaints in their case?—No.

724. (Mr. Brodick.) Then any complaints that were made to you were made to you as governor?—Yes.

725. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you say when or how you learned that each prisoner had a right to appeal to the Home Secretary once a year?—When I have been acting for Mr. Clifford as governor I have noted in the book what I have done during his absences and received information from persons about me, the chief warder and clerk, who told me that that was the governor's custom.

726. You gathered it more from general observation than from any instruction?—Yes, from my experience. At the same time I learned my duty from the governors under whom I have served, and I used to hear them decide such cases, and I gathered it from experience in that way.

727. Can you form any idea as to how a prisoner after coming to here learns that he has a right of appeal to the Secretary of State. Is he told that he has such a right of appeal?—No, sir; I do not think he would be.

728. He is not told that he has a right of appeal?—He is not; but I think that as a matter of fact they would know it.

729. You think that as a matter of fact they all know it?—Yes, they are well aware of it.

730. Is that power of appeal to the Secretary of State frequently employed by the prisoners?—Well, I should say that there are two a month in this prison.

731. Did I understand you to say awhile ago that the power of appeal could not be exercised until the permission of the director was first obtained as to its being forwarded?—If the petition was regarding the remission of sentence or anything of that sort I think the governor would grant it; but if it was regarding the convict service I should refer it to the director; but if it was simply for an inquiry into his case, the governor would let him petition.

732. It is obvious that there are two kinds of appeal—one for reversal of the sentence of imprisonment, and the other respecting a grievance under the prison rules or prison management. Am I to understand that the director has a power of veto against sending forward that appeal?—I do not think he would see it. I think that he would see it; first of all it would be sent to him to see before it was sent out.

733. Have you known an instance in which a director vetoed such an appeal?—Never.

734. Have you known an instance in which an appeal was made by petition to the Home Secretary in regard to grievances alleged to have taken place within the prison, and in which such grievances were on consideration found to be substantiated and in which they were remedied as regards the prisoner?—No, I never heard of such a thing.

735. You have never heard of such a result?—Never.

Major Hoyle.

10 June 1876.

756. Then what is the result of all those applications to the Home Secretary, of which you say there is an average of two a month?—As a general rule they come back with the answer "No grounds."

757. (Chairman.) In giving that answer are you under the impression that in the majority of cases the grounds on which the appeals have been made were without any foundation?—Exactly so, my lord.

758. (Dr. Lysons.) Do you believe that those appeals were fully inquired into?—I believe so. I have no reason at all to think otherwise.

759. But you do not as a matter of fact know of any single instance in which an alleged grievance, the subject of a petition, was an appeal notified or reversed?—I have no recollection of any such thing.

760. (Chairman.) You speak only of your own experience?—My own experience.

761. And to what prisons does that experience extend?—To Portland and to this.

762. (Dr. Lysons.) In what form is the reply sent that there are no grounds for the granting of the prayer of the petition?—It is a printed form.

763. What means does the Home Secretary employ to ascertain whether those alleged grievances are well founded or not?—I could not take upon myself to say.

764. Is there any authorised inquiry on the spot directed by the Home Secretary?—Not that I am aware of, sir; and there could not be without my knowledge.

765. Did any such investigation on the spot ever take place to your knowledge?—Yes, in Portland, on the subject of the Fenians.

766. In that case only?—In that case only.

767. I find that there is but one surgeon or assistant surgeon here at present. Is that the case?—It is so at present, sir.

768. How long has it been so?—I can give you the exact date if you like.

769. If you please?—Since the 12th April, sir.

770. The medical staff here consists, what, full of two, I believe?—Yes, of a medical officer and an assistant surgeon.

771. What is the number of prisoners that are actually here at present?—864, I think, to-day.

772. Do you think that the duties in this prison, which were intended for two, can be fully performed by one medical officer?—As a temporary measure, I think they can. It is very hard work for one man to do it, but I can confidently say that I think it is done by the gentleman who is here.

773. (Chairman.) What is the name of the assistant medical officer?—Dr. Rouse, my lord.

774. (Dr. Lysons.) Is it any part of the convict work here for convicts to carry slabs of stone upon their backs?—No, sir; I should say not, unless they are very small. I never saw a convict doing such a thing here.

775. If such a thing were done by direction of the warden in charge of a gang, would you think it a breach of the discipline of the prison on the part of the warden who had so directed its being done?—Certainly, sir.

776. What is the form of yoke that is employed to attach the men in parties to a cart?—It consists of a broad band, four inches wide. It is a flat, broad strap, which is placed over the shoulder and around here. (Hence makes a gesture pointing out the armpit.)

777. (Dr. Greenham.) Is it ever applied round the neck?—Never, sir.

778. (Dr. Lysons.) Could it slip, and press on a man's neck?—No, sir; it is carried as a sash over the shoulder and under the arm.

779. Do you think that a convict working here on full labour performs a hard day's work?—No, sir.

780. You do not think a full day's work at hard labour here a hard day's work?—No, sir; I should not call it a hard day's work.

781. As compared with the work of an ordinary agricultural labourer in this neighbourhood, would you consider it as hard, or harder?—Not so hard.

782. You would consider it not so hard?—Not so hard.

783. Is it as hard as that of soldiers on "fatigue duty"?—It is about the same.

784. Is it as hard as "shot and shell duty"?—No, sir; it is not so hard as shot and shell duty. No convict undergoes anything like that here.

785. (Mr. Broadrick.) May I take it that no convict undergoes anything like shot and shell duty in this prison?—Certainly not, sir.

786. (Dr. Lysons.) What protection is there that a warden shall not abuse the privilege which he has of carrying a staff?—There is a principal warden in charge of every district. Sometimes, when a district is large, there are two, the deputy governor and the chief warden constantly visit, and if the officers did use a staff, some of them would hear or know of it.

787. Did you ever hear of an officer employing his staff in beating a prisoner or in forcing him to work?—No; but I have known it to be used in self-defence in Portland, where officers have been cut down with shevels and pickaxes.

788. If an officer struck a man with a staff, he might allege that he had done it in self-defence, although it was in no way necessary that he should use it?—He might; but unless he had a witness to bear him out he would get the worst of it.

789. If a prisoner charged a warden with having struck him with his staff, how would the presumption be in case the warden denied it; would it be in favour of the prisoner or of the warden?—I think it would be in favour of the prisoner.

790. If such a charge were made to you as governor, would you investigate it most fully?—Certainly, sir; and I should also report it.

791. What would be done to a warden who was found to have struck a man with his staff?—I should think that he would be dismissed the service, unless he did it in self-defence, which is the only ground on which he could do it.

792. What protection is there against the wardens urging the men to work by using coarse, violent, and abusive language?—I think that if the principal warden heard it he would report it. It would be his duty certainly to do so.

793. Have any complaints of the use of such language been made to you or through you?—No, sir.

794. At any time?—No; I do not recollect an instance in which a prisoner made any complaint to that effect. They sometimes said "the officer spoke improperly and urged me on to reply." I have known cases of that kind to occur, but such instances were chiefly from badly-conducted men I find.

795. Is the shoes ration given here still?—Yes, except in winter, when on the medical officer's request I issued peck instead.

796. To the whole body?—Yes, to the whole body.

797. I observe that compressed vegetable is used as a ration. Why are not fresh vegetables given?—They are only used when fresh vegetables are not to be procured in sufficiently large quantities. Only in those cases.

798. (Mr. De Vere.) Do I understand you rightly to say that a prisoner has not an absolute right of appeal to the Secretary of State without permission or intervention on the part of the governor or director?—He must be permitted by either one or the other, sir.

799. Then he has not an absolute right of appeal without the intervention of the governor or director?—Certainly, I should say not, sir. He could not do it. He could not forward an appeal to the Secretary of State without the permission of either the governor or director.

800. In any case in which an appeal to the Secretary of State goes to the governor or director, it is competent to the governor or director to veto its transmission?—I do not think it is. Certainly not with the governor. I do not know the power of the director.

781. Is the governor asked in every case to forward the petition to the director?—Certainly, sir. If it was not all a doubtful thing I should forward it to the director. I could not take upon myself to stop it.

782. Can you say whether it is competent to the director to prevent the further transmission of such a document?—I should say not, sir. They might send an explanation with it if they thought fit; but they certainly could not stop it, in my opinion.

783. I thought I understood you to say, in answer to Dr. Lyons, that the governor had a right to veto the transmission of a petition to the Secretary of State?—No, sir. I should not send it until the 12 months had expired. I should stick to the order about 12 months being allowed to expire between every two petitions.

784. Then there is a limit of 12 months within which the prisoner has no absolute, indefeasible right to appeal to the Secretary of State?—The director can let it go on.

785. Can the director stop it?—Well, I really cannot tell you what the power of a director is. I could not take upon myself to say. I do not know what their powers are.

786. Is the rule which limits within 12 months the exercise of the power of petitioning the Secretary of State the same at Dartmoor as at Portland?—Yes, sir.

787. When a petition has been forwarded to the Home Secretary, is there any reference made to the governor, either from the Secretary of State or the director, before the reply is sent to the petitioner?—Not that I remember, sir. A reference from the Home Secretary to the governor?

788. Yes, or from the director to the governor on the subject, before a reply has been sent to the petitioner?—Not that I am aware of.

789. (Chairman.) Then you can only speak from your own experience?—Exactly, my lord.

790. (Mr. De Foe.) Can you state what investigation, if any, as to the merits of the petition takes place?—I could not state.

791. Is it not within your power as governor to see whether any investigation takes place within the prison on the merits of the petition?—None takes place in the prison, sir.

792. Did I understand you to say that no direct communication passes from the prisoner to the governor, but that it must go through the warden?—No, sir; it must come through the chief warden to the deputy-governor, and then on to myself.

793. Supposing a convict has a complaint to make and wishes to make it to the governor, does he make it verbally to the governor himself or through the warden?—Verbally himself to the governor.

794. He has to apply to the warden for permission to put down his name to speak to the governor?—Yes, sir; and he goes to the principal warden in charge of the hall, who keeps the book for that purpose.

795. Is it in the power of the principal warden to refuse receiving such a complaint?—It is against the rules, sir, and there is a very heavy penalty if he did so.

796. How does the prisoner ascertain whether the warden has set down his name or not?—He will know it because he comes up the next day to the governor. I see them every day. I see them at a certain time every day in my own office for the purpose of receiving complaints from the prisoners.

797. When you receive a complaint from a prisoner do you investigate the case and give your reply at once?—If it is a complaint against an officer I tell the prisoner to put it down in writing that I may investigate it fully by leaving the officer up. Then I enter on the case, investigate it, and see if there is any truth in it.

798. You would investigate the case in the presence of the officer?—I should make the prisoner put it in writing; that is a standing rule. I would give him writing materials to write down all he had got to say, and I would then investigate the case by every means in my power.

799. Do you examine the bystanders?—Yes, sir; and sometimes even I employ a subordinate to see other prisoners who were along, and who would have heard it if there was any truth in it; and I arrive that way at the truth generally.

800. Then you do not take the evidence of the prisoners themselves?—I obtain as a rule from taking prisoners' evidence, but I have done so if I have known the prisoner to be a good man that I could rely on.

801. When a warden lodges a complaint before you against a prisoner what course do you pursue?—I take the evidence in the hearing of the prisoner.

802. Do you in such a case as that examine the bystanders and the sub-officers?—If the prisoner appears to say either officer to bear out his statement I always send for that officer.

803. And if he appeals to a fellow convict, what do you do; do you send for him?—As a rule not, sir; that is objectionable, I think.

804. When you punished Patrick Lennon on the 18th May for combining with others, did you give the same punishment to the others that you gave him?—The same offence and therefore the same punishment, sir. I made no distinction.

805. What are the hours of indoor work for men working in their cells?—They do not work in their cells, sir; their cells are not adapted for that; they only sleep and eat in their cells.

806. But there is a system of indoor work?—There is nothing. They have a large room for that purpose.

807. What are their hours of work?—They are allowed more exercise than the others; those at sedentary occupations, as shoemaking and tailoring.

808. What exercise are they allowed?—They are allowed to walk around the yards 20 minutes before and after labour, I think.

809. Twenty minutes, twice a day?—I think four times a day, sir. However that was the custom before I came. I think it is before and after work.

810. Perhaps you could ascertain that?—Certainly, sir. In the morning, before going to labour, three-quarters of an hour, and half an hour after labour in the afternoon—not four times, but divided into two. To the tailors and shoemakers these are the hours for exercise that they have beyond the other men, on account of their occupation being sedentary. The hours of labour are equal to $7\frac{1}{2}$ hours of actual work.

811. Has any change been made in those hours of recreation in your time?—Yes; I made a slight change on coming here; that is so much taken from their hours of labour. The other men are at labour while those men are at exercise.

812. Do I understand you to say that that is the entire amount of exercise that those men get in the day?—On work days, sir.

813. You say that a change with respect to the hours of exercise has been made since you came here?—Yes; I increased it a little.

814. Can you say what it was before that change?—I think I gave them 5 or 10 minutes more.

815. Had any complaint reached you of this sedentary work being injurious to their health?—No, I have known instances of a prisoner saying he wanted to get out of the shoemaker's shop. I have always referred to the doctor, and if he would not recommend it I have not needed to the request, because of course we cannot have men choose their labour. I want a certain number of boots made, and must have it done.

816. Out-door labour is called full labour?—So is this, sir, full labour.

817. Have you had applications of change from indoor work to agricultural labour?—Yes, and from agricultural labour to the indoor work.

818. Has the medical officer pointed out to you any cases in which he thought that the indoor labour deteriorated the health of the prisoners?—Not to me, sir.

819. Can you tell us the position in life and salaries of a warder? what class does he generally come from?—I can tell you the salaries of the different grades, and I should say as a rule most of them have been non-commissioned officers. I must also say that they are selected men. They are never taken into the service without having very strong testimonials as to character.

820. Are they appointed on the recommendation of the governor?—Well, not always, sir. They are required by the directors to appear before the governor that he may see their fitness by appearance, but their testimonials and everything else go to Parliament Street.

821. Can you state their salaries?—Assistant-warder, 51*l.* a year; warder, 54*l.*; principal warder, 68*l.*, besides their rations and lodging.

822. Who makes the appointment?—The Home Secretary, sir.

823. Have you the power of dismissal as governor?—No.

824. Who dismisses?—The directors recommended to the Home Secretary.

825. In the case of an officer misconducting himself you would report it to the directors?—Yes, and they would take steps to have him dismissed.

826. (Chairman.) Have you the power of suspension?—Yes, sir.

827. (Mr. De Vere.) For what period can you suspend?—Any length of time; I can suspend until I get authority from higher power to release him.

828. (Dr. Lynam.) Would his pay be stopped during that time?—His pay would be stopped.

829. (Dr. Greenhow.) Have the men who are at work outside any time for exercise within the walls?—No, sir.

830. You said that the prisoners working in the tailors' and shoemakers' shops had an hour and a quarter beyond the other men for exercise. Have the other men no time for exercise?—No, sir; but they have plenty of exercise going to and from their labour.

831. Then I understand that three quarters of an hour in the morning and half an hour in the afternoon is the time that the men at indoor work have for exercise?—That is right, sir.

832. You stated that you have increased the time by some minutes in the day?—Yes, sir.

833. Is there any record of that?—No, sir; I did it on my own authority. I thought that there was a regular amount of exercise required, but that they did not get exactly what they were allowed. The prisoners thought they were allowed an hour and a quarter. I thought they did not get so much on account of time being lost in falling in on parade, and therefore I gave an extra five or 10 minutes, which admitted of their having the full amount.

834. Then in point of fact you did not increase the time except by taking care that they got the full amount?—Exactly, sir. One of the prisoners told me that they did not get the full amount, and I took means of rectifying it.

The witness withdrew.

P. Lenson.

PATRICK LENNON, prisoner, examined.

835. (Chairman.) It is my duty to tell you the first instance, although you are probably aware of the fact already, that the gentlemen sitting around this table are a body of Commissioners appointed by the Government to inquire as to whether there has been on the part of these persons convicted for treason-felony any fair or just ground of complaint, and we are here to receive from you any statement, which you will make with full freedom. I believe that you have had an opportunity of using pen and paper to put down any statement you desire to make; is that so?—Yes, sir.

835. You told us, I think, that Lennon is in the probation class?—Yes.

836. How long does he remain in that class?—Until he has earned a certain number of marks to make up those he has forfeited.

837. And he has not made them up yet?—He has not.

838. With regard to petitioning the Secretary of State, how is it made known to the prisoner that he can do so once a year?—I really could not tell you. I suppose they hear it from each other.

839. How do you know that they have that privilege?—Simply from my experience in Portland.

840. Is there any record of their having that privilege?—Not that I have ever seen.

841. Is there any standing order which gives them that privilege?—I think there is something in that book sufficient to show that such a privilege exists, because reference is made to it that they shall write the petition themselves.

842. (Dr. Lynam.) But what we want to ascertain is how the prisoners become aware of the fact that they may petition the Secretary of State?—I do not think there is anything in the rules regarding it.

843. (Dr. Greenhow.) I see here a book entitled on the back "Interview with prisoners' book." Do you enter in this book a record of every interview that you have with the prisoners who come before you; every case in which there is an application made to you?—Yes.

844. I see in one place a remark in which you said simply "declined?"—That is, the prisoner declines and changes his mind.

845. Could you favour us with a return of all the entries in this book that have reference to Patrick Lennon, the dates on which he applied to you, the reason why he applied to you, and your decision in each case?—Yes, sir; they are all marked there.

846. Have you the old books of this prison?—Yes, sir.

847. Could you favour us with the like information with regard to Mulcahy?—I have them all ready for you.

848. (Chairman.) You spoke of the amount of time allowed for exercise to a certain class of indoor labourers, namely, the shoemakers and the tailors. There are other persons employed indoors; for instance, the stone cutters, and I dare say some other branches also. What amount of exercise are they allowed?—They do not come under the head of the sedentary men, because they walk about and stand on their feet all day.

849. Then there is no special time for exercise for them?—No, sir.

850. Nor for any class except the tailors and shoemakers?—No, sir.

851. Do you make any men in this prison?—No; one man makes a peculiar kind of rug from scraps of cloth.

852. (Mr. De Vere.) When Lennon asked you for a change of employment, did he specify the employment that he wished to be transferred to?—No, sir. On one occasion I find that he asked to be removed out in the works; on the other occasions he asked for the sake of change, I think, more than anything else.

853. We hope that you have had full leisure and time to do so. It is my duty further to tell you that you are at perfect freedom to tell anything to us, that whatever you state here, will not in any way whatsoever prejudice your position in reference to the future. You have full freedom to make any statement you please to us as regards your treatment since you have been convicted. You will confine yourself to what has been your position and treatment since the period of your conviction. (The prisoner handed in the following document, which was read by the Secretary.)

* Reg. 8,677. Patrick Lennon.

* Sir. * Is Millbank I was started into disease of the right lung. When I was getting bad I complained to the doctor several times but would not listen to me or give me a spittoon. A principal officer the name of Cooper told me to put my name down for the Medical officer. I did so & was ordered a spittoon 3 days after I got medicine. When I was inspected by Doctor Grover he found my right lung was bad he changed my food the same day reduced my task & took me of the pump. When I came here I was put to hard labour, stone breaking & irons. I was told by the officer in charge of the gang—Mr Holmes—to wheel a Barrow of gravel that 2 men was trying to move. I told him it was too heavy for me my right lung was bad he then spoke to me in a manner that a man would not speak to a dog I then told him I would not do it the next morning I was put in the cells the doctor came and asked me if there was anything the matter with me I told him my lungs was bad he examined me without any instruments & told me it was nothing after I came out of the cells I complained to him again told him my right side was very sore he told me that was nothing new. I then seen the medical officer he would not listen to me I went to the Governor he told me he would speak to the doctor soon after I was by the doctor reported for insolence which was a lie I have complained several times since about my health & the work both to the governor, doctor & medical officer but the would not do anything for me last winter there was a discharge of bloody, corrupted matter from my head. I complained to the doctor for several days. He would not listen to me. I then went to hospital myself was asked what was the matter with me I said my head was bad I wanted an admittance I got one the next morning I got a dose of opening medicine I got low diet for 3 days & no more medicine a chilblain will not be cured here I was laid with them last winter and the winter before I got treatment to rub to them, but I might as well rub them with water the doctor here could not cure them or any thing else unless a hile. I was admitted into hospital with one & received good treatment for 6 weeks I was removed from the work twice to work that was every bit as bad as what I am at, the first time I was left 2 days from it the second time 2 weeks I complained to the present governor about the work I told him it was too hard for any man that was getting murthered as I was he told me to see the doctor I told him I did & he would not remove me he told me he would speak to the doctor for me the next day I was reported & treated to have my food stopped if I did not work harder I am compelled to take of my jacket in cold weather if I complain I am told to work hard & warm myself between it & the food it is killing me Sometimes I am not able to stir with my right side, & across the kidneys does be so sore my nerves is very bad & hollows my left lung is bad now I feel a soreness in the left side these last six months I am about 2 stone less now than when I was convicted my proper weight without clothes is 136 pounds. I received pretty good treatment from Doctor Grover in Millbank he was a christian doctor if I had remained there my health would have been restored now I am bad for the remainder of my life I am not the only one here that has been destroyed I will not be allowed to tell my friends the state of my health or what was done to restore me I am also compelled to walk with a chief if I am walking with a man that is here on a charge similar to my own we will be separated & compelled to listen to all sort of crime & filthy language I was had enough before I came here but I have heard crimes here that it would be impossible for me to hear outside instead of this being a Reformatory it is a college for the instruction of crime I am also compelled to hear in winter with men that have every disease as a general rule the officers are civil, but I am spoke to by some of them like a dog Mr Standley or Stanley is one of them there ought to be humanity enough to care or kill if it was a dog that was going into consumption there ought to be christianity enough to cure him.

* I remain your humble servant
* PATRICK LENNON.

855. Now, Lennon, those allegations shall be carefully inquired into. I have to ask you in the first instance whether you wish to add anything to this statement?—In case the proof is required, the only way I have to prove these things is by pointing out the other men that is had and got no treatment to prove that I am bad myself.

856. You have no objection to be examined?—No, sir, I would like to be examined and told what is the matter with me. My right side I said was sore, but he said it was nothing.

857. Are you now employed in stone cutting?—I am stone cutting, sir, working on hard granite.

858. Do you sit in doing so?—Standing all the day.

859. Under cover?—We are under cover, sir.

860. What number of hours a day do you work?—I think from seven in the morning to twenty-five minutes to six in the evening.

861. But there is an interval for dinner?—An hour and a quarter for dinner.

862. You come away at half-past 11 o'clock?—A quarter to 12 we leave off.

863. And at what hour do you begin again?—At one o'clock, sir.

864. And how long then do you work?—To twenty-five minutes to six, sir.

865. You begin at seven in the morning?—Yes, sir.

866. That is in summer?—In summer.

867. When did you come here?—I came here, sir, the last week after Christmas; last Christmas twelve months.

868. The 30th December, 1868.—Yes, sir.

869. You say that you were told by the officer in charge of the gang—Mr. Holmes—to wheel a barrow of gravel that two men were trying to move?—There are six marked boxes, seven marked boxes, and eight marked boxes; this was an eight marked box. I was only after coming in here at the time. Two men, one at the handles and one at the end, were trying to pull it out, and could not. It frightened me to look at it. He told me to do it. Several were going round the shed trying to do it but couldn't. He told me to do it. I told him my lungs were bad, and I couldn't.

870. Did he tell you to move it alone?—Not alone, sir, but with another man.

871. What did he say to you?—He spoke in a most contemptuous manner.

872. Can you tell us the words?—I can't exactly say the words now, but he said something about when an officer spoke to me. I can't exactly say the words now. Some of the men that were in the gang were there at the time.

873. And you then told him that you would not do it?—I did, sir.

874. Next morning you say you were put into the cell?—I was reported, sir, and I got two days bread and water, and accused of using threatening language in the cells and got three days more.

875. When was that?—I was here only one or two days at the time. I don't exactly know the date of it.

876. Are you quite sure that it was within a day or two of your coming here?—I was only here a couple of days, because my hands were blistered after the work that I was at first. You can easily tell by the reports. The first report was very soon after I came here.

877. Did you make any complaints as anybody except to Mr. Holmes on that occasion?—No sir; I never made a complaint of it.

878. Did anybody speak to you between the time of

P. Lennon.
14 June 1869.

P. Leman.
10 June 1870.

your complaining to Mr. Holmes and your being put in the cell?—No, sir.

879. The doctor came to you the same day that you were put in?—Yes, he comes round every morning, sir.

880. You told him that your lungs were bad you say?—Yes, sir.

881. You say that he examined you without a stethoscope?—He put his handkerchief to my breast.

882. (Dr. Greenham.) Did he open your coat?—He opened my coat and pulled up my shirt.

883. (Chairman.) After you came out of the cell, you say that you complained to him again?—I did, sir. I have been complaining ever since.

884. How long was that before you went into hospital?—I only went into the hospital last summer; that was the first time I went into the hospital.

885. Then there were perhaps six months elapsed before you went into hospital?—I was more than six months here at the time.

886. When did the discharge from your head come?—Last fall; I was spitting blood at the time.

887. Do you mean to say that you were spitting blood from the mouth?—Yes, sir, I was.

888. What do you mean by a discharge from the head?—Nearly everything used to come out from my handkerchief and used to stick in my throat, and I used to have spots also.

889. You also allege, as it appears in fact from other sources, that you had haem frequently?—Yes, sir.

890. And that you have been treated for them?—I got good treatment for them, sir.

891. You have had them several times I believe?—I had, sir.

892. You say that on one occasion you were reported and threatened to have your food stopped if you did not work harder, were you then at stone cutting?—That is only a couple of months ago, sir. The stone-shed was very cold. My blood is so weak, I do be full of chills. We were told to take off our jackets. The day was very cold. I didn't take it off when the officer told me twice, so he called on the principal. The principal ordered them to take them off; so the two did and I didn't take it off before. I took off mine then and I was reported the next morning.

893. Did anybody else refuse to take off their coats?—Two more did.

894. Who gave the order when you obeyed?—The principal officer, sir. The principal officer reported me. It was the other man that told me a couple of times to do it. I didn't deny it when I was brought up. The food is better now than ever it was, since this present governor came.

895. (Dr. Lyons.) In what respect is it better?—We used to get soup twice a week, thickened with gruel; now it is thickened with meat.

896. (Chairman.) When did it begin to improve?—Since this present governor came here. And the potatoes we used to get at dinner used to be bad; now we don't get any bad ones. They used to be rotten. The food is better looked after now than ever it was before.

897. You say that you are compelled to walk with a chain and to hear every kind of filthy language. Are you always associated with the same person?—Yes, sir.

898. You are not fastened?—We walk two by two.

899. Is a man allowed to speak while working?—That is the rules. That is the only time they can speak.

900. How far have you to walk?—We walk around the exercise ground, around the ring.

901. And then you can speak?—Yes, sir.

902. You say that the officers, generally, are civil?—Yes, as a general rule they are.

903. You name Mr. Stanley, who you say is not so?—Yes, sir.

904. (Mr. Bradrick.) In what class are you at present?—In the probation class, sir.

905. How comes it that you are still in the probation class?—I have been reported so often, sir. I would have been out of it only for not taking off my jacket. I am put back now. It is 17 months since I wrote a letter.

906. Seventeen months since you wrote a letter?—Yes, sir; I only wrote one.

907. You only wrote one letter to your friends?—Yes, sir.

908. How are you so long without writing a letter?—He tells me "You must be six months in the next class before you can write; no matter how long you are in the probation class, you are not allowed."

909. Have you not received a letter during that time?—I received a letter, and I wrote a letter when I came in. When they come first they are allowed to write a letter—never after that; not if they were seven years in that class.

910. What were you reported for the first time?—The first time was about the sand. I got two days on bread and water for that; and then in the office I made use of threatening language, and I got three days on bread and water for that. Then after that I came out and was reported for the doctor, and after he put down my name for the doctor the doctor came round to my cell. Says I, "I didn't put my name down." Says he, "You did." Says I, "I did not." The next morning he didn't come up, but the governor, and it was needless for telling him in an insolent manner. I didn't get my food stopped for that, but I was put in the probation class.

911. (Chairman.) When was that?—The summer before last.

912. (Mr. Bradrick.) You spoke of using threatening language; what did you really say?—I was sick, and I am sick now. I told him, "I'll do no more work." Says I, "You may as well keep me in 15 years, makes it is to knock one of your brains out."

913. You lost your temper, I suppose?—I did, sir.

914. What was the last time that you were under punishment; was it last month?—Yes, sir; I got two days on bread and water.

915. How was that?—For not taking off my jacket.

916. Have you made complaints yourself to the governor, at any time?—I have made complaints to the governor about my health, and I went to this other governor to know would he allow my friends to purchase medicines for me; so he told me he hadn't the power, but he said he would speak to the doctor about me.

917. When you complain to the governor, what do you do?—We put down our names at night at the head of our board. The warden comes round and asks what we want and we tell him. The governor comes the next morning. You mention your name and number and what you want. When you give your name and number he asks what you want, and you tell him.

918. Does the governor treat you considerably and kindly on all occasions?—They do always, sir; especially this man; he is a very gentlemanly man.

919. Does he give a hearing to what you have to say?—He do, sir.

920. And have you any reason to complain of the way in which either the last governor or this governor has met your complaints?—No, sir; I have no reason to complain of them. I suppose they couldn't do any more. The other governor removed me from the works, not the doctor. It was the chief warden, I believe, that moved me back again, and then I complained to this present doctor; so he took down my name and told me, "I'll see about it." So next morning I was moved again. Then I was left a fortnight away from stone breaking and stone cutting. I am put back again.

921. Is stone breaking lighter work than stone cutting?—They say him it is lighter work, but I don't believe it. It is easier to pick out stones with a point and a sharp chisel, than to smash them with a flat hammer.

922. Have you ever asked for any change of employment?—I was asking for it this last 12 months.

923. It was at your own request, I believe, that you were put to stone breaking?—No, sir. I asked to be removed from the work.

924. You asked to be removed from Dartmoor altogether?—I did, sir, at one time.

925. What was it that you asked for?—I asked to be removed from the work; I didn't mention any particular work, only from stone cutting.

926. And you were put at stone breaking?—Yes, sir; to relieve the swinging of the hammer with the right side had with me.

927. You say that you also wished to be removed from this prison?—I did, sir.

928. When was that?—I think about last March 12 months, or April. I asked the governor. He asked me what was the matter with me and I told him I felt bad in my side. In Portland I believe the prisoners have easier work. They have softer stone to work at.

929. Was that why you asked to be removed?—That was the reason, and another thing, they are together. He told me he would do what he could. That evening I was sent for by the medical officer, Dr. Ashman, and he inspected me. He came to me again and asked me what was the matter with me and I told him. He said, "weren't you always bad," and I said, "not until I got bad in this prison."

930. Do you think that most men would like to be removed from here to Portland?—I do so, sir; but I don't know since the present governor came. They all speak well of the present governor. Chambers came from Portland.

931. When was he convicted?—He is about four years in prison, sir. He was tried by court martial in Dublin, as a Fenian. He was sent from Portland to Millbank besides six of them, and he refused to do some work there, and he left Millbank and came down here, and he applied to get back again, but he couldn't through.

932. When you say he was tried as a Fenian, do you mean to say that he was convicted of treason-felony?—He was convicted of treason-felony, sir.

933. As a Fenian?—As a Fenian; that is what he told me, sir.

934. Was he a soldier?—The time he was arrested; he was arrested with 25 more men in a public-house in Dublin. I was in America in the army at the time. He was arrested with other parties; John Devoy and more, and got 15 years. He was tried for treason-felony.

935. Was he tried by court martial?—This man was tried by court martial and they were tried by the civil power.

936. Have you made a complaint to the director?—No, sir.

937. You never came before a director at all?—No, sir.

938. Have you ever asked for leave to petition the Home Secretary?—I did, sir.

939. When was that?—I wrote one last month 12 months, and it was to be removed or put into separate confinement or something that way; so I got an answer that they didn't see any reasonable grounds for it.

940. (Chairsman.) From whom did that answer come?—From the Secretary of State, sir, some months ago.

941. (Mr. Brodick.) Did they allow you to petition?—Yes, sir; but I applied several times since for a petition.

942. When did your answer come?—A few months after. I don't recollect the date.

943. Was it several months after?—It was a couple of months, I believe.

944. What was the answer that was sent?—The answer was that they didn't see any reasonable grounds for it.

945. What considerations did you put forward?—I stated that I was made work with a thief, and the only thing to talk to about his own subject; and another thing about three officers throttling me.

946. Was that so?—It was so, but it was my own fault. I didn't complain about it. I had a bit of a nose and I wouldn't give it up.

947. You had a note?—I was writing it. The principal thing I wanted was to get away. I got the answer back that they didn't see any reasonable grounds. I was asking several times to petition, but wouldn't get leave till 12 months more, but last month I got leave.

948. How did you get the reply from the Home Secretary?—It was brought by the governor.

949. And he handed it to you?—No, he read it to me.

950. Then you never saw it?—I never saw it.

951. You do not know, I suppose, whether it was written or printed?—No. It was at the governor's office. There is an iron railing between us.

952. You wanted permission to petition the Home Secretary since?—I did, sir; I asked for an inquiry into my treatment in the same petition. I wanted to petition about my health to get freedom to do it, and I would not be allowed until I had 12 months from the other petition.

953. Was that what the governor told you?—Yes, 12 months I was told. Last Monday I was told I could. There is a story going on about an inspector coming this month and I was waiting to see him before I would send it.

954. Then you have not sent that petition?—Not this present one.

955. Did you ever put your name down to see a director?—I went once and asked him to see a director; that was about going away. He asked me what it was for and I told him, and then he said "The doctor is the man to see about it," and that he would settle it with the doctor.

956. Then you did not insist on seeing a director?—No, sir.

957. (Dr. Greenhow.) Were you in hospital at the time the director came to the prison?—I am not sure now. Yes, I think I had my name down once for the director. I was in the hospital too when he came round. I was in the hospital for five weeks.

958. (Mr. Brodick.) You say that the doctor treated you well for the boils?—He did, sir.

959. But that he would not treat you for anything else?—He gave me no treatment for anything else. I complained to the other when I was up there about losing weight.

960. How did you know that you had lost weight?—Every man was passing remarks on me, and my own feelings, and sometimes the officer of the gang would ask me what do I be trembling about.

961. Have you found your clothing warm enough?—Not in the winter, sir; I do be very cold.

962. Is it the same clothing you have in winter as in summer?—Yes, sir.

963. And is the clothing the same for those who work outside and those who work inside?—It is the same sir, summer and winter.

964. Do you mean a flannel shirt in summer and winter?—Yes, sir.

965. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you find the bed clothing warm enough?—I do, sir.

966. Is that an hospital shirt you have on now?—They are all the same.

967. (Chairsman.) Do you wear drawers under the trousers?—Yes, sir.

968. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you drawers on now?—Yes, sir.

969. Flannel drawers?—Yes, sir.

970. Do you wear them all the year round?—Yes, sir.

971. Are the stockings worsted?—They are, sir.

P. Lynam,
16 June 1878.

972. (Mr. Brodriek.) How have you been treated by the wardens generally?—They are very civil, sir, except one or two. That man I mentioned, Stanley, a countryman of my own, he was only in the shed a few minutes. He spoke to me like a dog. We got no exercise in my gang good or bad, and the other gang gets exercise. It follows, at dinner time we used to be allowed, as at the present time, to say a word, so he told me "Silence, sir," says he. "Won't I be allowed to have a word?" says I. So then he comes to me in the most contemptuous manner.

973. (Dr. Lynam.) What did he say to—He said "Do you know who you are speaking to, sir?" in the most contemptuous tone he could.

974. (Mr. Brodriek.) In what way did he say so?—He has a rough manner. He has the same habit of speaking to the other prisoners too.

975. Do you still wish to be removed?—I do, sir.

976. Where should you like to be removed to?—I don't care. I wouldn't like picking oakum; 'tis no work at all; but I can't sleep down.

977. Would you like to be removed to Wexing?—I would, sir.

978. (Dr. Lynam.) Had you good health before you came here?—No, sir; I got bad in Millbank.

979. Before you became a prisoner had you good health?—I had always good health, thank God.

980. What age are you?—Twenty-nine years, sir, the 17th last March.

981. Do you come of a healthy family?—Yes, sir, all healthy.

982. Where were you born?—In Dublin.

983. What was your father?—He was a weaver, I believe, by trade. I hardly recollect him because he went to America in '48.

984. What occupation were you brought up at?—A cork cutter, sir.

985. What have you been after that?—I have been soldiering this last ten years.

986. In what army?—In the English army and in the American army.

987. When were you in the American army?—During the war.

988. When were you in the English army?—Before that.

989. How long were you in Ireland before you were arrested?—About 12 months. I left New York on the 8th December '66 and landed in Dublin on the 6th January the following year '67, and then I was arrested in the March after that. I have been convicted then. I was in Dublin all the time except once or twice that I left it a month or so. I came to London twice.

990. What occupation were you at in Dublin?—Well, I was a Fencible at the time.

991. Were you not earning money at any trade or occupation?—No, sir.

992. Do you say that you generally enjoyed good health in America and Ireland?—I never was sick, sir, except what I brought on by my conduct. But in America I had fever. There were so many dead bodies lying about, it brought fever on a lot of us. That is all. The doctor had "typhoid malarial" down for it.

993. How did you know your weight?—I was weighed in Washington in the patent office.

994. (Chairman.) In what year?—In the year I left America.

995. (Dr. Lynam.) Why were you weighed?—We used all go in there to look at the patients, and there were scales there, and we used to weigh one another in the scales.

996. (Chairman.) Were you obliged to weigh?—No, sir.

997. (Dr. Lynam.) Have you any recollection of what your weight then was?—Yes, sir, I have, 156 pounds.

998. When were you weighed last?—I was weighed up in the hospital, and here in the prison. I was weighed with my clothes on.

999. (Chairman.) Were you weighed with your clothes on in America too?—No, sir, not when you go for a soldier.

1000. But when you were weighed with others, when you went in to look at the patients, you had your clothes on of course?—No, sir, we used to take them off. We had only light summer clothing, for it was very hot.

1001. You do not mean to say that you had no clothes on whatever?—No, the weather was warm and we took off the clothes.

1002. (Dr. Lynam.) Were you weighed naked?—We sometimes weighed naked.

1003. When you speak of 156 pounds, was that your weight naked?—My weight naked, sir, without any covering of any kind.

1004. Did you lose appetite since you came into prison?—Mr. Cooper the principal, in Millbank, told me I was gone to a shadow. When the spitting came on, I would get a spittum. I was told to spit in my cell, but the chief warden told me not spit in my pot.

1005. What did you say to the doctor that he would not listen to you?—I complained about the spitting.

1006. You went to the doctor and complained to him of spitting?—Yes, sir.

1007. Had you a cough at the time?—Never had a cough; not one now.

1008. You went to the doctor and consulted him for the spitting?—Yes, sir.

1009. Did he examine you?—No, sir. He asked me had I a cold, and I said "No."

1010—11.—Where was that?—In Millbank, sir.

1012.—Did he examine your chest?—No, sir, I asked him before I was a fortnight under Dr. Gover, "Would you sound my chest?" So he said "You don't want it." So a fortnight after when I was inspected by Dr. Gover, he changed my food, and I heard him then say my right side was bad.

1013. You heard Dr. Gover say that your right side was bad?—Yes, sir.

1014. What sort of stuff were you spitting up?—What I generally spit, it is more like starch; in the morning generally, one thickish lump.

1015. Did you spit a great deal in the day?—I should when I am working. I told the doctor that I thought it came from my head, and he said it was nonsense.

1016. Did the doctor not examine you at any time?—He never examined me.

1017. How often did you go to him?—After I was getting the medicines there about eight months. First I used to go twice a week, and afterwards about once every 12 days. That was in Millbank.

1018. And during that time, you state that you were not examined at all?—No, sir, except by Dr. Gover.

1019. Was your pulse examined?—No, sir.

1020. Was your tongue looked at?—No, sir.

1021. Was your chest inspected?—I was never examined at all, sir. Once when I put down my name, he came to my cell, and I told him I was told by the chief warden to ask him for a spittum. He asked, "Have you got a cough?" I said "No." He walked away.

1022. During that time you were getting medicine?—That was before I got medicine.

1023. When you were ordered medicines, were you examined?—No, sir. I brought the spittum to him, and he looked at it and gave me the medicine. That was the doctor that would not give me the medicine before.

1024. Was the medicine that you got pills or a bottle?—No, sir; I believe it was quinine. That was the only thing that ever did me good. I was taking it about three weeks and then it was changed to cod-liver oil. I was getting that all the time I was in Millbank until I came here.

1025. Were you able to take it without its sickening you?—Yes, sir.

1026. Did it interfere with your appetite?—No, sir.

P. Lazenby.
10 June 1870.

1027. You did not object to take it?—No, sir.
1028. When you came here what kind of labour were you put to?—Stone breaking. It is called hard labour here, but I don't think it hard.

1029. Have you to break a certain quantity in the day?—You have, sir; you must break it down to us also, and you must keep two men going that are breaking it finer. There are measures that they were measured with every night.

1030. What you had at that time to do was to break stones sufficient for two men to break smaller?—Yes, sir; it is the same now.

1031. If you did not do that amount of work what would happen to you?—I don't know, sir. The prisoners work very hard because they are afraid of their food. Any on full diet, their food to be changed to invalid diet.

1032. Did you not state in this paper which you have headed in that you were put on hard labour, stone breaking and invalid diet?—I was, sir, when I came here first.

1033. Do you state that you were on invalid diet when you were stone breaking?—I was, sir.

1034. You are positive of that?—I am, sir.

1035. How long did that occur?—I don't exactly know, sir; I think about a month. I applied to get any other work and I would get better food if I had the same of doing hard labour. The doctor asked me "Is it the food you want?" and I told him it was. So I was put then on the bage for a few hours, and at dinner time I was taken out and put in the shed.

1036. Then you worked in the bog only a short time?—Only from 9 o'clock till dinner time.

1037. In one day?—In one day.

1038. Have you been at stone cutting since?—At stone cutting since.

1039. What work are you occupied at now?—Stone cutting, sir.

1040. Do you mean stone dressing?—We have to make all these buildings with stones.

1041. What tools do you use?—Points and chisels and hammers.

1042. Is there much dust consequent in the work?—There is a good deal of dust flying about.

1043. Does it get into your mouth?—It does, sir.

1044. Does it cause you to spit?—I believe it is the cause of my spitting.

1045. Does it get into your eyes?—It does, sir; and we always keep pins to pick them out.

1046. That is you apply to others to pick it out of your eyes?—Yes, sir; that is allowed. We were served out with wire spectacles, but I could not see to work with them and would be going wrong.

1047. Could you if you like wear wire glass spectacles at the work?—Yes, sir; but you could not work with them.

1048. Is there any protection for the mouth at any time?—No, sir.

1049. You never saw any such thing?—Never, sir.

1050. Are you aware that other men complain of the effect of the dust?—Yes, sir.

1051. How does it affect you?—The only way is that of a Sunday I feel very little, but when I am working I am spitting. There is another man, that Chambers, he is getting the same way. There is another man that was removed out of it.

1052. Is there any measure of the amount of work that you are obliged to do?—Not since I went back to it; I am not measured now in quantity, at least if I am I don't do it. I make those chimney stones; but the other men, I believe, have a certain quantity to do. If they don't do 12 square feet they will be bullied and bullied, 12 square feet is the task, but I believe they do 16 or 18; if they don't they would get a belly-rugging.

1053. From whom?—From the warden in the cell.

1054. What does he say to them?—Threatening them.

1055. With what does he threaten them?—With putting them on invalid diet and having their food stopped.

1056. How often have you been on invalid diet since you came here?—Only since I came in first. I was never changed from full diet since I was on to it.

1057. How often have you been on punishment diet?—Five days when I was first here; three days about the bit of a note; two days another time, and two days the other day for having a bit of blacked in my self.

1058. What punishment did you get for the blacked?—One day's bread and water.

1059. Were you ever put into the dark cell?—No, sir.

1060. How many days since you came to this prison have you been on bread-and-water diet?—11 days.

1061. And how many days together at one time have you been kept on bread and water?—Two days, and then invalid diet, and then three days.

1062. You were once for three days on bread-and-water diet?—I was twice for three days, and the first time five days; but I had a day's invalid diet between the first two and the last three. They can't keep you more than three days together on it, and the fourth day you must get another diet.

1063. You state that you are compelled to bathe in water with diseased men?—So I am, sir.

1064. What do you mean?—We are all bound to go together, and we all get into the one bath, and one water supplies the whole bath; it is all communicated underneath.

1065. Is there not more than one bath?—There is a partition between us, but the partition don't come down to the ground.

1066. How do you know that these men were diseased?—Only by what they tell me themselves what was the matter with them. I saw a man in the hospital pulling sores off his breast, and I had to wash in the same basin with him.

1067. In the same basin with him?—Yes. I had to wash it when I seen him.

1068. That is a different thing from the statement that you had to bathe with them. What diseases did you see that you object to?—I never seen them.

1069. How do you know that they are diseased?—From what they tell me.

1070. Can you state positively that on any one occasion you bathed in the same bath with men who had any form of disease amongst them?—Well, 36 goes into the one bath.

1071. But do you know as a matter of fact that you bathed with men who were diseased?—They all have something the matter with them here. I don't know was there any sores.

1072. You stated that you bathed in the same water with diseased men?—They are diseased, because there is nobody here but has something the matter with them. There is no man in the prison except what comes down to the shoemakers, latterly, but they have something the matter with them.

1073. Is there anything the matter with their skin that would soil the water?—I don't know, sir.

1074. You object to bathe in the water because they are diseased?—I do, sir.

1075. I want to know how you know that they are diseased?—They tell me so themselves.

1076. Did they tell you that in the bath?—They tell me in the cells. There is but a little sheet iron between the cells. I have been in a dozen cells since I was here. Some of them commits auilance in the bath.

1077. Would not that be reported?—But when it couldn't be found out who done it, it couldn't be reported.

1078. Has that occurred often, to your knowledge?—It has occurred twice to my knowledge.

1079. Do you mean making water?—Not making water.

1080. Do you mean relieving their bowels in the bath?—Yes, sir.

1081. Has that occurred in the bath in which you were?—The one water supplies the whole lot.

P. Leman.
10 June 1873.

1062. But on the same occasion that you were in the bath has that occurred?—Yes, on the same occasion that I was in it.

1063. Have you observed any man with disease of the skin bathing in the water?—I can't see a man when he is bathing.

1064. Then you do not know that there were diseased men in the bath in which you bathed?—No, sir, but what they tell me.

1065. But you do know, as a matter of certainty, that they have committed substances of both kinds in the bath?—I don't know about that, either. I know about relieving their towels.

1066. You say that you got and sent away only one letter since you came here?—Yes, sir.

1067. Are you quite positive of that?—That is all, sir.

1068. Did you write any letter that was stopped?—When I came here I wrote a letter, and it was stopped because I stated in it that the doctor in Millbank said I was in consumption, and it was here said that there was nothing the matter with me, and I said Mackay and another had left Millbank; so that was stopped, and I had to write another instead of it.

1069. You positively received only one letter?—I received an answer to that, and that is the only letter I received.

1070. How has it occurred that you were only allowed to write one letter?—Because I was reported so often.

1071. Does that occur to others also?—There are men here, I believe, that never wrote. There is a man here in the shed and I don't believe he wrote these five years—a man of the name of Mission.

1072. Did you get three days' notice that this Commission was to come here?—On Monday morning the governor called me. He was going to look me in the cells; so, on account of my own wish, he left me out. This other way I was in for the day.

1073. But did you get three days' notice?—I did, sir, on Monday morning, at 7 o'clock.

1074. Did you get pens, ink, and paper, so enable you to write your statement?—I did, sir.

1075. Were you examined by a Commission at any former occasion?—No, sir.

1076. Did any of the officers ever attempt to strike you with a staff?—No, sir; because I would return it.

1077. But you are not aware that they ever did?—No, sir.

1078. Did you ever see any of them strike others?—I have seen them poking with the staff, so the chest.

1079. Is there anything that you wish to add to that letter that you have handed in?—There is another man here; I would like him to be examined.

1080. But, with regard to yourself, is there anything that you wish to add to this statement?—No, sir.

1081. Is there any further statement that you wish to make?—The only statement I wish to make is, I would like to get medical treatment. That is the only thing I want.

1082. What kind of medical treatment do you look for?—Proper medicines and proper work.

1083. What do you suppose is the matter with yourself?—I believe my lungs is bad; I believe now my left lung is bad.

1084. When you say a "bad," what do you apprehend?—That I am going into consumption; that if I am not now I will be.

1085. And do you think that if your illness were differently treated, that you could recover?—Yes, sir; I don't know about now; but I could when I came down here.

1086. Tell me the name of the doctor that you say would not examine you?—The doctor in Millbank; I don't know his name.

1087. What other doctor?—I don't know his name; he was a tall man; he was the only doctor there with Dr. Gover.

1088. You mentioned some other doctor also?—This present doctor here.

1089. What do you say about him?—He gave me no treatment. He never gave me treatment when I complained to him. I did annoy him some time lately.

1090. How did you annoy him?—Putting my name down every day. Sometimes he would give me a dose of Epsom salts. I got camphor and oil one time, and it done me good; so I kept asking him for it, and he gave it to me some time.

1091. You asked him for camphor and oil?—Yes, sir. I had got a few doses, and when he would come round I would say, "Camphor and oil, please;" and he would order it. But this last few weeks he asked me, "Aren't you better yet?" and I told him I was not, so he gave me cod-liver oil, a tea-spoonful of it every day at dinner time; so it was doing me no good, and I gave it up.

1092. Is there any kind of assistance that you think would enable you to put forward any complaint you have to make in a better way than you have done now?—I don't really care about making any complaint; I don't want to complain against anyone. The only thing I wish, is to be restored to health if possible.

1093. Would you wish to consult with any friends of yours with regard to putting your case forward in a better way than it is put here?—I have no friends to do it.

1094. (Mr. De Vere.) Were you examined by the medical officer before you left Millbank?—Yes, sir.

1095. How long before you left Millbank were you examined by the medical officers?—About six weeks; I was sounder then and that was the first time I was sounder.

1096. Did he state anything about your health then?—He didn't say anything. After I got the medicines I used to go for it, and I didn't complain; so when he sounded me for inspection, he asked me how I felt, and he sounded me, and I heard him tell the apothecary "His right lung is bad," so I was entitled to a visit then. I had a visit then from my aunt, so I told my aunt if she could get a gentleman in London, named Simpson, to come and know what was the matter with me, so he done, and she told me one day that the governor stated I showed symptoms of consumption.

1097. Did the doctor at Millbank examine you with an instrument; did he put an instrument to your chest?—Yes, sir, he put on a stethoscope.

1098. Did you complain to him of your right side?—No, sir, I only complained to him once, when I asked him for the stethoscope.

1099. You came from that place here?—I did, sir. The day he examined me he asked me did I get enough to eat, and I told him I did not, so the next morning I was on hospital diet. He asked me too was the work too heavy for me. I used to be cramped in the cell, so afterwards I wasn't able to do the quantity of work, and the task was reduced and I was ordered off to come here.

1100. And then you came to Dartmoor?—Yes, sir.

1101. When you came here were you put on invalid diet at once?—Yes, sir.

1102. Do you know why you were put on invalid diet?—As a general rule, I believe all prisoners are put on it that is not put out on the bags.

1103. Were you ever put into a dark cell?—No, sir.

1104. How is your clothing here as compared with the clothing in Millbank?—It is nearly the same, sir; the only difference is that we get boots here and didn't there.

1105. I see that you wear flannel drawers and a flannel shirt?—Yes, sir; the clothing would be too heavy to work in in summer and too cold in winter.

1106. Is the use of flannel at Millbank the same as it is here?—Yes, sir, the very same.

1107. Were you allowed the flannels in consequence of any particular application, or is it the usual dress of the prison?—It is the usual dress, sir; every man in the prison gets it.

P. LAMAR.
10 June 1870.

1128. You never made any special application for clothing in consequence of the state of your health?—No, sir; as we get a change of flannels every fortnight.

1129. What sort of place do you work in?—A shed; there is one side of it open.

1130. Do you know the north, south, east, and west?—Yes, sir.

1131. What point of the compass does it open to?—It is partly western; the western side is open.

1132. Is it open at the two ends?—No, sir; it is open at the side, on the north-west. It is the north-west side that is open.

1133. How many were working in the same shed with you?—I daresay there are 12 or 14 more, sir.

1134. You complain of being associated with a thief?—Yes, sir.

1135. How are you more associated with him than with anybody else in the same shed?—At exercise when Chambers and I would get together to have a chat we need to be separated, and I would be put with a known thief and he would be put to another. And the same way if we got alongside a man named Keating, that got five years, we would be separated also.

1136. Then your time of association is only the time of exercise?—The time of exercise, that is the only time we talk.

1137. At the time of exercise do you go two-and-two together?—Yes, sir, two-and-two together.

1138. You are allowed to converse together at that time?—We are allowed to converse together.

1139. You keep up some kind of conversation also through the partitions in the cells?—Sometimes they do; sometimes the man in the next cell will talk to you if you are inclined to talk to him. As a general rule they do be all talking to one another.

1140. Is there a thief in the next cell to you?—There is a thief on each side of me.

1141. Is the man who walks with you on the exercise ground the same man that is placed in the next cell to yours?—Sometimes we won't be separated.

1142. Are you always associated at your period of exercise with the same man?—Not always. They generally have companions. A good deal of them have used to know one another outside. Sometimes if you are walking with one, the man behind knew him, and they might be talking about some robbery, or something that way.

1143. Then your exercise companion is changed from time to time?—Yes, changed.

1144. Is he changed every time? have you to walk three or four times in succession with the same man, or have you a different companion each time?—That depends on how you fall in. You may have the same man, or a different man every Sunday.

1145. When you speak of being associated with a thief, it appears that there is an association with nobody at working time, and the association of which you complain is which takes place at exercise time?—Yes, sir.

1146. Do you mean to say that you are always associated at exercise time with some person that you call a thief?—I am always with a thief at exercise. I have never been with anything else, or else with a man that is here for some unnatural crime.

1147. Is your companion in exercise selected or chosen for you by any of the officers of the prison, or does he fall in by chance?—Now he does; but he used to be chosen for me when I would fall in with a man like Chambers or that. Then there would be a companion picked out for me.

1148. That is, when you fell in with a man that they did not wish you to be associated with they removed him and put another in his place?—Yes.

1149. But supposing that you had not associated with Chambers or any man that you selected, then would they leave it to chance, or would they select one for you?—They would leave it to chance then.

1150. You have never worked in the fields outside?—Only for a few hours.

1151. Can you tell what the prisoners working in the fields do, whenever it comes on to rain?—When I was out there there were sheltering on the ground, and when it rained we used all run under them, and the warden used to get behind us and we used to take it up and get behind it, and generally keep the side towards the wind.

1152. On one occasion you petitioned the Secretary of State. How did you know that you had the power to do that?—I was told it by Chambers.

1153. Were you ever told it by any officer of the prison?—Never.

1154. Have you ever had any difficulty in seeing the doctor when you wanted to see him?—Never.

1155. Are you a Roman Catholic?—I am, sir.

1156. Have you ever had any difficulty in seeing a priest?—No.

1157. Have you ever expressed a wish to see him?—We can see him any time we like. All we have to do is to put our ticket in the box, and we see him that night. He used to come round once a week.

1158. (Dr. Greenish.) You told one of the gentlemen that you were compelled to take off your jacket in cold weather?—So I am.

1159. What season of the year was that?—I was compelled to take it off in March last.

1160. You were reported once?—I was reported last month, and it was cold enough here then, colder than in March last.

1161. In May you were reported?—Yes, sir.

1162. You spoke about bathing in water used by other men who had diseases. Is it one large bath in which 30 men bathe at the same time?—It runs along the wall; there is like horse-boxes, and one man gets into each box, and the partitions don't go down to the ground.

1163. Then it is a bath in which there are a number of men bathing at the same time?—Yes, sir.

1164. How often have you written to your friends since you came here?—The first time I came here.

1165. You came here in December 1868, about 18 months ago; have you never written since?—I wrote about a fortnight after I came here and I have never wrote since.

1166. Did you apply for permission to write since?—I did, sir.

1167. And it has not been allowed?—It has not been allowed.

1168. Have you received any letters since you came here?—I received an answer to that letter.

1169. Why have you been prevented from writing since then?—On account of being reported. I was told that if I was here for seven years I may not be allowed.

1170. What were you reported for?—For using threatening language and insolence to the doctor, for not giving up that bit of a note, for a bit of bad being found in my cell, and the other day for not taking off my jacket.

1171. What was the insolence to the doctor for which you were reported?—In the morning if you want to see the doctor you put on the handle of your broom, and the officer takes down the names. So when my name was put down and I didn't put out the handle of my broom, so he came to me at dinner time and I told him I did not put down my name. He told me "You did." I said, "I didn't." So he ordered me to be reported for "contradiction." That is what I heard the man say; but it was different the next morning; it was "insolence" the next morning.

1172. You have found no fault with the food here on any occasion?—Well, the food isn't enough for me anyhow.

1173. Have you any fault to find with the quality of the food?—Not now.

1174. But had you at any time?—I never complained, because I didn't believe it to be any use to complain.

1175. You never complained of the bread?—I don't know good cheese from bad.

P. Lyons.
10 June 1870.

1176. Do you say that you have a split like scar in the morning?—I do, sir.

1177. Do you cough with it?—No, sir; it does heave it, the cough like loosens it, and then it does heave in my throat, may be for an hour, before I can get it out.

1178. Have you suffered from cough since you were in prison?—No, sir.

1179. Have you suffered from shortness of breath?—I couldn't draw my breath, sir.

1180. Why could you not draw your breath?—It used to catch me here in the side (points to the right side of the chest), and now sometimes it catches me here (points to the left side of the chest).

1181. What was the catch like?—Like if there was something tearing something like, sir. I felt here just as if I was shot right through the lung.

1182. Have you ever been examined by the doctor here in reference to your chest?—Oh yes, sir, I have; I asked him to sound me, and wasn't my lung bad, and I couldn't tell whether he told me or not.

1183. When was that?—That was the first time I was in hospital here. I was in the hospital two days.

1184. That was in August 1869; had you a cough then?—No, sir.

1185. Had you much of that spitting then?—I spit then more than I do now, sir.

1186. Then the doctor examined your chest?—He did, sir.

1187. He has not examined it since?—No, sir.

1188. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you ever complain to the medical officer of having to barge with these men?—No, sir, I complained in the position to the Secretary of State about it; 'twas no use.

1189. (Dr. Greenock.) Are you at all short of breath?—Only when my ribs do heave, sir.

1190. Are you kept in a cell on the ground floor, or upstairs?—The ground floor, sir.

1191. But you have been upstairs, I suppose?—Yes, sir.

1192. Did you ever feel your breath short when you were going upstairs to the cell?—No, sir.

1193. You never suffered from shortness of breath?—No, sir.

1194. (Chairman.) Can you tell me the date of the refusal to take off your jacket?—I can't tell the date, sir; the officer can give more information about that than I can, for he called him in to take charge of the gang; it was only for a few minutes. He has never been in the gang since.

1195. Can you tell me the date when Mr. Holmes obliged you to drag a barrow that was too heavy for you?—I can't tell; but the report will tell.

1196. It was, soon after you came here?—It was, sir.

1197. (Mr. Bradrick.) When you were reported for insubordination to the doctor, were you brought before the governor?—I was brought before the chief warder, and he read the charge, and he asked me, "Is that the way you speak?" So I told him it was as well as I could speak. So then says he, "Well, we must teach you," and he put me into a cell. So at dinner time I was brought before the governor and the charge was different then instead of being what it was read out in the morning; it was read out "My name is not down, and I know it is not down." I told the governor that I didn't give insolence; I denied the charge of insolence. That is the only time I denied anything. The officer said I spoke in a very disorderly manner. I didn't get any bread and water that day, but I got reduced to the probation class.

1198. Do I understand that you were put into a punishment cell?—When you are reported here and when you are brought before the chief warder, he can let you off or send you before the governor, and if he sends you before the governor he puts you in the cells.

1199. Is that cell different from those that you live in?—They are a great deal better than those we live in.

1200. You are kept there until the governor sees you?—Yes, sir.

1201. Were you ever punished by bread and water without having an opportunity of making some statement to any one?—Never.

1202. How long were you at Millbank?—About ten months.

1203. Were you in separate confinement all that time?—All the time.

1204. Was your treatment the last month that you were there just the same as during all the other nine months?—I was on different food. I had also work to do. I was at one of the pumps, and I used to get motion every day.

1205. But you were not in association during the last month?—I was in the cell by myself.

1206. You had no chance of talking to another man during the last month?—You couldn't talk to a man in Millbank, there is a thick stone wall between you.

1207. Have you been treated like other convicts here, or differently?—The only difference I see is the separation—that I would be separated from Chambers.

1208. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you ever had to carry slabs of stone on your back?—No, sir; we wheel them in barrows or trucks.

1209. Did you ever see it done?—I did, sir; but he did it voluntarily himself.

1210. No man was ever directed to carry slabs on his back?—No, sir, he was not; in my gang at least.

1211. You never were told to carry slabs on your back?—Never, sir.

1212. Have you worked in any of the gangs with a yoke around your shoulders?—No, sir. All last summer, when I was at work at stone cutting with that Chambers, there was this distinction, that they could go out and pick another stone, and they had the chance of picking the best stone, and it was the chief warder's orders that we were not to be left out of the stone shed, but somebody else was to bring in a stone for us.

1213. Were you ever yoked to one of these carts?—No, sir; I wouldn't be allowed to go out of the prison.

1214. Have you ever been sent to clean the privy?—I was, sir; and I was reported because I refused to wash the privy in the bucket I wash myself in.

1215. What privy do you speak of?—The privy for 40 men on the landing. The warder told me to wash it. I had no objection to wash it if I had a bucket. He told me to get the bucket that was in my cell. "Is it the bucket that I wash myself in?" said I. "Yes," said he. "I won't do that," said I. So he reported me to chief warder Henshaw, and I was brought before the governor, and the governor asked me would I wash it if I got another bucket, and I said I would, and then he let me off.

1216. Did you wash the privy afterwards?—I have often done it since.

1217. You were always supplied with a separate bucket for the purpose?—There is a hydrant in the privy, so there is no occasion for a bucket.

1218. Are you positive in stating that the warder directed you to take your own bucket?—He did, sir; and that was the grounds of my refusing to do it.

1219. You say that there has been a change in some of the diet recently?—Yes, sir; a great change.

1220. In what respect?—The soap some time ago was nothing but grease, which now it isn't, and it used to be thin, but now it is thick as can be, and it is thickened with meat.

1221. Was there no meat in it formerly?—Very little.

1222. Is that pudding used here?—It is, and it is better now than it was.

1223. Did you ever observe the meat to be rancid?—No, I was too hungry to notice such things.

1224. Have you heard it complained of by others?—I did, and I heard them complaining of the cheese too.

1225. Have you heard others complaining of the meat pudding being rancid?—I did, sir.

1226. But you have not yourself observed at any time that the meat pudding was rancid?—No, sir.

1227. Have you ever remarked that the soap had a bad smell?—No, sir.

1228. Or that the beef had an unpleasant odour of any kind?—In the hospital I did, sir.

1229. What did you observe about it?—It had a very bad smell and a bad taste. The men used to show it to the doctor.

1230. What kind of smell had it?—It was turned.

1231. Are you positive of that?—I am so, quite positive.

1232. When did that occur?—It occurred several times when I was in the hospital in this prison. I can name the men, too, that complained of it. I never complained of it, because I always ate it.

1233. Others did not eat it?—There was one man that didn't eat it one day, but I ate it for him though.

1234. You ate his portion as well as your own?—I did, sir.

1235. Although it had a bad smell?—I did.

1236. Why did you do that?—Because I was hungry.

1237. You were in hospital at the time?—I was, sir.

1238. And you ate the meat that had a bad smell?—I did, sir.

1239. The bad smell was not very much, was it?—The meat was turned; if it got a ball with charcoal it would take it away.

1240. What meat was it?—It was mutton, sir.

1241. And you never observed the meat to be rancid to your knowledge?—No, sir.

1242. Or that any of the food contained anything unpleasant, or that ought not to belong to it?—I got cockroaches in the peddling trough.

1243. Are you quite sure that you did at any time get cockroaches in the peddling?—Yes, sir; and I brought one to the stone shed with me and showed it to the warden and to all the prisoners.

1244. Could you not have complained at the time?—I could, but I never did.

1245. Did you ever complain of your diet?—Never.

1246. Did you ever try to have your diet weighed?—It is a thing I wouldn't like to do. I don't like to find fault, but I have seen men do it.

1247. When you were these days on bread and water, did you suffer much from hunger?—I did, and I always came out very sore in the chest too.

1248. Did you suffer much the first day?—I suffered from cold and hunger, and I wasn't allowed out of bed for the first two days; that was in January.

1249. Did you feel very hungry the first day?—I did, sir.

1250. Did you feel more hungry or less hungry the second day?—Not so hungry.

1251. How did you feel on the third day?—The way it affects me—the first day, in the evening I feel very hungry. I generally try to sleep as much as I can, to sleep the hunger away.

1252. Have you as much water to drink as you like?—As much water as I like. Always when I come out of the cells, my appetite do be closed.

1253. The first day you felt hungry?—Yes, and the second day. When I would feel hungry, I would walk about while the night comes of bread would last; then I would try to sleep it over.

1254. On the whole did you feel much hunger the second day?—Yes, sir; my stomach closed then.

1255. On the third day what way did you feel?—I used to feel of course weak, but I could do with less food.

1256. You felt less sensation of hunger than you did on the first or second day?—Yes, sir.

1257. What were your principal sensations when you came out?—It was as much as I could do to take my dinner.

1258. Was that from a dislike to the food, or from want of appetite?—From want of appetite, sir.

1259. You would not have an appetite for your dinner?—I could eat it, but it was as much as I could do. We always came out at dinner time.

(The prisoner was removed).

1260. And instead of being very hungry, you have a certain amount of difficulty in eating your dinner?—I would feel as much as I could do in eating it; and another thing, I would feel sore in the side.

1261. Were you able to sleep while you were in the cell on bread and water?—A sort of half sleep and half awake. The doctor comes round one time, the priest another time, and the governor another time, and you must keep yourself bent up all the time. I used to keep myself warm by opening my shirt and breathing down my breast. You must stand to "attention," with your clothes buttoned when any one comes around the cells; so always about half-past nine or ten, the doctor comes round, then after that the priest, then you don't know what time the governor will come round, generally about dinner time.

1262. Did the period of time appear very long to you?—It did not appear as long as when I was at work, because I would try and sleep as much as I could. The five days did, because I couldn't stand any more.

1263. Does it affect your spirits?—It does, and it weakens me too.

1264. Were you able to do as much work, or only less work after?—I don't feel so strong after.

1265. Were you allowed out of your cell at any time during that three days?—No, you are only allowed to empty your cell pot twice a day now. You are not taken out of it now. A man comes round and empties it into the bucket.

1266. Did the abstinence on bread and water for three days affect your bowels in any way?—Not that I know of, sir.

1267. (Dr. Greenhow.) You refused to clean the privy because the warden asked you to use your own pail?—Yes, sir.

1268. Was it necessary to use a pail at all?—No, sir, it was not.

1269. There is a hydrant to the privy, is there not?—Yes, sir, there is a hydrant and cock, and you could flood the whole privy with water that you could swim in if you wished.

1270. (Chairman.) Are you quite sure that you were told to use a pail?—Yes, sir; that was what I was reported for, when I wouldn't use my own.

1271. (Dr. Greenhow.) Did you ask for a pail?—I asked him, "What pail am I to get?" and says he, "The pail in your cell." Says I, "Is it the one I wash myself in?" "Yes," says he. Says I, "I won't do it."

1272. You were told to clean out the privy, and asked the warden for a pail?—What he told me was to get a bucket and cloth and wash the privy. I said, "What bucket will I get?" Says he, "The one in your cell." Says I, "I won't do that."

1273. (Chairman.) Was the bucket simply to carry water?—You would have a floor cloth, and then you would have to wash up the privy.

1274. (Dr. Greenhow.) If the hydrant flushes it clean you do not need a bucket?—There is a hydrant and as iron affair under it with holes in it, that you could dip a floor cloth in and wash it without a bucket.

1275. Do you use a bucket when you wash the privy?—In No. 2 landing I used to use a bucket.

1276. You were on the top landing then?—I was not, but I was on the bottom landing; but in No. 2 landing there was always a bucket kept there.

1277. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you tell us how much water you drank in the three days that you were on bread and water diet?—I suppose not more than three pints a day.

1278. And you were more thirsty the first day than the second?—I used to be thirsty all the time, but the warden in the cell told me "be better not to drink much water. Says he, "It will only injure you."

1279. You think that you drank on an average only three pints in the day?—I don't think I drank any more, sir.

P. Leveson,

19 June 1876.

T. M. ROUSE.

10 June 1876.

THOMAS MATTHEW ROUSE EXAMINED.

1290. (Chairman.) What are your medical qualifications?—Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, England.

1291. Is that your full legal definition?—Yes.

1292. How long have you been here?—Nearly two years.

1293. Do you know a man named Leeson, who is confined in this prison?—Yes, sir.

1294. Will you state when your attention was first called to him or when he first made any application to you?—The 14th August 1865.

1295. What was his application?—He was complaining of pain in the head, and ordinary catarrh.

1296. Did you examine him medically?—Yes, sir; and admitted him into hospital.

1297. How long did he stay there?—Till the 16th August.

1298. He was several times in and out of the hospital, was he not?—Yes, sir; five times he has been in the hospital.

1299. And have you, on each occasion of his being there, given him that medical care and attention, and administered those medicines that you thought his case required?—Yes, sir.

1300. Has he ever applied to you for any particular medicine, which you have refused to give him?—Not that I am aware of, sir.

1301. Did he not apply to you at one time for camphor and acid?—He has always had whatever I considered proper to give him.

1302. Did you use a stethoscope in examining him?—I have examined him with my ear.

1303. What did you consider his ailment?—I think he has got a tendency to phthisis. He has had no active symptoms of phthisis since he has been under my care.

1304. Has he been, in opposition to my objection by you, employed in any work which he has been unsuited for?—He has always been employed subject to the approval of the medical officer.

1305. And you have had no reason to think that the employment would be injurious to him?—No, sir.

1306. It has been stated that at the stone cutting the dust gets into the mouth of the persons at work, and is likely to be injurious to them?—There is very little dust with the stone here. It is hard granite, and there is little or no dust with it.

1307. It has been stated that at one time spectacles were issued to the men here while at work, to protect them from the dust; has that practice been discontinued?—They have them if they like to apply for them.

1308. They are not served out?—Not as a matter of course. I believe some of them objected to wear them.

1309. (Dr. Ligon.) Are you in the habit, doctor, of examining the convicts here with a stethoscope when they present themselves to you if they complain of their chest?—If they complain of their chest, certainly, sir.

1310. What is your reason for supposing that this man is predisposed to phthisis?—He brought it in his medical history when he was received into this prison.

1311. But has anything in your own observation confirmed you in that opinion?—He has had no active symptoms of phthisis since he has been under my care.

1312. Then your statement is in reference to his medical history?—The medical history that he brought from Millbank.

1313. Have you formed any opinion from your own observation?—I thought at one time he was weak and out of sorts and admitted him into hospital. He was suffering from boils at the time and appeared weak.

1314. Would you not think it your duty to examine carefully, stethoscopically, a man with that history?—He would be examined by the medical officer when he came under his charge.

1315. But when he came under your observation would you not consider it your duty to examine him?—Not unless he complained of his chest.

1316. Although he came with that history?—If he complained of his chest I should have examined him.

1317. How long had you him in the hospital on that occasion?—35 days.

1318. What were his principal symptoms during that time?—More general weakness and boils. There was almost an epidemic of boils at the time. A great number of prisoners suffered from boils; and in fact persons all through the country I believe. He was admitted into hospital on account of a boil behind his ear, and he complained of weakness.

1319. He was at other times also in hospital?—Yes, sir.

1320. Did he make any complaint of his chest at any time?—No, sir.

1321. None at all?—No; I have no note of it at all.

1322. Did he complain to you of spitting a great deal?—No, sir. There is no record of that at all.

1323. He has stated to us that he spits a good deal?—He has never complained to me of it.

1324. Have you no recollection as to whether you examined him stethoscopically or not?—I have no notes of it. If he had complained of his chest I should have examined it.

1325. You have no clear recollection that you examined him at any time with a stethoscope?—I cannot call it to memory, sir.

1326. If he has a phthisical tendency as his medical history states he has, do you think it quite safe for him to be working in a place where there is a certain amount of dust flying about?—I do not think it will hurt him. I do not think it is sufficiently finely divided to affect him at all there. I have visited the stone shed on various occasions.

1327. He said that there is a good deal, and we saw that his boots were very dusty?—The dust would be on the boots, because any dust that would be going would fall on his boots.

1328. If there was much dust do you not think it would be rather a risky thing for a man with a phthisical predisposition to work in it?—It might tend to make him cough, but I do not think there is sufficient to hurt him. I do not think the dust is light enough.

1329. If you had any apprehension that this phthisical tendency might become actually developed, would you recommend his removal to some other place?—Certainly.

1330. And it is within your function to do that?—It is within my function and power.

1331. To recommend him for removal?—For removal, if I consider that this climate disagrees with his constitution.

1332. Could you define the place to which you wished him to be sent, or is that in the option of somebody else?—No, sir. I could define the establishment that I wished him to be removed to.

1333. What places could you send him to?—I could send him to Woking, or to Parkhurst in the Isle of Wight.

1334. Are those the only two places?—Those are the two last places for sending chest cases.

1335. Do you think that this man is losing weight?—He is gaining weight. He lost weight after his reception first.

1336. I see by his medical history that he went down to 135 lbs. weight on one occasion?—Yes, he did, sir.

1337. Was he weighed?—He was weighed, sir.

1338. At what date?—It was at the time of his admission into hospital in September 1869.

1339. What day was he weighed; have you the date?—It would be between the 9th of the 9th month and the 13th of the 10th month. On the 16th of September he was weighed, sir.

1330. On that occasion he went down to 133 lbs. ?—Yes, he had lost 19 lbs. since his reception.
1331. What interval had elapsed then ?—He was received from Millbank, December 30, 1838; he had therefore been of this prison about nine months.
1332. When before he weighed 139 lbs. had he been weighed last ?—He was weighed on reception, and then when he complained of being weak, and he said himself he had lost flesh, he was weighed then. That was on the 16th September.
1333. But had he not been weighed between his admission and that date ?—Not in the interval.
1334. What do you attribute his great loss of weight to ?—I suppose the confinement in prison and the consequent loss of activity.
1335. Had he loss of appetite to your knowledge ?—Not to my knowledge; he did not complain of it.
1336. Was there any irritability about his constitution ?—Not that I was aware of.
1337. Were his pulses quick ?—Not that I am aware of.
1338. Did you examine it ?—Oh, yes.
1339. Did you record it ?—It is not recorded.
1340. Have you any recollection that his pulse was high ?—I think not. If it was I should have noted it in his case paper.
1341. You know that that is a very remarkable loss of weight in that time ?—It is a good deal, sir.
1342. For what time was he in hospital on that occasion ?—35 days, sir.
1343. How soon after that date was he weighed again ?—On the 16th May.
1344. Of this year ?—1870, yes.

JAMES HANCOCK EXAMINED.

1350. (Chairman.) You are a wanderer in this prison ?—Yes, sir.
1351. Have you been present recently to-day, on the occasion when the prisoner Patrick Lennon has been weighed ?—Yes, sir. I weighed him myself, sir.
1352. What does his weight turn out to be ?—140 lbs., sir.
1353. Was he weighed in his clothes ?—In his clothes, without his boots and cap.
1354. As he came in here ?—As he came in, sir.
1355. Are you able to tell us whether on former occasions when he was weighed, he had his boots and cap on ?—His boots and cap were always removed.
1356. And he has been weighed to-day in the same state and the same clothes ?—Yes, sir.

Mr. ROUSE's examination resumed.

1372. (Dr. Lysons.) You observe that he lost two pounds in weight since the last occasion ?—Yes; if he was weighed in the infirmary with his shoes on they would weigh two pounds.
1373. I was asking you whether it was possible that any person suffering from disease of the skin, or otherwise objectionable in person, could bathe in the same bath, which I believe in all the same water, although there are separate compartments, with other persons who had no such disease ?—Not of my own knowledge. When I have seen the prisoners bathing they were bathing each in a separate compartment of the bath.
1374. But the water is all the same, is it not ?—I believe not, sir. I am not aware that it is so.
1375. Do you exercise any supervision over the bath ?—No, sir; not the washing bath.
1376. Are there separate baths in the infirmary ?—I have a bath in the infirmary; yes.
1377. And you supervise its use ?—Yes, it is subject to the care of the principal infirmary warder. He sees that it is properly administered.
1378. As belonging to the infirmary it is subject to your supervision ?—Yes.
1379. Is it consistent with your knowledge that at any time anything objectionable has taken place in the bath ?—Not to my knowledge.

1345. Was he not weighed in the interval ?—No.
1346. Have you any regular period for weighing prisoners ?—No regular period.
1347. How do they come to be weighed; is it a matter of curiosity ?—It is a matter of curiosity, and for our own satisfaction in the medical department.
1348. But there is no regular period ?—No regular period, except on reception and discharge.
1349. Could you account for this sort of epidemic of boils ?—No, sir; you cannot account for them; they were general through the country.
1350. Do you think there was anything in the prison diet that could have caused it ?—No, I think not.
1351. Were the boils numerous on the person ?—No, he had one or two. He might have had two at the time, not more. A boil on admission September 16th, and a boil on another admission 18th October.
1352. Have you any men here suffering from any form of skin disease ?—Yes, sir.
1353. Of what nature ?—Skin disease called chloasma.
1354. A single case ?—No, more than one.
1355. You have more than one ?—Yes.
1356. How many ?—I have two under treatment now.
1357. Have you any other forms of skin disease ?—Not that I am aware of, sir.
1358. Is it possible that any man having any skin disease could be put into a bath in which other persons bathe ?—Not the same bath, sir.
1359. You think it is not possible ?—I do not think so.

1367. (Dr. Lysons.) Do you remember when he was weighed on the 9th September ?—No, sir, I was not present then.
1368. Who weighed him then ?—It must be the principal infirmary warder. He always weighs them on reception.
1369. On reception where ?—From another prison, sir.
1370. (Chairman.) Do you recollect the occasion when you directed Lennon to clean the privy ?—Not me, sir.
1371. Did you at any time direct Lennon to clean a privy ?—No sir. (Witness hands in a memorandum of Lennon's weight and withdrawal.)

1380. Has any complaint of any such thing ever reached you ?—None whatever.
1381. Have you any record anywhere that would enable you to state accurately to-morrow, by looking up your notes, whether you at any time examined this man's chest stethoscopically ?—No, sir; there are the notes I have, and I have no note of it in this paper. If I had examined him stethoscopically it would have been on what we call the "Complaining sick," when we go round in the morning to see men that want to see the medical officer.
1382. (Dr. Greenhow.) Where were you stationed ?—St. George's Hospital, London.
1383. When you examine a patient's chest do you always use a stethoscope ?—Yes, sir.
1384. Always ?—Yes, sir.
1385. I ask that, because I thought you might make an examination without it ?—It is a very rare thing to do. If I do I put my ear to the chest, which is the same thing of course.
1386. When prisoners come here from another prison and bring their medical history, do you examine the prisoner yourself ?—Yes, sir; before I put him to labour.
1387. In doing so do you examine the chest ?—If there is any statement of the chest.
1388. Not otherwise ?—Not otherwise.

T. M. Rouse.
10 June 1870.

J. Hancock.

T. M. Rouse.

T. M. Reese.
10 June 1870.

1383. You said in answer to Dr. Lyons, that the prisoner would be examined by the medical officer who passed him; but you did not pass Lennon into this prison?—No, sir.

1390. Do you find disease of the lungs common amongst the prisoners here?—Yes, sir; very common.

1391. Can you state roughly the proportion that such cases bear to the number of the prisoners?—I cannot tell. There are a very large number.

1392. What form of lung disease is most prevalent?—Tubercular disease.

1393. Have you much pneumonia here?—Very little.

1394. Chronic lung disease is what the prisoners suffer from most?—Yes, sir.

1395. Have you observed that the prisoners who work at cutting or breaking stones suffer more from it than the others?—No, sir.

1396. You have not observed that?—I have not observed it, sir.

1397. Do you take any regular notes of cases here?—Not daily notes, sir; except patients in hospital.

1398. And then you do take daily notes?—Yes.

1399. And those notes are preserved?—Yes.

1400. Are they taken in books or on paper?—On case papers, printed for the purpose.

1401. The medical histories which have been submitted to us are abstracts of those cases?—Yes, sir.

1402. But the cases contain more details?—Yes, sir.

1403. Would you kindly hand me one of those cases?—This is it, sir. (Hands in a document.)

R. McAleen.

HAMILTON McALEEN, principal

1404. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you weigh the prisoner, Patrick Lennon?—Yes, sir.

1405. On what occasion?—In September I weighed him. He was then 135 lbs., September 1869; and on May 7th I also weighed him, and he was 142 lbs. That is with his prison slippers on—hospital slippers on.

1406. (Dr. Greenhow.) Can you state on what day in September you weighed him?—No; I don't recollect the day, sir.

1407. (Dr. Lyons.) When you weighed him in September and his weight was found to be 135 lbs., had he the hospital slippers on?—Yes, sir; on both occasions.

1408. Was he in hospital dress?—In hospital dress.

1409. Is there any difference between the hospital dress and the ordinary prison dress?—The coat is something longer than the jacket.

(The witness withdrew.)

T. M. Reese.

Mr. ROBERTS'S examination resumed.

1416. (Dr. Greenhow.) You have not noted the state of Lennon's pulse while he was in hospital?—I have not made a note of it.

1417. And you have not noted it because you have not found anything abnormal in it to record?—No.

1418. That is, it is your rule to note positive facts and not negative ones?—Yes, sir.

1419. You do not attribute the prevalence of chronic tubercular disease here to working at granite?—No; I attribute it to their being sent here for the benefit of their health from other prisons.

1420. You think then that the men come here with the seeds of the disorder already in existence?—Yes.

1421. And you do not think that the disease is contracted here?—Certainly not.

1422. And you have never found that cutting granite into blocks for buildings has caused disease of the lungs?—No, sir.

1423. (Dr. Lyons.) Could you put in a return against to-morrow of the number of persons who died within the last year of tubercular disease here?—Yes, sir.

1424. Have you made any post mortem examinations of those cases dying of phthisis here?—Yes, sir.

1425. Have you found extensive tubercular disease of the lungs?—Yes, sir; very far advanced.

1426. Have you at any time found traces of dust, like deposits in the bronchial glands or in any portion of the pulmonary apparatus?—No.

1427. Nothing like what is known as lapidary phthisis?—No, not to my knowledge.

1428. (Dr. Greenhow.) What appearances have the lungs presented in those cases?—Cases of tubercular disease, sir?

1429. Yes. In those cases were the lungs contracted, or were there cavities in them?—There were cavities containing purulent matter.

1430. Were those cavities in the apices or at the inferior venter, examined.

1410. Is there any difference in weight?—I never weighed the coat against the jacket. It is just their own clothes they wear there, the ordinary prison clothes, except that the coat is something longer.

1411. Would you weigh now a coat that a patient uses in hospital and one of the ordinary coats, and see what the difference is?—Yes, sir.

1412. (Chairman.) Do I understand you to say that the dress worn in hospital is the ordinary prison dress?—It is the ordinary dress, only the hospital coat instead of the ordinary jacket.

1413. (Dr. Greenhow.) Was he dressed in the hospital dress when you weighed him in May?—Yes, on both occasions, sir.

1414. Has he been weighed just now in the ordinary clothes?—In the same clothes, sir.

1415. Would you go now and weigh him in the hospital dress?—Yes, sir.

bases of the lungs?—In cases of death they were nearly all over the lungs.

1431. Was the lung tissue between those cavities very much disorganized?—I did not notice that particularly.

1432. Was the lung tissue of a very dark colour?—No, sir; the ordinary colour.

1433. (Dr. Lyons.) Are there any persons suffering from the effects of chronic syphilis here?—A few, sir.

1434. There are a few?—Yes, sir.

1435. If those persons go into the bath, would any special precautions be taken to prevent them from bathing in the same "bathing apparatus," I shall call it, for I do not know the exact construction of it yet?—They would go into the usual baths, sir; but none of them have primary syphilis about them.

1436. Have they syphilitic eruptions on the body?—There may be one or two with syphilitic eruptions, but I do not know of any at the present moment.

1437. Would they not be separated from the others in using the bath at the same time?—There would be a partition.

1438. We are informed that though a partition divides the persons of the men, the water is all the same?—I was not aware of that, sir.

1439. We shall examine the baths to ascertain. You appear not to be aware of it?—I am not aware of it.

1440. You have never examined the bath?—Not particularly.

1441. (Mr. De Vere.) As a matter of fact do persons with syphilitic eruptions bathe in these baths?—Oh, all persons bathe in those baths.

1442. Is there any prescribed time for persons to bathe or to remain in the bath?—They are not under my superintendence.

1443. (Dr. Lyons.) Is it your experience that persons coming here with tubercular tendency are hastened towards a fatal issue by the climate here, or that the disease is retarded; or do you think that there is any effect whatsoever?—I think in a really genuine case of tubercular disease it is beneficial to them as a rule.

1444. And have those that have died here come in the latter stage of tubercular disease?—They probably have been in the latter stage.

1445. If a patient came here with marked tubercular disease, what would you do with him. Would you have the power to send him elsewhere?—Yes, if I thought the climate did not agree with him. If it was proved that it did not after a time, he would be removed to another station.

1446. Is it any part of your duty to supervise the baths?—No sir; I am not aware that it is.

1447. Or to inspect the food?—I inspect the food at various times. I inspect the food in the kitchen when it is being prepared, and I test the meat at the stores on its reception here from the contractor.

1448. Do you inspect the diets when they are served out?—Not when they are served out.

1449. Are you aware of any complaints made respecting the diet?—No, sir, very rarely; the diets on the whole are very good.

1450. But have no complaints been made?—On one or two occasions they complained about the potatoes, but that was accounted for by one batch being not very good, and they were condemned at once.

1451. (Dr. Greenhow.) I see by this book, Mr. Rouse, that on various occasions Patrick Lennon has complained to the governor with regard to his medical treatment. On the 21st January 1870 he complained that he got no medical treatment; on the 24th February 1870 he complained that he could not do his work. These complaints are referred to the medical officer for his report; I want to know in what form those reports are made?—The medical officer would answer the report in the same book.

1452. But I find no such reports in the book?—That is the medical officer's fault then, and not mine.

1453. Here again I find on the 9th of March 1870: "I have been complaining ever since I came here that the doctors will not physic me, will you?" To which the governor replies, "No, certainly not," and writes it for the medical officer's perusal. Did you see that?—I was not in charge then, sir. I do not think I was in charge then. If I did answer the report it would be on the back.

1454. What I wish to ascertain is, whether or not those reports are made in writing when they are called for in this manner in the governor's book?—The medical officer would either report it on the page against it in the governor's book, or he would write a report.

1455. Would you show me here any of these reports?—That is not the book, sir. I will send for it; it is called the Governor's Medical Reference Book. There are two books, one called "Governor's Application Book," the other called "Governor's Medical Reference Book."

HAMILTON McALEEN recalled.

1456. (Chairman.) Have you weighed the prisoner Patrick Lennon in his hospital dress?—Yes, sir.

1457. Are you prepared to hand in a paper stating what his weight is?—Yes, here it is, sir (hands in a paper).

1458. Have you weighed a coat against a jacket?—The difference between the jacket and coat and trousers is 2 lbs., sir; it is just exactly as when I weighed him last.

1459. You weighed him just now?—Yes, sir.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Rouse's examination resumed.

1464. (Dr. Lyons.) You made a report on the 15th February, and on the 26th February there is no report. Were you on duty on the 26th as well as the 15th?—I do not remember that, sir. I find on reference that the medical officer was in charge on both dates; it was therefore his duty to answer the reports.

1465. (Mr. De Vere.) Mr. Rouse, can you state the annual percentage of those persons on full work whose health breaks down?—I cannot say, sir; there are so few men who are in full health here. They are more or less enfeebled here.

1466. I did not say in full health; I said on full work?—I cannot say; there are no statistics of it.

1467. Can you say the proportion of those who break down on full work is larger amongst the educated men than it is amongst those who have come in from the labouring class?—I cannot say that it does, sir; not to my knowledge. We have no statistics of that sort.

1468. Can you state, from your own observation, whether the full work bears harder on the health of the educated man than on that of the labouring man?—Not that I know of.

1469. (Chairman.) Do you produce the governor's medical reference book?—Yes.

1470. That book contains certain entries applicable to the case of Patrick Lennon?—Yes.

1471. The reports contained in that book would be those which would be applicable to cases as cited here, in which reference was made to the medical officer?—Yes, sir.

1472. (Mr. Bradrick.) Do prisoners, as a rule, gain or lose in weight?—That is a difficult point to decide. I really do not know. I should say as a rule they lose; I should say so.

1473. Do you think that if the 800 and odd prisoners now here had been weighed on entrance and were weighed now, that they would be found to have lost rather than gained?—I think they would, sir; it is always done. I really don't know the statistics of it. They are always weighed on reception and discharge. Sometimes they gain and sometimes they lose. It depends, I think, as to whether they have so much punishment; of course they do not gain much weight in punishment.

1474. Do you consider the dietary sufficient to maintain their strength?—I think so; I think it is quite sufficient.

1475. We find in the dietary a certain number of ounces of meat. Is the meat that is given to each man weighed before or after cooking?—It is weighed both before and after cooking.

1476. Do you think it is weighed before cooking, or that the weight given is the weight of the cooked meat?—It is in the standing order, sir (refers to standing orders). The weight specified in the quantity actually issued to each prisoner after it is cooked and freed from bone. Each prisoner, therefore, on stated days receives 5oz. of cooked meat exclusive of bone, in addition to bread, vegetables, &c.

1477. Do you know how it is with regard to the ordinary diet?—I will look at it. It is not specially stated here, but it would be if it was done for the infirmary in the new state; it would be done so for the prison diet.

1478. You believe that to be the diet?—I believe that to be the diet.

T. M. Rouse.

10 June 1870.

H. McALEEN.

T. M. Rouse.

T. H. Moore.

10 June 1870.

1479. You spoke of bells having been very prevalent at one time; do you attribute that to anything in the prison diet?—Not at all; they were amongst persons outside and were not confined to the prison.

1480. Are worms prevalent amongst the prisoners?—They are prevalent, but not more than is the case amongst persons of their class generally.

1481. (Dr. Ligon.) What worms are they?—Thread worms—ascaris.

1482. (Mr. Brodick.) You do not attribute it to anything in the prison diet; for instance, the use of oatmeal?—I do not.

1483. Is the clothing of the prisoners the same in summer and in winter?—Yes, I believe it is.

1484. Do you consider it sufficient for the winter?—I think they have the option of wearing a smock in the winter. They do not go out in the smock, I think, in the summer.

1485. Is the smock in addition to the jacket that we saw?—Yes, sir; in addition to the jacket.

1486. What opportunity has a prisoner of seeing you; how does he make application to see you?—He puts his name down in the morning, after the roll is taken.

1487. It would never happen, I suppose, that you saw a prisoner without his having applied to you?—No, sir; unless in case of an accident or anything of that sort, when it would be the duty of the warden in charge to bring him up.

1488. (Dr. Greenhow.) Do you not periodically inspect the prisoners?—Oh, we inspect them every month. As we go through we inspect the gangs, for the purpose of drafting the able-bodied men to the public works.

1489. Is there no periodical medical inspection of the prisoners?—Every month there is an inspection of the gangs.

1490. They are inspected in gangs?—Yes.

1491. Where are they inspected?—In the prison.

1492. In what part of the prison?—In what they call the octagon passage.

1493. Is there plenty of light there?—Plenty.

1494. Are they drawn up in a line, or how are they placed?—They are stripped up at a time.

1495. And you examine each prisoner separately?—Yes; this is a monthly inspection; last they are also inspected every week; every man is seen every week.

1496. Every man is seen weekly by the doctor?—By the doctor.

1497. Will you be good enough to describe the manner of making the inspection?—It is a weekly inspection, and it takes place every Sunday morning. When the men are drawn up on parade, before going to the chapel, the medical officer passes down the ranks and sees each person as he passes.

1498. Have you been in the army?—No, sir.

1499. (Mr. Brodick.) Are they then stripped?—No, sir; they are ready to be marched off to chapel.

1500. In such a case if you observed a man looking very ill should you question him?—Certainly.

1501. I presume that there is no such thing as a medical inspection of convict prisons—I mean that there is no such thing as a convict prison being visited by an inspector from without?—Not that I am aware of.

1502. Practically, are you absolute with regard to the medical superintendence of the prisoners?—When I am in charge, sir.

1503. (Dr. Greenhow.) Did Mr. Perry, the inspector, never come to this prison since you have been here?—I never saw him.

1504. Have you ever had occasion to report Lannon for insouciance to you?—Yes, sir; he spoke very disrespectfully to me on one occasion.

1505. What took place on that occasion?—As far as I can recollect he had his name down to see me, and on his cell door being opened when I visited him he refused to see me, and stated that he had not put his name down to see me. I said that he had put his name down, and he spoke in a very excited and disrespectful manner contradicting me, and said that he had done nothing of the sort. I reported him, therefore for insouciance.

1506. Have you had to complain of any insouciance from him on any other occasion?—No, not the remotest.

1507. Has he ever shown, to the best of your judgment, any tendency to sham or scheme?—I think not. He has never schemed to me, sir.

1508. (Mr. De Vere.) Are you aware what punishment he got for that insouciance?—I am not aware. The governor would have the record.

1509. I believe that the ordinary medical staff of this prison consists of two medical men?—Yes.

1510. You are the assistant?—I am the assistant surgeon.

1511. Are you now exercising all the duties of the head medical man?—Yes, sir.

1512. For how long have you been doing so?—For two months, sir; since the transfer of the medical officer to Woking.

1513. Can you tell me in whom the appointment of the medical officer vests?—With the directors I believe, subject to the approval of the Home Secretary.

1514. Do they appoint on a competitive examination of any kind?—Not that I am aware of, sir.

1515. (Dr. Greenhow.) You passed through no examination, I suppose?—I had no examination, sir, but sent in testimonials and certificates as to my qualifications for the appointment.

1516. (Mr. De Vere.) Is it not the fact that in cities paved with granite the dust is found to be peculiarly hurtful to the eyes?—I do not think it is any worse than the ordinary dust. Dust is always most irritative to the eyes.

1517. Is not the dust of granite much more finity, and angular, and of a sharper nature than the dust of a softer species of stone?—Well, I do not know what the technical term is; there is a small black sort of metallic speck in it; they would be sharper, but they would not fly so much as they are not so light. Their own weight would not allow them to fly like the ordinary light stone dust.

1518. (Dr. Ligon.) Do you mean the mica?—I believe it is mica, a little black variety.

1519. (Mr. De Vere.) If it is the fact that the dust of a granite paved city is peculiarly hurtful to the eyes, would that not show that it was peculiarly liable to fly about in the air?—That is because it is submitted to a process of pulverisation, I should say, by the traffic of the city.

1520. Would you say that dust which would be peculiarly irritating to the eye would be also peculiarly injurious to the lungs or to the bronchial tubes?—I do not know that it would be peculiarly so; dust is always irritating to any surface.

1521. But I think you stated some time ago, that from the nature of the stone here, the stone breaking or the stone cutting would not be so injurious to the labourer as if he was employed on a softer stone?—Yes, so I did.

1522. The object of my examination now is to ask you whether there is not in the dust of granite a dust which is peculiarly injurious and irritating to all the internal organs?—Not that I am aware of, sir; not to my knowledge.

1523. (Dr. Ligon.) At the time that Lannon was so low in weight, I find the entry in the medical officer's report that he was looking so very ill that he did not undertake to pronounce on his fitness until a further examination should have been made. May I ask, were you the medical officer who made the report at that time?—No, sir, I was not.

1524. Had you any charge of him about that period at all?—I should say I had if he put his name down in what we call the "usual sick list." I should see him in his cell, and if I thought him not able to do his work I should admit him to hospital as I should any man.

V. M. Brown.
18 June 1870.

1525. Was he, as a matter of fact, in hospital at the time?—He was, sir.

1526. Was it your duty to examine him medically, stethoscopically or otherwise, at the time that he is reported to have been looking sick, and if so, what was his ailment?—No, sir; I do not know that it was.

1527. Then it must have been Dr. Ashken?—I presume so. If he complained of his chest and his name was down in the casual sick list, I should have examined his chest undoubtedly, if he complained of it; and if he had any acute or active symptoms he would have been sent into hospital immediately.

1528. But with a man looking very sick as he is reported to have been, and having lost weight so very much, do you not think it would have been necessary to examine him stethoscopically?—I think probably he was. There is no note of it. He probably was examined at that time in his chest. He probably was examined by his chest.

1529. Then you would refer us to Dr. Ashken for a report of his actual state at the time?—I think so, sir; if that was the time he was admitted into hospital it will be on this paper.

1530. Was this medicine entered September 9th, ordered by you?—It was ordered by me subject to the medical officer's approval.

1531. It was ordered by you on September 9th?—Yes, sir.

1532. And you report here, "There is a boil behind the ear; seems very weak." What did you order for him on that day?—Lanced poultice to the part affected; on the 9th lanced poultice. With regard to the boil, on the 10th the boil was punctured; on the 11th there was a little discharge; water dressing instead of poultices; and the 11th also cod-liver oil twice a day.

1533. Why did you order the cod-liver oil?—Because he was weak. He complained of weakness at the time.

1534. I find that you ordered cod-liver oil on that date. What led you to prescribe cod-liver oil for him?—On account of his debility.

1535. Had you any suspicion that there was a tendency to develop the tuberculous diathesis which existed in his constitution?—That statement was in the medical history when he was received.

1536. But at the particular time when you ordered cod-liver oil for him, had you any suspicion in your mind that there was a tendency to scrofula, in the latest tuberculous referred to in his medical history?—No; I had no notion of that at the time or I should have noted it.

1537. Reporting him there as looking very weak, and finding by having him weighed that his weight

The witness withdrew.

JOHN BROWN HOLMES examined.

J. B. Holmes.

1545. (Mr. Brodriek.) Are you a warden of this prison?—Warder now, sir.

1546. Do you know the prisoner Patrick Lennon?—Perfectly well, sir.

1547. Do you remember his being one of a party under your charge at the beginning of last year?—I do, sir.

1548. Do you remember ordering him to wheel a barrow of gravel?—I do, sir.

1549. What sort of a barrow was it?—Why it was not exactly a wheelbarrow, sir, but it was a barrow which was made for the purpose of a box to go on the top of this barrow. He was employed in the stone-breaking shed, where they break the stone very small, and they are measured every afternoon. This was a small box which fits on this barrow; and him of course being about the oldest man between 80 I had, I called him to wheel this barrow.

1550. Was that barrow heavier than usual?—No, sir, it was not. The stone barrow has been there for a long time; in fact it has been there before I came had reduced very considerably, did you consider it necessary to examine him stethoscopically?—I have no record of it, but I have no doubt I did.

1543. You think you did?—I think I did, sir.

1539. Is it your habit to record on this paper every instance in which you examine a patient with the stethoscope?—No, sir.

1540. What else was ordered for him at that period besides cod-liver oil?—Merely full ordinary diet.

1541. Is it in your province to order wine if it be required by the state a patient is in?—If required, yes.

1542. Was any wine ordered for him?—None.

1543. You did not think it required?—No.

1544. (Dr. Greenwood.) When you found a man losing weight you would naturally conclude that he had some serious disease, would you not?—Some men will lose weight without organic disease. You cannot state as a fact because a man loses weight that he has got some organic disease.

1545. But when you found that a man had lost 19 lbs. of his weight in less than a year, would you not infer that there was some disease going on?—Well, I do not know that I should.

1546. Would you not look for kidney disease or some other cause to account for the waste going on?—Not unless he complained of any local cause.

1547. In the case of a man having boils as Lennon had, and who had lost weight to the extent that he had, would you not have suspected some disease, such as diabetes, would you not have examined the urine?—Not unless he complained of his water.

1548. Then unless a man complained of his water or of his chest, you would not be disposed to examine his water or his chest?—I would not, sir.

1549. (Dr. Lyons.) For what length of time was he continued on cod-liver oil?—During his stay in hospital, that was 35 days.

1550. Did he get no other medicines of any kind?—Merely opening medicine, and he had a liniment that we give for chilblains.

1551. (Dr. Greenwood.) What is the composition of that liniment?—I order soap liniment of the Pharmacopoeia, together with tincture of opium and iodide of potassium.

1552. (Dr. Lyons.) Are chilblains very common here?—Yes, very common in the winter.

1553. Have you any objection to put those papers in?—No sir, none whatever. I can give a copy of them.

1554. Will you be kind enough to hand in a certified copy of this paper (the "case paper" of Patrick Lennon)?—Yes, sir.

The witness withdrew.

The Chairman here left, and the chair was taken by the Hon. Mr. Brodriek.

JOHN BROWN HOLMES examined.

J. B. Holmes.

1545. (Mr. Brodriek.) Are you a warden of this prison?—Warder now, sir.

1546. Do you know the prisoner Patrick Lennon?—Perfectly well, sir.

1547. Do you remember his being one of a party under your charge at the beginning of last year?—I do, sir.

1548. Do you remember ordering him to wheel a barrow of gravel?—I do, sir.

1549. What sort of a barrow was it?—Why it was not exactly a wheelbarrow, sir, but it was a barrow which was made for the purpose of a box to go on the top of this barrow. He was employed in the stone-breaking shed, where they break the stone very small, and they are measured every afternoon. This was a small box which fits on this barrow; and him of course being about the oldest man between 80 I had, I called him to wheel this barrow.

1550. Was that barrow heavier than usual?—No, sir, it was not. The stone barrow has been there for a long time; in fact it has been there before I came to the prison, and I have been there going on four years.

1551. Did it take two men or one man to lift it?—One man wheels it always, sir.

1552. Then it was a wheelbarrow with two handles?—Yes, sir.

1553. And was it what a man might fairly wheel?—Yes, sir.

1554. What passed on that occasion. Did he refuse to wheel it, or what took place?—He refused to wheel it when I ordered him, sir. He said "No."

1555. And what did you then do?—I reported him, sir.

1556. When he refused to wheel it, did he give any reason for refusing?—Why he complained something about that he wasn't able; but of course I knowed nothing respecting that, sir. I took him just by his general appearance.

1557. What reply did you make when he refused?—I ordered him of course to obey any order by wheeling this barrow; he distinctly refused to do it.

J. B. Holmes.

10 June 1870.

1568. Did he do it?—No, sir; he didn't obey my order.

1569. And upon that what further happened?—I reported him for it, sir. That was all that passed.

1570. But did you make use of any language to him?—No, sir; no language to my knowledge, only just complying my duties, by ordering him to wheel this barrow which he refused.

1571. Did you use any threat to him?—No, sir.

1572. Or any abusive language?—No, sir. I spoke to him in a respectful manner and ordered him to do his work.

1573. Did you not lose your temper when he refused?—I did not, sir.

1574. (Dr. Greenhow.) Had you asked any man to move the barrow before you asked Leeson to do it?—No, sir.

1575. Two men had not previously tried and been unable to move it?—No, sir.

1576. And when Leeson refused did some other prisoner move it?—No, sir.

1577. Did you tell some one else to move it?—I did, sir.

1578. And that other person did move it?—Yes, sir.

1579. (Dr. Lyons.) Why did you select Leeson and ask him to move the barrow?—Because he looked the most ablest and strongest man of the party I had there, sir. I must give you to understand sir that this is an invalid party which I had there, cripples, some lost the use of three fingers, some lost the use of their arms, and some is crippled in their legs. This man being the stoutest and most ablest amongst the lot, of course I asked him to do this.

1580. (Mr. Brodick.) Would you have any difficulty in moving it yourself had it been your duty to do so?—Certainly not, sir; it wasn't so heavy.

1581. (Dr. Lyons.) Then you had no reason to select him, but that you thought him the strongest?—Certainly not, sir.

1582. How many men had you at the time?—About 25 or 30.

1583. How many of these were weak or crippled?—I suppose I had 20 out of that number cripples, that is men of course paralyzed and lame, and the use of the fingers gone, and such like.

1584. And then of the remaining number you thought Leeson was the strongest?—Just so, sir; and that was the reason I asked him to do it.

1585. And you had no other reason for selecting him?—No, sir; I had not.

1586. Were you present all the time that the barrow was being filled?—I was, sir.

1587. Did you see two men trying to move it?—No, sir.

1588. Did two men try to move the barrow?—No, sir.

1589. Do you say that they did?—No, sir.

1590. Are you in a position to state positively that it could not have happened that two men tried to move the barrow?—I didn't see two men move the barrow, sir, because I have a full view of every man where I stood in the shed.

1591. (Mr. Brodick.) And was Leeson to the best of your recollection the first man that you asked to move the barrow?—He was the first man I asked, sir.

1592. (Dr. Lyons.) Will you undertake to say positively that no two men on that occasion tried to move the barrow?—Yes, sir.

1593. You can state that positively?—I can state that positively, sir.

1594. You were there all the time, from the time that the barrow was commenced to be filled to the beginning until you ordered him to move it?—Yes, sir.

1595. And you say positively that no two men were ordered to try to move the barrow?—No, sir.

1596. If he stated that two men tried to move the barrow, is the statement untrue in your opinion?—False, sir.

1597. Do you think that no such thing could have occurred on that occasion at all?—I am positive sure, sir, for I was there all the time.

1598. You are sure that no such thing occurred at all?—No such thing, for I don't permit one to leave the shed without my permission.

1599. Could you have been absent for a moment?—No, sir; I was not.

1600. But might you have been absent?—No, sir.

1601. Suppose that one of those men wanted to retire for a purpose of nature, should you have to accompany him?—No, sir; because I have the place just close to me at the top of the shed.

1602. While you were watching the man that retired to that place for a purpose of nature would the barrow be within your view?—It would, sir.

1603. Then would it have been impossible for two men to have attempted to move the barrow while you were occupied looking after another prisoner?—Quite impossible, sir, for I don't leave the shed.

1604. Would you by any possibility have turned your back?—It was not, sir.

1605. And it could not have been turned?—It could not, sir.

1606. Then do you deny absolutely again that the barrow was attempted to be moved by two men?—It was not, sir, tried to be moved by two men.

1607. You reported him for it?—I reported him for it, sir.

1608. And he was punished?—He was punished.

1609. Did he bring any charge against you for using any rough language to him before the gang?—No, sir; not to my knowledge, exactly.

1610. What do you mean by "not to your knowledge, exactly"?—Not to the best of my opinion, sir.

1611. Were you ever brought to account for having used improper or rough language to a convict on that occasion?—No, sir.

1612. (Dr. Lyons.) Will you tell me what you said to him when he refused to wheel the barrow; what order did you give him with regard to the barrow?—I ordered him to wheel this barrow, which he refused to do so.

1613. He refused to do so?—Yes.

1614. What did you say to him then?—I said no other, sir.

1615. When he refused once, did you say no more?—No, sir.

1616. Did you not order him a second time to do it?—No, sir.

1617. Did you not represent to him that he had to obey your orders?—When he refused and complained that he was unable, I said, "Why don't you try? Why, then, if you are," says I, "I must judge that you are unable, but," says I, "don't disobey the order which is given," so he said, "I will not."

1618. Did you order him a second time to do it?—No, sir.

1619. Is it ever your habit to order a prisoner, and if he does not do a thing in the first instance, to order him a second time?—Sometimes I do, sir.

1620. Did you do so on that occasion?—No, sir; I ordered him the first time.

1621. What further did you say to him?—No further, sir.

1622. Did you speak to him in a loud tone?—I spoke to him, sir, so that he would be able to hear; just the same as I am speaking now.

1623. Did you raise your voice then more than at other times, or to other prisoners?—No, sir.

1624. Did you speak to him in any sense or manner that could be represented as one man speaking to another as no man would speak to a dog?—No, sir.

1625. You did not?—No, sir.

1626. Was there any altercation between you then?—No, sir.

1627. Did this scene in reference to the barrow last for any moments that you can remember?—It might last for about two or three seconds.

1628. Not more than two or three seconds?—Not more than two or three seconds.

1638. Was what took place sufficient to attract the attention of those that were at work about?—Of course there was that sufficient, when I ordered him to do it and he refused.

1639. Do you remember who the other prisoners that were present were?—No, sir, I can't exactly; in fact three parts of those who were working there are away.

1640. But some of those who were there are here now?—Well, there may be a few, sir.

1641. Can you remember any of them; do you remember any of those who were standing near?—I cannot, sir. It occurred somewhere about 17 or 18 months ago, about the beginning of last year.

1642. Could you say who you think were there?—(No answer.)

1643. Could you name any one man who was there?—I can't exactly say, because there is men keeps coming and going from that place daily almost.

1644. But such an incident as that does not occur often. I presume that it does not occur often that a prisoner would dispute an order such as you gave.

The witness withdrew.

PATRICK STANLEY examined.

1644. (Mr. Brodriek.) Are you an Irishman?—Yes, sir.

1645. Are you a warder in this prison?—Yes, sir.

1646. Have you ever had Patrick Lenson under your charge?—Yes, sir.

1647. Is he usually under your charge?—No, sir. This happened, sir, I should say, as nearly as I can judge, about 18 months ago or two years. I was called on to take charge of the prisoners about 18 months ago or 12 months. I was called on for one hour to take charge of 53 gang, and the prisoner belonged to this gang.

1648. Where were they working?—In the stone shed, sir, and I had occasion to speak to him for his talking, sir. I checked him for talking. The other officer was away and I was the assistant officer at the time. When I came on to take charge he commenced to speak and I turned round and checked him in a commanding way, but civil.

1649. Did he speak to you or to one of the prisoners?—To one of the prisoners, sir. He didn't speak to me but to another prisoner, and I checked him.

1650. In speaking to another prisoner against the rules?—It is prohibited, sir, unless in the line of the work, but any conversation or idle talking is strictly prohibited, sir.

1651. What passed between you when you required him "in a commanding tone of voice" as you say, to stop talking?—I cautioned the man first, sir, before I reported him. When I checked him, he desisted. If he persisted in it I should certainly do my duty.

1652. But you did not report him?—No, sir.

1653. Can you recollect what it was that you said to him?—Well, as far as I can judge, sir, I said nothing, but I told him to leave off talking and to mind his work. This is the mainstay; I spoke as I always speak and as I would generally do, sir, when such a case happens.

1654. Did he give you any answer?—No, sir.

1655. Did you make use of any abusive language?—No, sir; I checked the prisoner for talking, which it was my duty to do, nothing more. He desisted when I spoke to him. I told him he was talking. He said something, but I didn't catch the words, and he desisted and spoke no more. Therefore I didn't report him to the governor.

1656. Was that all that passed?—That was all, sir, that passed between me and him.

1657. He has never been under your charge since?—No, sir; not before. That is the only time, sir. He don't belong to my prison.

1658. (Dr. Ligon.) How many were present on that occasion?—I think, sir, 12 of the prisoners. There was no officer but myself, sir, there at the time.

then, does it?—Well, sir, it occurs very often with a good many disobeying their lawful commands of the officer.

1659. Then you appear to have a very clear recollection of the occasion itself, and of what took place on that occasion?—I do, sir.

1660. And I want to know, therefore, as your memory is so clear as that, if you cannot call to mind even one of those who were present at the scene?—No, sir; I can't, not for certainty.

1661. You cannot name any one who was present at that scene?—No, sir; I cannot.

1662. Do you deny absolutely that you spoke in an angry or excited manner?—I do deny it.

1663. Or that you used any sort of strong language to him?—I do deny it, sir.

1664. (Dr. Greaves.) Were those sheds at which this took place at the prison, or down at the moor?—At the prison, sir.

1665. Is that barrow there still?—It is there still, sir.

1666. Can we see the barrow?—Yes, you can, sir.

1667. But there were 12 prisoners?—Yes, sir; I was in charge of 12 prisoners.

1668. Do you remember who those prisoners were?—No, sir; not the whole of them.

1669. Do you remember any of them?—There is a part of them, sir, that were here then; they are away in another prison I believe. I took no notice. I was called on to take charge for half an hour or so, and this was the man I had occasion to speak to, and I took no notice.

1670. Could you now recollect any of those that were present?—Yes, sir.

1671. Could you name any of those that were present?—Yes, sir; there was a man there of the name of Spooner. I believe he is in the prison at present, sir.

1672. In this prison?—Yes, sir; he works in the same shed.

1673. Do you remember any other?—No, sir. I don't belong to that part. I was passing up, and this officer, Mr. Moore, was wanted elsewhere, and I was put there until he came back, and I had occasion to speak to the prisoner. I spoke to him in a civil manner, sir.

1674. Are you sure that you did not use any language that might be considered objectionable?—Yes, sir, I am sure I did not. It is not my place to do so. If there was anything wrong it is my duty to report it.

1675. Did you speak to him in an excited manner?—No, sir; I spoke to him as I do to every prisoner, in a commanding manner, although civil.

1676. What do you mean by a commanding manner?—Well, sir, I spoke in a loud tone, in a way to be heard, but civil. I do my duty, sir, whenever I have it to do.

1677. Will you state positively that you did not use any strong, or violent, or abusive language to him on that occasion?—I will, sir. I am sworn to what I am speaking to. I had to speak to the prisoner for idle talking, and I checked him, and he turned round and said something; what it was I don't know. I cautioned him and he desisted, but if he persisted in talking I should report him.

1678. When he desisted, did you say anything more?—No, sir; I said nothing more.

1679. Could you repeat the words that you used in giving the order in this commanding tone?—I told him to leave off talking and mind his work.

1680. Did you call him by his name or number?—No, sir; I don't think at that time I knew his name; I knew the man.

1681. What is your habit of addressing a prisoner here; do you call him by his name or number?—His name, sir; if you don't know his name you will see she man he will speak to and charge him. We know everybody after they are here a little time.

1674. You told him to stop talking and mind his work?—Yes, sir. He turned round and said something. I cannot say what it was he said. He desisted, and talked no more, and therefore I only cautioned him.

1675. That is besides the first order?—No, sir; I

(The witness withdrew.)

J. Moore.

JAMES MOORE examined.

1676. (Mr. Brodick.) Are you a warden of this prison?—Yes, sir.

1677. Do you know Patrick Lennon?—I do, sir.

1678. Was he in your charge last month?—Yes, sir.

1679. Can you recollect the 18th of last month?—Yes, sir; quite well.

1680. On the 18th of May last did you find it necessary to report Patrick Lennon?—Principal warden Hannah reported him on that day, sir.

1681. What was it that led to that? State, as far as you can remember, what it was that took place.—I gave all the prisoners under my charge the order to take their jackets off.

1682. Where were they working then?—In the stone cutting shed, sir.

1683. Is it usual to take their jackets off in the stone cutting shed?—Yes, sir; in summer time, in summer weather.

1684. You ordered them to take their jackets off; did Patrick Lennon object to do so?—He refused to do so, sir, with my order; him and others as well.

1685. Do you remember what passed?—I don't remember him saying anything to me, for I was too far distant.

1686. Then what do you mean when you say he refused to do so?—Because he didn't take it off, sir.

1687. Were there any others who disobeyed the order?—They were reported also, sir.

1688. How many others?—Two others besides him.

1689. Are you sure that they heard the order?—Quite sure, sir, for I didn't speak in a very low tone of voice, for I am pretty sound in the lungs, sir.

1690. Were the others at a distance from you too?—No, sir; one was at the same length and the other was nearer to me.

1691. Were they the only ones that did not take off their jackets upon your giving the order that they should do so?—No, sir.

1692. Did you observe anything take place between them?—No, sir.

1693. There was no signalling between them?—One that was close to Lennon, sir, could talk. One whispered the other. I was the only officer in the shed at the time.

1694. You do not know that they talked?—Very likely there was some correspondence, sir, but I cannot swear to any.

1695. Did you repeat the order when it was disobeyed?—Yes, sir; two or three times, and I saw there was a spirit of resistance, and I called in the principal warden to see what was going on.

1696. What is his name?—Principal warden Hannah, and he ordered him two or three times as well, sir, before he took it off.

1697. Then he repeated the order?—Yes, sir.

1698. Then are you quite sure that they knew that they were ordered to take off their jackets?—Quite sure, sir.

1699. They did not say anything?—No, sir; if they had said anything I was not close enough to hear what they did say.

1700. What happened then?—The consequence was, sir, that after principal warden Hannah came and gave them the order there was a great spirit of resistance on their part, and by doing so they were reported for not complying with the order in the proper spirit and in a proper manner.

mean the first caution was to leave off talking. If he persisted talking I should report him, sir.

1676. Did you say to him that you would report him?—No, sir.

1677. You did not find that necessary?—No, sir. If he persisted I would of course report him, but I had no necessity for doing it. When I spoke to him he left off. I know nothing more about the man.

1701. You were not present when they came before the governor, I suppose?—No, sir.

1702. Has Lennon been under your charge since?—Yes, sir.

1703. Has he ever disobeyed orders since?—No, sir.

1704. Have you had any reason to complain of him since?—None, sir.

1705. (Mr. Lyons.) Why did you order them to take off their jackets?—Because a man can do his work better, sir, with it off; because he has more liberty of motion.

1706. What work were they doing?—Dressing stones, sir.

1707. Were they in the open air?—No, sir; under a cover, in a shed.

1708. What sort of a day was it?—A very good day, sir.

1709. What time of the day was it?—After dinner, sir, between 1 and 2 o'clock.

1710. Was the wind blowing at the time?—A little, sir.

1711. Was it a sharp wind?—No, sir.

1712. Have you any idea of what way the wind was blowing at the time?—I don't recollect, sir.

1713. Was it blowing into the shed?—A little, sir; nothing to speak of; nothing to injure.

1714. How long before that had they their jackets off?—A little before dinner, sir.

1715. Why do you suppose they had their jackets on?—I don't know, sir.

1716. Do you think they felt cold?—No, sir; no man should feel cold at his work. None but a lazy man would feel cold at his work.

1717. For what reason do you suppose they wished to keep their jackets on?—Partly in a spirit of opposition, because they knew I wanted them off.

1718. Is it a rule that they are to take them off and hang them up before going to work?—It is a rule with me, sir.

1719. Had those same men their jackets off before then?—Those same men had their jackets off before dinner, sir.

1720. Had they complained of feeling cold?—Not that I am aware of, sir.

1721. If it began to blow hard, or that there was a steady wind, what would you have done?—I should not compel them to take their jackets off then, sir.

1722. If they asked to be allowed to put them on in consequence of the weather being bad, would you allow them?—I should not compel them to take them off, sir.

1723. If the wind was cold, and that they wanted to put their jackets on, would you allow them?—Yes, sir.

1724. And you have done so in several cases?—Yes, sir.

1725. You do not remember that the weather was bad at that time?—It was a very nice day, sir.

1726. (Mr. De Vere.) Was this order of yours directed to the whole squad of men?—I make no exception, sir.

1727. The order applied to all?—It applied to all, sir.

1728. Who were the two men who besides Lennon declined to take off their jackets?—Mark Hunt, sir, and John Beten, sir.

1729. Were they countrymen of Lennon's?—I don't know about that, sir. I don't know any man's country; it is no business of mine.

1732. I suppose you do not know what offences they were convicted of?—No, sir; that is a thing that don't concern me, and I don't look after it.

1733. All the rest of the body of men obeyed the order except those three men?—Yes, sir.

1734. And they obeyed at last?—They obeyed at last, sir; but it was the spirit of opposition bordering on mutiny, sir.

1735. (Dr. Owen.) Is it the rule for men in work without their jackets in summer?—Yes, sir.

1736. Not only under you, but under other warders also?—I don't know about other warders, sir.

The witness withdrew.

JAMES HANNAH recalled.

1743. (Mr. Brodick.) Are you a principal warder in this prison?—Yes, sir.

1744. Do you remember the 18th May last?—I do, sir.

1745. Were you on that day in charge of a shed in which the prisoner Patrick Lennon was working?—I was in charge of a district, and this shed was a portion of it, sir.

1746. Were you present when the warder James Moore gave orders to the men working in the stone-cutting shed to take off their coats?—No, I was not present at the time, sir.

1747. How did you hear of it?—He reported it to me on my visit.

1748. While the men were still in the shed?—While the men were still in the shed.

1749. What did he say to you?—He told me that these men refused to take off their jackets. There were three or four of them. Patrick Lennon was one.

1750. What did you do thereupon?—I went immediately to the shed and ordered them to take off their jackets.

1751. Did they do so?—No, sir; they refused to do so; they said there was a draught; that it was cold.

1752. Did they say that in a respectful manner?—No, sir, quite the contrary; in a very disrespectful manner, and they appeared to be very much excited.

1753. Were they still in their places working with the rest?—They were not working, sir; they were standing by their benches, but they were not at work.

1754. Was there any concert visible between them; was there anything like a combination that you could yourself see between them?—Well, I should think there was, sir, by their manner. In fact, when I ordered them to take off their jackets, after repeatedly ordering them, I saw them look round the shop to see if the other men had taken off theirs.

1755. When you say "The other men," do you mean the other two men besides Patrick Lennon?—There were eight or nine other men, sir, in the shop.

1756. Who had not taken their jackets off?—No, sir; they had taken them off.

1757. When you arrived all had their jackets off except those?—I could not say, sir; the greater part of them had.

1758. Do you remember if they told you that it was a draughty day?—They said it was draughty and that it was cold, in a very insolent manner.

1759. Do you remember, did Lennon say that?—I cannot remember whether it was Lennon or the other men, but I am almost certain it was Lennon.

1760. What did you do then?—I ordered them to take off their jackets, and they did so after being repeatedly ordered.

1761. Did they say anything when they complied?—Nothing, sir, that I heard.

1762. You left them then?—I left them then, sir, and reported the case.

1763. What did you report?—I reported that those 1757. You only knew of your own party?—I only know of my own, sir.

1758. Do they work without their jackets by any orders but yours?—I have had orders from the highest powers for it.

1759. You have orders from others to make the prisoners put off their jackets for work in fine weather?—In fine weather, sir.

1760. Then it is not you who make the order?—I carry out my instructions, sir.

1761. Do you know whether the same instructions apply to other men similarly employed under other warders?—I do not, sir.

1762. (Dr. Lysons.) How long are you a warder in this place?—I have been warder seven years next August, sir.

J. Moore.

18 June 1870.

J. Hannah.

three men refused to obey Mr. Moore's orders. I ordered Mr. Moore to report on, and I reported two more.

1764. Who was the man that he reported?—A man named Brien, sir.

1765. You reported Lennon?—I reported Lennon and Hunt.

1766. Did you simply report that they had refused to obey orders?—I reported him for showing a spirit of disobedience in disobeying the order of the officer in charge of him.

1767. Did you report them for inciting others to do so?—No, sir, not for inciting others.

1768. That was not part of the charge?—I don't think it was part of the charge; showing a spirit of disobedience to the order of the officer in charge of them was what they were reported for.

1769. Would that report be made in writing?—Oh yes, sir.

1770. Were they brought up before the governor?—Yes, sir.

1771. Were you present when they were brought up?—Yes, sir.

1772. What did they say in answer to the charge?—They merely said that it was very cold and draughty, something of that sort; some simple remark of that sort, nothing more. That is also entered in the report sheet; their defence is.

1773. (Dr. Lysons.) Were you in charge, at the time, of the other sheds besides this one in question?—Yes, sir.

1774. Were there men in the other sheds at that particular time wearing their jackets?—No, sir; I think not. The whole of the shoemakers were all stripped, sir.

1775. Had you given a general order for the men to take off their jackets, or was it done by Moore's own desire?—It is left, sir, principally to the officer's discretion. If the morning is very cold they keep their jackets on until, perhaps, the sun is up.

1776. Then might it happen that in one shed one warder would think it cold enough for the prisoners to keep their jackets on, while at the same time in another shed another warder would not think it cold enough to keep them on, and would order them to be taken off?—There might be a little difference of time, sir, in ordering them off.

1777. Might this happen, that at the same time of the day one warder would direct his men to take off their jackets, and in a contiguous shed another warder would not order them off?—Yes, sir, that might happen.

1778. So that it would depend altogether upon the warder's estimate of the state of the weather?—Yes, sir.

1779. Could you say how does this particular shed look as to the points of the compass?—Yes, sir, it is about north-east I think; yes, sir, about north, nearly north.

J. Henson.
30 June 1870.

1780. North, or north-east, which?—North I think; it is almost north.

1781. Is there any record kept in this prison that would show how the wind was blowing on that day, or what the temperature was?—Yes, I think there is a record kept, but I am not certain.

1782. I did not quite understand you when you said that when you arrived at the shed nearly all the men had their jackets off?—Yes, I think the greater part of them had.

1783. But do you think that there were some besides those three who had not their jackets off?—Yes sir, there were.

1784. There were some besides those three?—I think there were.

1785. But your attention was more drawn to those three men?—Yes sir, to those three men.

1786. Why were not the others reported as well as those three?—They complied with the order sir.

1787. You state that up to the time at which you arrived at the shed, others besides those three men had not their jackets off?—Yes, sir; and those three men I ordered repeatedly to take their jackets off.

1788. Why had Moore singled those men out?—Mr. Moore did not single them out sir. I walked up to those three men.

1789. Did he not report to you only those three men?—He reported to me that the men had refused to obey his order to take off their jackets.

1790. That the men in general had refused?—Not the men in general, but those three men I think.

1791. When you arrived you found that others had not their jackets off?—One or two I think; but my attention was only directed to those three men.

1792. Why did you not report the other two men as well?—They complied, sir; but those three men positively refused to obey my orders.

1793. What reason did they give for not complying with your orders?—As I said before, they said it was cold and dranghty.

1794. Do you think that was reasonable or not?—I think not, sir; for I stood in the particular place, and at that time on the 18th May it was a long way from being cold.

1795. What time in the morning was it?—It was about half-past 7 o'clock.

1796. Half-past 7 in the morning?—I think so, sir; about that very hour.

1797. (Mr. Bradrick.) Was it not after dinner?—Oh no, sir. Let me see. I think not, sir.

1798. (Dr. Lyons.) You may think for a moment as to what hour it was?—I think it was the morning, sir. Yes, it was the morning.

1799. You think it was in the morning at half-past 7 o'clock?—Yes, sir; but the report itself would show the time.

1800. (Dr. Greenwood.) Can we see the report?—There is a record kept in the governor's office, sir.

1801. (Dr. Lyons.) Would you be surprised to learn that it has been stated by another witness that it was after dinner?—I am not quite positive myself, sir, but I think it was in the morning. We have so many reports that I do not remember.

1802. You are not prepared to state positively, but you think it was at half-past 7 in the morning?—I think so, sir.

1803. Would the official report show the hour of the day at which it took place?—Yes, sir.

1804. Who can give it to us?—The governor, sir.

1805. Do you think that there was no reasonable ground for the men complaining that it was cold, and that they would wish to keep their jackets on in consequence?—I do, sir; not the slightest room for complaint.

1806. What object with the view to general insubordination do you think the men could have in keeping their jackets on?—I don't know, unless a spirit of opposition. I don't know that they had any cause to show it.

1807. I could understand if they declined so work, but a combination to wish to keep their jackets on unless to guard against cold, is rather a curious one?—Oh, we have had cases of the kind before, sir.

1808. (Mr. De Vere.) When Lenson refused to take off his jacket and said it was very cold, did he say anything at the same time about his peculiar state of health?—No, sir; certainly not.

1809. Certainly not?—I think not, sir.

1810. Now consider. Are you quite sure that he did not say, "I am suffering from disease of the chest"?—Well, he may, sir, but I don't recollect. I know he appeared in a very excited state.

1811. Have you any reason to believe that he exercised any influence in the way of combination over the other two who were also reported?—No, sir. I saw nothing to lead me to think so; but he cast his eyes round the shed to see if the others would do as he did, I suppose; and from the remark one of them made at the time, Brice, he said, "I will make one of the number seven," that is as much as to say, "We will all strike together, the whole of us."

1812. Was there any relationship of country, or of crime, or in any other way, between Lenson and the other two men that were punished with him on that occasion?—Not that I am aware of.

1813. Had you any reason to believe that the three men were trying to incite the others to a similar mode of action?—I certainly had, sir.

1814. What was your reason?—Their manner, sir; and this Brice's in particular, and the very remark he made, "I will make one of the number seven," that was as much as to say he would strike work.

1815. What has been the general conduct of Patrick Lenson since that time?—He has been quietly doing his work, sir. He would be rather incontinent sometimes.

1816. Has he ever complained to you as to the state of his health?—No, sir. He has been in prison where I am doing duty, and I have no complaint from him or against him.

1817. Does he appear to you to have changed for the worse?—He appears to have changed for the better, sir. He is looking remarkably better, sir.

1818. Better than he was?—Better than he was a few months ago, sir.

1819. Is he looking better now than he did when he came to this prison?—I cannot say, sir; I don't remember.

1820. He has been in hospital I believe?—He has been in hospital, sir.

1821. When you say he is looking better now, do you mean better than when he was put into hospital?—Some little time ago when I saw him, sir.

1822. Do you mean that he is improving since he left hospital?—No, sir; I was not aware he was in hospital, sir.

1823. He never made any complaint to you about the state of his health?—No, sir.

1824. (Dr. Greenwood.) If when you told Lenson to take off his jacket he told you that he was not very well, or that he was not well able to work, would you have allowed him to keep it on?—I should have removed him up to hospital, sir.

1825. If a man when at work and when told to take his jacket off spoke civilly and said he felt cold, would you allow him to keep it on?—I should not be allowed to do so; for they are generally taken to the doctor then.

1826. You have no discretion in fact in such cases?—Well, no, sir.

1827. (Mr. Bradrick.) It appears from this return that the offence happened at half-past one o'clock in the afternoon?—Oh, then I was mistaken, sir. I know it to be immediately after we march in for the work.

1828. You were present, I presume, when the prisoner Lenson was called in before the governor to answer the charge that had been made against him?—Yes, sir.

1829. Do you remember what he said in his defence?—He said it was cold, I think, if I recollect rightly. I think he said it was cold or something of that sort; and he made some other remark—rather an innocent one, I think; it was a very few words though.

1830. Have you any recollection of his saying it was “perfectly right to resist cold-blooded murder”?—Oh, yes, I recollect that now, sir. As he was

The witness withdrew.

JOHN HODGE examined.

1832. (Dr. Lyons.) What office do you fill in this prison?—Principal warder, sir.

1833. (Mr. Broadrick.) How many principal warders are there?—Eight or nine, sir; I can’t say which; I think it is nine.

1834. (Dr. Lyons.) How long have you been a principal warder?—Since last July.

1835. Were you here at the time that a prisoner named Mulcahy was here?—I was, sir.

1836. Were you in charge of a party of which he was one at the outworks on the moor?—I was, sir.

1837. Can you tell me whether at any time he was made to carry slabs of stone on his back?—I know that he was employed with other prisoners carrying stones, sir.

1838. Carrying them how?—On their backs, sir; which is usual work for them on the works, sir, here.

1839. Is it usual?—Yes, sir.

1840. To carry slabs on their back?—Yes, sir.

1841. Is it usual still?—Yes, sir.

1842. How would they carry them on their backs?—On their shoulders, sir.

1843. On their shoulders?—Yes, sir; very small slabs, sir.

1844. But small or large, they are directed to carry them?—Yes, sir.

1845. Do you recollect any particular instance in which Mulcahy was directed to carry slabs on his back?—No, sir.

1846. Do you remember seeing him carry slabs of stone on his back?—I do, sir.

1847. You distinctly remember seeing him carry slabs of stone on his back?—Yes, sir.

1848. Is it possible that he could have carried slabs of stone on his bare back?—Certainly not, sir.

1849. Could any part of the slab of stone have rested on his bare neck above the collar of his shirt?—I wouldn’t say that; I couldn’t say.

1850. You think it is possible?—It might be, sir.

1851. Is there any limit as to the size of the stones that are carried on their backs?—Yes, sir.

1852. What is the limit?—I should say 20 to 25 or 30 lbs., sir.

1853. At whose discretion would it be to say “Carry this stone,” or “that stone”?—Mine, sir.

1854. Are you specially in charge of the outwork?—I was specially in charge of the working party.

1855. Then it would be by your direction that he would have carried the stones?—Yes, sir.

1856. Were you in charge of him at the outworks all the time he was here?—I was in charge of him 12 or 14 days, no more; not on the works, sir; 12 or 14 days on his first arriving here, sir.

1857. How far would he have to carry those slabs of stone?—Perhaps from 80 to 100 yards, sir.

1858. Could he have carried them farther at any time?—He might, sir.

1859. What is the farthest distance that a man would be required to carry a piece of stone?—Not over one hundred yards, for he would rest it. For instance, if it was a stone of 30 lbs. weight he would put it down.

1860. Then he would have to carry it another hundred yards?—No, sir; it is stones for draining we carry. A man could carry a stone better on his back than on the barrow, in those awkward places; and therefore we direct them to carry them on their shoulders.

1861. What is the greatest distance that a man might carry stones?—I would say a hundred yards, sir. You asked me ought he have to carry it a second leaving the office door that is the very expression he made use of.

1831. You have a clear recollection of that?—Yes, sir; but we have so many a case that we cannot retain them in memory, but there is always a record kept of reports; all reports are entered.

The witness withdrew.

hundred yards, but it could not be that, sir; 100 yards is the farthest distance to carry stones I believe for the prisoners.

1862. What would you say now is the largest stone that a man would be asked to carry?—Not over 30 lbs., sir.

1863. What size would that stone be?—A flat stone as wide as that box, sir (pointing to a despatch box).

1864. Mention the measurements?—Perhaps one foot wide by—what can I say, sir, I can hardly describe it to you—perhaps 15 inches by 10, sir, or something like that.

1865. If a man said a stone was too heavy for him, what would you do?—I should certainly use my own discretion. I would not make a prisoner carry a stone if I thought it too heavy, sir.

1866. Do the prisoners seem able to carry stones with facility?—Yes, sir; they prefer carrying those stones on their shoulders.

1867. You never saw a man stagger under a stone that was too heavy for him?—Never in my life, sir.

1868. Suppose a prisoner said he was weak and sick and could not carry a stone, would you dispense with him carrying it?—I would favour him, sir, if I thought he really was.

1869. You would have the power of dispensing him from carrying a stone?—I would, sir.

1870. (Dr. Greenham.) Would they carry the stones on the shoulders or on the back?—On their shoulder, sir.

1871. Not on the back at all?—Not on the back, sir.

1872. That is the only way they carry them?—That is the only way, sir.

1873. You are sure that the stones are never carried on the back?—No, sir.

1874. (Mr. De Vere.) How would the stones be carried that were too heavy to be carried on the shoulder?—In barrows, sir.

1875. At what time of the year did this take place?—Different seasons of the year, sir.

1876. What time of the year do you recollect to have seen Mulcahy drawing stones on his shoulders?—I cannot tell you, sir. He was a very short time with my party. I think it was about a fortnight or something like that.

1877. Was it on ploughed ground or on grass?—On trenched land, sir.

1878. The heavy stones were drawn in barrows?—In barrows, sir.

1879. I need not ask you whether the light stones could not also have been drawn on barrows?—They might have been, sir. I beg pardon, sir, the men generally carry their own stones; that is, sir, it is seldom I order a man to carry a certain stone; that is, they take a stone and give the officer satisfaction if they can, to let him see they perform a certain amount of work.

1880. The ground was in that state that barrows might have been used?—Oh yes, sir, certainly.

1881. Are there not barrows at work on the farm?—Horses cannot work at that place, sir.

1882. Why?—Because there is a space 6 feet of soft bog over the solid gravel.

1883. Are the barrows that you speak of on wheels?—No, sir; two men to the barrows; they are hand-barrows.

1884. At the time those men carried the stones on their shoulders did they wear their jackets?—I should suppose they did, sir, in the month of February, and their smocks as well; it is generally the case.

1885. How long would that sort of labour last; how many hours are contained in your working day?—In February, suppose, from 7 in the morning till half-past 5 in the evening, sir.

1886. Would the same men be drawing stones on their shoulders all that time?—During the day, sir.

1887. Is there any pad of hay or straw given to them to put between their shoulders and the stones?—No, sir.

1888. Did you ever know a man to get his shoulder stripped from it?—No, sir. I could secure a stone to carry and never get a shoulder stripped from it, sir.

1889. Can you recollect any complaint made to you by Mulcahy or any others of the hardship of having to carry those stones?—No, sir; I don't believe the man complained to me the few days I had him, sir.

1890. (Dr. Lyons.) Did Mulcahy ever spit blood while he was at work that way?—Not that I am aware of, sir.

1891. Did you ever hear of his spitting blood?—No, sir.

1892. Do you think he could have spat blood at the works without you knowing it?—He might have done so, sir.

1893. (Mr. Brodrick.) Have you known any men get ruptured in this work of carrying stones?—Never, sir.

1894. Or in the work of wheeling the barrows?—Never, sir.

1895. (Dr. Greenwood.) Have they ever to lift very heavy stones?—Not very large, sir.

1896. How do they lift large stones?—There is extra strength put to them. For instance, those large stones are placed in barrows, sir, and they are lifted generally on the walls by six men.

1897. Lifted on a barrow?—On a barrow, sir.

1898. How are they got into the barrow?—It is a barrow without wheels, sir. It has no sides to it, sir.

1899. Still how are they put on to it?—Rolled on, sir.

1900. (Mr. Brodrick.) Would the men at work in piling stones or trenching, the gangs that you describe, wear flannels next the skin?—Yes, sir.

1901. Was it so when Mulcahy was with you?—Yes, sir; it always has been the case in this prison, sir, since ever I have been in it, with every prisoner, sir.

1902. (Mr. De Vere.) Summer and winter?—Summer and winter, sir.

The Commission adjourned at half-past 7 p.m.

Dartmoor Prison, Saturday, 11th June 1870.

The Commission resumed at half-past 9 a.m.

PRESENT:

THE HONOURABLE G. C. BRODRICK IN THE CHAIR.

S. E. DE VERE, Esq.
DR. LYONS.

DR. GREENWOOD.

W. SPENCER ORLEANT, Esq., Secretary.

MAJOR HICKEY TESTIFIED.

Major Hickey.

11 June 1870.

1904. (Mr. Brodrick.) From what book is this extract made?—It is termed the "governor's medical reference book." Here you see, sir, my remarks on the subject copied there and sent to the medical officer for his reply. When it comes back to me I initial it.

1905. Do you hand in a paper containing extracts from that book and another book called "the governor's interview book"?—Yes, sir. They are extracts from the transactions connected with Patrick Lennon in those two books. Every place where his name appears I have given you there. In those two books wherever his name appears I have given you a copy of it.

1906. Does that paper contain an account of all the complaints made by Patrick Lennon and the mode in which they were disposed of?—Yes, sir; all the complaints made to the governor by Patrick Lennon.

1907. And the mode in which they were disposed of?—Yes.

1908. From what source is this paper compiled?—Combined from the "governor's interview book" and "the governor's medical officers' reference book." From these two books.

1909. This book is entitled "the governor's medical reference book"?—Yes.

1910. And this contains a copy of all the entries made on complaints from Patrick Lennon?—Yes, sir; during the time of his incarceration here.

1911. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you furnish us with a similar return from both your books with regard to Mulcahy?—Yes, certainly sir. I think you have got everything now. I supplied Captain Stoddard with the information against Mulcahy, and against Berry there is nothing. I think he never had an interview here.

1912. (Mr. Brodrick.) Have you a copy of any reports made against Lennon and their results?—

I have, sir. I have got the originals in the next room, and they are being copied.

1913. Then you hand in a copy certified by you of all the reports made against Patrick Lennon with the results?—Exactly, sir.

1914. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you give us similar returns with regard to Mulcahy. We have already the entries of applications made by Mulcahy and their results?—I can give you the same of course regarding him. They are all kept here.

1915. You can give us the reports and the results?—Yes, sir.

1916. And can you give us extracts from this case-paper?—No, I think not, sir. I rather think they follow the prisoners.

1917. Is there no record kept permanently in this prison of what takes place in the infirmary with regard to the convicts?—I think the case papers are kept, but that his medical history follows him wherever he goes.

1918. The case-papers are kept?—I think so.

1919. Will you be good enough to get us certified extracts from Mulcahy's case-papers?—Yes.

1920. May I ask you, Major Hickey, what instructions you received with regard to the visit of this Commission to this prison?—I have them here, sir:

"Sir, Office of Director of Convict Prisons,

2nd June 1870.

"I am directed by the chairman to forward a copy of a letter which he has received from the Secretary to the Commission of Inquiry into the treatment of treason-felony prisoners in English prisons, and to request that the wish of the Commission therein contained may be carried out, and that you will carry out the desire expressed in the sixth paragraph from the time of commencing to the prisoners concerned, on the subject of "the inquiry, which will be three clear days before their visit as referred to in the first paragraph.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,
"FREDERICK PALMER,
"For Secretary."

"To the Governor of Dartmoor Prison."

This was accompanied by your secretary's letter. In my journal in which I keep a copy of everything I do here connected with the prison, it is recorded for the information of the visiting doctor, that on my sending for Patrick Lennon and giving him the option of being supplied with paper if he wished to write, and being kept from labour, and my telling him that I would leave him for three days in his cell to write anything he wished to lay before you, in the presence of the chief warder he thanked me and said he would rather go to his work, as all he had to say was a few words; but on the third day, in the morning, I gave him his option again of remaining in his cell and taking paper if he had changed his mind; of this he availed himself. I rather think he was instigated by some other party to do that. I have a strong suspicion that he was.

1921. But you gave him full liberty for three days?—Yes, at half-past 6 or 7 o'clock on Monday morning I told him all I was desirous to tell him about this Commission, sir, and he thanked me very civilly and said he did not want to write anything, that he had very little to say, and if I left it to him he would prefer going to his labour, as he would rather be out in the open air.

PATRICK LENNON, prisoner, recalled.

1922. (Mr. Broadrick.) Have you anything to add to the statement you made to us yesterday. Has anything occurred to you since?—That I continually complained to the priest, that is all. I have complained to the priest continually.

1923. (Dr. Lyons.) Of what did you complain to the priest?—Of my health; and he never would answer me. I have asked him in the prison and in the hospital one time when I was very bad, and I showed it to him, and he said "You needn't be always thinking about your health."

1924. What did you show to him?—I showed him what I spit up, sir; so I held it beside my bed. When he wouldn't answer me that made it worse.

1925. Made what worse?—Made my feelings worse; it more convulsed me that I was gone beyond recovery. Of course we are to open our minds to the priest more than to any other man.

1926. (Mr. Broadrick.) Did you ask him to make any application for you?—No; he didn't interfere.

1927. (Dr. Lyons.) Why have you such apprehensions about your health?—Why sir, the weather affects me now. I feel sore. The weather didn't affect me before. When I lay on my back I used to feel; that is the way it affected me first. Now, here (indicating the right side of the chest) I feel sore, and this side (the left) is different now. Sometimes when I breathe it is like as if someone had a hold of the inside and had it squeezed up together and it burnt. It is altogether different from this (the right side).

The prisoner was removed.

The Rev. GEORGE GREEN examined.

1937. (Mr. Broadrick.) Are you the Catholic priest who attends this prison?—Yes, sir.

1938. (Dr. Lyons.) What is your official designation?—Visiting priest.

1939. Visiting chaplain or visiting priest?—Visiting priest.

1940. (Mr. Broadrick.) Have you free access at all times to the Catholic prisoners?—Yes, except when they are locked up, that is during dinner time or when the officers are not on duty. Then I cannot see them, because nobody is supposed to be in the hall except the one officer locked up with them. When they have made up their beds at night and are locked up for the night, then, also, I cannot see them.

1941. (Dr. Greenhow.) Supposing a prisoner were to be taken ill in the night and wished to see you, could you see him?—Yes, because I keep a key to the keys of the prison, and nobody can unlock the prison keys unless I unlock them myself.

1942. (Mr. Broadrick.) Do you reside in the prison?—No, within two or three minutes walk of it.

1943. (Dr. Lyons.) As a matter of fact have you been summoned at night?—Yes.

1944. And you found no difficulty in seeing the prisoners?—No.

1945. (Mr. Broadrick.) How often do you habitually 1928. Have you anything to add to what you stated yesterday?—No, sir.

1929. Is there anything further that you wish to state in writing or orally now?—I don't know how to make out these things.

1930. Would you wish to consult with any friends?—I would like to be examined by a doctor, and my friends to be told the state of my health. Not the doctor here.

1931. Is there any friend you would wish to consult with, with regard to what you have already alleged in your charges against certain persons in the prison?—Well, I don't know anyone. There was a man that wrote in London to the governor about me, but then he is a stranger to me.

1932. Now finally, is there anything else that you wish to add to what you stated yesterday, or to what you have put in in writing?—No, sir.

1933. Is there any further complaint against any persons, either here or in other prisons that you have been in, that on reflection you wish to add to what you put in yesterday?—No, the only thing is about the doctor, sir; that is all.

1934. (Dr. Greenhow.) Do you complain of the doctor in Millbank?—I do, sir; the doctor that wouldn't attend to me; the doctor here and the one in Millbank.

1935. Not Dr. Gover?—No, sir; I would like to be under him now.

1936. There is nothing that you wish to add to what you have already told us?—No, sir.

visit the prison?—The chaplain has to go the first thing in the morning to read morning prayers, and I have to go then also. I am supposed to visit all the sick class and the penal class before 10 o'clock a.m., as the doctor would like me to finish before 10 o'clock. Those are the special times that I am bound to visit the prison, but I go at other times for my own spiritual duties. I go at night; but that is not an obligation of the prison rules.

1946. Do you mean to say that you see every catholic prisoner every day?—Oh, not every catholic prisoner; I see, sir, all the sick and all those under punishment.

1947. And with regard to the others, what is your practice?—They are each supplied with a ticket, and that ticket they bring if they wish to see me at any time. There is a box at the entrance of the chapel which they drop their ticket into, then I open the box after I have been round the sick class, and then I go and see them in the evening. (Fitness exhibits one of the tickets.) That is the class of ticket; they have got the number of their cell on it.

1948. Have you ever experienced any obstacle to your visiting the Roman Catholic prisoners freely?—No, sir.

1949. Do you know the prisoner Patrick Lennon?—I do, sir.

Major Hickey,
11 June 1870.

P. Lennon.

Rev. G. Green.

Am. G. Green.

11 June 1870.

1860. Have you ever visited him; I need hardly ask that?—Oh yes.

1861. Has he ever made complaints to you?—Well, he has often made complaints about his health when he was in the infirmary. In fact he used to ask me several questions about his health; and I considered he was nervous, yet I thought him a little nervous about his health. I did not know what his complaint was, or the amount of sickness he was labouring under, but seeing he was a little nervous I used to try to laugh him off, not to make his mind uneasy.

1862. Did he ask you to do anything?—No; well I do not remember distinctly. I always make it a point to see the doctor when he or any prisoner makes any complaint to me, and I always ask the doctor how they are getting on, or what state they are in. I always do that, so that I can have the health of the prisoners always before me, that I may know exactly what to do.

1863. Did you ever make any application to the doctor on Lennon's behalf?—Well, I cannot speak distinctly to that. The general way that I would speak to the doctor is not exactly formally to ask them for anything, but merely to suggest, and in a kind of secondary manner ask them, because the doctors are rather nervous people, or at least a little particular about those questions being asked; and therefore you have to be a little cautious how you put the thing before them.

1864. Has he ever complained to you of neglect on the part of the doctor?—Well, I think he has. Oh yes, he has frequently mentioned it to me; that is, he considered he was not treated by the doctor as he thought he ought to be.

1865. Has he ever complained to you of ill treatment of any other kind, or from any other parties?—Well, he has complained, I think, about the rough conduct of the officers sometimes; the way they speak, and things of that description; but I don't think, of course, that is the usual manner of the officers; some of them, especially some of the Dorset officers, are rough without perhaps meaning to be rough.

1866. (Dr. Lyons.) How many Catholic prisoners are in this prison?—I suppose between 300 and 400. We have an increase of 60 within the last two days. I think the number is between 300 and 400, but I do not know the exact amount.

1867. Is the whole of the Catholic administration in your hands?—Yes.

1868. Are you here all the year round?—Yes, sir.

1869. Have you any period of vacation?—I can take six weeks in the year.

1870. Then you appoint a substitute?—Yes, sir.

1871. You are well familiar with Lennon since he has been here?—Oh yes, I have frequently seen him.

1872. Do you remember seeing him when he was in the infirmary about the 7th September last?—I do not remember. Of course I must have seen him, for I see them all every day.

1873. Did the condition of his health ever appear to you very serious since he has been here?—Well, I could not have supposed so. I could not say that I understood his state of health, but I did not see anything to cause any uneasiness at all.

1874. Have you opportunities of observing the conduct of the wardens and the officers generally to the prisoners?—No, sir, I have not. What they may do behind my back I do not know, but they are always particularly civil and attentive when I am down.

1875. Then you do occasionally see the men at work under their charge?—No, not unless it is in—we will call it some private work of the house—or something of that kind; but I have not any opportunity of seeing them at the public works. In fact, I do not think, though I could go through the works, that officers unconnected with the discipline department are expected to go amongst the men at work, and therefore I never interfere much in those things.

1876. On the whole, do you think that the Catholic prisoners here have all full opportunity for access to the ministrations of their religion?—Oh yes; I do not think there is the slightest obstacle about that.

1877. You do not believe that there is any attempt being made to interfere with their religious observances?—No, not by the authorities; if there is any at all it is by the prisoners themselves scoffing at one another.

1878. That, I take it, would be repressed at once when it became known to, or was noticed by, the officers?—We have had occasionally, but very, very rarely, instances when we thought that there was some little want of respect by some of the officers, but we always got it reported. But at has been of very rare occurrence, and perhaps, after all, I do not know whether it was reality, or whether a man's general bearing, or something else.

1879. Were the officers repressed or corrected for it?—Oh yes.

1880. On all occasions?—Yes.

1881. And those complaints are always properly dealt with?—Oh, yes; they are most particular about that. Any want of respect that I choose to complain of, if the thing can be proved, would be very strictly dealt with.

1882. But you have known instances in which the officer has been repressed and punished?—Yes, there was one case I remember particularly that I had occasion to speak about.

1883. (Dr. Greenhouse.) Will you explain the nature of the case?—It was brought to my attention by some of the prisoners. They said that they had noticed an officer laughing when the men were going to receive holy communion. I took occasion to mention this, and he was reprimanded, I think, for it.

1884. (Dr. Lyons.) What class of officer was he?—Assistant warden.

1885. (Dr. Greenhouse.) Did you yourself believe, sir, that he had laughed at the prisoners?—Well, knowing the man, and knowing his general manner, I thought that perhaps it might not be intentional, because he always had a kind of a laugh on his countenance. Therefore I thought the prisoners might possibly be mistaken about the matter, and I mentioned it that way when I made the complaint.

1886. (Dr. Lyons.) But he was punished?—I do not know that he was punished; he was spoken to—reprimanded. Of course he denied it, and having denied it, of course he would mitigate it, as long as I could not speak properly about it. Knowing the man, and the prisoners not knowing him, that he had that peculiar manner of always having a laugh on his face, I thought they might be mistaken, therefore I put it in that way before them.

1887. (Mr. De Vere.) Did Lennon at any time when he was not under medical treatment ask you to direct the attention of the medical officer to the state of his health?—I do not remember that he did.

1888. When he was not in the infirmary?—I do not remember that he ever particularly did.

1889. Has Lennon ever complained to you of the nature of his work, as being unfavourable to his health?—He complained about the dust in his stone shed, that is, when he was working as a stonemason I think he complained of the dust.

1890. Did he ever ask you to interfere for the purpose of getting his employment changed?—No.

1891. Were you here, sir, when Mulcahy was confined here?—Yes.

1892. Did Mulcahy ever make any complaints to you of the treatment he received either in matters of discipline, or as regarded his health and medical treatment?—Well, it is some time since he was here, and really I do not remember. He was in a delicate state of health at the time, and I remember him making some general complaints about his health, but I do not remember distinctly what they were, and I could not speak positively to anything now.

1893. Pray, sir, will you have the goodness to inform the Commissioners what are the regulations as to saying mass for the ordinary service of the church?—I say mass only on Sundays and holidays of obligation.

1884. At what hour?—On Sundays, at half-past 10 a.m., and in the holidays it is the same hour for the morning prayers, that is half-past 6 or 25 minutes past 6. They do not allow it to interfere at all with the work of the prison. You must be finished by the usual time for going on parade and going to work, so that I generally get there a little before time, because the usual time for saying the morning prayers would not be sufficient.

1885. Have all the Catholic prisoners full liberty to attend mass?—Yes, except when they are under punishment, and in the infirmary.

1886. If a prisoner is under punishment, and that the period of his punishment extends over a Sunday, is he allowed to hear mass?—No.

1887. Have any prisoners ever complained to you of there being any hardship in their being so deprived of the opportunity of hearing mass?—The infirmary prisoners have frequently done so, and I have made a representation about the matter, but it appeared that it was contrary to the regulations of the prison, and therefore I went to further with it.

1888. When did you make that representation?—It is some time since now. Oh, I suppose it is a year or two; but I have not interfered with them since. I got a very positive answer on the question.

1889. From whom?—From the governor at the time.

1890. Have you ever made any application on the subject to the Home Office?—No, I have not, sir.

1891. What books are allowed to the Catholic prisoners in their cells?—There are four: there is a prayer book, the testament, the "Think well on it," and the "Poor Man's Catechism." These are the four books that they are all furnished with. Then besides these they have books to read, that is what are called the "Henary books," for general reading.

1892. Are those books under your supervision?—No, sir; I have nothing whatever to do with them. I had at one time, but it was taken out of my hands.

1893. When was it taken out of your hands?—During the time that Mr. Clifton was governor here.

1894. Can you state how long ago that is?—I suppose it is five or six years since.

1895. In whose hands is it now?—In the schoolmaster's.

1896. Have you the power of procuring for a prisoner any religious book that you may think necessary for him separately?—If they are in the Henry I can; but if not, I can, by asking the governor's leave, provide him with it. He generally gives leave for a thing of that kind.

1897. Has either Leeson or Mulesky ever applied to you specially for books, either religious books or books of amusements?—Not that I remember. Of course as I have not had the management of the books, all I could do when they asked me this question was to refer them to the schoolmaster; or if they wanted a special book which he is not in the habit of bringing round, I mention the thing to the schoolmaster, and tell him to take such a book with him when he goes to the prison for such a person.

1898. And have you found him ready to comply with that desire?—Yes, generally.

1899. (Dr. Lysons.) If there was a book in circulation that you objected to, could you prevent its circulation?—Yes, I can stop any book.

1900. How can you stop it?—By telling the schoolmaster that I do not wish it to be used any more.

1901. By telling whom?—The governor or the schoolmaster.

1902. Have you had to prohibit the circulation of any books?—Oh yes, sir, several.

1903. (Mr. De Vere.) Are there any suggestions that you would wish to offer to the Commission regarding the relation between you and the prisoners, or generally with respect to the religious instruction of the prisoners?—Well, I do not know, sir, that there is any, because I have free access to them at all times when it is possible to see them. Of course the time is limited. They are mostly at work from morning to night, and the only time I have is in the evening after they come from their work. There are great complaints about the book system, but I do not know how it can be remedied unless by having provided a Catholic schoolmaster. If we had a Catholic schoolmaster I should then have more supervision over the books, and see them better distributed. At present all the books are in the hands of the schoolmaster, and it is only likely they will supply their own with choice books and leave Catholics to get what they can. That is a general complaint that the prisoners make, that they withhold many books that might be put in circulation amongst the Catholics. But perhaps it is no accusation which might as easily be denied.

1904. Have any instances occurred in which the schoolmaster has furnished books to the Catholic prisoners which you have found it necessary to prohibit?—Yes, sir. I do not know distinctly that they were on the list that had been approved of. The way that the books are regulated is this: they give me a list of the books. I cannot tell what a book is from the list they give me of the names of the books, because they go under such extraordinary names you cannot possibly guess what is inside. Sometimes you might approve of a book that you would disapprove of, but being approved of by me they would distribute it; but when it comes to my knowledge that there is anything objectionable in a book, I say, "That book must be erased and no longer used."

1905. Allow me to repeat the question. It is a matter of fact that instances have or have not occurred, in which you have been obliged to prohibit any book furnished to the Catholic prisoners?—Oh, yes, sir; several times. In fact I have got one or two on my list now that I shall have to prohibit.

1906. (Dr. Lysons.) Could you name the books?—I cannot name them now, sir. I know that such a thing has occurred from time to time.

1907. (Dr. Greenwood.) Have you known any books given by the schoolmaster to Catholic prisoners which were not on the list that you had yourself approved of?—I cannot say that.

1908. I repeat my question. Do you know that any books have been supplied by the schoolmaster to Catholic prisoners, which books were not in the list that you had approved of yourself?—I do not know.

1909. What you mean is that you have found afterwards that books which you had approved of from the title, were objectionable; but when you have required them to be struck out of the list, has not that always been done?—Yes, sir.

1910. (Dr. Lysons.) Did I understand you to say that you thought it necessary or desirable that there should be a Catholic schoolmaster in an institution where there are so many Catholics?—Yes, sir. I believe the directors perceive, as soon as there is a vacancy, that I shall have one.

1911. What do you mean by "as soon as there is a vacancy"?—As soon as there is a vacancy for a schoolmaster here. They are only allowed a certain number for the number of prisoners. He said, "you will have to wait until there is a vacancy, and then it will be filled up by a Catholic."

1912. How many schoolmasters are in this prison?—Four.

1913. What is the proportion of the number of prisoners to each schoolmaster?—I do not know, indeed.

1914. (Mr. De Vere.) Could you state, Mr. Green, the mode of imparting instruction to "the school," we will call it, within the prison?—They meet on certain evenings; they take it in rotation.

1915. Who take it in rotation?—The schoolmasters; they go from hall to hall during the week, and they finish on the Friday evening. For instance, they will take one of the catholic halls on Monday, the next on Tuesday, Wednesday on Wednesday, and this day and Friday number four; so that they get through the whole prison during the week.

2016. (The witness.) You asked me for the envelope of Moleay, sir. None is to be found here, but here is a copy of a letter I have respecting it:—

" Sir, 18th June 1867.

" In compliance with your request I have the honour herewith to transmit the accompanying medical notes on the case of the prisoner Denis Dowling Moleay, whilst a prisoner in my custody.

H. Watts.

HENRY WATTS examined.

2021. (Dr. Lyons.) What is your position here?—Engineer and clerk of works, sir.

2022. Are men here in the habit of being directed to carry stones on their back, or on their shoulders?—No, sir; it is not my place to direct, because I am not in charge of the men; I am in charge of the work; but I never give an order to any prisoner. I give my instructions to the officer in charge and he directs the men what to do.

2023. But if you said that you wanted a particular stone for a particular purpose, would you point that stone out to the warder?—I should point the stone out and give instructions. Of course certain stones are selected for certain work, and they have to be taken up there by a barrow or other help, that is by means of a tackle when it is too heavy, or otherwise carried up.

2024. But some stones are carried on the men's shoulders or backs?—Yes, sir.

2025. When a man carries a stone on his shoulder or on his back, how he may protection to prevent the stone fraying his back?—Generally, sir.

2026. What sort of protection?—A sort of old nail bag with a little straw put in it.

2027. Is there any kind of straw pad properly made for such purposes?—I think not, sir.

2028. Or a straw pad to have on his back?—I have never known anything made for the purpose. Generally an old nail bag.

2029. You yourself pointed out to us a stone a while ago?—I did, sir.

2030. Is that stone that you so pointed out about the same sized stone that a man would ordinarily be asked to carry?—If a man was asked to carry that stone it would be unusual with him to carry it or not.

2031. But that is about the sized stone a man would ordinarily be asked to carry?—Yes, sir; he would not be asked to carry a heavier stone I think, but they would do it voluntarily.

2032. Did you weigh that stone?—I did, sir.

2033. What weight did you find it to be?—129 pounds.

2034. Do you consider it easy for a man to carry such a stone on his back or shoulder?—I do, sir; that is, a man in health.

2035. Have you known men to carry larger stones than that?—I never weigh the stones. They may have carried heavier than that.

2036. If a man is attempting to take that stone up said it was too heavy for him, what would be the result?—Well, sir, he would not take it, nor be forced to do it. I have never known a case of that kind.

2037. Would he run any risk of being reported for insubordination by a warder, if he refused to carry that stone?—No, sir; if the officer made a report of a man either at the ladder or up the scaffold, but he could not do it, because there are many that could not stand on the scaffold. We have men here that could not do it.

2038. Would a man be expected to carry that stone on his shoulder up a scaffold or ladder?—Not if he don't choose to. We generally keep in most cases inclines. Wherever we can we get an inclined plane up the building.

2039. (Mr. De Vere.) An inclined plane with steps on it?—Yes, sir.

2040. (Dr. Greenless.) How long have you been

MAJOR HICKLY recalled.

2017. (Dr. Lyons.) You have examined the books with regard to Denis Dowling Moleay?—Yes, sir.

2018. Is there any punishment recorded against him?—No, sir.

2019. Was he ever punished?—He was never punished; not even reported.

2020. Does that imply that his conduct here all the time was good?—Yes, sir.

clerk of works here?—Nearly 20 years, but not clerk of works, sir.

2041. When you wish a stone of that size to be carried to the chimneys, or roof of a house, you direct the warder to have it taken up, but you do not tell him how it is to be taken up?—No, sir.

2042. It is not your concern how it is got there?—Yes, sir.

2043. All you have to do with it is to get the stone taken up?—Yes, sir. I have nothing to do with the command of the prisoners at all.

2044. Let me quite understand what your answer is. When you order a stone to be taken up, do you say to the warder, "Will you tell a man to take that stone up," or do you simply tell him, "I want that stone to be taken up"?—Yes, sir; but I never give instructions for a man, no more than when I give instructions for a piece of work to be carried out according to the plan. The officer has an order to carry it out according to the plan, and he directs the prisoners whatever stones will have to be lifted or carried, or otherwise; he gives that order.

2045. What I want to make clear in this: You are not responsible for the manner in which a stone is taken up; you merely order the stone to be taken up, and you leave the warder to determine whether it shall be taken up by hand or lifted by a hoist?—No, sir.

2046. You do not order the way in which it is to be done?—No, sir.

2047. Have you seen such stones as we saw to-day carried up by manual labour?—Well, I think I have, sir; I couldn't say, not from weight, of course, but I believe I have, sir.

2048. (Mr. Bodrick.) You believe that you have seen stones as heavy as that carried up by prisoners?—I believe I have, sir.

2049. How would such a stone as that be carried on a man's back?—It would be balanced by other men on his back.

2050. How would he hold it?—He would have it on a balance on his back; the pad would be secured on his back.

2051. And would he not hold it with his hands?—No, sir; I never saw a man hold a stone that way.

2052. (Dr. Greenless.) Then would not the stone be fastened on his back?—Balanced, but not secured, sir; and if it was an inclined plane there would be a man to assist him; and if it was on a ladder he would take it on his back; but they are very rare cases indeed.

2053. (Mr. De Vere.) In what you have said you are referring to the different works going on within the prison?—Yes, sir.

2054. Not to any of the works outside?—The works in connexion with the buildings altogether, inside and outside.

2055. Does your evidence refer at all to the removing of the stones from the drained or tilled ground?—I have nothing to do with them, sir.

2056. (Dr. Lyons.) Were you here when Moleay, the political prisoner, was here?—I don't know the prisoner, sir, but I have been here from before the opening of the prison.

2057. In what year was the prison opened?—In '60, sir.

2058. You do not remember the prisoner Denis Dowling Moleay?—No, sir, I do not.

The witness withdrew.

MASON HICKET recalled.

2059. (Mr. Brodbrick.) With respect to the dark cells which we have seen, for how many hours have you the power to confine a man in these cells?—In the dark cells four hours.

2060. Under what rule is that; is it a rule of the prison?—A rule of this prison; a standing order of this prison.

2061. A standing order of this prison?—Yes, handed down to me by my predecessors.

2062. We are aware that at Millbank a man may be confined in a dark cell for as long a period as three days?—At Portland also, sir.

2063. At Portland also?—That is the limit.

2064. What is the reason of that difference being made between Portland and this prison?—Because this is an invalid prison.

2065. And supposing that you were to exceed your authority and confine a man one or two days, in what manner would you be called to account for it?—Well, in the first place, I should have to record in my journal that I had done so and the director would see it.

2066. And would it be the duty of the director to call you to account?—To call me to account, of course.

2067. (Mr. De Vere.) Does the director inspect your journal?—Yes, every month he sees all the journals.

2069. (Mr. De Vere.) Have you ever known instances in which it has been done?—Not in this prison.

2070. (Dr. Lyons.) When you say that a man can be confined in a dark cell for four hours only, can he be on the same day re-committed to the dark cell?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

The Commission adjourned at 1 p.m.

Portland Prison, Monday, 13th June 1870.

The Commission assembled at half-past 11 o'clock, A.M.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. G. C. BRODBRICK.
S. E. DE VERE, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENHOW.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

MR. GEORGE CLIFTON recalled.

2084. (Chairman.) Mr. Clifton, you are the governor of this prison, are you not?—I am, my lord.

2085. How long have you been so?—Since the 1st November 1865.

2086. Will you kindly tell me the number of prisoners who are now under your charge?—1,592 this morning.

2087. Perhaps you will describe the different employments to which that number is allocated?—That will involve the necessity for my asking for the morning state, a form by which I can show the distribution of each prisoner. Part of those prisoners, my lord, were employed inside. There are so many in the wash-house and elsewhere.

2088. I ask you this general question then; in what mode are those prisoners employed?—The whole body?

2089. The whole body, speaking generally?—Quarrying stone, building fortifications, doing heavy castings in the blacksmiths' shop, washing and mending clothes, &c.

2090. And household works?—And all sorts of household work, baking, cooking, &c.

2091. Are the inmates in this prison allocated in each ward in reference to the character of their occupations, or from what other considerations are they placed?—No, my lord; when they are first received every prisoner's trade is given in his penal record, but almost invariably it is fictitious. The great difficulty is to arrive at what the prisoner actually is. He will state that he is a blacksmith when he is a taylor, and perhaps a taylor when he is a blacksmith. The result is that we can only allot the men for work as we become acquainted with what they really are. That is one of the most difficult tasks in the prison. They come here stating that they are blacksmiths, tailors, &c., and seldom or ever do they prove what they represent themselves to be. It is therefore necessary that they should be sent on the public works first, and we find out then what work they are qualified for and according

Mr. G. Clifton.

13 June 1870.

Mr. G. Gyles. as we arrive at that conclusion, so we they placed, men fit for quarrying are sent quarrying; men fit for blacksmiths are put in the blacksmiths' shop.

12 June 1870.

2002. Then do I understand you to state that, in the absence of any special information, every man when he first comes here is put on the public works?—Except men who have been recommended by the medical officer as only fit for light labour; then these would be located inside, or only employed at light labour.

2003. What branches do you class under the head of light labour?—Sitting down breaking stones, taking carts about, for instance, supplying water. Light labour men would be employed in drawing these water carts, tailoring, &c.

2004. Then do I understand that in allocating any particular prisoners to any particular sort of employment, the medical officer's opinion would be taken?—The medical officer's opinion would be taken. On the arrival of a party of convicts at this prison the first thing that would be done is, each man is most carefully and minutely examined by the medical officer, stripped for that purpose, and passes a most careful examination. The medical officer then furnishes me with a return showing whether a prisoner is fit for the public works (hard labour), or for light labour; if for light labour I give orders for his being employed in light labour; if for hard labour he is sent on to the public works at once to do hard labour.

2005. Into how many halls is this prison divided?—Seven, exclusive of the punishment or separate cells and the penal class prison.

2006. The cells in these seven halls are of a similar character, are they not?—There are some slight differences. With regard to their measurement, my lord, some are not exactly the same size as others; some are a little larger, some a little smaller. I believe that the one you measured in E. north hall was rather narrower by an inch or two than the next cell; but they are all within a very trifling difference of each other.

2007. Are the halls appropriated specially in such a manner that any particular class of prisoners are classified according to any circumstance?—No, my lord, they are used for all prisoners irrespective of classification; but the Roman Catholic prisoners I try to locate in one hall by themselves, in order to obviate any difficulty that may arise in marching them to chapel of a morning in moving such an immense body of convicts, that the Roman Catholics may go to the Roman Catholic chapel, and the Protestants to the Protestant chapel without any difficulty.

2008. Out of the 1,382 prisoners at present in this prison, how many Roman Catholics have you?—309 Catholics, my lord, and 1,073 Protestants.

2009. You have, I think, a Roman Catholic chapel?—We have.

2100. In which, I believe, an altar, and ornaments, and proper fittings have been constructed, at considerable expense, by the prisoners of that communion?—They have, my lord.

2101. And you have also a Roman Catholic priest resident?—A Roman Catholic chaplain; he is called the visiting Roman Catholic priest.

2102. He resides at or near the prison?—Very near the prison, my lord; not any great distance from the prison.

2103. You have also, I think, a Protestant chaplain?—We have a Protestant chaplain, my lord.

2104. By whom the service of the Church of England is performed twice on Sundays?—Twice on Sundays, my lord.

2105. You have two chaplains attached to the prison?—Yes, my lord, chaplain and assistant chaplain.

2106. And also a Scripture reader, who works under the superintendence of the chaplain?—Under the superintendence of the chaplain.

2107. In addition to what are technically called halls, which I believe you describe, you have certain dark cells, have you not?—Yes, my lord; six attached to the punishment prison, or separate cells, and two attached to the penal class prison.

2108. For what offences are prisoners placed in those dark cells?—For any gross insubordination, such as making use of violent or threatening language towards any officer from myself downwards to an assistant warder, for wilfully continuing to destroy prison property, and making use of violent language; but they are only used in extreme cases, and not for any ordinary punishment.

2110. What power has a director as regards placing men in the dark cells?—I believe, my lord, 21 days, although I have never known it carried out to that extent by a director; but I believe that he has the power to do so. I myself have often awarded 21 days in the dark cells when I was a visiting magistrate to the convict establishment in Western Australia, and held the same position there as a director do here, I believe his powers are the same.

2111. Then you only give that answer as regards the director's power, on the assumption that it is the same here?—Yes, my lord.

2112. Is there nothing defined for the director?—The Secretary of State's regulations state that a director has the power of giving 28 days' bread and water in a light or dark cell; but I believe there has been some subsequent correspondence between the Secretary of State's office and the directors, which I think, but I do not know for a certainty, reduces it.

2113. Confine your attention to your own office, take the case of a complaint made before you as against a prisoner, that he has torn his clothes, what course would you pursue?—Supposing it was to occur at the present time on the works, the man would be simply passed in off the works, and he would be put into one of the separate cells till noon to-morrow, when I hear the reports. Then he is brought before me; the officer who saw the act would have to give evidence; the clothes would have to be produced to show that they were torn. After the evidence has been taken, I then ask the prisoner what he has to say in his defence. Whatever he says in his defence is taken down in writing. I then use my discretion as to what amount of punishment I award. That punishment would entirely depend on the man's antecedents, his general conduct, whether he had ever torn clothes before, whether it was merely done in a fit of passion, whether it was done in the view of showing a spirit of insubordination to his comrades around, which is very frequently the case. A convict often shows a willingness to take a punishment as long as he can excite others to do something desperate. All these matters I should consider before awarding punishment. If it was the first offence and merely done in the excitement of the moment, I should award a moderate punishment. If, on the other hand, I found he was determined to excite others to do something wrong and that it was maliciously done, I should then inflict a heavy punishment.

2114. Take a case in which there has been no such evidence as torn clothes would afford, but in which a man was stated by the officer to have refused to work, you would pursue the same course, I suppose?—A similar course, only of course giving the preference to the word of the officer against the convict in case the convict denied the charge.

2115. Should you in such a case as that examine any of the other prisoners that might have been near at the time of the alleged occurrence?—I never at the time examine another prisoner, because as a general rule they are all combined together. But if I had any doubt in the veracity of the officer's statement, without letting the prisoner know I might single out any man of the party, and have him brought before me at the time of the applications and say, "Did you observe anything while in your party to-day?" and thus give him indirectly an opportunity of stating if anything occurred; and very often in that way a prisoner's evidence will corroborate the evidence of the officer.

2116. Take a complaint made by a prisoner of ill-treatment on the part of a warden. What course should you pursue?—I would take his evidence, whatever it might be. I would then send for the officer and interrogate him most closely as to the allegation.

2117. The warden is not present during the time that a complaint is being made?—As a general rule the officer would be present. Sometimes in trafficking cases, a prisoner will make a complaint that an officer has received money for him. In a case of that sort one has to use secrecy to detect whether the money had been passed out, or if the prisoner had passed it out what proofs there were that he ever had it in his possession.

2118. In that case should you admit the evidence of the prisoner in corroboration?—Not as a general rule.

2119. Have there been instances in which you would admit the evidence of a prisoner?—There have been instances, but not as a general rule.

2120. Supposing a person to be in one of the dark cells of which we have recorded the dimensions, what diet would he have?—Bread and water generally, but sometimes he may be there on penal class diet for a day or two if while on that diet he created a noise in a light cell.

2121. Is that if it is ordered so by the medical officer?—No; it is a part of the punishment awarded by the governor. I may give a prisoner three days bread and water, and 10 days or 14 days penal class diet, or a prisoner not fit to undergo bread and water diet 14 to 25 days on penal class diet.

2122. Are they visited in these cells?—Frequently; every hour, my lord, day and night, and the officer is patrolling up and down the passages, so that if a prisoner makes any noise and is anxious to see the officer, he can communicate with him.

2123. That leads me to ask you what opportunity has a prisoner who is taken ill at night of making his case known?—There is always an officer on duty in the separate cells, and there is a bell in the cell fitted to each cell, which on being touched by a prisoner immediately throws out his number.

2124. Is that the case in all the cells?—In all the punishment cells it is.

2125. But in the ordinary cells is there such an arrangement?—In the ordinary cells there is a hole through which they put their broom.

2126. And the warden is supposed to be walking about all night?—Always walking about. He is visited every half hour during the night.

2127. I have no doubt that you will be kind enough to hand in the details?—I have a number of them ready for you. The visiting is every hour in the dark cells, but there is an officer patrolling backward and forward so that the prisoner may communicate with him, and he again by ringing a bell can communicate with the orderly officer, who can call the medical officer at all hours of the night.

2128. During the time that you have been here you have had under your charge certain prisoners convicted under the Treason-Felony Act?—I have, my lord.

2129. How many of such prisoners have you now?—I have 11 now.

2130. How many of them have you had since you were here?—It has varied at different times. At one time I think I must have had as many as 40 here nearly; just before they were sent out to Australia, but only for a day or two.

2131. Confusing your attention at present to the 11 treason-felony prisoners now here, did you at the time of receiving them get any special instructions in respect to them from the chairman of the board of directors?—I did not, my lord, the day they were received, and it was in consequence of my not having received any instructions with them that I took upon myself to solicit instructions forthwith.

2132. Will you just state to the Commission the cells which you alluded to them. Were they placed in the ordinary cells?—In the ordinary cells. In D hall which you have visited.

2133. At what employment were they put?—They were employed washing.

2134. They were not, then, in the first instance employed, as I think I understood you to say, as prisoners generally would be on the public works at first?—They were not, my lord.

2135. How long did they remain in the wash-house?—Only a day or two. I think it was five days, but that I could refer to and ascertain immediately, my lord.

2136. Then was it in consequence of instructions given to you that they were placed on the ordinary public works?—I then received instructions to treat them as ordinary prisoners, that is to say, that they were to be sent on to other public works; but they were to be located by themselves, and they were to be worked in a party separate by themselves, and they were so.

2137. Did you act on those instructions as soon as you received them?—I did forthwith.

2138. And has that continued to be the case to the present time?—It has continued, with the exception of a day or two, my lord, when there was a great spirit of insubordination shown by them, and at the same time I was hourly expecting a mutiny amongst the other prisoners here. There had been an increase of diet given to the convicts at Chatham which was not extended to this prison, it became known amongst the prisoners, and a very turbulent spirit was shown. At the very time that this exhibition of a turbulent spirit was taking place information indirectly came to me that the treason-felony prisoners were going to assist in the mutiny, and I believe that it was on that occasion that for a day or two, on my request to the visiting director, two of the treason-felony prisoners were removed out of the party as they, I thought, were leading the other men astray.

2139. Who were they?—O'Donovan Rossa was one of them, and I think O'Connor the other. That was four or five years ago, I think.

2140. You think it was four or five years ago?—It was very shortly after their arrival here, my lord.

2141. And at what work were these two put?—The same work as they were doing before, only they were separated from the others.

2142. They were separated from persons suffering under the same sentence as themselves?—Exactly, my lord; but I found from the information I got in the party that they were doing more harm there than they were amongst themselves, I therefore put them back into their own party again.

2143. I believe you then or subsequently moved them from the ordinary cells to the penal class cells?—I did, my lord.

2144. Why was that done?—It was, I believe, entirely on my own recommendation, as the cells were larger and affording better ventilation for them, as they had complained of want of ventilation in those in which they had been located, and as it was just at the time when the disturbances referred to were taking place, I looked on it as a more secure position.

2145. In point of fact are the penal class cells larger than the ordinary cells from which they had been removed?—Much larger, my lord. The ordinary cells throughout the prison, taking them all—with one or two exceptions, are a little larger or a little smaller—they are seven by seven by four feet, and the cubic contents are 196 feet. In the separate cells they are 10 by 4 feet 4 inches, and 7 feet 6 inches high, and the cubic contents of air 325 feet. In the penal class prison they are 10 feet long 6 feet 6 inches wide and 8 feet 8 inches high to the top of the arch, and they contain 366 cubic feet of air.

2146. Is it in the cells which you mentioned thirdly, with the exception of a short period at the commencement of their confinement, in which the treason-felony prisoners have been placed?—They have, my lord.

Mr. G. CHURCH.
18. June 1870.

2148. Then am I correct in supposing that, with the exception of a short period upon their first coming here, the cells occupied by the treason-felony convicts have been superior in accommodation to those occupied by a large portion and probably the great majority of the other prisoners?—Exactly, my lord; and as they did not like the change of sleeping out of hammocks I recommended the director of this prison that they should be allowed a second mattress, instead of one, and from the time of their location there they have been allowed a second mattress, instead of one.

2149. Will you describe the bed clothes of an ordinary prisoner?—Mattress, pillow, two blankets, a rug, and a pair of sheets.

2150. Is it the same at all times of the year?—In excessively cold weather, or on medical recommendation, an additional blanket has been issued to the prisoners.

2151. Of what material is the mattress or the mattress pillow made?—Horsehair, my lord.

2152. Both?—Both.

2153. With regard to the bedding furnished to the treason-felony prisoners, will you state what it is?—I believe, my lord, that they have had an excess of it, because I gave an order that where they were suffering from cold they should have an additional blanket.

2154. To whom had that order been addressed?—To the officer in charge of the prisoners.

2155. Do you believe that that order was carried out?—They have never made any complaint of suffering from cold.

2156. And with the exception to which you have just referred, with regard to the 11 prisoners whose cases we have more immediately to inquire into, is it the fact that they have been employed ordinarily on the public works, and that they have the cellular accommodation which you now describe?—They have, my lord.

2157. You stated to us the course which you would pursue in reference to a complaint made by a warder against a prisoner, and by a prisoner also against a warder. Beyond your decision, what opportunity of appeal is there afforded to either?—If a prisoner in either case feels himself in the slightest degree aggrieved, he asks me to record his name to see the visiting director at his next visit. On that occasion he is brought before the visiting director, who generally very minutely goes into the evidence in the case.

2158. In inquiring into the case, would he do it on the complaint of the prisoner in the presence of the warder in person charged?—He would.

2159. Would the visiting director receive the evidence of another prisoner in charge where it is borne out by collateral evidence?—I do not think he would ever directly take the evidence of one prisoner to support another.

2160. Beyond the visiting director, does any opportunity of appeal exist?—He has the power of petitioning the Secretary of State once a year, and of asking the director to allow him to write a statement to be submitted to the whole board if he does not think he has got justice from the director.

2161. The director visits monthly?—He visits monthly.

2162. Does he see every person when he comes?—He generally goes on the works and sees them all march in or out of the prison.

2163. What opportunity would a prisoner have to represent to the director his desire to appeal to the Secretary of State?—I will give an instance. He was here three or four days ago—there were 109 convicts to see him—they had entered their names to see him—they were kept in that day until his arrival, and each man was brought separately before him.

2164. Had those 109 men their names down on a state?—They had applied to me that they wished to see the director. I merely put a cross against a prisoner's name when he applies to me and it is entered in the director's book, so that when he comes there is a list of the men to see him.

2165. Is it your practice to see every prisoner daily?—Every prisoner daily; that is to say, I see him on parade daily. The prisoners in confinement, in separate cells, penal class prison, and the infirmary, I visit daily; and on Sundays I walk up and down the ranks when the convicts are drawn up on parade, and see every individual prisoner.

2166. Would a prisoner then have an opportunity of attracting your attention as you pass along the ranks, and of addressing you?—Sometimes they do so, but very rarely.

2167. They would have an opportunity of doing so?—They would have an opportunity of doing so, my lord.

2168. Is it your belief that in every case in which a prisoner wishes to address you he has a fair and a full opportunity of so doing?—I think so, my lord. I think so as far as I am able to ascertain.

2169. Does the fact that the prisoner has such an opportunity appear in any written or printed statement which is read to the prisoner at any time?—It is one of the established maxims in the service, and it is likewise known that they have the right. I think there is one clause in the old rules which provides for it.

2170. Is it the fact that the prisoner's knowledge of the opportunity of making a complaint, supposing he thinks himself aggrieved, is derived rather from communications amongst themselves with respect to the system of the prison, than from any official or formal information?—I think it mixes from a knowledge imparted to them at the time they are in separate confinement, the rules at the separate prisons differ from those in public works prisons, and I believe there is a clause in them informing the prisoner that during his sentence he has a right at all times to ask to see the governor or a director.

2171. Is he at all aware, or if so, how is he made aware, that he may appeal in a case of the kind to the Secretary of State?—They are informed that they have a right to petition once in 12 months.

2172. By whom are they so informed?—They are informed in the general instructions.

2174. But there is no formal information given them that they have the power of doing so?—There is no formal information in the rules, beyond what is communicated by the officer in charge of the hall. The officer in charge of a hall is bound to make known to the prisoners any rules or regulations appertaining to them; and the principal warder in charge of the hall, when a new man comes, would tell him what rule was in operation, and that when he wished to see the governor he would have to give his name to the warder in charge of his landing.

2175. Have you instructed the warders to do that?—No, my lord; those things are thoroughly ventilated through the prison by the principal warder in charge of the halls.

2176. Are the applications which are made by the prisoners to either the warder or to you recorded in any book?—Yes, my lord.

2177. Are you prepared to produce them?—I am prepared to produce them.

2178. We should be glad that you will be kind enough to give us unauthenticated copies of all the entries in that book recording any applications made by the treason-felony prisoners who are at present under your charge?—That will take a very long time, my lord. It will all oblige.

2179. Have the applications made by them been so very numerous?—I do not think they have been more numerous than in the case of the ordinary prisoners, my lord; but here is the form of book.

2180. Take George Brown?—I should have to refer back to the date, and then look into one of those volumes for it.

2181. What is the name of that book?—The Governor's Application Book. There is the date, the name, the character of the work, the class is not filled in, and the purport of the application.

2182. And the result?—It is recorded there. I make a note there; that is immediately entered in the visiting director's book, if it has reference to any matter for his consideration, and noted in red ink by the clerk.

2183. Then that application is made known to the visiting director?—Then, when the visiting director comes, this book is brought in, my lord, with all the men's names entered in it.

2184. Will you just read that application?—"Part-" had, 3d July 1866. Regarding the writ of error,
" Mulcahy wants to see his solicitor specially; wants " private books to study medicine; sent up for " authority; cannot be granted to him more than any " other prisoner."

2185. Did you enter that application for books to study medicine?—Yes.

2186. (Mr. Broadrick.) Did that answer also refer to his application to see a solicitor?—"Send up for authority;" that is sent up to know if he is to see a solicitor. The answer was, "Cannot be granted."

2187. What was the result of Mulcahy's application to see a solicitor. Does that answer refer to both applications?—No; not to that about his having private books to study medicine, because upon that the director immediately ordered, "Cannot be granted."

2188. (Chairman.) Is the result of the application to the Secretary of State noted in that book?—Not in this book.

2189. Can you say what the result of that application was?—I think in that case that he was allowed to apply to his lawyer; he was allowed to communicate with a lawyer.

2190. Does that book record every application made by the prisoners?—Every application made by the prisoners.

2191. With the result?—With the result.

2192. Have you a book recording the reports made against prisoners?—Yes, my lord; they are on printed forms, and the whole of the evidence is taken.

2193. Does that book record the name of the prisoner?—It does.

2194. The particulars of the report made against him?—It does.

2195. A statement showing the information on which the complaint rested?—It does.

2196. The punishment awarded?—It does.

2197. Verified by the initials of the governor who decided the case?—Yes, my lord; and in order that the director should have an opportunity of seeing that the governor does not inflict unjust punishments, the whole of these reports are sent up weekly to the director's office and verified by him. Sometimes the director will think I have dealt too leniently or too severely with a case, and will say so.

2199. (Chairman.) Would you read one of the complaints, so as to give us a specimen?—I will give you a specimen: 3388, Thomas Clarke Laby. He was convicted on the 1st December 1865 for 20 years. Warden—reports this prisoner for [insert report], but I am unable to state his exact words; he was very much excited; the prisoner was then asked for his defence and admitted the charge, and added, "That has been going on for weeks; it was well known I believe that this simply results from serious indications of public opinion, as public opinion has undergone a reaction unfavourable to us. That governor Clifton always treats us with consideration when public opinion is, or seems to be, in our favour, but whenever otherwise he seizes with malignant avidity the opportunity of recommending a punishment."

2200. (Mr. Broadrick.) Was that sent before the director?—It was taken before me. He was referring to other evidence given that there was some trafficking going on. I mention this as he is a treason-felony prisoner.

2201. (Chairman.) What was the result?—I thought his defence so highly impertinent to wards myself, that before dealing with the case I sent the report to the director of this prison, and he told me to act entirely on my own discretion; and in the meantime Laby having expressed his regret at the use of such violent language I did not subject him to any other punishment but the forfeiture of marks.

2202. You were informed I think of the appointment of this Commission?—I was, my lord.

2203. And you received a communication, I believe, indicating the course that it was wished you should take with reference to these treason-felony convicts under your charge, with a view to the holding of this Commission of Inquiry?—I did, my lord.

2204. Will you be good enough to state what that intimation was, and what you did in consequence?—I received from the secretary of this Commission, my lord, this circular as to what you intended doing.

2205. That circular you had better hand in?—Yes, my lord. (Efficient hands in the document.)

2206. You received from the directors of convict prisons, I believe, a letter addressed to them by the secretary of this commission?—I did, my lord.

2207. What was that letter?—This is it, my lord:

"Office of Directors of Convict Prisons,
" Sir,
" 2d June 1870.

"I am directed by the chairman to forward to you a copy of a letter which he has received from the secretary of the Commissioners to enquire into the treatment of treason-felony prisoners in English prisons, and to request that the wish of the Commissioners therein contained may be carried out, and that you will carry out the desire expressed in the sixth paragraph from the time of commencing to the prisoners concerned on the subject of the inquiry, which will be three clear days before their visit, as referred to in the first paragraph.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,
"FREDERICK PALMER,
"for Secretary.

"To the Governor, Portland Prison."

That letter was accompanied by this copy:

"Sir,
" 3, Parliament Street,
" 1st June 1870.

"I am directed by the Commissioners for inquiring into the treatment of treason-felony prisoners in English prisons to request that you will be good enough to inform the governors of the several prisons in which any of these prisoners are now confined, that the Commissioners would wish each prisoner to receive three clear days' notice of their intention to visit the prison, and to be told at the same time that he will have an opportunity afforded him of making to them any statement he may wish relating to the subject of their enquiry, namely:

"(2.) Whether there is anything in the treatment, diet, or discipline of the convict prisons to justify any change of unnecessary severity or harshness towards the prisoners confined therein, or of the neglect of the conditions necessary for the due preservation of the health of the prisoners.

"(3.) Whether the treason-felony prisoners have been subjected to any exceptional treatment in any way, or have suffered hardships beyond those incident to the condition of a prisoner sentenced to penal servitude.

"(4.) I am directed further to say, that the Commissioners would wish each prisoner to be provided with writing materials at the time of receiving this notice, in order that, if he thought fit, he might draw up a statement in writing of any fact relating to the inquiry which he might wish to submit to the Commissioners.

"(5.) It should at the same time be explained to him that such statement must be strictly limited to the subject of the inquiry, and must refer only to the facts within the knowledge of the prisoner.

"(6.) I am further to inform you that the Commissioners think it desirable, if the prison regulations will admit of it, that the treason-felony prisoners should be allowed respite from their ordinary employments for one or more days in order that they may have full time and opportunity for preparing their statements, and also that every precaution should be taken to prevent them from communicating with each other on the subject of the inquiry, or showing their written statements to each other.

"(7.) In conclusion I beg to inform you that, as at present arranged, the Commissioners will visit Dartmoor on the 9th inst., and Portland on the 10th inst.

"I am, dear sir, your obedient servant,

"W. BRIDGMAN OLLIVANT.

"Captain Du Cane,

"44, Parliament Street."

On the Wednesday morning, my lord, which would have given them the three clear days as you proposed, being here on Saturday I went over to the penal class cells in which the prisoners were located, and had each one of the treason-felony prisoners brought before me in the room in which I hear the reports, and I told them that the Commissioners were about to inquire into their cases, and I read to them this paper, which contains portions of the Commissioners' instructions, necessary to be made known to the treason-felony prisoners, each one being informed separately:—"You will have an opportunity afforded to you of making to the Commissioners on the 11th instant any statement you may wish relative to the following matters, viz., treatment, diet, or discipline, whether the treason-felony prisoners have been subjected to any exceptional treatment in any way, or have suffered any hardship beyond those incident to the condition of a prisoner sentenced to penal servitude. You will be provided with writing materials to draw up any written statement relative to those matters, which will be submitted to the Commissioners; three clear days will be allowed you for this purpose; such statement must be strictly limited to those matters, and must refer only to facts within the knowledge of the prisoner." I then tendered to them paper, and with the exception of one they declined to receive any.

2208. Who was the one who did not decline?—William Mackay, No. 7022. He took a sheet of foolscap paper, but he stated at the same time that "at present he had no intention of making any statement to the Commissioners." I took down forthwith what each of them said, my lord.

2209. What did George Brown say?—This prisoner declined to take the paper I offered to him, saying, "I do not want to say anything;" wants nothing to do with it.

2210. What did Patrick Doran say?—This prisoner declined to take the paper I offered to him, saying he would think the matter over.

2211. What order did you take them in?—Just as they are down here, my lord. (Exhibiting a paper.)

2212. Accidentally?—Accidentally: just as they came in.

2213. Did Luby make any statement?—Yes, my lord.

2214. What did he say when you offered him the paper?—He asked me first who were the Commissioners. I said that I was not in a position to tell him; that I only knew the names of the chairman and the secretary. I named yourself, my lord, and the secretary, and I said that I believed there were some Irish and English gentlemen on it, some of them medical men, and then, my lord, the prisoner declined to receive any paper, saying that he did not think he would trouble them, that the result of the former Commission gives but little confidence in this one. He then asked if the Earl of Devon was the same nobleman who was on the Land Commission in Ireland. I said, "I believe he is the same nobleman;" when the prisoner replied that Dan O'Connell said at the time it was like a jury of butchers trying a sheep, and then he went on to say, "I made out Mr. Maguire's name in my letter, although you had tried to obliterate it."

2215. Did William Mackay make any statement?

—William Mackay took a sheet of foolscap paper, saying at the same time that at present he had no intention of making any statement to the Commissioners.

2216. Did John O'Leary make any statement?—

This prisoner asked who were the Commissioners. I informed him that I did not know all their names, but mentioned the chairman's and secretary's. He declined to receive any paper, saying that they might have spared themselves all the trouble as he did not intend to make any statement.

2217. Did Michael Shuckey make any statement?—

This prisoner declined to receive any paper and stated that while in British penit he will make no statement: "I have been treated badly and I have plenty of complaints to make; Dr. Blaker knows the state of my health. If there are Irishmen coming over to sit on the Commission they are in the pay of the British Government."

2218. Did Mortimer Shea, alias Moriarty, make any statement?—This prisoner declined to receive any paper, saying that he did not wish to have any connexion with the Commission. He then asked who had appointed the Commission. I replied, "the Government," and then he said, "I do not think that I shall trouble them."

2219. Did Edward St. Clair make any statement?—

This prisoner declined to receive any paper, saying that he did not wish to have any connexion with the Commission.

2220. Did Peter Mohan make any statement?—

This prisoner declined to receive any paper. He then put the same question as Shea and I gave him the same reply, upon which he stated, "That was all the same: I decline to see them."

2221. Did John McCafferty say anything?—

McCafferty—this prisoner declined to receive any paper or to make any statement, until he goes outside, when he will do it upon oath. He further stated that he would not go before the Commission unless by force. He said he did not wish to appear unless compelled to appear before them. He subsequently took a sheet of paper and wrote a statement which I handed to you.

2222. Patrick Downe, what did he say?—This prisoner declined to take the paper offered to him, saying he would think the matter over. I visited these prisoners, my lord, every day, and asked them whether I could assist them in any way, and I told them that whatever they did write they could send up in my presence and I would hand it to the chairman without its being seen by any human being.

2223. Did Patrick Walsh make any statement?—

This prisoner declined to take any paper, and when informed that he would not be sent out to work during the three days said, "I wish they were going to my way." He then asked who were the Commissioners. I replied that I did not know all their names, but informed him who was the chairman and the secretary. He then said that they had made out in a letter to Luby that Mr. Maguire was on the Commission, and asked if such was the case. I replied that I did not know whether he was or not, but I believed that some of the gentlemen were Irishmen. To which he replied, "If they are my countrymen, they are humpbacks."

2224. I believe you subsequently received two written papers with the intention on the parts of the writers that they should be submitted to the Commission, one from McCafferty and the other from Moriarty?—I have my lord.

2225. Have you handed them in?—I have, my lord.

2226. When you placed them in the hands of the Commission, were they in the same state as they were when you received them from the prisoners?—Exactly, my lord. I received one myself this morning, and being quite unable to get upstairs, I sent up Deputy Governor Captain G. Salter for it and it was handed to me in the same condition.

2227. At the time that you asked the prisoners those questions, to which they gave the replies that you have now stated, were they singly brought before you?—They were, my lord.

2228. The others not being present?—Not being present; separately.

2229. Then each one gave the answer separately?—Each one gave his answer separately.

2230. Did you at the time of your conversation with each prisoner, separately or subsequently to that, take down what the prisoner said?—Envisaging that they would each of them have something to say, I had my chief clerk present, my lord, and my second first class clerk. I asked them to take down as shortly as they could what each prisoner said to me, and this is a copy of their notes. (Hands in a document.)

2231. From your recollection of what was said at those interviews, do you believe that to be a correct representation of what each prisoner said?—If not verbatim, entirely the same; but almost in every instance word for word.

2232. (Dr. Greenhow.) Have you a book called the governor's medical reference book?—I have not.

2233. Have you a book in which you refer certain questions to the medical officer for his report?—I have not that book. Whenever a prisoner refers to me on a matter, I take the trouble to see the doctor personally.

2234. Is there no written medical report in such cases. It is a verbal one?—Not a book.

2235. Then you are unable to give us any written reports from the doctor in reference to the applications of any of the prisoners for different work or different food?—No, in cases of different work or different food, I write in the application book, "referred to the medical officer," in my ordinary prisoner's application book. If a prisoner makes an application to change his work in consequence of his not being strong enough, I say "Referred to the medical officer," and [that is copied and sent to him, and if he makes a recommendation to remove the prisoner it is carried out, and if not it is in his power to say it is not necessary.

2236. Does he make a return in writing?—Sometimes in writing and sometimes not.

2237. Are there case books or case sheets kept in the infirmary here?—There are.

2238. Can we have copies of the case books or case sheets which refer to the several prisoners to which our inquiry extends; namely, the 11 mentioned to-day?—I think the whole of that information are to go from the medical officer in the hospital.

2239. Has each prisoner here his own clothing?—Not entirely set apart for himself.

2240. That is when the clothing comes from the washing he gets it by chance?—A man never gets back the same thing from the wash-house.

2241. Never?—Hardly ever, because there are a number of things to be washed; if he hands in a shirt he will get a shirt, but it will not be the same.

2242. With regard to the outer garments, when a prisoner goes away, what becomes of them?—They are sent to the store and assigned to another prisoner.

2243. Do they undergo cleansing?—They are always cleaned.

2244. In what way are the flannel jackets cleaned?—Washed and aired; those that are not washed are ventilated.

2245. Is there a periodical medical inspection of the prisoners?—The medical officer here does not make a naked inspection of the whole body of the prisoners. He carefully examines them when they come, making notes as to any signs of disease about them. On the Sunday morning he accompanies me on parade, and he then sees every individual man, and if he sees a man who is falling in breath or so, he will request me to let that man fall out of the ranks and send him to the hospital, where he will be examined.

2246. Is there any searching of the prisoners asked?—There is.

2247. How often does that take place?—One party is searched every day.

2248. Describe in what the search consists?—The prisoners are marched into the bath room, they are stripped in the bath, and the officers then see each one separately.

2249. How do they see them: do they look into their mouths?—They look into their mouths; make them lift up their tongues, and make them bend down so that if anything is in the anus it may be ejected in the act of bending.

2250. What are the floors of the cells here made of?—In some halls they are made of wood: in others they are made of slate.

2251. Where are the wooden floored cells?—A, B, C, and D, these four halls, except on the ground floor in D and C. The cells in F N, F S, and E hall have slate floors.

2252. Have the treason-felony prisoners been in cells with slate floors or with wooden floors?—When they were located in D hall, the floors were Portland stone; they were first located there.

2253. Have they never been in cells with wooden floors?—They have been all the time located in cells with wooden floors, except during the time they were in D hall. The floors in the penitentiary cells are all wooden floors.

2254. Do the prisoners polish their tin vessels every morning before going out to work?—They do.

2255. What material are they supplied with to polish them?—Some white dust screened here for the purpose, and cleaning rags.

2256. How many cleaning rags has each prisoner?—That entirely rests with the officer in the hall, as many as he thinks necessary for wiping and cleansing.

2257. Is it true that one piece competes what he has to cleanse his drinking vessel and his tin?—He has always sufficient to save some for back.

2258. There is no chance you think of his having to cleanse his drinking vessel with the same piece which he has cleansed his tin?—Generally they wipe their drinking vessel with a towel. Each man has a towel hanging up in the cell and a can of water.

2259. Is there any restriction with regard to visiting the privies?—The only restriction is—well I don't know, I can't say that there is any restriction. There is no actual; if a prisoner unnecessarily uses his urinal during the night he would be reported for the fact and brought before me. I should refer the matter to the medical officer, whether he was under medical treatment, or if there was anything in his case which justified his using his urinal in the night time. If the medical officer was of opinion that it was necessary to use it, the case against the man would be dismissed. But it is a very common practice amongst prisoners to try to annoy their comrades by instantly using their urinal on entering their cells, and sticking it alongside their companions; and every possible means are resorted to prevent their making the halls in an unpleasant state of smell. When I come here 100 or 120 in a night would use the urinal. I then told them that if they used them unnecessarily they would be punished. The result is that it has fallen off to one or two and sometimes not one in the night. Sometimes there is a necessity for it, but if we can find out that it is

13 June 1878.

Mr. G. Olyn. does only as a matter of annoyance, the prisoner is punished.

13 June 1870.

2260. How often in the day are the men allowed to see the privies in the works?—They go whenever they require it.

2261. I understood you to say that they were allowed to go twice a day?—Twice a day is the number if they are in good health; that does not include going to the urinal. But if a man is suffering from diarrhoea he would be allowed more frequently, a dozen times, or admitted into the hospital. The great thing is to prevent the prisoners screaming. Frequently men are caught sitting on the seats buttoned up, simply to avoid their work, keeping men away who really want to go there. It is a man of that sort who is reported and punished.

2262. Are the prisoners supposed to speak to one another whilst at work or not?—They are supposed not to speak, except merely about their work.

2263. But do they practically speak?—I do not mean to say that any kind of supervision would altogether prevent talking, but as little talking as possible is permitted.

2264. Has there been any special restriction with regard to the treason-felony prisoners in respect of speaking?—None whatever that I know of. When they first come here I understood that they were to be treated as ordinary newly received prisoners, and that rule was put in operation, but it has long ceased, and they have not been punished for talking for a long time, also for not working.

2265. If the men do not keep their ties clean would they be punished?—They would.

2266. What punishment would they receive for it?—That entirely depends on whether it was the first or second one of its occurrence. In the first instance they would probably be admonished; the second would be a forfeiture of 42 marks, and if it was found that that would not have the desired effect they would get bread and water.

2268. Supposing a prisoner did not salute the doctors, what would be the result?—He would be reported.

2269. And what would be the result of that?—In the first instance he would be admonished, and it would be pointed out to him that such conduct was setting a bad example, and if he persisted he would be punished by bread and water, or some other means for enforcing discipline.

2270. You tell of a certain number of prisoners as orderlies?—Yes.

2271. What have they to do?—Clean the privies, carry water inside and put it at the prisoners' doors, clean and wash the steps leading from the landings.

2272. Are they expected to clean the privies?—They take it by turns, and wash them out.

2273. How are the privies in the works outside cleaned?—Once a week, two prisoners belonging to the party empty them at a spot where the manure is subsequently carted away by the contractor.

2274. Then they only clean their own privies?—Each party cleans its own privies, and the officer has any positive injunctions always to be fair and upright, and go right through the party, taking two men this week, two others next week, and so on in turn.

2275. How often may prisoners receive and send letters?—That depends on their classification. When they arrive to the prison they are entitled to write a letter to let their friends know that they are transferred, and hope they are well. This is a matter of a few lines. Each of the prisoners is asked when he comes if he wishes to write a reception letter, but if he does not elect to write it, and he misconducts himself, he forfeits the privilege of writing till he is two months free of report.

2276. How often may he write afterwards?—After that, when he gets into third class he may write once in six months, when he gets into second class he can write once in four months, and when he gets into first class he has the privilege of writing once in three months, and when he gets into special class, which is the highest class, he can write to his friends once in two months.

2277. Have those rules been applied to the treason-felony convicts?—Not from the first inasmuch as the directors have always granted to the treason-felony convicts the privilege of writing special letters.

2278. Then in point of fact they have in that respect been specially favoured?—They have been specially favoured in that manner.

2279. Have they been specially favoured also in regard to seeing their friends?—It runs with the prisoner to invite his friends to see him, not with the friends to come here. If a prisoner wants to see his friends he puts his name down and asks me to send a visiting order. I had better hand you one of the orders.

2280. If you please?—(Witness hands it so.) As soon as the prisoner has made the request I see that one of those forms is filled in and sent to the individual asked to be seen.

2281. Have the treason-felony prisoners had more or fewer of these visits than other prisoners?—I think fewer, as they have asked less frequently than others to see their friends on account of the distance.

2282. You told Lord Devon that when prisoners are received the doctor examines them and determines whether they are fit for light or hard labour; is that so?—That is so.

2283. Does he send you a written report, or is it merely a verbal statement?—A verbal statement. It is sent to me and I see the prisoners that are told off for the public works, and those that are pointed out for light labour. I see them the following morning when over parties are received here. I always address a few words of advice to them. I do not think I have ever failed; and I am then shown by the chief warder those passed by the medical officer for light work, and those for hard labour. I give the necessary order then. He enters it in his book, which he makes known to the chief warder.

2284. That is he takes down from word of mouth of the medical officer respecting what each prisoner is intended to do?—I think he also sees the medical officer's book.

2285. Then the medical officer keeps a book?—Yes.

2286. Where are the clothes, sheets, blankets, and other articles that are used in the infirmary washed?—They are washed in the wash-house, but separately; not mixed with the others.

2287. How are they kept separate?—By putting them down at one end of the wash-house.

2288. And when sent to the wash-house are they at once proceeded with or are they kept a day or more before they are washed?—They may be kept for a day or so. Where there has been any disease or anything unusual the matter with a prisoner, the medical officer would make a special note and his clothing would be destroyed or washed separately; but merely ordinary dirty linen would be sent down to the wash-house, and kept until the time comes to wash them with the others.

2289. Are they counted over before being washed?—They are carefully.

2290. Who counts them?—The officer in charge of the wash-house.

2291. Who handles them?—The officer stands by when the bag is opened and a prisoner counts them out.

2292. (Mr. Bradbick.) When did Mortimer Shor or Mortimer apply for the paper on which he has written the statement that we have received?—I think it was the second day; but every time I went to him he said he would not. But I left word with the officer whom I had placed specially in charge of the treason-felony prisoners, that if at any time in the day they asked for paper it should be handed in to them.

2293. Did any of the prisoners ask you whether in the event of their making a written statement they should still be able to make an oral statement?—Yes, they have asked me since whether they would have an opportunity of making a verbal statement. I said I was not prepared to say what course the Commission would pursue; that I was not aware.

2294. Do you believe that many or any of them were under the impression that by making a written statement they would forfeit their right to make an oral statement?—No, I do not think so.

2295. You have no reason to believe it?—Have no reason to believe it, for they did not hint at such a thing.

2296. You did not distinctly inform them of it then?—No, I did not. I said I presumed that they would have an opportunity of coming before the Commissioners, but I was not in a position to say positively.

2297. Do you remember the visit of Messrs. Knox and Pollock?—Perfectly.

2298. And may we take the statements made by you before them and which we have had an opportunity of seeing, as representing the fact so far as they were within your knowledge at that time?—I believe perfectly.

2300. In what respect has that difference been made. Can you specify any privileges which have been enjoyed, any special privileges which have been enjoyed by them, either from the first, or since the date of Messrs. Knox and Pollock's visit. You have mentioned letters already?—From the very first they professed their inability to undertake the hard work that they were set to; but they were never worked to the extent the ordinary convicts were, and of late they have literally done no work at all. No work at all. Here, for instance, in the month of February, I take Thomas Clarke Luby: he never had a tool in his hand; no, never.

2301. How did that happen?—Simply that he expressed his determination not to do any work; that he would not do any. I have tried to use my influence with him; pointed out to him how improper his conduct was, and the bad example he was setting to the 1,500 around him.

2302. May I ask you why you did not employ compulsion?—Well, I had been recommended not to treat these men with any degree of severity, that I was to try and point out to them the impropriety of their conduct, and to lead them to do what was right. I have no written instructions on the matter.

2303. Do I understand you to say that they were marched out to work and did nothing when they arrived at the place of work?—They did nothing whatever; simply kept in company, walking about, or standing at their stones doing nothing. If I happened to pass by they would take up a tool, but from the return kept by the officer, which I have had carefully kept, it is a month since Luby did anything. He was in the infirmary with a bad leg on his hand. Michael Sheehy, none; he was one day in the infirmary. P. Mohan, very little. They have entirely set me at defiance with regard to work and talking.

2304. Did you instruct the warders in charge of them to overlook their idleness?—I cannot say that I instructed them to overlook their idleness, but I told them to notify to me constantly whether they did work or not, and leave it in the hands of the superior officer as to whether punishment was to be inflicted or not. I did not lead him to believe that they were to be allowed to do this with impunity, but that the matter was to be referred to the governor of the prison, and that it would fall on my shoulders if I did not make them work.

2305. How that state of things continued up to the present time?—It has with some of them. With some they have gone on differently. If you would just look at that return you will observe there that some of them have done fairly with regard to work, and others have not.

2306. (Dr. Lyons.) Within what dates is that?—That is from the 1st of February to the present time. It is from the 1st of the year that they have become so very independent as to work.

2307. (Mr. Broadrick.) Have reports been made by you against them on account of their refusal to work?—Yes, there have been reports. In fact that report against Luby occurred about their not working, and when I was left to use my own discretion, I imposed merely a trifling punishment instead of a severe one.

2308. But where reports have been made to you of a treason-felony convict refusing to work, and where the refusal was not complicated by insolence on his part, how have you dealt with the report?—I have spoken to the prisoner myself and told him that it could not be allowed that he should continue to idle away his time, and that if he did not work I should then be compelled to report the circumstance to the director; and I have mentioned the fact to the director, that they state their inability to work; that they have not the physical strength.

2309. And did they request to see the medical officer?—Yes, they often see the medical officer. I believe that the medical officer is of opinion that they are fit to work, the great majority of them. It simply comes to this gentleman, that if I was to attempt to coerce them to work, or to stop them from talking, I should have had the treason-felony prisoners in the cells from the 1st January up to the present day, for they have distinctly told me that they will not work and that they will talk, and they told the director the same.

2310. Have you ever threatened of late to break up the party?—Not for the past two years.

2311. Would not that have been an official means of stopping this refusal to work?—I think there were more grave matters than the refusal to work to take into account in answering that question; that there are a large number, I have no hesitation in saying, of men that I believe sympathise with these men here.

2312. Do you mean amongst the convicts?—Amongst the convicts. I believe that their distribution amongst the convicts might have been of serious consequence, for I am led to believe that in cases of trafficking the ordinary prisoners have been implicated with them, and as I also have the Manchester men here, if they were distributed it would not only place me in an awkward position, but endanger their safe custody.

2313. (Dr. Lyons.) Who are the Manchester men that you mention?—The men sentenced for life for the murder of Brett.

2314. (Mr. Broadrick.) I presume that you have in this prison other prisoners belonging to the educated classes as they are called?—I have.

2315. Such as lawyers, physicians, and perhaps clergy?—I have even an M.P.

2316. Are they in any way treated differently from other convicts?—Not the slightest exception. The only way in which I could maintain my position of governor of this prison is by endeavouring to mete out justice to all and not to recognise any man from his former position, and there is not the slightest difference whatever made.

2317. Then you have never formed such persons into a separate working party?—Never.

2318. I think you stated that the rule of silence as the public works was formerly enforced against the treason-felony prisoners?—It was endeavored to be enforced. It was never strictly accomplished, but some of the treason-felony convicts were reported during the first months they were here, for breaking that rule.

2319. Do I understand you to say that now they are virtually permitted to talk freely?—Well, I must say they are virtually so. They are virtually permitted to do so now from the mere fact of the impossibility of preventing them, the alternative is that they must either be confined under punishment, or be allowed to talk.

Mr. G. Clayton.

26. G. C. O'Connell.

2320. So that if they had continued working in the open air, or not working in the open air, it would have been possible for them to have conversed with respect to the objects of this Commission?—It would. In fact I believe that it has been a subject of discussion for the last month or more.

2321. Would it be possible for them to communicate with each other in the cells in which they are now confined?—It would, sir, because in order that they should be kept distinctly to themselves they collect each other's slops, and I have allowed them to be kept entirely to themselves, so that they should settle, as they say, placed in a cell next to a murderer or a robber.

2322. Then you think it possible that communications with respect to the objects of this Commission could pass between them?—Not since I gave them notice, for I have had an officer there. They have had no means of communicating with each other since the day I informed them, but on the day before, on Friday, one of them went out to exercise, for I have given them all the exercise I could, and he commenced shouting to Luby. He knew which must be Luby's cell, and tried to shout to him, so I had him removed to a yard further away.

2323. He shouted out?—He shouted out to Luby, called him by his name, and shook his cell door as a sort of signal to the others.

2324. You have spoken of treason-felony convicts being allowed to receive letters more frequently than others?—Far more frequently.

2325. Is there any other privilege that comes to you as having been granted to them and not granted to other prisoners?—The medical officer some time ago recommended them for an addition of diet, that was two ounces of bread per diem, which was immediately sanctioned by the director, and has since been in operation.

2326. Are the whole 11 prisoners included in that increase?—The whole; I think there was no exception. I am speaking from memory, but I think there was no exception. I can ascertain it in one moment. And they have not been confined in writing their letters to merely lines, they have written them all over the paper, so that they might get as much in a sheet as they liked, which no other prisoner is allowed.

2327. Have they ever been punished by their letters being withheld?—They have.

2328. Is that an ordinary mode of punishing prisoners?—It is as regards writing or receiving letters. For instance, if a letter is so full of public news that it cannot be passed in, in the case of the treason-felony prisoners, I have consulted the superior authorities, and I have acted on their advice as to whether it should be returned to the writer or should be suppressed, and I write to say that it had been suppressed; or sometimes a letter in the first half sheet may contain public news and the rest not; then I have taken off that half sheet and retained possession of it, and handed the prisoner the other part, telling him that what I kept contained public news.

2329. Have letters containing public news been frequently received in this prison addressed to treason-felony convicts?—All their letters contain public news more or less of everything going on outside.

2330. Have letters often been withheld from treason-felony prisoners as a punishment and not by reason of their containing public news?—Never; never one letter as a punishment. A prisoner may be repelled, and that deprives him of the privilege of receiving a letter by reducing him to another class; but it has never been a part of the punishment I have awarded a prisoner, to be deprived of his letter; but with regard to the treason-felony prisoners, they have had an immense number of additional letters granted to them by the director. I have not power to give leave for a special letter. I write up and request the director's permission, and he has always granted it to the treason-felony prisoners except when their conduct has been bad. Then he says, "I will withhold this until I have some earnest of your improvement."

2331. Except refusing to work, what has been the general conduct of these treason-felony convicts. Confining yourself to the 11 you have now in your charge, what has been their general prison character, excepting in respect of the persistent ill-will to which you have referred?—Well, if regarded by the same standard that we judge of other prisoners by, it has been most highly inordinate throughout in manner, and language, and general bearing. They style themselves "political prisoners," and upon that assumption they assume this power to take and do anything and set you at defiance. For instance, when I went around to-day to ask these prisoners for their reports I did not expect any of them to salute me, but I did think, as an act of courtesy, that they would have put their hands to their sides. They stood with their hands behind their backs. I have been often told by some of them, "We shall treat you as so much dirt under our feet."

2332. Was not their conduct materially improved after the removal of O'Donovan Rossa?—It was materially improved for a short time; but we have a prisoner who came here afterwards who, although always civil and respectful to myself, is the most dangerous prisoner amongst them; that is McCaffery. I do not think he is at all regarded favourably by his comrades; but I think his conduct has been a means of leading many of those men into trouble since the removal of Rossa. McCaffery came a short time, I think, after the removal of O'Donovan Rossa. He came in May 1868; the others came in May 1866.

2333. Supposing a prisoner commits an offence punishable by confinement in a dark cell, would the warden assign him to the dark cell before he was brought before you?—Certainly not.

2334. To what kind of cell would the warden assign that man before he was brought before you?—One of the ordinary punishment cells that you saw in the separate cells. If a man committed himself on the public works he would be immediately placed there. The principal warden would report to me that he had placed number so and so in such a cell, and ask "Have you my authority, sir, to keep him there till 12 to-morrow?"

2335. Is it your practice before placing a man in a dark cell to confront him with the warden?—Invariably. No prisoner is assigned to a dark cell until he is brought before the governor and has an opportunity of examining the warden who brings the charge against him.

2336. That will apply to other cells besides the dark cells?—It will. No prisoner can be placed in a punishment cell until the punishment has been awarded by the governor.

2337. Does the director see the prisoner in your presence?—He does.

2339. With regard to the right of petitioning the Home Secretary, is any distinct intimation made to the prisoners that they possess that right?—Well, I cannot say that in a public works prison I have ever known any direct intimation having been made of it, but that it is distinctly understood by all prisoners that they possess that right, and whenever they come to the prison they put their names down and ask me to be allowed to petition the Secretary of State. I refer to the penal record, and grant the same if he is due.

2340. What is the meaning of that?—A petition is only allowed once in the 12 months, so that if he puts his name down when he is not due he is informed that he will have to wait until 12 months have elapsed. He can only write a petition once in 12 months.

2341. Do you mean that if he has petitioned this month on one subject, for instance, the justice of his sentence, that he cannot petition for a year on another subject, as for instance some alleged harshness on the part of yourself or your subordinates?—That would be an appeal to the director. He cannot appeal to the first instance to the Secretary of State. He cannot write a petition to the Secretary of State on his treatment here. He can only petition the Secretary of State about his sentence and his case, but if he wants to write a petition to the Secretary of State about cruel treatment here, he must get that permission from the director.

2342. Then do I understand you to say that his right of petitioning the Home Secretary on his alleged maltreatment in prison depends on the discretion of the director?—On the discretion of the director.

2343. I observe that some prisoners have been for a second period of imprisonment confined at Millbank?—Yes.

2344. Under what circumstances does that happen?—Where a man grossly misconducts himself he is tried by the director, and it is optional with the director to make him go through a course of solitary confinement at Millbank, or to consign him to our penal class prison here. Sometimes it is advantageous that a man should be moved away and go through his solitary confinement at Millbank.

2345. Do you mean in order to break up his associations?—To break up his associations, get him away from here.

2346. Do you find as a matter of your own experience that men whose habits were previously solitary, break down earlier than other men when they are employed on the public works?—I think not. I think the reverse. I think the relaxation from brain work, and undertaking the physical work as a general rule an improvement. I have seen that many gentlemen have left in a much healthier condition than when they arrived here, and they have been employed at stone-dressing or navvies' work, and work of any description, and as a general rule the prisoners greatly prefer the open air work to the washhouses and places of that sort where they are shut up. As a general rule certainly during the whole of the summer months they prefer being at work on the public works.

2347. (Chairman.) Can you state any instance in which, under orders received from superior authority, the dietary of the treason-felony convicts has been varied from that which was given to them according to the regulations previously in force?—I know that there are two cases, my lord.

2348. (Mr. Bredrick.) Look at that paper and state the dates at which any changes were made in the nature of the dietary?—They were, my lord, on both occasions.

2349. Will you be good enough to specify the dates?—On the 29th December 1863, on the recommendation of the governor and medical officer, the ordinary supper loaf of six ounces issued to the treason-felony prisoners was increased to nine ounces, and the portion of tea given to them instead of gruel. One or two of them since have asked to have gruel back instead of tea.

2350. (Chairman.) Those alterations were made by order of the visiting director?—Yes, my lord, and again on the 19th March John O'Leary was recommended by the governor and medical officer to be allowed to have meat instead of soup, and that was approved of.

2351. (Mr. De Vere.) You have stated at considerable length and given returns to show the small amount of work that those men have been doing?—Yes.

2352. Over what period does that extend?—Since the 1st of January they have shown this excessive dislike of working at all; but from the date of their reception here up to the present time their work has been very small indeed, not at all excessive in any way.

2353. What proportion does it bear. Has it been half the work done by other convicts, or one-third, or two-thirds?—Well, I should not say more than one-fourth, that they have ever done more than one-fourth of what is performed by ordinary convicts.

2354. I think you stated that the form in which their refusal to work took place was their stating their inability to work?—Their inability to work; one had a pain in the back, another had rheumatism, another one complaint or another. McCafferty unhesitatingly tells you he "won't work," and I might name others.

2355. Did you refer those cases of complaint of their inability to work to the medical officer?—The medical officer with regard to those men sees them almost daily. I have mentioned those facts to the medical officer frequently. I see the medical officer every day about these slaves, and we have conversations about them. Whenever they are physically unfit for work he has them taken to the hospital.

2356. When a man would refuse to work on the ground of inability he would make that statement to the warden in charge in the first instance?—Whenever the warden would check him for idleness, he would say I am suffering from pain in the back, or rheumatism, or anything else, it would be brought under my notice, and I would direct the attention of the medical officer to it.

2357. In what form would it come before you; would the warden report it to you, or would the warden first punish the person who refused to work, and then refer the offence to you?—Certainly not. If a prisoner refused to work and did not work, he would be reported in the ordinary manner; I should make inquiry, and if I then thought he was not able to work I should refer to the medical officer.

2358. In what way has the plea of inability to work come before you?—Frequently in that manner, before the 1st of January.

2359. And since the 1st January, how has it come before you?—Since the 1st January this constant idleness has only been mentioned to me by the warden. They have not been reported for it because I found that in punishing one man they made it the case of all. If I was to punish McCafferty to-day for doing little work, every one of these men would refuse to go to work; they would all refuse. Then I should be placed in the position of having to punish these men; when they first come here you will see by the reports that they were punished in many instances for conduct of that sort, but of late they have not been punished.

2361. Have you taken any action on these reports?—I have mentioned the circumstances to the superior authorities when they visited the prison. I have mentioned it to the chairman or surveyor-general of prisons. I have mentioned to the director that I found it utterly impossible to make these men work without punishment, and that if I punished one it would require punishing the whole, and that they distinctly stated that if they were punished none of them would do any more work; that it would throw on the hands of the government keeping the whole of these men in their cells; they have distinctly stated that they would not work; some of them, as you will see, have endeavoured to do a little up to the present time, but now they are doing simply nothing; they are simply under custody.

2362. To whom have they made the statement that they would not work?—They have stated it to myself, individuals amongst them, that they would not do any more work.

Mr. G. Clyn.

18 June 1872.

2363. That is since the 1st January?—Since the 1st January.

2364. If an ordinary convict—not a treason-felony convict—refused to do any work when out on the public works, what course would be taken with respect to him?—He would be immediately reported, and if it was the first time he had been reported he would probably have a severe admonition, and be told that if he attempted to show this spirit again he would be punished. If he persisted in that course he would be punished most severely—most severely.

2365. Have you given any directions to the officer or warden to treat those men when refusing to work, in an exceptional manner?—I have. I told them not to interfere with them, for this reason, that if the officer should say one word to them they turn round on him and abuse him in the most unfair manner, and I have the greatest difficulty in getting officers to take charge of that party. I have no hesitation in saying that all the officers that have been over these men would have gladly sacrificed their position in the service to get away, they felt themselves so harshly spoken of in my presence, and in the presence of the director, when a report has been made; told to their faces that they were liars, and things of that disgraceful character. It is with the greatest difficulty that I can get an officer to perform the duty, and I have always endeavoured to select men known to me as fair men, with even tempers who could put up with an immense amount of annoyance. I believe they have been aggrieved and injured to an extent beyond any description: in fact the officers have over and over appealed to me against it, and I have simply told them to show forbearance and maintain their temper as far as they could, and not find fault, if they did not work, instead of ordering them, if they disobeyed, and sending them in immediately under report, I said, "Tell them to go on, and if they do not do so the first time mention it to me and leave the responsibility with me, and avoid in any way exciting them," because the grievance of one is immediately made the grievance of the whole.

2366. You have spoken of a book in which reports against the prisoners are entered?—I have.

2367. Does that book contain reports of this continued refusal to work, and of this communicating amongst themselves contrary to discipline?—There are isolated cases where they have been reported, but I have satisfied myself in reporting the matter verbally to superior authority.

2368. There are cases?—There are cases. In my absence, when I was ill in bed, this day fortnight, two of these men were seen skylarking, and were told to go on with their work, and they deliberately told the officer that they would not. These men were reported and they made the same reply. I can produce the report if you wish at this moment, and you will see the nature of their replies. The case was heard by Captain Salter in my absence through illness.

2369. Would you explain what you call "skylarking"?—Idling about and talking, and laughing, and refusing to do anything.

2370. I gather from what you say that there is not a very kindly feeling between those treason-felony prisoners, and the officers in charge of them, is that the case?—I am afraid it extends to me, and not only to the officers who are immediately over them.

2371. I am now merely referring to the wardens in charge of them?—Except in two instances, there was a warden named Partridge, who is now superannuated, towards whom they never expressed any unkind feeling; but he was one of those whom I told if he had fault to find not to do so, but to tell me and leave the responsibility to me. When these men did not work, I frequently appealed to their good sense, and pointed out to them the bad example that they were setting to the criminal class around them, who at a moment's notice might be seized with a spirit of insubordination, and place not only their lives, but those of everybody else in jeopardy by creating a rioting.

2372. Have the treason-felony prisoners ever complained to you of insolent language or harsh treatment on the part of a warden?—Frequently, constantly, constantly. I have endeavoured on all these occasions to inquire into and see if there was any truth in the accusations. But they will put it in this manner; supposing an officer reports a prisoner for insubordination, this has often occurred; I have taken the officer's statement carefully; I have then asked the prisoner what he had to say in his defence against the charge; his defence is in most cases an entire contradiction of the evidence of the officer. I have said, "Well, I can only deal with this case on the evidence of the officer." "Then you mean to call me a liar." I said, "I never intimated that you were a liar, I simply said that I am dealing with facts, and here are two officers who state that such and such an event occurred, and you in your defence distinctly deny that it did; I can only deal with the merits of the case on the evidence of these two officers." Now that is exactly the position in which a warden has often been placed.

2373. Take the case of a complaint laid before you by a prisoner of the use of insolent language towards him on the part of a warden. If there was not a second officer present, and the misconduct was denied by the officer charged, how would you deal with the case?—I should take the report of the officer and accept his evidence as being correct; and if the prisoner was dissatisfied with my decision he would have an opportunity of appealing to higher authority, who would go into the merits of the case himself and judge whether I had come to a right conclusion.

2374. Why would you assume that the statements of the prisoner was always false and the statements of the warden always true?—Well, I can only answer a question of that sort from the experience that I have acquired amongst prisoners. I am now not referring exclusively to the treason-felony prisoners, but prisoners generally. They are always endeavouring to tell the most egregious lies to bring forward complaints against their officers; if you once listen to these complaints, get up in this manner, there would be no maintaining discipline; therefore the benefit is generally given to the officer. But if, for instance, I have a complaint against an officer whom I know to be an excitable man, an irascible man, I should make due allowance for it, and probably the prisoner would be simply admonished to be more careful in future, not letting him know that I know the officer's character.

2375. You mentioned one warden who seemed to be acceptable?—One warden named Partridge.

2376. What countryman was he?—He was an Englishman.

2377. Have you as a matter of fact any Irish wardens?—A good many of them.

2378. Are your wardens all Protestants?—No, a good many of them are Roman Catholics. It was ordered in my original instructions that Protestant officers of unexceptionable character were to be placed over the treason-felony prisoners, and I have endeavoured as far as in my power to select men of exemplary character.

2379. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you say Protestant officers?—Protestant officers.

2380. (Mr. De Vere.) You spoke of the dark cells being visited every hour day and night?—Every hour day and night.

2381. Who visits them at night?—The principal warden. During the night time there is a principal warden who is in charge of the prison, and all the subordinates are under his orders, and he is the only man entrusted with the master key. He has a key secured to his person which enables him to go to any part of the prison. It is the principal warden who visits the dark cells accompanied by the night patrol, who is in the body of the hall to which the dark cells are attached.

2382. Is there only one principal warden whose duty it is to visit the dark cells during the night?—

Only one. He is never addressed; he is on duty the whole night long.

2383. Would it be part of his duty to rouse up the prisoner from sleep every time he visited him?—If he was perfectly satisfied that a man was asleep in a natural sleep I do not think he would wake him, though his orders are that he is to satisfy himself that the man is all right, and get a reply to his name. In the strict letter of the rule or order, he is to get from the man "I am all right."

2384. Can you tell me, practically, how this visit is accomplished. I do not ask you the directions given, but, practically, does the warder call up the man and address him?—He will take his lantern into the cell, look at the man's face, shake him gently, when the convict replies "All right," and the officer goes out.

2385. And does he shake him?—Yes, and if the officer did not do that I should fear him for not carrying out the order.

2386. (Dr. Lysons.) I did not quite understand, Mr. Clifton, what you said about the right of appeal. How far can the prisoners' appeal against alleged maltreatment of them?—In the first place they would appeal to me. They would put their names down in the ordinary manner to see me. They would come up and say, "Sir, I wish to make a complaint against such an officer." "Very well," I would say; "name the officer; what is the complaint?" He would state the complaint. I would send for the officer immediately and say in the presence of the prisoner, "This is a prisoner's complaint of your having made use of such-and-such language."

2387. I refer more particularly to cases wherein the prisoner is supposed to have to appeal against harsh treatment to the Secretary of State?—He would appeal to the director to be allowed to send a statement of the treatment he was receiving here to the Secretary of State; and it would rest with the Directors of convict prisons whether they would sanction his making the appeal or refuse it; frequently they grant it, and it goes on to the Secretary of State accompanied by the remarks of the Governor and the Director, and such evidence as can be adduced.

2389. May I ask you what course you took with the treason-felony prisoners since Saturday last?—On the receipt of the secretary's note intimating that you could not be here on Saturday, I immediately telegraphed off to the Director, "Have just received notice from the Commissioners that they will not be here until Monday morning. The treason-felony prisoners have been detained in their cells since Wednesday morning. Shall I keep them there until Monday morning?" The reply to that was from the chairman himself, "Continue to keep them separate, giving them sufficient exercise. Communicate with the Roman Catholic priest as to service on Sunday, and make arrangements to carry out the object, without interfering with the necessary religious duties on Sunday." Upon getting this reply I placed myself immediately in communication with Mr. Poole, who stated that unless they could attend mass in the chapel that he was not in a position to give them any religious service in their cells. This was my telegram then to the chairman; "The visiting prison states that unless the prisoners can attend mass he does not think it necessary to give them a special service." I did not receive any reply to that, and seeing that the instructions of the Commissioners were imperative about their being kept separate, I took upon myself the responsibility of continuing to do so, for I had no possible means of doing so if they went to chapel.

2390. (Chairman.) That is an official communication?—It is an official communication, my lord, and on visiting the cells this day, these prisoners asked by whose authority they were kept in. I made use of the Commissioners' name in that case, because the Commission had instructed me to keep them from the means of communicating with each other, and the only means by which I could do that was to keep them locked up in their cells.

2391. (Dr. Lysons.) Am I to understand that you threw on the Commission altogether the onus of these men being confined?—Certainly, because how else could I prevent them from communicating with each other.

2392. Was it within your discretion after the receipt of this direction by telegram to allow these prisoners to go to mass or not yesterday?—I think it rested with me, and that the object of the instruction issued by the Commission could not have been carried out if they had gone to mass.

2393. I ask you again, did you consider yourself at liberty, so far as directions from your head quarters were concerned, to allow these prisoners out to mass, or not, as you thought fit?—I think the chairman's reply was that if it was possible that any arrangement could be made by which they could have gone to mass, that I should have been at liberty to have allowed them, but this was impossible, as they were to be kept locked up separately. I consulted with the priest, who was entirely of my opinion, that there was no way of preventing their communicating with each other if they went to mass, and by allowing them to go to mass the object of the instruction would have been defeated. I have acted on my own discretion, as I received no reply.

2394. How many Catholic prisoners have you?—308.

2395. Do you think it would have been possible to allow these men to attend mass, and to have so arranged them as to prevent their communicating with one another?—The idea suggested itself to me, but I thought it would be so repugnant to the feelings of the men themselves, that they should go to a religious service and yet be so dogged and watched that it would be paying better respect to the feelings of the men to keep them in their cells.

2396. Would it have been possible so to have distributed them amongst the other prisoners that they could be freely allowed to attend to their religious worship?—It could have been for a part of the service, but they would all have to approach each other during the administration of the sacrament, and I think there were a large number in the chapel who would have gladly added the treason-felony prisoners in communicating with each other had they gone there.

2397. Was there any reason for thinking that these men intended to approach the sacrament that day?—Well, I did not ask Mr. Poole that question.

2398. Do you know as a matter of fact that the treason-felony prisoners sit together during divine service?—They always march to the chapel before the other prisoners.

2399. Together?—All together, and they sit on the two first forms in front, and they are not marched away again until the other prisoners are removed.

2400. (Dr. Greenhalgh.) Were any instructions given to the effect that the treason-felony prisoners were to be kept separate from others during divine service?—There were definite instructions given on the matter, and it was even contemplated separating them altogether from the others, because on two or three occasions trafficking has gone on during divine service.

2401. (Dr. Lysons.) You used that word "trafficking," two or three times, it seems to be a special term here; what do you mean by it?—A prisoner tries to pass a letter along a seat from one to another.

2402. It does not mean anything connected with purchase and sale?—Well, it does. Men always scheme to get tobacco, and would pass it from one to another. If a prisoner can give another prisoner an ounce of tobacco, that prisoner will in return let him give him a portion of his bread for so many consecutive days, so that there is a regular system of barter between them in that way. It is impossible almost to explain to the Commission the great amount of scheming that is going on to avoid supervision. I thought as you did, Doctor Lyons, with regard to the possibility of taking those men up to the chapel separately, and applying a large amount of supervision. Then came over me a feeling of repugnance that when a man was at his religious duties he should be so carefully watched; and I am quite sure had I done so the treason-felony prisoners would themselves have been the first to have felt that an insult had been offered to their religion, that they went there and yet the sincerity of their motives was doubted, inasmuch as it was necessary to have this supervision over them. I weighed all these matters well with the priest. I saw them afterwards and told them I was sorry they had to be kept in their cells. Some of them said they would have liked to have gone to mass, or to have had some service down there; but Mr. Poole was unable to give them a special service in the penal class prison, as he had duties to perform outside as well as there.

2403. (Dr. Greenhow.) How do they contrive to supply each other with bread?—By extraordinary means, viz., concealing it in the folds of their breeches avoiding search on parade, and in dropping it into a place where they know each a prisoner would pass; all sorts of devices for trying to pass it from one to another.

2404. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you consider sitting on three two benches a privilege to those men, or the contrary?—Well, really that is a matter that I have not thought of, but I should consider that they would look upon it as a matter of privilege, being near the rail and close to the priest.

2405. It is not granted as a concession?—It is not; it is to prevent any other persons from trafficking with them or their traffic with others. I might mention the origin of that. The first trafficking done here by O'Donovan Rossa was arranged in chapel, and one of his religious books which I can produce to the Commission was carefully written in between every line. It was passed to an ordinary prisoner, and soon, and unfortunately had to be taken from him by force, for he held it most tenderly. That was the first instance of my being made aware that such a thing would have been carried on there at all.

2406. Is it the fact that from the announcement of this Commission coming here these prisoners are under greater restrictions than they would have been otherwise?—It is. Had the Commission not been coming they would have been at work.

2407. As a matter of fact have they been shut up since Wednesday morning?—Since Wednesday morning they have been shut up.

2408. In solitary confinement?—In solitary confinement.

2409. And they have taken their exercise separately?—They have taken their exercise separately.

2410. And that would correspond to the ordinary mode of punishment?—There was no alteration made in their diet, or anything, so that it would not be considered by ordinary prisoners a punishment, but it would be looked upon as a relaxation.

2411. To be shut up for 5 or 6 days?—They would not mind it so long as they get their food and two hours exercise, and had books to read all the time.

2412. Are the prisoners who are in the infirmary, and who are sufficiently well to go about the ward, allowed to go to mass on Sunday?—When they wish to go, sir. Some of them have ever and over positively refused to go to mass.

2413. From the infirmary?—From the infirmary.

2414. But those who can go are allowed?—Those whose health the medical officer thinks admits of it are allowed to go.

2415. If a prisoner is under punishment in a penal cell, or dock cell, and that Sunday is one of the days that he is under punishment, is he deprived of hearing mass?—He is. A man under punishment is deprived of hearing religious service in chapel. He is visited.

2416. Supposing that a man is under punishment for a period in which Sunday intervenes as one of the days, could you, if you thought fit, allow him to go from the cell to the chapel to hear mass on Sunday?—I think not; such a case has never occurred. But I do not think I should have the power, certainly not without superior authority, of allowing a man actually under punishment for an offence to leave the punishment cell and go to his religious duties.

2417. Have you the power of letting every third day of punishment on bread and water cease?—I have, but he is still under punishment and not allowed to communicate with any other man, the fourth day when a convict is undergoing a sentence of more than three days' bread and water.

2418. Would you be good enough to reflect and answer the question to-morrow as to whether you have the privilege of allowing a man to go from a cell in which he is undergoing punishment, to hear mass or not?—I should say so.

2419. You should say that you have not?—I have not.

2420. If a man got sick in the penal cell, would you not have the power of removing him to the infirmary?—On the advice or recommendation of the medical man he would be immediately removed to the infirmary.

2421. But you think on reflection that you would not have the power of allowing a prisoner to attend mass?—I should not have the power, when a man is actually under punishment, to allow him to leave that punishment, the object of that punishment being to isolate him from his fellow-men during the time.

2422. Do you think that, as the result of your experience, or merely from its never having presented itself before, or that there is anything in the regulations that would prevent you from allowing a prisoner to go to mass half an hour or an hour?—I think it would wholly defeat the object of the punishment.

2423. I only ask you as to what you conceive your power to be?—I conceive that I have no power to let him out.

2424. If a prisoner is sick at night in his cell, and so sick that he might be forced to be in the hands of death, could he have free access to the Catholic priest. Would the Catholic priest be called to see him?—He would. The instant a man is considered to be dangerously ill, the fact is notified to me by the medical officer, and at the same time to the chaplain or the priest.

2425. Am I to understand that that would take place by night as well as by day?—Yes, in case of danger; and the friends of the convict are immediately communicated with. Whenever a prisoner is dangerously ill, and as soon as I receive the written report of the medical officer that he is so I find out from the penal record his nearest relatives, and communicate with them with the greatest despatch.

2426. With regard to the state of the prisoner in his cell, you say that he is discouraged from using his wits?—At night.

2427. You mean I suppose for the purpose of evacuating his bowels?—Yes.

2428. But he is allowed to use it for passing his water?—Yes.

2429. Do you think it possible that that restriction may not harshly or dangerously on any prisoner at any time?—I do not, because I think the prisoners fully understand that if they want to use it then illness of any description that they would be justified, and it would be simply the form of coming before me, and if the medical officer on being referred to stated that there was the slightest ground for using it, no punishment whatever would be inflicted.

2430. But it would require the intervention of the doctor?—It would.

2431. In the first place there would be a report before the governor, and it would require the intervention of the doctor to save him from punishment?—Yes.

2432. (Mr. Brodick.) Would a prisoner have the right of a making a signal during the night to a warder, for the purpose of being taken to the watercloset?—It is contrary to the rules for the security and safety of the prisoners that they should be let out to the closet in the night. Every door is double-locked and guarded at night, and it is only in cases of serious illness that the cells can be opened. If it was recognized that these men were allowed out at night, it would be necessary for the whole staff of officers to be on duty all night as well as in the day. You would have these men coming down at all hours of the night. When the prison doors are once closed at night, none of them can be opened except by the orderly officer, and that only in cases of illness. If a man is taken ill he immediately makes a signal, at night he will tap his door, because it is heard distinctly. The officer then sends for the assistant surgeon and he sees the patient, and if he considers him sufficiently ill to be admitted into hospital an arrangement is made for his removal, and it appears in the written night report furnished to me in the morning, that those doors were opened during the night and who was passed out.

2435. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you think that a man has proper access to the means of relieving his bowels at night, in case of his being taken suddenly sick?—Yes, he can always use his urinal, but he knows that he will be brought up to ascertain whether it was necessary or purely unnecessary that he should do so.

2436. I think you said that in any complaint of a prisoner against a warder, the presumption was in favour of the warder's word being believed?—The warder's word being believed.

2437. If that be the case, may I ask you what remedy has a prisoner in any complaint he may make against an individual warder. You stated that the presumption is in favour of the warder, consequently the prisoner will not be believed. Now I ask you what remedy the prisoner has, supposing one warder only to have been present?—It is a very difficult matter where only one warder is present; but one has to judge them from the officer's denunciation, the way in which he gives his evidence in replying to a false or a true charge. If, as I said before, where there is any collateral evidence, for instance, if there was an officer of another working party alongside, he would be called and asked "Did you hear such and such language?" The officer's word would be taken in preference to the prisoner when he is there by himself.

2438. Then, as a matter of fact, the prisoner has no remedy against that warder, supposing the warder to be alone. If no other warder was present the prisoner has practically no remedy against the warder?—Well, I cannot say that, because if I am examining an alleged complaint, knowing the evidence of the prisoner, I may be able to detect from such officer not giving his evidence straightforwardly that there is some truth in the prisoner's statement; and if there be, I should certainly give the prisoner the benefit, and without letting him know, I should probably remove the officer from that party, or put him, the prisoner, into another party. But you must take the evidence of the officer, or how is the work to be carried on. You would have 500 charges brought every day against every officer if that were not the case.

2439. I only want to get at the facts?—The officer would be carefully interrogated in the presence of the prisoner, and if any evidence came out to prove that the officer was guilty he would be removed from the party and punished; if any officer is ever caught making use of harsh expressions to a prisoner he is dismissed the service.

2440. (Mr. Bradrick.) In other words, though the presumption is in favour of the officer it is not a conclusive presumption?—Not a conclusive presumption, for the prisoner has the benefit of an appeal, and if it is possible to trace the evidence; for instance, a person may bring a charge of an officer swearing at him in the hall, then I would send for the principal officer in charge of that hall and ask him "Where were you standing at such a time?" "So-and-so." "Then you must have been within hearing of this officer; did you hear any bad language?" "No, I did not." Mr. G. Clifton. "Had he made use of such language must not you have heard it?" "I cannot say."

2441. (Dr. Lyons.) Suppose the case of an officer and a prisoner set on the works, what remedy has the prisoner as all the official presumption being in favour of the warder?—Well, he has none further than this investigation.

2442. Then, to take an extreme case, he has none?—No farther than one man being pitted against the other, one being not a criminal.

2443. (Chairman.) Your judgment of the warder depends a great deal on your knowledge of his previous conduct, and you would not take evidence which did not seem reliable?—Quite so, my lord; and if I doubted the officer's veracity I should then remove him from his party and not place him in charge of prisoners.

2444. Do you consider that supposing you were called upon to admit as evidence a prisoner's assertion, that it would be prejudicial to the maintenance of good order and discipline?—It would result in this, that you must let them all out. If the prisoners have the power of making charges against the officers how are we to govern the prison. You have here hundreds of men who do not value an oath or anything, and who would bring most malicious charges against the officers. It would simply result in your being unable to carry on discipline.

2445. (Dr. Lyons.) Would you be guided by the prisoner's previous character in regard to such a charge?—Always, in every case, the prisoner's previous character is taken into consideration, in every single case.

2446. Do you consider the labour performed here at hard labour constitutes a hard day's work?—Certainly, when honestly performed.

2447. It is a hard day's work if honestly performed?—It is a real hard day's work if honestly performed.

2448. What class of labour here do you consider to be the hardest, is it the quarrying work, or having stones, or what?—No, I consider some of the inside work, such as blacksmith's work, heavy work; moulding, where they are subject to intense heat, and use the sledge hammer. I think that more trying than working at the stone quarry.

2449. In the works outside is it at all the habit at any time for the prisoners to be made to carry stones on their backs?—It is.

2450. It is?—Well, I won't say carrying them on their backs, but lifting them and putting them into a cart.

2451. In carrying stones for a comparatively short distance are the men supposed to carry them on their backs any time?—No, I do not think they ever have sufficient distance to carry them on their backs, they carry them in front of them. They may now and then have a stone to move on to the back where there may be five or six carrying it together, it might then be put on their shoulders, that would probably be only the distance of from here to the window. But generally you see the men in lifting up the stones lift them up in front and put them into the carts. All blocks for building purposes and heavy stones are lifted by cranes.

2452. You spoke to Doctor Greenhow about the manner in which the personal examination of the men is carried on when they are asked?—Yes.

2453. What measures are taken in the conduct of that examination to ascertain if a man has any instrument concealed about his person?—I believe he is never felt about his person. The orders are that he is not to be touched about his person. But if he is suspected of having anything concealed in the man, he would be bent for a moment and the very act of bending spots things.

2454. May I ask you whether, as a matter of fact, you have ever known an examination of a prisoner to have been made here or anywhere, with a finger in the nose of the prisoner?—Not during the 30 years that I

Mr. G. Clifton.

13 June 1876.

Mr. G. Glynn. have been in the convict service; I have never heard it. Such a thing never has been practised or notified to me directly or indirectly, that the finger has been so used.

2453. Would it be contrary to the rules and directions given to the warders, to make a search of a prisoner in that manner?—It would, and I myself would refrain from ever countenancing or in any way giving an order to such an effect.

2454. If it was ascertained that it had been done by a warder, would he be discharged?—Had it ever occurred here I should have instantly suspended the warder reported him to the director, and advised his instant removal from the service.

2455. Their mouths are examined?—Their mouths are examined.

2456. They are made to open their mouths?—Yes, their tongue is pulled on one side, and very often money is found.

2457. Is the finger of the warder put into the prisoner's mouth?—Well, I do not think he would put in his finger. He would make the man open his mouth this way (without exhibiting the process on himself). But they do not resist it; they open their mouth wide and put the tongue out. As a general rule they do not make the slightest resistance to the search.

2458. Who supervises the examination of the man?—Generally the principal warder, or the chief warder.

2459. Is that examination likely ever to be visited by you?—I have.

2460. Or by the deputy governor?—I have frequently visited it. I have seen it myself.

2461. Those conducting it may assume that at any moment you might drop in on them?—They may.

2462. Are you aware that this examination was ever performed with unnecessary rudeness or violence?—I have never had any complaint from the ordinary prisoners of their being rudely used. I had once a complaint of a man being searched before others, which he felt, and the officer was severely punished, for searching him in a place where he might have been seen. On their first arrival the treason-felony prisoners made numerous complaints about their being searched; numerous complaints.

2463. Were those complaints found to be substantiated on inquiry in any case?—Not of any rudeness, but they were constantly searched because there was this trafficking going on, and they would not have been so frequently searched had it not been for the intercepting of letters; it is one of those things that are constantly made the cause of searches, that and trafficking; no convict is searched in the presence of only one officer, there is another officer always present. But I have heard convicts complain of liberties being taken in the search on parole, for invariably they conceal things in a little bag tied round the waist. The officer is ordered to avoid as much as possible touching the convict's person, but he puts his hands on the thighs, and passes them down, and scarcely a week passes that we do not find things concealed on them. But anything like insulting a man by touching his person is strictly forbidden, and all the officers are so warned when they are sent to this duty.

2464. (Chairman.) And any breach of that rule would be severely visited?—Most severely visited, my lord.

2465. (Dr. Lyons.) I believe that I understood you to say that it was not entirely as a boon that the whole of the political prisoners have been put in one gang?—My object was not as a particular boon. I thought they would like to be together; it was also to prevent their being mixed up with the ordinary convicts, as at the time they expressed their detestation of being associated with the others, I strongly advocated throughout that they should be kept by themselves, and they have, with the exception of the two prisoners (for 2 days I think it was) already referred to.

2466. Supposing it to have been proposed yesterday to have said a special man for those prisoners, would there have been anything in the prison rules or discipline to render that impossible or impracticable?—I should have afforded every assistance in my power. I was most anxious that Mr. Poole should have given them a special service in the penal class prison, where they are located, but he represented that he had not the power; I then asked him if a priest could be obtained anywhere in the district, and he told me there was none procurable.

2467. Supposing he would have found it necessary to have celebrated the holy office of the mass in the chapel, could the chapel have been assigned for them at any particular hour that he thought convenient?—Yes; but there would still have been the difficulty of keeping them away from one another.

2468. Not in that large building, surely?—There would. I proposed to Mr. Poole to hold whatever service they required to-day down at their cells.

2469. It is not likely that he could have performed the holy office of the mass there?—No, he pointed out to me that he could not.

2470. I want to know would it have been within the prison rules to have allowed them one half hour to attend mass?—Oh, perfectly; if I could have done it without touching on my instructions.

2471. The baths I observe are so arranged that as I have been informed three prisoners in succession use the same bath?—Yes.

2472. Is that the usual rule in the prison?—At certain seasons of the year, when we are very short of water.

2473. Are you liable to run short of water?—Oh, yes, very liable; we are so at the present moment. But the prisoners would get the benefit of having salt water; but it would be impossible to pump up sufficient salt water to give a fresh bath to every man. Besides that the steam in the kitchen is evaporated and used for baths.

2474. Is it possible that a prisoner might be called on to enter a bath that had been occupied just previously by another prisoner labouring under an affliction of the skin or an infectious disease of any sort?—I think not, because in cases of any eruption of the skin the medical officer would immediately treat that man, and I do not think there would be a chance of a man getting into water that had been used by a man that had an affection of the skin. But I certainly should not permit a man for instance if he refused to use the water after another man.

2475. I think I understood you to say, when we were visiting the chapel this morning, that it was absolutely necessary that a prisoner should attend either one or the other of the two places of religious worship?—Yes.

2476. Have you three places of religious worship?—No, we have only two, Protestant and Roman Catholic.

2477. You have no Jews?—The Jews are not sent here. If a man is sent here and declares himself to be a Jew, he is examined to see if he is, and if he is I ask for a warrant from the Secretary of State to send him away; Presbyterians would have an opportunity of being sent to Chatham.

2478. On entering here every prisoner must record himself a Protestant or a Catholic, or belonging to some religious denomination?—Yes.

2479. After being recorded as a Protestant it is incumbent on him to attend the Protestant chapel?—Yes.

2480. If he declined to do so on conscientious scruples, would he be still forced to attend the Protestant place of worship?—I think not, because if such a case arose from any religious scruple I should immediately refer the matter to superior authority, and I think if it was proved to be from conscientious motives that he would be removed to some other prison where he would get the chance of attending the worship he preferred. At Chatham there are Presbyterians and Protestants too. It is also in my power, when a prisoner asks to see a clergyman of a certain denomination, to let him do so. For instance, if a Wesleyan puts his name down I should put myself in communication with the Wesleyan minister, and he would visit him.

2481. (Chairman.) What amount of clothing is given to a prisoner in winter?—He has exactly the same as in summer.

2482. Will you kindly specify them?—I will commence with the smock.

2483. Of what material is it?—It is a heap of some sort, drabber is the right name for it. The jacket is made of coarse cloth, and the breeches of unbleached fustian, a pair of boots, a pair of flannel

The Commissioners returned at 10 o'clock, a.m.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. G. C. BROOKING.
S. E. DE VRIES, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENWOOD.

W. SPINNEY OLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. GEORGE CLIFTON recalled.

2487. (Chairman.) Mr. Clifton, you spoke yesterday of having received instructions from the Secretary of State. Have you any written instructions which you can hand in with reference to the treason-felony convicts?—I have, my lord. (Produces a document.)

2488. Is that a letter from the Secretary of State?—It is a letter from the directors of convict prisons, and from the director of this prison, Mr. Wm. J. Fagan. The treason-felony prisoners, as I stated yesterday, my lord, were received without any instructions, and immediately on their arrival I addressed this letter to the director:—

"Her Majesty's Prison, Portland,

Governor's Office, 15th May 1868.

"SIR,
"I HAVE the pleasure to acquaint you that I received yesterday 24 Irish treason-felony convicts from Pentonville Prison, pursuant to warrant dated 5th instant, but I have not yet been furnished with the instructions as to their treatment referred to in the circular letter of the 8th instant."

[The secretary of the board of directors intimated to me that they were coming, and merely stated that instructions would be forwarded.]

"Pending further orders respecting them, I have employed them in the wash-house.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,

"Your most obedient servant,

"GEORGE CLIFTON."

A few days afterwards I received this letter back with this memorandum in it:—

"MR. CLIFTON,

"I REQUEST that my absence at Chatham prevented my issuing instructions to you on the subject. They are to be located in the last lot of new cells, passed by me as fit for occupation at my last visit."

[These are the cells, my lord, that you visited in D hall; they were just then completed and never occupied before.]

"They are to be worked in a separate party at labour equal to their ability, both as regards their strength and knowledge, and are to be exercised and kept by themselves on all occasions, and full marks to be awarded to them for their labour, except in cases of proved misconduct, and they are to be worked by Protestant officers, English, in whom you have the fullest confidence, and they are not to be employed were, a pair of breeches, a cap, a belt, a flannel shirt, a cotton shirt, a handkerchief, a waistcoat, a pair of shoes and stockings, and one stock.

2484. (Dr. LYONS.) Perhaps you would be good enough to put in a return of the clothes given at both periods, and their weight?—Yes.

2485. (Chairman.) Do you produce a statement showing reports as to the work done from the 1st January 1870 to the present time by the treason-felony convicts?—I have it prepared, my lord.

2486. Perhaps you will hand it in?—Yes (hands it in).

The witness withdrew.

"upon the domestic duties of the prison, except as regards their own cells and halls. You must therefore locate them on the works in a secure position where too much attention will not be drawn to their isolation; at the same time in such a position where their safe custody or the officer's honesty will not be tampered with. Due provision will be made for a Roman Catholic priest's attendance, but until one is nominated there will be no objection to one of the prisoners reading prayers to the others."

"WILLIAM J. FAGAN.

"17th May 1868.

"Noted at Portland.—The whole of these instructions have already been carried out, with the exception of sending the prisoners on to the works, and this shall be done at once."

And the following morning I complied with the request, and since yesterday I have ascertained that they were six days in the wash-house, and as soon as these instructions came down they were removed to a spot on the public works which you can see from the window, where they have been located ever since.

2489. Have you any other written instructions?—I have no other definite instructions from headquarters, but on several occasions there have been indirect matters arose which led to my being referred to these instructions; and on one occasion Miss O'Leary visited the prison and asked for permission to see other treason-felony prisoners.

2490. Do you mean other than her own brother?—Other than her own brother; and I submitted an application to the director of this prison, who sent it on to the Secretary of State, and I can produce the Secretary of State's reply, in which he declined, saying they were to be treated as other convicts. But this was the only written instruction I received; and before the Reverend Mr. Poole, Roman Catholic priest, was appointed, I placed myself in communication with the Reverend Mr. Charles at Weymouth, and asked him to come occasionally and see these men.

2491. He is a Roman Catholic priest I presume?—He is; and he came over and occasionally visited them and gave them a service; and until one was appointed, I asked the whole body of treason-felony prisoners who they would wish me to select to read prayers to them, and they unanimously asked that Luby should be selected. I asked Luby if he would undertake to read the prayers to them every morning, and I would place myself in communication with Mr. Charles, who would state what ought to be read by him; but Lady declined, saying he was not orthodox, that he was a Catholic, but not orthodox, and he would prefer that I would ask somebody else. I then asked, I think, Kichlars.

2492. Who?—Kichlars, I think I asked. At all events one of them had opportunities of reading prayers to the others.

2493. Was that later placed before Messrs. Knox and Pollock when the Commission sat?—I think so, my lord. Yes, I am quite sure that they asked if I had received any instructions, and I mentioned having received this, and stated what those instructions were.

2494. Would you wish to add anything on that point?—Nothing further, my lord.

2495. Is there any other point on which you wish to supplement your evidence, or any new matter that you desire to place before us?—I should like to state that I have mentioned on reference to the books since you were here yesterday, that the treason-felony prisoners were located in the new cells which you saw in D hall, from their reception, the 14th May, up to Christmas eve, the 24th December of the same year, when the penal class cells having been completed, on my recommendation, and as they complained of their being damp, they were located there, and have had the advantage of wooden floors instead of stone over size.

2496. From May to December they were in the D hall, and after that in the penal class cells, which are larger and have also the advantage of having board floors?—Yes, my lord. I have also ascertained that in some instances, where the treason-felony prisoners complained of their beds being hard, I have spoken to the medical officer, and on his recommendation issued them a third bed, and some of them at this moment have three mattresses instead of two, and they have always had one blanket more than the other prisoners; if they complained of cold, blankets have been issued to them. I have also ascertained that on their arrival I gave instructions to the wardens that they should not be searched in the presence of other prisoners; I mean stripped, and that when bathing they should always bathe by themselves and have always clean water to themselves, that they should not have to use water twice over; and even when the water was cold, warm has been added, and when they thought it too hot, cold water has been added.

2497. Have you done that in the case of other prisoners?—Certainly not, my lord. I could not have granted any such privilege without directions.

2498. (Mr. De Vere.) Are you aware whether your directions have been carried out?—I am aware that they have been.

2499. (Dr. Lyons.) It has been stated, Mr. Clifton, that you spoke in a manner said to be smothering and insulting of the convulsions and agues de la worn by the prisoners. I have seen your explanation in Messrs. Knox and Pollock's report; and I now wish to ask you about it, in order to give you an opportunity of saying if you did so or not?—I did not do so smotheringly, but in perfect ignorance, not in the slightest degree intending it as an insult, for I am one of those who advocate liberty for every man to worship God as he likes, and I have always afforded every facility to the priest and others carrying out Catholic worship. I have taken every trouble in regard to these men, and it was simply my ignorance in making use of that expression. So far from wishing to hurt their feelings, when I knew they had them in their possession, I asked the director to allow them to be retained by the priest instead of as hitherto being kept by the steward; and I furnished the priest with a box in which to keep those religious—tokens. I really do not know now what name to call them.

2500. (Chapman.) Enklams?—Enklams.

2501. (Dr. Lyons.) Is it possible that rain water could have got in and flooded their cells and wetted the bedclothes and beds?—It is quite possible, that, in the extraordinary heavy gales we have here, and the building being built of wood, that there is water sliding through the wood; and it very often occurs that a man's blankets may get damp in the night, or slightly wet, in a few of the cells that are exposed to the west and south-west winds; and on those occasions the treason-felony prisoners having complained to me that their cells were flooded I visited the cells myself, and there were signs of there being moisture and wet in places, and the blankets were slightly wet. I immediately ordered those blankets to be taken over to the drying room and dried in the drying room, and I ordered the clerk of the works to make a careful survey of the building outside in order that any leakage might be stopped; but I think that that only occurred once or twice, and then in a very slight degree.

2502. While the cells were in that imperfect condition did you happen to direct that the prisoners should be removed to other cells?—I had no other cells to move them to at the time, unless I located them with the other prisoners, which I knew would be so distasteful to them.

2503. Do you think the prisoners have proper facilities for cleaning the mouths that they employ in their cells?—I think so, for had they not I presume they would have complained to me, and I should have issued an order to increase the quantity if it was required.

2504. Is it possible that a man would be asked to clean out the tin in which he ate his breakfast with the tail of a worn-out shirt or the seat of a worn-out drawers?—I think not; for the few articles they use only a panikin and a photo, they could rinse with water and wipe with a towel, for they always have one hanging up in their cells.

2505. Is it the case that the flannels or rugs given to them for cleansing purposes are parts of worn-out clothes?—Worn-out clothes, washed.

2506. With regard to the prisoners bathing, you have stated that you have directed that the treason-felony prisoners should always have each separate water to bathe in?—Yes.

2507. Do you know that that order was always carried out?—The practice in the service is this, that the governor's order is always strictly carried out, and there can be no deviation from it unless it is solicited, and as I have never been asked to alter that order, I presume it has been carried out, and as questioning the officers they say that my order has been strictly adhered to.

2508. Do you think it possible that one of the treason-felony prisoners could have been made to bathe in water which had been used by another man having any skin disease or syphilis, or any other objectionable state of his body?—I think not. In the face of those orders I do not think it would be possible.

2509. Did any officer inspect the baths to see that the order was carried out?—I have often gone to the baths and seen the water put in, and I have asked who this water was for, and they said, "For the treason-felony prisoners."

2510. You stated that with regard to the searching you gave directions concerning them?—Yes, that their bodies should never be stripped in the presence of the other prisoners, that they should be by themselves, confined to their party.

2511. Is one man examined at the time, or two or more together?—Sometimes altogether; three or four officers at the time.

2512. And how many prisoners are present naked in each other's presence?—They are sent to the bath-room, which you saw yesterday, and searched there.

2513. And is the search made in the bath?—On reception they used to stand in the reception-room, and were searched together.

2514. Then they were standing naked together in the reception-room?—I think not, but only as they went into the bath they pulled their shirts off, but I cannot sists so far certain, for I was not present when they were searched; the custom is for a man to stand with his shirt on, and when the officer comes to pull it off; and he stands with his hands concealing his person. But now, instead of the men being searched in parties, they are marched into the bath-rooms, and searched in the bath.

2515. But formerly the practice was that a man was stripped naked in the presence of several others, certain officers of the prison?—It was.

2516. That was an objectionable plan?—I am only venturing an opinion; but it is a given necessity having to search a man, and my own idea is this, that it does lay both parties open to unjust imputation of acting badly, where it takes place in the presence of only one man; a convict may accuse the officer of taking liberties with him, and the officer may accuse a convict of taking liberties with him.

2517. (Dr. Greenhow.) When the treason-felony prisoners first came here where did they take exercise?—In one of the ordinary yards, but separated from the others; not with any of the other prisoners.

2518. Is there any place here that can be called a cage, any raised place of small dimensions, in which prisoners take exercise?—None.

2519. Then that does not apply to this prison?—It does not apply to this prison.

2520. What dress do the prisoners wear at night?—They sleep in their shirt and flannel.

2521. They are allowed to keep their shirt and flannel?—They keep all their clothes in their cells of a night, except when under punishment; all prisoners suspected of attempting to effect their escape, are deprived of their clothes, which are placed outside the cell, they are taken from him when the bell rings for going to bed; but ordinary prisoners retain all their clothes in their cells at night, so that they may sleep in their drawers and put their clothes on their bed.

2522. When the clothes are taken away from a prisoner at night, what is left?—His shirt and under flannels.

2523. Are the doors of the cells kept open when the prisoners are at exercise?—Always.

2524. Were the doors of the treason-felony prisoners' cells kept open also?—I believe so. I have visited them several times, and I have seen them so.

2525. (Chairman.) Mr. Clifton, we requested, and you were kind enough to say, that you would in consequence communicate personally with the various treason-felony prisoners, after our meeting yesterday, with a view to informing them that we should be prepared to see them, and receive any statement from them that they might wish to make. Did you accordingly see them?—I did, my lord. I went round to each one of them and told them that I was directed by the Commission to say that the Commission would be prepared to examine them separately and privately to-day. I went to each one of them. I asked George Brown first. He declined to appear before the Commission. I asked him if I was authorized to say so to the Commission. He said, "You are authorized." I then asked Patrick Dornan; his reply was the same.

2526. (Mr. De Vere.) Was it identically the same, or to the same effect?—It was to the same effect, not exactly the same words. At all events I put the same question to each: "Am I authorized to say so to the Commission?" and they said "You are."

2527. (Chairman.) Whom did you see next?—I do not recollect the order exactly that I saw them in, my lord.

JOHN O'LEARY, prisoner, examined.

2528. (Chairman.) Do you wish to make a statement to the Commission?—Yes; I wish to say that I asked for no commission, and wished for no commission, and when I heard some time ago that some commissioners were appointed I fully made up my mind to make no statement of grievances to any body of men that would be sent down, and as to any-2529. Who was the next man, or any man that you saw?—O'Leary was the next. He stated he would; "Yes; but I don't much care," he said.

2529. That accounts for three of the eleven?—I am trying to recollect the exact order, my lord. I had this return made out afterwards alphabetically. I think the next was Shea, Mortimer Shea. He simply declined, and when I asked him if I was authorized to say so to the Commission, he said, "Yes." Michael Sheely, declined. I put the same question, and he said I was authorized to say so to the Commission. Edward St. Clair, he declined, and authorized me to say so to the Commission. Peter Mohan, "Yes, but don't mind," he said.

2530. "Don't mind?"—"I don't much mind," that he didn't much care. This prisoner I recollect was the first I asked. William Mackey, he declined, and when I asked him if I was authorized to say so to the Commission, he said, "Yes." Patrick Walsh simply declined, and authorized me to say so. Luby declined, and did the same.

2531. (Mr. De Vere.) Did he also authorize you to say so to the Commission?—He also authorized me to say so to the Commission.

2532. (Chairman.) McCafferty is the only remaining one?—He told me yesterday in the cell, my lord, that he did wish to see the Commission, but he told me previously that he would not see the Commission.

2533. That accounts for the whole of the 11 I think?—That accounts for the 11.

2534. Did any of them give any reason for declining?—None.

2535. And you were long enough there to admit of their giving any reason?—Quite, my lord. On the second day of my visiting the prisoners in their cells, I asked Luby particularly, because I thought he would have been so very anxious to make known his grievances, I called and asked him whether he had reconsidered the matter, and should I send him a sheet of paper: he said "No." He designated the Commission as "a solemn three," and declined to say anything.

2536. (Dr. Lyons.) Luby did?—Luby did.

2537. (Chairman.) Are those prisoners now in their cells?—They are, my lord.

2538. (Mr. Friedrich.) Did any of those prisoners, upon your visiting them last night, put any questions to you respecting the Commission?—No, they did not.

2539. (Dr. Lyons.) Did they ask who the Commissioners were?—No, they did not. I might mention that on all occasions of my visiting the prisoners, if you wish any corroboration of my statements, there have always been several officers present.

2540. Last night?—Last night, and on all occasions. I have made it a practice ever since the treason-felony prisoners have been here of always having officers present when I have dealt with them, or when they have put their names down to see me, or have had my opinion to see me; except once or twice when I communicated private family matters to them. I sent for O'Leary here once, and Luby once, and ordered the officer to retire, it being a family matter I mentioned it privately; but on all official matters I believe I have never had less than two officers present.

2541. (Chairman.) So that if any controversy arises on anything that you have said there were persons present?—Yes, my lord, the chief warder and chief clerk.

Mr. G. Clifton.

J. O'Leary.
14 June 1870.

ships except those incident to persons sentenced to penal servitude. I may complain that we have been treated no worse than murderers and thieves. It appears to me that it is, at least, an exceedingly consistent proceeding on the part of the author of the celebrated letters to Lord Aberdeen to be sent down here.

2543. We must decline to hear you going into any general statement of that sort. The points into which we shall inquire are: whether you have any complaints to make as to the mode of treatment, or the opportunities of religious worship, whether you have had sufficient medical treatment when ill, and whether you can complain of the food, lodging, or clothing. These are the points into which we wish to inquire and shall be perfectly ready to inquire; but we shall decline to receive any statements on public policy.—You know the way the convicts are treated, don't you?

2544. Do you wish to make any statement on those points?—No, not to you; not that you should for a moment be under any delusion of my having more serious reason. You must, in fact, take us to be an extraordinary humble-minded class of men to think we would make complaints.

2545. Do we understand that you do not wish to make any statement on those points to which I called your attention?—No, not on those points.

2546. You quite understand that you have a full opportunity of making any statement as regards the treatment?—Of course I do.

2547. Then if you do not wish to do so you need not remain.

2548. (Dr. Lyons.) You were examined before Messrs. Pollack and Knox's commission, were you?

The prisoner was removed.

P. Mohan.

PETER MOHAN, prisoner, examined.

2549. (Chairman.) You can make any statement you please, Mohan, to us in reference to your treatment here. We are a commission appointed by the Government to inquire into the treatment that you and the persons imprisoned under the Treason Felony Act are undergoing. The points into which we should inquire are: whether you have any complaint to make as regards the spiritual arrangements of the prison, whether at all or on the whole you have any complaints to make of the medical officers, whether you have any complaint to make of the food, or cells, or clothing, or cruelty, harshness, or tyranny on the part of any person, or whether you wish to make any statement on those points. We are appointed by the Government, but are perfectly unconnected with the Government, and perfectly independent of them. You know probably the names of the Commissioners?—That is a matter of indifference to me.

2550. Having given you that information, we are willing to hear your statement?—In the first place you seem to admit the right of the Government to treat us as criminals, and they have treated us as criminals, and they flogged criminals to death, and of course claim the right to flog us to death.

2551. Have you any complaint to make of having been flogged severely?—Oh, I haven't been flogged at all.

2552. Then I must ask you again whether you wish to make any statement to us?—I do not wish to make any statement, but I say this to you gentlemen, if you are really honest men, and wish to ascertain the truth as to our treatment, you will make application to the men who have been liberated from prison. These persons are free to make a statement, and have not the lash suspended over their heads as we have. There is Mr. O'Brien, O'Connor, Kichham, and others.

2553. Do you wish to call any witnesses? Do you wish to have any persons called in reference to your own treatment?—Oh, no. Mr. O'Connor was in Millbank, and saw our treatment there.

—Yes; that is, I have not heard the names of either of them. Yes, I was examined.

2554. May I ask you whether you have been in any way subjected to unpleasantness of any kind in consequence of having gone before Messrs. Pollack and Knox's commission?—Well, it is very difficult for me to answer that question. I could not positively answer that question. I can say this, that immediately after that investigation we were treated far worse than we were some time before, but I cannot say that it was in consequence of that. For instance, Mr. Clifton here told me distinctly the other day that he did not know the evidence at all that was given before that body, and I am willing to believe that he did not. At all events, he might have known a certain amount of it though. I intended to ask him that, for certainly it appeared in the papers, and I saw them myself, which, by-the-bye, I may incidentally remark, were altogether false.

2555. I wish to know whether, in consequence of any evidence you gave before that commission of inquiry, you consider that you were in any way subjected to any unpleasantness of any kind?—Well, I could scarcely tell you that. I do not know whether I was or not.

2556. Is there anything that you wish to state to the Commission on the subject of its inquiry?—Of course it appears to me, to ask a person of my political principles whether I got punished would be like an Oliver Twist kind of business, asking for more porridge.

2557. (Chairman.) It is our duty to give you the fullest opportunity of speaking to us on those points, but as we understood you do not wish to do so we need not keep you.

The prisoner was removed.

2558. Do you wish to make any complaint of your treatment at Millbank?—There is one instance I will give you of the barbarous manner they treated me and others. I was stripped naked three times in a week.

2559. Where was that?—In Millbank: I was stripped naked so often as three times in the week by three officers of the prison. They compelled me to stoop down so that they put my hands on my toes, while they actually examined my passages as if I had sores or something contained in that peculiar part of my body.

2560. That we will inquire into.

2561. (Dr. Lyons.) How were you examined; how were the passages examined?—I was compelled, sir, to stoop down so as to put my hands on the floor while an officer stood behind me and examined my passage.

2562. How did he examine it?—He looked in my passage to see if I had a sore or something concealed in that particular part of my body.

2563. He did not put a finger near you?—He did not; but it occurred as often as three times in the week.

2564. On no occasion did he put a finger near you?—No, he did not.

2565. Were you examined in the presence of others?—I was examined three times in a week in a ward full of others.

2566. And you were standing naked?—Perfectly naked, sir, as I was born.

2567. Have you any other statement that you wish to make?—And here in this prison; now according to the rules of the prison, prisoners are entitled to write a letter once in six months; well, that is very little, at least it is as little as they can allow a man to communicate with his family. Now I have been convicted over six years, which entitled me to write a letter every sixth and the last month. Well, I have asked the governor about it and he would not give me the least satisfaction; he simply told me I was not entitled to write.

2368. Do you know what class you are in?—Oh, I am in the third class.

2369. (Mr. Brodick.) How often have you written letters since you were in this prison?—Since my conviction I have written but three letters.

2370. (Chairman.) A reception letter, and three since?—Yes. I ought to have written four on the 6th May, according to my conviction.

2371. (Dr. Ligon.) How many letters have you received?—I have received an answer to all my letters, that is to say, the conviction letter and two reception letters.

2372. Two reception letters?—Yes; one at Millbank, and one at this establishment.

2373. (Chairman.) Have you anything further to state?—Gentlemen, I will refer you, if you wish to have a correct account of my treatment, to make application to the men who are at liberty to do so.

2374. (Dr. Ligon.) Could they prove anything in regard to you that you think they could establish?—Well, no, I don't think they could.

2375. Could you name any one that could prove anything in regard to you that you complain of? Do you wish to call any evidence?—Well, no; nothing of those things that I stated occurred to me in the presence of those persons. I only saw Mr. O'Connor; he was in the same ward with me in Millbank.

2376. Has your health been pretty good since you have been in prison?—Oh, yes; I never have been better.

2377. Have you been at all in the infirmary since you came into any of the prisons?—No, sir.

2378. Have you had occasion to apply for medical advice in the prisons on any occasion?—Well, I had a little, at times. I had a sore throat in Millbank, and the doctor told me I had nothing the matter with it.

2379. (Chairman.) Did you apply here?—I did, and the doctor attended to me.

2380. He gave you all necessary attention?—Oh, yes; it was only a little affair; but Mackay might say something about the doctor at Woking; that is to say, if he is inclined to make a statement.

2381. (Mr. Brodick.) You were at Millbank before you came here?—I was, sir, 12 months.

2382. It was 10 months, was it not?—Oh no, sir; it was more than 11 months. I was convicted on the 6th May.

2383. And then you were first in Newgate?—I remained in Newgate about six weeks after conviction. I was 11 months and a half in separate prisons. Of course I was in separate prison in Newgate.

2384. During that time were you in separation?—Oh, entirely so.

2385. Was there no difference in the last month or two?—Not the least.

2386. Not even in respect of exercise?—Exercise, diet, or anything else; no difference.

2387. Were you better treated at Millbank or here. Would you say the treatment at Millbank or at Portland was the kinder?—The food at Millbank was considered better than in Portland; that is to say, the bread we could eat, but the bread here we cannot eat,

The prisoner was removed.

Mr. GEORGE CROFTON recalled.

2388. (Chairman.) Peter Mohan, who was before us, states that on applying for permission to write a letter in the month of May permission was not given. Do you recollect that circumstance?—I can refer to the application, book and give you definite information if you wish.

2389. If you please?—I might mention to the Commissioners that I have not power to grant a special letter, but I take his name down and I refer it to the director, and it rests with the director to give a special letter or not.

2390. You can tell us, according to the regulations of the prison, how many letters a man would be at least I cannot. It is not sufficiently baked. We get more food of course here.

2388. (Chairman.) A part of our duty here is to examine the diet; we have tasted the soup and examined the bread and all other things.

2389. (Mr. Brodick.) Has there been any change lately in your treatment?—The only change is, that if we think proper we don't work. Fortunately, however, we saw the letter of Mr. Gladstone; it came under our notice, and we acted on the tone of that letter.

2390. (Dr. Ligon.) What letter?—A letter, I think, addressed to the Limerick committee—anonymous committee.

2391. (Mr. Brodick.) Is any attempt made to force you to work?—No, sir; at least the governor on one occasion made an attempt. However, he failed; he would have to punish us all. While we are in prison we will make them support us.

2392. Are you able to talk to each other when you are out of doors?—Oh yes, sir, we talk to each other.

2393. Then the officers do not enforce the rule of silence?—Well, there was a rule of silence enforced here. I was not here at the time. I only heard it from others, and the men, to use a common trade expression, "struck," and would do no more work; consequently several of them were sent to undergo a second probation in Millbank.

2394. (Dr. Crockett.) Were these treason-felony prisoners that struck?—Yes.

2395. Not the general prisoners?—No; only one party. The prisoners on the public works work in parties, one entirely separated from another.

2396. (Dr. Ligon.) Have you been put on bread and water?—No, sir, I have not.

2397. At any time?—No, sir. I have never been reported while in the prison.

2398. Had you any fault to find with the character of the food at any time?—Well, really, of course you can't expect good food in prisons; when you are placed with the lowest possible ruffian you cannot expect good food. The little meat you get is remarkably tough, and the bread is not baked. I asked on one occasion what was the reason that the bread was so badly baked. "Well," he said, "the simple reason is this, if the bread is baked the weight will be light, and then the prisoners will complain." Of course you gentlemen must be aware that there are men in this establishment who have enormous appetites.

2399. Is the food enough for you; enough to satisfy?—Oh, yes.

2400. Have you found any part of the food rancid or objectionable?—Oh no, sir.

2401. In this prison or in any other?—Oh, in Millbank prison the food was remarkably good; you could not expect better in a prison. That is to say, if I had the misfortune to come into prison for injuring my fellow-man I could not expect better, but I never injured my fellow-man.

2402. (Chairman.) There is nothing else that you wish to say?—Well, no, sir; I could, but I refer the general statement of my prison treatment to a future time; that is, if I live to do so.

P. Mohan.

14 June 1870.

Mr. G. Crofton.

authorized to write who came here on the 18th April 1869; we are now in June 1870?—That would entirely depend on the class he is in. It will be necessary for me to find out from the mark clerk the different classes he has passed through in that period, because, if he was a badly conducted man, he would be in probation class during that time.

2403. Assuming that a man had never been reported?—Assuming that a man had never been reported, my lord, when he comes from close confinement, where he has done nine months, he has three months to do in the probation class here. He would be allowed to write a reception letter, one letter. He then gets into the third class, in which he remains 12 months. If his conduct is good while he is in that class he can write two letters, at intervals of six months each.

Mr. G. Clynes.

14 June 1876.

2507. (Mr. Broadbent.) Would the right of writing a letter in six months accrue or come into effect at the end of six months from his reception here, or at the end of six months from his entrance into the third class?—The printed rules originally made it necessary for a man to give an earnest of his conduct in each class before he wrote the letter, and therefore the letter was not awarded until he was six months in the class.

2508. That would be nine months from the time of his reception?—Well, it may not be nine months, but it was afterwards conceded by the directors that if a man was well conducted in his class, free from report, that he might write at the expiration of two months from getting into it. But when the treason-felony prisoners were first introduced into the prison the original prison rules, which hang up there, were in operation; a man did not write his letter until he had six months in the class. But with regard to those men those rules have been entirely set aside. Any special application made, except when a man's conduct has been bad, has been conceded.

2509. (Chairman.) Will you kindly look to the application in this case?—I see many applications from his comrades, but I do not see Mohan's name. No, my lord, I have not found an application to write through me. Did he say that he had applied to the director or to me?

2510. I understood him to say that he applied to you?—I find several of the treason-felony prisoners applied to the director at his visit, and in consequence of being reported for not doing any work the letters were withheld until there was some disposition shown to obey the prison rules.

2511. (Mr. Broadbent.) Can you say how many letters he would have been entitled to write?—I can at once get the number from my mark clerk from the books.

2512. It would depend upon his class?—It would depend entirely upon his classification.

2513. (Chairman.) Perhaps you had better get it for us. He was received on the 15th April 1869. Another statement that he made was with reference to the bread, which he says is not sufficiently baked. Have you had occasion to complain of that yourself, or have you had complaints made to you?—I have had two made by the ordinary prisoners, but I have had no complaint from the prisoner Mohan.

2514. He did not say that he complained to you?—I have had two complaints from men who stated that the bread was not sufficiently baked, and on each occasion I examined the loaf they rejected, and submitted it to others, and they were of the same opinion with myself that it was perfectly baked, but rather fresher than we generally issue.

2515. Did you direct the medical officer's attention to it?—Not on either of those occasions. I showed it to the master baker.

2516. (Dr. Greenwood.) If any other man were to refuse to work as those men are doing, would you deprive him of the privilege of writing a letter?—The slightest offence on the works would deprive a man of every privilege.

2517. As a matter of fact, has Mohan been deprived of the privilege of writing because he has not worked?—I cannot without reference to the director's book state whether it was Mohan or two of the other men; they asked for special letters, and the director declined to give them until they showed some disposition to work; but I cannot recall from memory at this moment whether it was Mohan in particular.

2518. I do not mean special letters; I mean the regular letters?—They would not have been stopped as regards the treason-felony prisoners.

2519. Do you remember stating yesterday that those men would not work on the works?—They would not.

2520. I want clearly to understand whether, far not working on the works, they would be deprived in the privilege of writing letters?—I should not of their case consider it necessary to forfeit the privilege.

2521. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you think, as a matter of fact, that any of them have been deprived of the right of writing or receiving letters in consequence of a refusal to work on the works?—Not his ordinary letters; special letters, yes.

2522. But he has been refused a special letter?—Yes, but not the one he was entitled to by his classification. If he was in the probation class he would not be entitled to it.

2523. With regard to the bread and the baking of it, what supervision is there that the bread is properly and sufficiently baked?—The officer in charge of the bakehouse is a thorough baker by profession, and holds what we consider high rank as a subordinate in the convict service, the rank of principal warder. Under him he is assisted by an assistant warder, who also understands baking. The bread is examined daily by myself in the presence of the master baker by the steward, who is supposed to supervise all provisions that are needed, to see that they are good and sound, in the case of bread that it is properly baked and properly made, and it is generally examined by the deputy-governor as well; if a prisoner consider that his bread is not baked, he gets immediately the privilege of referring it to me; on those occasions I go to the bakehouse and have the whole batch broken in half, and ascertain in that way whether the bread is baked or not.

2524. Could you put in a return of the complaints made within the last 12 months, of bread not being sufficiently baked?—I could on searching through the books put in such a return. When a man has the slightest cause to suppose that the bread is not baked, or even if he complains, I say, "Let the man have another loaf; let him have a stale one."

2525. Would there be any advantage in the economy of the prison by not sufficiently baking the bread?—No, the reverse.

2526. The reverse?—Yes. I think it would tell against the prison, because in making our bread we are obliged to show every day the increase or percentage, and if the bread was not properly baked I think it would tell against me. I think the percentage would be lowered in weight.

2527. But if the baking of the bread has the effect of driving off a certain amount of moisture, as it undoubtedly has, would not the less baking the bread got be consistent with an increase in weight, while if it was properly baked that weight would be diminished?—It would if you take large loaves, but where there is an isolated lot; we have immense ovens and we bake in this, and sometimes the bread in the time at the entrance of the oven may be a little less baked than the inside ones. But I never had anything like a general complaint of the bread being insufficiently baked; it has only been an isolated lot at the corners of a tin at the entrance of the oven perhaps.

2528. (Mr. De Vere.) As regards the treason-felony services, is there any entry or record of complaint or punishment with reference to their refusal to work since the 1st January last; is there any official record of complaint or punishment?—There is; some of them have been reported for it, and therefore there will be an official record.

2529. In what book would that record be?—In the report book. I can quote a case immediately; two cases, if you allow me to send for the book.

2530. I think it would be advisable. While we are waiting for it, I may ask you whether the privilege of letter writing would not be curtailed if there was an official record of complaint and punishment?—It would be in the case of an official record where a man was punished.

2531. Would it in the case of a complaint recorded in the report book in the manner you have just described?—It would be.

2632. That would curtail his privilege of letter writing?—It would.

2633. Was a verbal complaint made to you, but not made an entry in an official book, be sufficient cause for curtailing his privilege of writing?—Not in any case; there must be proof that a man has been idle, and therefore been punished, before he would be deprived of the privilege of writing a letter.

2634. Then if the treason-felony prisoners have been deprived of the privilege of writing letters in any case for refusal to work, the fact of their refusing to work will appear as a complaint and as a record upon the prison books?—It will.

2635. And if it does not appear as such, it could not have curtailed the privilege of letter writing?—It could not.

2636. (Mr. Bradrick.) Could a prisoner be deprived of the ordinary privilege of letter writing without being reduced to a lower class?—He could. Supposing that a prisoner is in the first or special class, the highest class, I will take a case that has occurred to-day, that of a man in the special class who has never been reported during the four years he has been here. He is reported to-day for a trifling offence, for which I felt it my duty to forfeit the special class. He consequently forfeits the privilege of writing attached to the special class.

2637. Is not the forfeiture of that privilege of letter writing incident to the forfeiture of his class?—No, forfeiture of marks as well as class.

2638. So that it would be possible for a man to remain in the same class as before and yet forfeit the privilege of letter writing?—Yes, if he forfeited 42 marks, which is equal to seven days; he can earn back two of those days by exemplary conduct; but he would forfeit the privilege of writing again until he was two months clear. If he was only admonished he would not forfeit the privilege, but if he forfeits a single mark he loses the privilege of writing. Here, my lord, is the penal record which accompanies prisoners from prison to prison.

2639. (Chairman.) Will you be kind enough to explain to the Commission the operation of your system of marks, the proportion which they bear and the period of remission which a man may obtain?—A prisoner's sentence on reception is turned into marks at the rate of six per diem, but by industry and good conduct he may earn them back at the rate of seven and eight per diem; so that if he earns seven marks per diem he will earn one eighth of his sentence as remission, but if he earns eight marks per diem by continuous good conduct and industry, he earns, in round numbers, one fourth of his sentence. Those marks have also a money value as well. I will explain now, my lord, that it is not exactly one fourth or one eighth, because during the nine months that they are in separate confinement they earn no remission of their sentence; therefore, taking a seven years' man, it would be the fourth of six years and three months; if a four years' man, it would be the fourth of three years and three months. But I can hand in a return showing the exact calculation on each sentence.

2640. In the case of a man who has been sentenced originally to seven years' penal servitude, and who from the period of his coming into this prison behaves himself in accordance with the prison regulations and earns eight marks a day, how soon would he get out of prison?—He would get out in five years and about six months, but I have it calculated to the exact day. The object of the introduction of the mark system was this, to put it in the power of a prisoner by his own good conduct and industry to work out his sentence, and gain the remission authorized. There they all are (exhibiting a table of sentences and remissions). There is the three years' sentence, less nine months; he would earn six months and 22 days, the maximum amount of remission on the public works; he would have only to do one year eight months and eight days. A seven years' man would earn one year six months and three days on the sentence, so he would have only four years eight months and eight days to do on the public works.

2641. Does that statement of marks apply to every case except those sentenced for life?—All except in cases of sentence for life. When at the expiration of 20 years I bring under the notice of the Secretary of State through the director a man's case, and if I am able to report favourably on his industry and good conduct, the Secretary of State may authorize his being liberated upon a ticket-of-leave; but if his conduct has been improper the Secretary of State would take no further notice till that day next year, when a similar report would be sent up, and so from year to year until he had some proof of reformation, and the license would be granted.

2642. Then the marks apply in every case except cases of sentence for life?—They are recorded in the books, but they do not count for time.

2643. What do you mean by saying that the marks have a money value?—The whole amount a prisoner can earn, whatever his marks may be, is 3*l.*; so many marks represent so many pence, and their gratitudes are calculated in that way and shown, and a man is furnished with a card every quarter, on which he can see the number of marks earned and the number of marks forfeited, the class he is in, and the gratuity standing to his credit at the end of each month.

2644. How much would be earned by a man who behaves as well as a prisoner could, and who has been sentenced to seven years' penal servitude?—4*l.*; but if he reaches the special class I can recommend the director that he be granted an additional 3*l.*; but that exists only where a man reaches the highest classification, and goes to an aid society.

2645. Then the man would receive that money at the end of the period of seven years, diminished by his marks, when he goes out?—He does not receive it when he goes out. He elects where to go; I give him sufficient money to carry him there; before the expiration of three days he must report himself to the chief constable of the county, who reports to me. I then pay the gratuity at the rate of 1*l.* per month until he has received the whole of it, so as to keep him going as it were for three months. I send post-office orders all over the country.

2646. Does that system exist in each of the convict prisons?—Throughout the whole service, except Millbank and Pentonville, from which no prisoners are discharged.

2647. (Mr. De Vere.) The gratitudes are paid when the prisoners are discharged, or nearly so?—Paid when they are discharged, if the police of the district to which they are conveyed report favourably of them.

2648. Are the marks recorded in the case of a life sentence?—They are.

2650. Is that shortening of the period of imprisonment of prisoners who have been sentenced for life founded in any respect on the marks that have been obtained by them?—Not on the marks, but I think on the man's general conduct during the whole time of imprisonment; because his remission is not calculated by his marks, the marks are only recorded to show what he has earned, and to show his conduct.

2651. Then in the case of a prisoner sentenced for life the marks bear no value with regard to remission?—They bear no value as regards remission.

2652. The marks can bear no pecuniary value, except in cases where the period of imprisonment is shortened, because they are not payable until after the discharge of the prisoner?—Yes, they would in this way, that supposing a life-sentence man was as

Mr. G. Clayton,

Mr. G. Clynne

excessively idle man, and it was recorded in the mark or penal record that from idleness he remained in the probation class, in which the marks have no money value, he might be discharged at the end of 20 years without having earned a single farthing.

2653. I do not think you quite apprehend my meaning. I will put a case. Supposing a man is a life prisoner—under a life sentence, and that during all that period a number of marks have been earned by him, what value would they have, either with regard to remission, or to their pecuniary value in the case of a life sentence?—I see exactly what you mean, and yet it is very difficult to explain. It would be necessary I think in that case to commence by stating the maximum amount that can be earned by a convict. Whatever number of marks he gets is only 3*l*., therefore a life-sentence man cannot earn more than the 3*l*.. You may have it represented that he has earned by his marks 40*l*. or 50*l*., but the Secretary of State's orders only admit, whatever a man's marks may be, that he may be paid 3*l*.; if he is a good man he can earn his 3*l*. in a five years' sentence, so as to give every man an opportunity of earning the 3*l*., but he cannot earn more than that. After that you may have it recorded here, but he can only get the 3*l*.

2654. Let me ask you shortly, what use the marks are to a life-sentence man?—Simply as a record of his conduct and to show that he has earned the 3*l*., because it is quite possible that he cannot earn the 3*l*. in a life sentence if his conduct is continuously bad.

2655. Will you tell me whether the treason-felony prisoners have acquired any remission of sentence, supposing them not to forfeit the marks which they had already obtained?—That would involve the necessity of my handing in each of the penal records by which I could tell whether they had earned any gratuity or remission. It would depend on the entries that are made weekly.

2656. I should like to see the precise position of each person with regard to money and remission?—I can give you that. When a free pardon was received for those already liberated I was authorized by special authority to give them their maximum amount of gratuity exactly the same as if they had earned it at this prison.

2657. (Dr. Lyons.) Did those treason-felony prisoners who went out get any money?—They got the 3*l*. and full expenses back to their place.

2658. Did they all get the 3*l*?—Every one of them.

2659. All those that were under your charge?—All. I gave the order for their receiving the 3*l*.

2660. (Mr. Bradrick.) May I ask you, are prisoners ever sent back to separate confinement at Millbank as a punishment for persistent idleness?—Not for persistent idleness; but they would be, supposing that that idleness and an insubordinate spirit were shown at the same time. Supposing a man should determine to say, "I won't work here; I set you at defiance," the director has the power either to put that man in the penal class here for nine months, exactly the same as at Millbank, or he might think it advantageous to get rid of him here and send him there. But as an ordinary rule all men now sentenced to close confinement are located in the prisons where they commit the offence, each prison being furnished with a penal class prison, which was not the case formerly; they were then sent back to Millbank.

2661. Have any of the treason-felony convicts been told that if such conduct as you have described were continued they would be relegated back to Millbank?—Never, I think, since a number of them were returned there for showing an insubordinate spirit has such a threat been held out to them; but the director on several occasions has cautioned these men that if they do not turn over a new leaf they would be punished.

2662. (Dr. Greenwood.) Can the treason-felony prisoners who are not working earn any remission of their sentence, or any money?—Not while they are not working, because they would not be accredited with their six marks, and therefore would be earning no remission. If a man gets only six marks he is earning no gratuity.

2663. Can a man earn six marks without working?—If he was earning six marks only he would be rewarded, because the six marks would show that he was idle, and therefore he would be punished for it.

2664. But those treason-felony prisoners are not working?—There has been an exceptional case.

2665. My question had reference to them. My question was whether the treason-felony prisoners who are refusing to work are earning any remission of their sentence, or any money?—None while they are so. If they worked fairly to-morrow, and the officer thought it desirable to give them seven marks, they would earn remission. If on the following day they failed to work, and six marks were only awarded to them, they would earn no remission; but the instant that they showed a disposition to do any work the officer would credit them with more marks, and then they would earn remission.

2666. Are they earning six marks now when they are not working?—I can answer that question on reference to the penal record, but I cannot without.

2668. (Mr. Bradrick.) May he forfeit by idleness marks earned other days by industry; may he forfeit by idleness to-day marks which he earned by industry yesterday?—Of course he might. I will give an instance. Supposing a man is idle to-day, and reported for idleness, if it is a first offence I deal leniently and forfeit marks. I can forfeit 42 marks, any number between 1 and 84; 42 represents a forfeiture of seven days, so that if a man was idle and should forfeit 42 marks, that is seven days of his remission gone; but if afterwards he goes to work, earns over a new leaf and is industrious, he can earn back a portion of those forfeited marks; therefore he would actually only lose five days, but he would lose five days which he previously earned by steady labour.

2669. (Dr. Greenwood.) Would any other prisoner who was not a treason-felony convict, and who did not work, lose his marks for not doing so?—He would, and be severely punished.

2670. Then in that respect they are treated with exceptional indulgence?—In that respect they are treated entirely exceptionally.

2671. (Chairman.) With regard to prisoners generally, how is this system of marks, and the benefits they may obtain by industry, made known to them?—The officer, my lord, has a book in which he enters the name of every prisoner in his party. That book is ruled with six columns for the six days of the week, and at the close of every day he fills in the marks opposite the man's name that he thinks he has been deserving of. If he is not a skilled man who has come here, and never done a day's work before, we will say a gentleman, still if the officer sees that he shows a desire to do all in his power he would award him eight marks although he did but little work. It is not dependent on the quantity of work they do, but on the disposition to work that they show, because many of them are strangers to work. This is an account, my lord, [exhibits a document] for each day; at the end of each week it is totalled up by the officer; his book is sent to my office, it is submitted to the deputy-governor, who examines it to see that the officers exercise no favoritism in awarding those marks, as he is constantly on the spot. Once it is initiated by the deputy-governor the marks are entered into every prisoner's penal record; and here is one of them, showing the number that the prisoner has earned throughout his career every week.

2672. My question is, how far and in what way is the prisoner informed of the nature of the system?—He has a card hanging up in his cell which is made up every quarter, showing the number of marks he has earned and forfeited, the amount of gratuity he has earned.

2673. Is it fully explained to him on admission?—It is fully explained to him on admission.

2674. By you or by the deputy-governor?—The rules in which the mark system is mentioned are read by the deputy-governor.

2675. This is totted up every week?—The books are totted up every week.

2676. Then there is a sort of debit and credit account entered in the case of each prisoner?—Every prisoner; and it is one of the most important parts of the whole system connected with the governor's position, because I am not borne harmless if I keep a man over his time, and his liberation depends upon a correct calculation of the marks earned to show when he becomes due to be recommended to the Secretary of State. On the last day of this month a form will be drawn up in which the names of all men due to be discharged in August will be submitted to the Secretary of State. In that is a record of the man's class, the marks he has forfeited, his punishment, and all particulars. It then rests with the Secretary of State to issue a warrant for his licence. Sometimes it will come down with an order for his name to be withdrawn, and submitted again this day three months. Then I get down the licence signed by the Secretary of State, and as each man earns his marks, he is discharged on licence.

2677. (Mr. De Vere.) The licence is what is called a "ticket of leave"?—A ticket of leave. Would you let my mark clerk explain the mark system?

2678. (Chairman.) Yes.

The witness did not withdraw.

SAMUEL HENRY BOWLES examined.

2679. (Chairman.) What office do you hold?—First class clerk, my lord.

2680. In this prison?—Yes, my lord.

2681. Will you explain to the Commission what is the result of the system of marks as applied to the treason-felony convicts?—Yes, my lord. By this system they can gain by good conduct and willing industry a remission of one fourth of their sentences on public works.

2682. You will take man by man and tell us?—The rules laid down apply to all alike.

2683. Take George Brown: what is his position?—He is new in the second class. The total number of marks representing his sentence is 50,250; that represents a 10 years' sentence. Towards that number he has earned up to the 29th May 1870 6,348 marks, my lord.

2684. What does that represent in money?—His total gratuity for that number of marks amounts to 11. 3s. 11½d.

The witness withdrew.

MR. GEORGE CLYTON'S EXAMINATION RESUMED.

2685. (Witness.) Up to the latest time he has earned eight marks a day.

2686. (Dr. Lyons.) I will only ask the governor whether, in view of this statement, he has or has not struck off from the marks that any of the treason-felony prisoners have earned up to the present time, any number of marks as a punishment for not having worked?—Oh, a considerable number. McCafferty up to this time has lost 978 marks for misconduct.

2687. (Mr. Broadrick.) Has any forfeiture of marks on the ground of idleness taken place during the present year?—In two cases: in the case of McCafferty, McCafferty during the present year has forfeited 84 marks for idleness, that is 14 days.

2688. (Dr. Lyons.) Since the last of January?—84 marks since the 1st January. I wish to bend in this extract about McCafferty:—"Warden Barnett reports this prisoner for playing in the stone shed with another prisoner with bits of wood at a game resembling hockey, and announcing his intention to continue it even outside; date 24 June, 1870. Statement of convict: 'It is correct; I have no defence; I do it for exercise; I see no harm in it; I will continue.' Reduced from second to third class, marks 720; additional punishment, 8 days penal diet; forfeited for remission 84 marks; marks previously forfeited 894. The prisoner on bearing the sentence said, 'Remember, you will have trouble with the whole party.' And also about Michael Sheehy: "Warden Barnett reports this prisoner for playing in the stone shed with the preceding prisoner at some game, and refusing to desist. Statement: 'I had intended not to go on after being cautioned, but as you have had me reported I will do so again.' Reduced from third class to probation. Period 2685. Does that stand to his credit?—Yes, my lord.

2686. (Dr. Lyons.) What does that represent in time?—1,041 days at six marks per day. The rule is that no man is credited with a gratuity after he has earned 34.

2687. But in point of time what amount of remission does that represent?—6,348 marks; that is the number of marks this man has earned up to the end of May; at six marks a day it amounts to 1,041 days, and by earning eight marks a day it would only take him 781 days; the difference between 1,041 days and 781 days is 260 days.

2688. (Chairman.) Then he has earned 260 days?—No, my lord; this man has not always been earning eight marks a day.

2689. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you not turn the 6,348 marks that he has earned into the amount of remission of time that he has earned?—Yes. He has gained a remission of 117 days towards his sentence.

"calculated in marks 480; forfeited for remission, marks 48; forfeited previously 494." (Hands in the extract.) That had been an ordinary prisoner he would have got three days bread and water, but I told Captain Saltor that I thought he would use a wise discretion if he only awarded a day or two penal diet instead of bread and water; and since then I believe both the prisoners have expressed their regret at having so needlessly set him at defiance, and that the punishment they got was perfectly just.

2694. (Dr. Greenwood.) In point of fact the treason-felony prisoners have not lost marks for idleness, but for idleness combined with insubordination?—Idleness combined with an insubordinate spirit.

2695. Had they not shown an insubordinate spirit they would not have lost their marks?—Certainly not. In this instance, when the officer saw that they were setting such a bad example by playing hockey, had they desisted the officer would have reported the fact verbally to me, and I should have made it a point to have seen the two prisoners, to have pointed out to them the impropriety of their conduct, and told them that a repetition of it would have met with severe punishment; but instead of that they most distinctly told the officer, in the hearing of the others, that in spite of him they would go on, and they persisted in going on; and it was simply to prevent anything like a scene on the public works that those men were not immediately handcuffed and sent in as ordinary prisoners would have been; I do not feel myself justified in adopting such a course; I do not know what might be the result of such a matter.

2696. Then during the present year no treason-felony prisoner has lost marks for idleness alone?—I can answer that in one instance. (Refers to a book.) Luby has never had a tool in his hand since the 1st

Mr. G. Clyton.

Mr. G. Clifton. January. O'Leary has not been reported since 1868.

14 June 1870. 2907. Does that mean that he has done his work since 1868?—I think by a return I handed in yesterday you will see that individuals amongst them have occasionally done a little work. Shen has not been reported this year. Edward St. Clair has not been reported this year. William Mackay has not been reported this year. Patrick Walsh has not been reported since 1868. Mohan has not been reported this year. Patrick Doran has not been reported this year. McCaffery you have already heard of. Brown I do not think has ever been reported, for he has been a civil and a very quiet man.

2908. And yet many of those men who have not been reported have been idle, and had they been other convicts than treason-felony convicts they would have been punished?—Severely punished.

2909. (Mr. De Vere.) With reference to a question I asked you before, you will now be able to answer. Taking into consideration that there have been no reports against those men since the 1st of January for idleness, can they be deprived for idleness?

The witness did not withdraw.

2910. Then if he has been deprived of the privilege of writing letters it is not in consequence of idleness on the works?—It is not. Brown has not been reported since 1868, and I see that, up to a certain time, he has been working.

2911. Up to what time?—Up to the second week in September. During October he did nothing; during December he did nothing; during January he did nothing, and in March he did nothing; but he has been a very quiet man.

The witness did

SAMUEL HENRY ROBERTS recalled.

2702. (Chairman.) Are you prepared to tell us what the value of the marks are pecuniarily?—Yes, my lord. In the probation class they are of no value. The next class to the probation is third class; a prisoner in that class can earn 12s. 6d.

The witness remained.

Mr. G. Clifton.

MR. CLIFTON'S EXAMINATION RESUMED.

2704. (Chairman.) Then that leads me, Mr. Clifton, to ask you to answer this question, as I understood it, no person can earn more than 3s. as a gratuity?—None more than 3s., my lord.

2705. Certain treason-felony convicts have been pardoned by the Queen?—By the Queen.

2706. Upon their passing out from this prison did they receive any gratuity, though they had not earned it, as other prisoners might have done?—They did, my lord.

The witness remained.

S. H. Roberts.

SAMUEL HENRY ROBERTS' EXAMINATION RESUMED.

2711. (Dr. Lyons.) We have the equivalent of the 6,268 marks in money; we wish to have the equivalent of it in time?—The remission that this man Brown has obtained is 117 days towards his sentence.

2712. Has he been absolutely ordered that?—He 2707. What sums were in each case given?—3s.

2708. You think 3s. was given to each man?—I do, my lord; at all events I can produce the authority for whatever was given.

2709. Was it by direction of the Secretary of State?—It did not come to me from the Secretary of State, but from the directors of convict prisons.

2710. It came to you as a direction from the directors of convict prisons?—Yes, my lord.

The witness remained.

has absolutely gained 117 days remission up to the 29th May.

2713. Allowing for deduction of all kinds, that is the absolute amount of remission that he is entitled to?—Yes, sir.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. G. Clifton.

MR. GEORGE CLIFTON'S EXAMINATION RESUMED.

2714. (Mr. De Vere.) With regard to the political prisoners who were pardoned you said that some money was given to them, was that to take them home?—Yes, sir.

2715. Is that the usual course in prisons when men are pardoned?—It is not, because when an ordinary prisoner is discharged his travelling expenses are paid to the place he goes to, the place of conviction, and maintenance money, &c., is allowed him to obtain refreshment, and then his gratuity is paid to him in the ordinary manner, and it holds good that supposing a convict has any money in his possession when he was apprehended, 15s. or 16s., it is placed to his credit. When he is discharged on licence he cannot receive that 15s. or 16s. in a lump, but in instalments of 1s. a month, paid by myself, unless of course a special authority may override that.

2716. Was the amount of expenses that was given to these treason-felony prisoners when they were discharged the same as that given to ordinary prisoners when they are discharged?—No, it was more liberal. I had a carte blanche to exercise my discretion. I can hand in to the Commission a return showing the actual amount that was given in each case.

2717. (Dr. Lyons.) I believe that no prisoner is allowed to touch any of his earnings during the time he is in prison?—Just so; it is simply a nominal amount. If a prisoner dies after earning the 3s. and 3d. for extra good conduct, the wife or any relative has no claim to that sum. It is a nominal amount, so that if they applied to me I should refer them to the directors of convict prisons, who would refer them to the Secretary of State.

2718. (Chairman.) You have asked the Commission whether, in consequence of the answer given by 9 out of the 11 treason-felony convicts in this prison to the Commissioners this day, it would be proper to allow them to return to out-door employment. We requested you then to ascertain from them whether they wished to go out, telling them at the same time that if they did wish to go out it would be considered a final expression of the determination on their part to decline to come to us. Have you seen them?—I have seen each of those nine, my lord. I have seen the 11, because I went to the other two also. I went to say that the Commissioners would be ready to hear them up to 4 o'clock to-morrow, but if they elected to go out now it would be taken as a final expression of their determination to decline. They all distinctly stated that they did not wish to make any statement to the Commissioners; and Shea added that he wanted to go out with the rest of his party, but as regards work he had not worked, and he had no notion of working, that I could not ever make him work; and Mohan expressed his regret that he had said anything to the Commission at all. O'Leary, after I had seen him, asked the warden to let me see him again, and wanted to tell me the evidence he had given before the Commission. I said I did not want to hear one word.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDGAR SHAW BLAKER examined.

2721. (Chairman.) You are the medical officer of this prison?—Yes.

2722. (Dr. Greenhow.) What are your medical qualifications?—Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, Licentiate of the Edinburgh College of Physicians, and L.M.

2723. (Chairman.) How long have you been medical officer of this prison?—About four years and a quarter.

2724. Have you during that time received from any of the treason-felony convicts applications for medical assistance?—Yes; I have on several occasions.

2725. From whom can you say?—From, I think, nearly all I may say at some time or other.

2726. Have any of these been cases of affections of a serious character?—One certainly was of a serious character—that of Patrick Barry.

2727. He is no longer here. Could you attention to the 11 treason-felony prisoners who are now here?—There has been no case of serious injury to health.

2728. Have they ever complained to you of the diet?—I think one man has complained to me that he could not take his soup.

2729. Has anyone ever complained to you of the bread?—I do not recollect anyone ever having complained of the bread. Really so long a time has elapsed now that I would not be quite positive about such a matter as that, but I do not recollect it.

2730. But in any case in which they have applied to you for assistance they have received it?—Always, yes.

2731. Have you received from them any other complaints on any ground as to their position and treatment here?—I think nearly the whole tenor of their remarks would imply that they did not like their treatment here.

2732. Have there been any remarks which led you to doubt as regards their health?—I am sure they received every attention as to health.

2733. Or as to the nature of their employment?—Whether it was injurious to health?

2734. Yes?—I am certain that it was not.

2735. Such employment as they were put to would not be injurious to health?—Certainly not.

2736. I hold in my hand the medical officer's report, dated Portland Prison, January 1870. That report, I presume, bears your name, and is prepared by you?—It is.

2737. Is it the practice to make an annual statement to that effect?—It is, my lord.

2738. Without going into details on it, am I correct in saying that the average daily number of sick in prison has been 62.5?—I believe that was it. (Looks at the document.) Yes, that was the total.

2739. That has been the average?—The total average.

2740. The total average for the year?—For the year.

2741. The numbers being, as we have learned from other sources, rather more than 1,500?—Yes.

He pressed me and said, that if I did not hear it from his own lips I could ask the Commission. I declined to hear it from him or to ask the Commission, as it was confidential.

2719. Then we shall take it that we have no more questions to put on this part of the case?—I put in two returns, my lord, the "dietary table," and the "conditions of contracts for provisions." The other, my lord, is the "list of the bedding," in which I enumerate the articles issued to each of the treason-felony prisoners.

2720. These articles being the same as those issued to other prisoners?—Yes; and the "list of clothing" issued to each convict here in summer and winter, my lord.

The witness withdrew.

Ms. G. 659 m.

14 June 1870

Mr. E. S. Blaker.

2742. What appears to be the rate of mortality per 1,000 in this prison?—The rate of mortality has been about 1 per cent, or a little above it.

2743. The number of persons who have died here during the year has been 18?—Yes; but that includes some fatal accidents.

2744. It includes three fatal accidents, I believe?—It includes two or three, I know.

2745. So that, independently of these accidents, 12 or 13 would represent the number of deaths?—It would, from disease.

2746. (Mr. Brodribb.) Is there anything in the diet or discipline of this prison, so far as regards the ordinary convicts, which in your opinion is calculated to be permanently injurious to health?—Well, that is such an enormous question; it requires so many details to answer it at once, because so much depends on the state of a man's health when he comes in. For instance, one man coming in here with a robust constitution, and another man coming in with an impaired constitution from his previous life, come here in very different positions. Therefore, if I am answering for the whole body, it is very difficult to reply to the question.

2747. Let me arrive at it in another way. Are you able to state whether convicts, speaking generally, are more frequently in your hands during the first or during the last year of their confinement; whether they enjoy better health during the first or during the last year?—Well, I should think, as a rule, during the last year they have better health perhaps; but that really is such an intricate matter that it would require a great deal of minute going into to arrive at any very correct observation with regard to it. Men certainly when they first come here lose weight as a rule.

2748. Do they regain it to an equal extent?—Not to an equal extent.

2749. Is the permanent loss, on the average, a very serious loss?—No, I do not think it is very serious.

2750. And do they seem well able to perform their work during the latter period of their confinement?—Those of good constitution do. I cannot in my own mind discover the constitutions of men in treating our prisoners as a body, because you have such a different back to stand upon. You are working in one case on a man in good health, on the other on a man with impaired constitution to begin with, and you would expect the difference to be much greater in one than the other.

2751. Speaking of the 11 treason-felony convicts now in this prison, are you able to state generally whether they are now in as good a state of health as they were when they entered the prison?—I should say with one exception they are.

2752. What is that exception?—I might say Mackay is not in as good health as when he came here.

2753. I think McCafferty is at this moment in the infirmary?—He is.

Mr.
E. S. Bisher,
14 June 1873.

2754. Is his health the same?—His general health is very good; he suffers from nervous complaints.

2755. Now, in matters of health, have you the absolute power of recommending what you consider desirable?—Yes.

2756. And are your recommendations always acted upon?—Almost always; I might say always. I suppose you are now referring to the general body of convicts?

2757. I was referring then to the general body. Can you state generally that your recommendation is always acted upon?—Yes, it is almost invariably acted upon.

2758. Have you ever recommended anything in the case of those 11 treason-felony convicts?—Yes, I recommended an extra bread supper.

2759. And was it granted?—It was.

2760. Have you ever recommended anything in their favour for the benefit of their health which has not been granted?—Everything has been granted.

2761. What is the practice with regard to medical inspection when a prisoner is first received?—They first enter the prison, and then are immediately taken to the bath-room; there they have a bath each, and they are after that marched down to the hospital, where they are put in a room on one side of the passage, and then each take off their own things singly in the passage, and come into the office opposite, and there they are examined privately.

2762. Are they stripped naked?—Yes, when they come into the room they are.

2763. Are they stripped before they come into the room?—Are you speaking of those 11 men?

2764. Perhaps we had better first speak generally of the usual practice?—The usual practice now is that a man does not take off his shirt in the presence of other men. He comes into the room and takes off his shirt, and therefore he is not seen naked by the others. That is not the practice that always has been acted upon.

2765. So we have understood. As regards those 11 men, are you able to state from recollection whether any of them were stripped naked in the presence of others?—They might have taken off their things in the presence of others. During that time we were not so particular about it as that way.

2766. Do you recollect in any case of any of those treason-felony prisoners this taking place: that on some one or more of them attempting to make a remark about their health, you, in the most insolent tone (I am reading a statement made) told them to hold their tongue, that no one was speaking to them, and not to attempt to speak until they were spoken to?—No, I never made use of any such expression.

2767. You feel quite sure that you never made use of any such expression?—I am perfectly certain of it.

2768. Do you remember Mulcahy being here?—I recollect him by name. I do not recollect actually much about him now.

2769. Do you recollect this incident: that Mulcahy had occasion to see you, that you asked him in the rudest possible tone what was the matter with him, and that on Mulcahy replying you turned on him and said, "You fellows; you Fenians think that a doctor has nothing to do but to attend to you?" Have you any recollection of that occurring?—I never said it.

2770. You distinctly state that you never said that?—I do. I do not believe that I am referred to even for having said it. I believe that it refers to the assistant-surgeon. I believe that that really referred to the man who was here as assistant-surgeon, Dr. Bessan, at that time.

2771. (Dr. Lyons.) Is he here still?—No, he has left the prison.

2772. (Dr. Greenhow.) Would Dr. Bessan have used such language, think you?—He was rather sharp sometimes, but I do not think he would use such language.

2773. (Mr. Brodick.) Was he medical officer here then?—He was assistant-surgeon and I was medical officer.

2774. You are in a position to state that you never used such an expression?—Certainly.

2775. On that or on any other occasion?—On that or on any other occasion.

2776. (Mr. De Vere.) Have you ever found that a prisoner had any difficulty in bringing his case under your notice?—None whatever. As a rule these men used first to be seen by the assistant-surgeon; but lately, within the last—it is about 12 months now—I have seen them individually myself. The ordinary practice of the prison is, if a man wishes to see the doctor he puts his name down in the morning, and he sees the assistant-surgeon at 12 o'clock in the day; if the assistant-surgeon considers his case one that requires treatment in the hospital he is admitted into hospital, and he then comes under my care, my immediate care; but if the ailments are slight he treats them in the way of casual sick.

2777. Has any man who has come under your care complained to you that he had found a difficulty in bringing his case under your supervision?—I believe they used to prefer seeing me to seeing the assistant-surgeon, but I have never heard them express any difficulty; but I have often heard them saying that they did not like to see him.

2778. Did they ever complain that they found a difficulty in obtaining medical assistance, either from you or the assistant-surgeon?—No; they may have expressed themselves once or twice dissatisfied with the assistant-surgeon, but not for any neglect of treatment.

2779. They never expressed dissatisfaction to you or spoke of having found it difficult to get medical advice?—No.

2780. Does the labour on the public works appear to you to have a different effect upon men of education and sedentary habits to what it does on the labouring class?—I think, speaking as a body, it does. It tells more on them than on the ordinary labourer; it mends do.

2781. Could you say whether the number of those men whose health has broken down under labour was larger in the educated class or in the labouring class?—I think probably a larger number in the educated class, because their prison life would tell more on them; they have not been used to the amount of physical exertion; they have never been trained to it, and it is new to them.

2782. Does the same observation apply to the indoor occupation, such as cooking, washing, tailoring?—Not so much. No, certainly, not so much.

2783. Does it in any degree?—Very slightly, because any man can almost turn to a tailor.

2784. Is ophthalmia prevalent in the prison?—I should think not at all more so than it would be in an average population of the same extent outside. There is a good deal of twinging in the prison; not so much now as there has been.

2785. Does it ever occur to you to recommend any protection in summer time to the eyes from the glare?—Oh, yes, eye-shades. We have several men wearing the shades.

2786. The caps that are worn here on the works have no peaks?—They have no peaks.

2787. Have you ever thought it advisable to suggest that an alteration should be made in the pattern of the cap?—No; I have never seen a necessity to do so on medical grounds.

2788. I remarked that some of the men on the works extemporize peaks for themselves, by putting up a rag under the cap which projects over the eyes?—Yes, I think some of them do.

2789. Are they allowed to do that?—I suppose the officer in charge allows them. Are you referring to a party a short distance from this prison?

2790. I have remarked it in a few of every party coming in from the works?—There is a party here called the invalid party, and I dread that a good many of them are allowed those extra things. I do not know that the men out in the quarry would. It is a large party—a party of 60 men.

2791. (Dr. Lyons.) Do I understand you to say that you do not remember anything sufficiently distinct about Mulcahy?—I can by referring to the books. I have his hospital case and everything about him. I can tell what he was in for, and his case, and everything that way. (Refers to some sheets.) It is a name I recollect very well, but I do not really recollect much of his case.

2792. What do you call these papers that you are now examining?—These are hospital papers; case sheets.

2793. Are you sure that you should have his case sheet there?—If he was admitted into hospital. I do not think he ever was. He never was in hospital.

2794. He was never in the hospital here?—No.

2795. Does that imply that he never came under your observation?—It would I think imply that he never came under my observation. He left here it appears in 1867, on the 11th of the fourth month, for Mountjoy. I have some papers here with reference to the last Commission, which may perhaps show the actual treatment he received in the prison. I could not give that with regard to a great many, but I think in his case I may have it. Yes, here it is. It is from the time of his arrival in the prison up to the 14th November 1866, the day of his departure.

2796. What is that paper in your hand?—The history of his treatment, of the medicine that he had, and what he was treated for.

2797. (Mr. Brodick.) How do you describe that sheet you hold in your hand?—This is a simple extract from "the complaining sick book."

2798. (Dr. Lyons.) Did Mulcahy suffer from hæmoptysis when he was here?—He did; complained of hæmoptysis.

2799. Were you medical officer at the time?—I was.

2800. Was he seen by you?—I do not think I have ever seen him.

2801. If a case of hæmoptysis was serious would you have seen the case?—He would be sent into hospital, and I would be sure to see him.

2802. Can you furnish the Commission with a certified copy of that document relating to Mulcahy?—Yes.

2803. Can you state from anything on that sheet, or from any other source, whether Mulcahy, while he was suffering from hæmoptysis, was continued at hard labour?—I should think he was continued at hard labour. From what appears by this he first complained on the 21st July. He then had an opening pill; on the 28th he complained and had medicine—leu. He then applied on the 14th August, and did not get any medicine. On the 29th August he applied again and had a cough mixture.

2804. On how many occasions do you find hæmoptysis or spitting of blood entered?—Twice; one on the 21st July, and the other the 28th. After that he complained of a cold, and the intervals were the 24th, 29th, and 30th August; then 1st September, 5th September, and 7th September.

2805. And notwithstanding these frequent entries, two of hæmoptysis and other occasions, it does not appear that you were consulted about him?—No; he is only stated to complain of cough.

2806. Am I to understand that although complaining twice of hæmoptysis, and complaining frequently to the medical officer, he was continued at hard labour?—I suppose so, but this is not my treatment; this is the treatment of the assistant-surgeon of the time, Dr. Baan. He was a good man and very clever.

2807. Still I find that while Mulcahy was at Portland the kind of labour that he was reported to sit for was "hard labour"?—That was on his reception, on the 14th April 1862; and he makes no complaint until the 21st July.

2808. I want to know whether he was continued on hard labour during that period in which he twice suffered from hæmoptysis, and several times subsequently applied to the assistant-surgeon?—He continued at labour.

2809. Is that shown by any papers in your hand?—No; only I gather so because there is no proof of his being admitted. He might have been put to some lighter labour by the assistant-surgeon. I cannot say.

2810. How can that be ascertained?—I do not think it is possible to ascertain it.

2811. It appears to me to be very important to ascertain it in some way or other. Can you suggest any way in which it can be ascertained?—It might possibly be ascertained through the governor, but I do not know if it can.

2812. Would the governor have applied to you, to the medical officer, or the assistant medical officer, before changing a man from hard labour to light labour?—He would apply to me. The assistant-surgeon often recommends a man for change of labour without its coming to me; but if the governor wanted to know on any medical matter he would apply to me personally.

2813. Have you any record of any such application, made to you by the governor or by anybody else, to remove Mulcahy, in consequence of blood spitting, from hard labour to light labour?—No. The word "hæmoptysis" is entered here, but in those times we used to have to hold the complaining sick we now have, and we used to put down some disease. Hæmoptysis would tend to imply that the man had a violent spitting of blood. I should imagine, from his being treated in such a casual way as this, that the amount of hæmoptysis was very small.

2814. That is an ex post facto explanation that I do not think it safe for you to assume?—I can confidently assume it, for I do not think any man applying to Dr. Baan would not be sent by him into hospital at once.

2815. Where is he at present? Is he in the service?—No, he is not; he holds some appointment in London.

2816. From what source are the medicines supplied to these institutions?—They are supplied by contract from the various leading men—chemists—Gale, Baker, and Ward, and all good firms here.

2817. Who is responsible for the compounding of the medicines?—A qualified compounder.

2818. Do you know what was the name of the compounder at the time Mulcahy was under treatment?—Holman.

2819. What is the name of the present compounder?—At present we are without any.

2820. Have you authority over the compounder?—Yes, I have.

2821. If you reported him for not sufficiently paying attention to the compounding of the medicines, would he be dismissed?—Oh, certainly.

2822. Do you believe that the medicines are properly supplied and properly made up on all occasions?—I do, certainly.

2823. Have you had complaints to make of the quality of medicines supplied by the contractor?—Very seldom; now and then I send a few back.

2824. Have you had occasion to complain of the manner in which they were made up by the compounder?—No; I might once or twice.

2825. Once or twice?—Well, I don't know; I won't state positively that I never had. A man might occasionally make a mistake, but not have ever been reported.

2826. On the whole, are you satisfied that the compounding of the medicines is carefully and properly carried out?—Yes, I am satisfied.

2827. You mentioned a while ago that men on coming here lost weight?—I think that after they have been here for a time that many of them do.

2828. Do you derive that from a general impression, or are there any data to show it?—At one time—I must enter into, perhaps, rather a long explanation of it—at one time I was rather disposed to recommend a little more. As all I say taken down? This is a matter which is irrelevant to this inquiry.

36.

2828. You have spoken of the decrease in weight in convicts after coming here; what data have you to go upon in respect to that?—About two or three years ago I had occasion to weigh a great many of the men, and I found that many of them lost weight in the first two months they were here.

2829. What steps did you take in consequence of ascertaining that?—I made a recommendation for a slight increase in diet.

2831. In what class of diet principally?—Chiefly in bread in one meal, supper.

2832. To what extent was that increase?—I think it was three or four ounces.

2833. Was it carried out?—It was not.

2834. It was not carried out?—No.

2835. Was it carried out in any instances?—No, it was not carried out at all. I am not referring now to those treason-felony prisoners.

2836. I am quite aware of that. Are you still of opinion that such an increase of diet ought to be given?—I think it would be an advantage to the great body.

2837. To the great body of the prisoners?—Yes. I think the supper, in proportion to the other meals, is rather deficient.

2838. And do the prisoners, as a matter of fact, perform a good deal of labour between dinner and supper?—Yes, they do.

2839. A good deal of labour?—Yes, they perform a good deal of labour; they work from 1 to 5.45 in summer.

2840. At what hour is the supper?—Six or half-past 6, about; soon after they come in.

2841. Did you in any or in many instances attribute the loss of weight to anything but this deficiency of food and the hard labour, or did you attribute it in any instances to absolute deterioration of health?—Well, I suppose it was the effect of those various reasons combined.

2842. Do you think that at any time the food was so very deficient that there was danger of men of a phthisical diathesis running into phthisis in consequence of deficient supply of food?—No, I do not say that. I think the food question is one that is so nearly balanced that it is almost as open one with some whether it is enough or whether it is not.

2843. Is the administration of the baths of this institution generally under your supervision?—No, except in the hospital, under medical orders. There the baths are immediately under my own supervision.

2844. Are you consulted about the general system of baths, or have you any sort of supervision over them or responsibility for them?—No; if I were to make perhaps any statement about abnormalities it might be attended to, but I am never supposed to have anything to do with it.

2845. Have reports ever reached you of any of the prisoners, especially treason-felony prisoners, being obliged to bathe in the same water with others?—No.

2846. Is it consistent with your knowledge that a man suffering from any form of skin disease, or any form of syphilis, might bathe in the water immediately previous to another convict?—I should say it would not be advisable for him.

2847. Is it consistent with your knowledge that such a thing has occurred?—I do not know that it has occurred. I do not know an instance of its having occurred.

2848. Might it occur?—Yes, it might occur.

2849. It might occur?—It might occur, but if a man had a very bad skin disease he would be in the hospital.

2850. But supposing a man has a certain amount of tertiary syphilis about him, is it possible that he might bathe in a bath in which another would be directed to bathe after him?—I should say a case of tertiary syphilis would be in hospital. I do not think there is a single case of tertiary syphilis in the prison at the present time.

2851. You said that a man might be called to bathe in a bath in which a man with skin disease, or a certain kind of syphilis, had previously bathed?—I do not say that it is impossible, but I think it improbable.

2852. Have you known of men to the number of five bathing in the same water one after another?—I should say in this prison it is not so.

2853. Is it so in the infirmary?—No.

2854. In the infirmary does each man get a separate bath?—Yes.

2855. Do you think that, or are you aware that the water is changed for each man?—I cannot answer that positively. The principal infirmary warder is the man who looks after the bath, but the baths ordered there are generally medical, the medical and other baths.

2856. But although the warder is responsible, do you not think that you are in a certain manner the supervisor of the bath system in hospital?—Yes; I do not believe that it exists.

2857. Have you observed any effects on the eyes from the glare and dust in this prison?—It certainly has a certain weakening effect sometimes, this glare of the stone.

2858. A weakening effect on the eyes?—Yes; but it is one that you get used to after a time. A year or two after you are here you suffer a good deal less than at first.

2859. Is the bread-and-water punishment frequently employed here?—Yes, it is as frequently as in most prisons.

2860. Do any cases come before you, or have any cases come before you, in which the ill effects produced on the system of the convicts seemed to be attributable to constant bread-and-water diet?—Yes, sometimes. A man suffers certainly from bread-and-water diet.

2861. In what does he suffer?—His general health becomes lowered, so that you will have stunted development in the glands, and so on. You will see that a man's health is becoming actually deteriorated and below par. Very often it develops itself in that way; in some instances scrofula shows itself.

2862. Then, in the case of men under continual punishment, bread and water, perhaps, one week, and, perhaps, again in a fortnight, they are most likely to suffer in health?—They cannot do otherwise than suffer.

2863. Do you see men undergoing bread-and-water punishment often?—Every day.

2864. If you find that in your opinion a man's health is deteriorating under it, have you the power of reporting it?—I have the power of requesting his immediate release, or ordering some other form of punishment.

2865. Have you made those requests?—Yes.

2866. Have they always been attended to?—Always.

2867. Always?—Always.

2868. Do you know of any man who has been permanently injured by long continuance of bread-and-water punishment?—There are a good many of the prisoners whose healths have suffered from constant punishment.

2869. Have you any supervision over the bread and the other elements of the diet?—Yes, I inspect the diet. I am supposed to have a general supervision over it.

2870. To what does that supervision extend?—I often inspect it. The hospital diet is the same as that supplied to the prison, and by inspecting that I inspect the prison diet as well; and I also inspect the diet in the prison kitchen at odd times.

2871. Did you ever inspect the flour, tea, and meat in the raw state?—Yes.

2872. And the other elements of the diet of the prison?—All of them.

2873. Have you had from time to time occasion to make complaints of the quality of the diet?—Very seldom.

2874. But you have in certain instances?—Now and then; and when a thing has been condemned it has always been sent away. Whenever any man comes in that is not considered right there is a board assembled on it; the governor, myself, and the steward generally.

2875. Do you think, as a general rule, that the bread is sufficiently baked here?—I think so.

2876. Have you heard any complaints against it?—There might have been one or two while I am here.

2877. Is it the same bread that is used for the infirmary and for the convicts in general?—The same.

2878. If a man gets sick in his cell at night is there full facility for his sending for the medical officer?—Yes.

2879. And are you, or the assistant-surgeon, sent for from time to time to see persons sick at night?—Yes.

2880. When did it last happen that you were sent for at night?—As a rule the assistant-surgeon does it, and therefore the last time I did it was an evening during his absence; about a fortnight ago, I think, now.

2881. What hour of the night was it?—I think about 10 o'clock.

2882. Have you, as a matter of fact, yourself ever been summoned in the middle of the night?—Yes; when the assistant-surgeon is away I have always undertaken to come down. I used to do a good deal of it when I was assistant-surgeon myself, but not lately.

2883. If the assistant-surgeon found a case very difficult would he summon you?—Yes.

2884. And has that occurred?—Yes; the last case was a case of stragulated bowels, and I was sent for at night.

2885. If a man were attacked by diarrhoea, would he have proper facilities, in your opinion, for purposes of nature at night in his cell?—Yes.

2886. If he had a smart attack of diarrhoea from physical circumstances, necessitating his going to the watercloset, can he do so?—I believe the rule of the prison now is, that a man uses his utensil at night, because it is very awkward, I believe, to let a man out of the cell at night.

2887. It is so stated; but has it come to your knowledge that any instance has really occurred in which a convict actually sick from diarrhoea, and who, under ordinary circumstances, would be allowed to go to the watercloset, was not afforded proper facility?—I have never known any injury to health from it.

2888. I believe that if a man does use his chamber utensil at night he is reported for having done so?—If he is suspected of using it unnecessarily, he is reported.

2889. We have been informed, as well as I remember, that he is reported in every instance, and that then it requires the report of the medical officer to say whether he has used it unnecessarily or not?—That is a question of discipline that I am not acquainted with.

2890. But, as a matter of fact, have you been summoned before the governor and asked as to your opinion if a man had a necessity to use his chamber-vessel for the purpose of evacuating his bowels at night?—Yes, I have been summoned, but the assistant-surgeon would generally give that information. If a man gets a couple of aperient pills, it would follow that he cannot help using his pot at night.

2891. That is a clear case, but supposing a man has been forced, for purposes of nature, to use his pot at night, and that you are applied to?—I should endeavour to go into the case as well as I could and give an opinion on the exact way that I thought it was.

2892. Might I ask you how you could possibly tell?—I would say that I would give as good an opinion as the nature of the case would allow me.

2893. How could you ascertain that a man who said it was necessary to evacuate his bowels at 12 o'clock last night really required to do so or not?—If the man had violent diarrhoea I should expect to find the pot very full; a good deal there. If there was only one evacuation, I should imagine he had not been very bad; and then, if I had any doubts about him, I would admit him into hospital, and place him in an "observation ward" and make him use a close stool.

2894. If a man had used his chamber-vessel for this purpose and was reported for it, and you, when you were assistant-surgeon, were required to give evidence on this point, I want to know what evidence you could give as to whether a man who stated that it was necessary to evacuate his bowels at 12 o'clock last night was really under the necessity of doing so, or did it merely for the purpose of giving annoyance?—It is impossible for me to give a direct opinion on that point, because I cannot do it.

2895. Then you admit that you have no data to go upon?—Except the secondary data of using my observation, which we are obliged to do with these men; but I could not positively say that he could help using his utensil. As a rule I think, the evidence I have as to the amount after diarrhoea is a good rule. If a man's bowels are opened once in diarrhoea I think they would, as a rule, be opened twice. If he had actual diarrhoea they would be opened more than once. If they were only opened once, and that was a natural evacuation, I would say that I would consider he had not got diarrhoea, and that he might possibly retain it if he chose to do so.

2896. Do you think it would be a safe or a prudent or a proper course to recommend a man or any number of men, if they have a natural desire to evacuate their bowels, to retain these evacuations?—No, certainly not.

2897. Have you any supervision of the punishment cells, including the dark cells?—Yes, I visit them every day. All men that are under punishment I visit daily.

2898. If you find a prisoner in a dark cell or a punishment cell, who is in any way deteriorating in health, could you recommend his removal at once?—Yes, from that cell, or from the prison altogether.

2899. Have such things occurred?—Yes.

2900. Have your recommendations in that respect been attended to?—Yes.

2901. I believe corporal punishment is not resorted to in this prison?—It is.

2902. Have you the supervision of men subjected to corporal punishment?—I have.

2903. If a man is ordered for corporal punishment how does he come under your notice?—I examine him, and ascertain that he is fit to bear corporal punishment. After that I am present at the corporal punishment, and if during its administration I consider the man not able to bear more I should request them to take him down and to cease.

2904. Would it be imposing too much trouble to ask you to be good enough to put in a return of the time spent in the infirmary by each of the 11 treason-felony prisoners now the subject of inquiry?—I can give it to you. I have it here.

2905. Perhaps you would be good enough to order a return to be taken out of that?—Yes. I have the date of their admission, date of discharge, and disease for which they were admitted.

2906. Also copies of their case papers for the time they were in the hospital?—Very well. Those case papers necessarily are very brief. They are not notes we are supposed to keep officially; they are more for our own guidance.

2907. Those notes are sent from prison to prison, are they not?—No, that is the medical history. These case sheets are never sent about.

2908. Have bulls been prevalent here?—Yes, they are prevalent.

2909. Is there anything in the diet to which you would attribute their prevalence?—Well, I suppose anything that tends at all to keep the body rather below par tends to develop boils.

Mr.
E. A. Baker.
14 June 1870.

26.
E. S. Barker.
14 June 1870.

2910. Are you aware that potatoes are not part of the rations now?—Yes.

2911. Are fresh vegetables of any kind used now?—No, except in the hospital.

2912. They are used in the hospital?—Yes. I have potatoes still there.

2913. You have potatoes at the hospital and fresh vegetables?—Yes. There are onions, I believe, used in the soup here.

2914. For what length of time is there a want of fresh vegetables and potatoes in the diet going on?—Want of potatoes for about three months in the year, but they have carrots and onions in the soup.

2915. Have you yet observed any bad effects from it?—No.

2916. Have you seen any appearance of a scabulous tendency?—I have observed one or two since I have been here.

2917. I mean since the cessation of the supply of vegetables?—This year not one; last year we had one or two.

2918. Is a spongy state of the gums observable in any instance, or a scabulous state?—No.

2919. I will ask you to hand in a return of the time spent by the treason-telony prisoners, non the subject of inquiry in the hospital, and a copy of the case-paper relating to each of them?—I will.

2920. (Chairman.) Perhaps you will forward it to the secretary, No. 5, Parliament Street?—I will.

2921. (Dr. Greenhouse.) Do you examine every prisoner on his arrival in the prison?—Yes, as a rule, the assistant-surgeon doing so in my absence.

2922. But when you are here you always do it yourself?—Yes.

2923. How long does that examination take you for each prisoner?—I always examine the lungs and the heart, ask if he has anything the matter with him, turn him round and look at him all over. Some men take a longer time than others. If a man appears healthy he is got over quickly; if he appears to have any disease he is thoroughly investigated.

2924. Do you keep any record of these examinations?—Yes.

2925. If you examine the chest do you keep a distinct record in every case whether you find the lungs healthy or diseased?—Yes, that is stated now in the hospital sheets; some time ago it was in the reception book.

2926. I should like to see those records before we go away?—One of the records we have at present is the hospital sheet—the history sheet.

2927. But the "history sheet" does not give any account of the state of the man's lungs?—I have another book in which the lungs and heart are recorded, with observations under each.

2928. My question goes to this extent: if you found the percussion sound and respiration normal all over the chest you would take no note of it?—No; simply "good health."

2929. For what purpose is this examination made?—In order that I may see that they are fit to be received into the prison, and whether they are fit for hard labour, or for ordinary or light labour.

2930. "That they are fit to be received into the prison." Then if you find a man suffering from severe disease you would not receive him?—I should receive him into hospital and report the case.

2931. How frequently are the prisoners inspected by you after their admission?—Once a week.

2932. Every prisoner once a week?—There is a parade on Sunday morning; they are all drawn up in file, and I pass down and view the whole of them every Sunday morning.

2933. In what manner do you view them?—I simply pass by them. If a man has a complaint to make he can do so.

2934. Do the prisoners partly undress?—No, they do not undress at all.

2935. Do they take off their hats?—They take their hats off.

2936. Are the prisoners weighed here?—Yes.

2937. Periodically?—No, not periodically.

2938. They are weighed on admission and on discharge?—Weighed on discharge, and those complaining of illness weighed very frequently as well, constantly weighed.

2939. If you found that a man was losing weight, what would you do?—He is placed on light labour, or admitted into hospital if his case seems to be a bad one.

2940. You said some time ago that a prisoner on arriving here takes a bath before he is medically inspected. Is that so?—It is so.

2941. Without reference to whether he is in good health or not?—Yes.

2942. (Chairman.) A cold bath?—No, the bath is always warm.

2943. That is administered before he comes under your notice?—It is.

2944. (Dr. Greenhouse.) There is no discretion on the part of the warders with regard to that bath?—I do not think there is. A man comes here, and brings a certificate that he is fit for removal.

2945. Do you examine every day the prisoners undergoing penal diet?—I inspect them every day.

2946. And if you found that the penal diet was not agreeing with them would you have the power of altering their diet?—Yes.

2947. And practically you do so occasionally?—Yes.

2948. Have you power to order extras for persons not in the hospital?—I can recommend extras if I see a case in which I think there absolutely necessary.

2949. Has the order always been complied with?—Yes.

2950. Have you found any of the diet to disagree with the prisoners—the gruel, for example?—No.

2951. You have had no complaint that the gruel causes indigestion?—I believe there have been a complaint or two of that sort made.

2952. But you did not attach much importance to those complaints; you do not think it does?—I do not. Complaints of prisoners are things that we have daily to do with.

2953. If a man did not eat his food would it come under your knowledge?—Yes.

2954. And what would you do in such a case?—I should send for him, see him, examine him, and most likely admit him to hospital under observation.

2955. And if a man went on not eating his food for some days, or for several weeks in succession, what would be your course?—I should take him into hospital, or place him under hospital treatment in the cells, which is sometimes done. He would be under my care.

2956. If a patient here were to complain of spitting of blood would the assistant-surgeon deal with the case without referring it to you?—Yes.

2957. Do you think that a case of real spitting of blood ought to go on without being admitted to hospital?—He would not be allowed to go on.

2958. He would be admitted into hospital?—He would.

2959. If a prisoner states that he has had spitting of blood, and is allowed to go on light labour, you infer that it is not hæmoptysis?—No, not what could be called hæmoptysis; there might have been spots charged with blood; that I should say is not hæmoptysis.

2960. If the assistant-surgeon saw a man having hæmoptysis with cough would he report that case to you to examine?—No, not if he considered himself competent to deal with it.

2961. It would be quite possible for a case of hæmoptysis with cough to go on without your knowledge?—I should say it would be very slight; it could not come under the term hæmoptysis. I suppose the term hæmoptysis would mean spitting of blood from the lungs.

2962. I asked you that question because you stated that Molebly had slight hæmoptysis or blood spitting, and got a cough mixture, and I inferred that this might have been indicative of phthisis, and I wished to ascertain whether, in such a case, the assistant-surgeon would not or ought not to report the case to you?—I am quite positive that the assistant-surgeon in these days examined the man's chest. I have not the slightest doubt that he did, from my knowledge of the man, and the knowledge he had of his profession. He was not the man to allow such a case to go on without active remedies.

2933. You speak of Dr. Busan?—Yes.

2934. How long was Dr. Busan here?—About a year.

2935. Is phthisis a common disease here?—Yes. It is.

2936. Do you think that the phthisis you meet here is in general from causes incident to prison life?—I think most of those who come in that have phthisis are men who previously had impaired constitutions.

2937. You think that it is rather developed in the hospital than existed in the hospital?—Yes.

2938. You do not think that prison life, or prison employment, or prison diet tend to excite phthisis?—No, not in any great degree.

2939. Do you observe that the men who work in the quarries have more phthisical disease than other men here?—As a rule there is a great difference. The men who work in the inside places have as many of them men recommended for those inside borst, and therefore they may be men not so strong as those in the quarries. For instance, many of the men in the wash-house, and many of the men in the tailors' shop, are all supplied on medical recommendation.

2940. Have you many instances of disease of the heart?—No.

2941. Have you known infectious diseases to have been communicated from one prisoner to another?—No.

2942. You have not known the clothes from the infirmary to communicate infectious diseases to persons employed in cleaning them over in the wash-house?—Never.

2943. No such cases occurred to your knowledge?—Never.

2944. Is pneumonia a common disease here?—It is.

2945. What form does it assume?—Generally rather of a low type.

2946. Slow in its progress?—Slow in its progress.

2947. Is it fatal?—No, not generally so.

2948. They generally recover from it?—They generally recover.

2949. Is hernia common?—It is.

2950. Do you think hernia is caused by the work?—There is no doubt that it is in some few cases, but most men come here ruptured.

2951. And the cases of hernia generally exist on admission?—Yes.

2952. (Mr. Broadrick.) You spoke of boils being somewhat prevalent; are worms very prevalent?—No; those small thread worms are rather so.

2953. Do you attribute that to anything in the diet?—It is possible that the cheese may have something to do with them.

2954. You do not think that oatmeal diet is calculated to produce them?—Well, no; no.

2955. You spoke of having recommended a certain increase in the diet, especially in respect of bread; about what time was that?—I think it was about three years, or three years and a half ago. I cannot exactly say.

2956. Was the addition which you recommended such as to bring the diet up or nearly up to the old standard?—Oh, it would not have brought it to the old standard.

2957. By the old standard I mean the standard in use before 1864?—No, it would not.

2958. You said in answer to Mr. De Vere that a man of sedentary habits and delicate constitution would be more likely to break down on hard work.

Should you recommend for hard labour on first inspection a man whom you considered of delicate constitution?—Yes, he would go through his trial as to what he is fit for. If there is no physical defect in him to negative it he should be put to his trial to see what he is fit for; because I am no judge of their occupations before they come in; I simply judge of the physical being before me.

2959. Supposing, for instance, that a man was considerably emaciated, and had in your opinion a very delicate appearance and feeble pulse?—Then he would be physically unfit for hard labour, and would be recommended for light labour.

2960. That is what I mean. You would recommend him on physical grounds, but not on account of his previous habits?—No, not on account of his previous habits.

2961. (Dr. Greenough.) Is tape-worm common here?—No.

2962. You inspect the meat occasionally?—Yes.

2963. Have you ever found that the meat contained cysticerci?—Never.

2964. Are you familiar with the appearance of such meat?—Yes.

2965. And if you saw it you would condemn it?—Certainly.

2966. Do you think that there is anything in the diet which could cause what is called thread-worm?

—I think that any diet of an indigestible nature may certainly tend to the production of those things; but I do not see anything in the prison diet which would tend to produce them more than in ordinary places.

2967. Do you find the lumbago common here?—No, except amongst a few children outside.

2968. You have already said that boils are common amongst the prisoners?—They are.

2969. Have you any reason to suppose that they spread from man to man by contact?—No, I have not.

2970. You have not found them more prevalent in one class of prisoners than another?—No.

2971. Do you find men more frequently break down from phthisis during the earlier years of their confinement than during the later part of it, or the reverse?—The earlier years.

2972. You find that men often become phthisical during the earlier period of their confinement, but that if they pass beyond a certain time they seldom become so?—Yes, they do not.

2973. (Dr. Ligon.) You are not a believer in spontaneous generation?—No.

2974. Then you do not believe that worms in the human body emanate from dirt conveyed in?—Not unless it contains the germs.

2975. (Mr. Broadrick.) It has been stated that all the treason-felony prisoners suffered from worms; is that true?—I am not aware of it.

2976. Are you aware if any of those 11 men here have suffered from worms?—I cannot answer that question positively. I do not recollect. Yes, I think there is one. Yes, I think there is one of them, Shen; I forget really which of them. I think there was one that complained of worms. I think it was Shen.

2977. But not more than one you think?—I do not recollect more than one. I have not treated there all for worms; I believe I have treated one or two.

2978. (Chairman.) Had any such thing come before your knowledge you would not have forgotten it?—Certainly not.

2979. (Mr. De Vere.) Have you practice outside the prison, Dr. Blaker?—Yes, my practice outside is chiefly confined to the wardens' wives and children. I have not actual practice.

2980. You are not able to say whether the work in the quarries carried on by private enterprise seems to produce the same effect on the workmen as the work in the Government quarries does on the convicts?—No, not from my own knowledge. I never attend to those people.

The witness withdrew.

Rev. G. Poole.

The Rev. GEORGE POOLE examined.

14 June 1879.

3011. (Chairman.) You are, I believe, the Roman Catholic chaplain of this prison?—I am, my lord.

3012. Am I right in saying "Roman Catholic chaplain" or "visiting priest"?—Roman Catholic priest.

3013. How long have you been here?—Since the 18th July 1866.

3014. How many members of your commission have you now under your charge here?—I have over 300.

3015. Has that been about the average number?—The average number would not be so large. The numbers have gradually increased since the time I came here.

3016. Have you had every opportunity and reasonable facility given to you for the purpose of visiting the sick of your Church, and also for your religious administration?—Every facility.

3017. I think the erection of a chapel is comparatively of late date?—A room was given to me when I first came here, the same room as I now use for a chapel; it has been since then enlarged and fitted.

3018. I believe that some or most of the fittings about the altar have been constructed by the prisoners themselves?—With the exception of a small canopy over the altar.

3019. Than with regard to those prisoners whose cases are more particularly under our consideration, namely, the 11 treason-felony convicts, they all, I believe, belong to the Roman Catholic Church?—They are all entered on the prison books as Roman Catholics.

3020. Have you always had full facilities for any intercourse you wanted to have with them?—I have had every facility given to me.

3021. Have you received from them, in such a shape as you would feel justified in placing before us, any complaints as to their treatment, or any matter as all?—Has the question reference simply to the 11?

3022. Yes?—There have been complaints, but not complaints I could consider should be brought before you.

3023. (Mr. Bradbick.) Have you any reason to complain of the arrangements of this prison in any respect that affects the spiritual interests of Catholics?—Nothing whatever to complain of in that respect. Of course I am answering the question with regard to the 11 who are at present within the walls of the prison.

3024. I meant the question to be general. I meant it to include such matters as the distribution of books. Have you access to every prisoner who might wish to consult you?—I have every facility at the time they are not at labour to visit them in their cells, and during the whole time that they are within the walls of the prison.

3025. Have you any complaint to make with respect to the books supplied from the library?—I have no complaint whatever. There are certain books in the library, and the prisoners are at liberty to select from them. Of course those books are submitted to me before they are issued, that is, the catalogue. The list of the books is submitted to me, and I have the option of striking out of the list any book which I consider objectionable.

3026. Have you ever found that books have been distributed to Catholics in their cells which were not in the list approved of by you?—I am not aware that I have. There have been books issued to them which I would myself consider objectionable, but because they themselves wished to read them I have allowed them to remain.

3027. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you consider that under all circumstances the prisoners have proper facilities for access to their religious duties?—Yes, sir, every facility.

3028. Can the prisoners in the infirmary, who are up and going about, attend mass on Sundays?—If they are able to walk so far as the chapel they are at liberty to attend.

3029. If a prisoner is under punishment in a penal cell or a dark cell, would he be allowed to attend divine service?—While under punishment he is not allowed to attend divine service. I should say while under governor's punishment.

3030. While under governor's punishment he is not allowed to attend divine service?—He is not.

3031. With regard to the treason-felony prisoners, 11 in number, did they, as a matter of fact, hear mass last Sunday?—Last Sunday they did not.

3032. So far as you are concerned would it have been possible for you to arrange that they should?—It was left more or less to my discretion, and so it was I believe the wish that they should not attend—not the wish of the directors, but the wish of the Commission, I believe—that they should be kept to themselves, and not communicate with one another until after the Commission arrived.

3033. You do not mean to imply that it was the wish of the Commission that they should not attend mass on last Sunday?—Certainly not; but from what I read I believed it was the wish of the Commissioners that they should not be allowed to communicate until the Commission took place. If they had gone to chapel they could have communicated one with another.

3034. Do you not think that it would have been possible to arrange them so at the chapel that they could have heard mass and not communicated with each other?—I consider it utterly impossible unless they had been mixed up with the other prisoners.

3035. But if they had been mixed with the other prisoners do you think it possible that they could have attended mass without communicating one with another?—It might have been possible; but the treason-felony prisoners have always been kept to themselves and not mixed with the other prisoners, and that is a matter of discipline in the prison.

3036. Would it have been possible for you to have said a special mass for them, and to have them placed in the chapel apart from each other and under the supervision of their warders?—It was not in my power, as I had to say two masses already.

3037. Except that prisoners under governor's punishment have not any facility for hearing mass on Sundays, is there anything else in the arrangements of the prison discipline affecting the prisoners in general, and the treason-felony prisoners in particular, with regard to their religious observance, that you have to complain of?—None whatever.

3038. (Dr. Greenhouse.) Have you free access to the prisoners when they are in the cells undergoing punishment?—Free access.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. G. Clifton.

Mr. GEORGE CLIFTON recalled.

3039. (Chairman.) You hold some papers; what are they?—A copy of the instructions received from Mr. Fagan, Director of this prison, relative to the treatment of the treason-felony prisoners. The second one is a written copy of the replies made by the treason-felony prisoners on the last occasion of my asking them. This is a copy of the instructions I received on the liberation of those eight men by the Queen's pardon. In reference to the gratuity I find, my lord, that I was wrong in saying £1. was given to each. £2. was given to each. I gave them 10s. subsistence money, and they got a second-class fare wherever they went to, and they went to Cork and Dublin. But I find that several of those men were liberated on the Queen's pardon while they were in the probation class, and not having earned anything. This is a copy of the two last reports made against the treason-felony prisoners for playing hockey under the shed, and their admission that they would continue to do so. I hand in an exact copy of the application book to myself, with my replies recorded therein; every report against the prisoners, an exact copy in my own handwriting, thinking there might be many questions about the letter writing. I have a return prepared showing the exact number of letters written and received by the treason-felony prisoners here. I can also furnish a return of the letters written and received, giving the date of reception of every letter.

Mr. G. Clynch.

14 June 1870

The witness withdrew.

The Commission adjourned.

Woking Prison, Saturday, 18th June 1870.

PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. G. C. BODRICK.
S. E. DE VEE, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENHOW.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

MR. WILLIAM FAGAN examined.

Mr. W. Fagan

14 June 1870.

3040. (Chairman.) Mr. Fagan, you are one of the directors of convict prisons?—Yes, my lord.

3041. How long have you held that office?—Since the 1st January 1863.

3042. What prisons are under your care?—Woking, Portsmouth, and Chatham. I am also an inspector of military prisons.

3043. Perhaps you would just explain to us what the functions and powers of a director are in his individual character?—Well the functions are the same as of a magistrate inside a prison, with the same power as a board of visiting justices. It is laid down by Act of Parliament. These are the powers that a director possesses inside a convict prison:—the same position as a board of justices would occupy in a county prison; all its finances, and all its government, and internal management, are subject to my supervision.

3044. For instance, with regard to the diet, you have the same power of altering the diet, and no more, than visiting justices would have, without reference to head quarters?—I would have no power to alter the diet, because the Secretary of State approves of that. I would have no power to alter what the Secretary of State approves of.

3045. You would have power to inflict punishment, which the governor cannot?—I can inflict the punishment which a board of visiting justices can. I can award corporal punishment to a prisoner. I can sentence him to close confinement on punishment diet for 28 days, varying only each fourth day by penal class diet. If he is a man who has committed an assault on a warder, I can place him in cross-irons, not exceeding six pounds in weight, and restrict him to a dress such that every officer will know he is a person who has committed an assault on one of themselves.

3046. With regard to appeals against any decision of the governor, are they left to you?—Always left to me, my lord.

3047. How often are your visits made?—Once a month at least, and more frequently if there is fresh complaint or anything to require more frequent visits to be made.

3048. Will you be kind enough to describe the process by which a man who supposes that he has something to complain of in the conduct of a warder, supposing that the governor has investigated it, and decided that there is no ground for complaint, brings it before you?—He would notify to the governor that he was not satisfied with his decision. First of all he would tell the principal warder of the hall that he wished to see the governor, and when he came to the governor he would say to him then, "I wish to see the visiting director at his next visit."

3049. Is that recorded then by the governor?—That is recorded by the governor.

3050. It is recorded in a book called the governor's application book?—In a book called the directors' application book. Then at my visit he would see me, and he would appeal to me on the case, and I would immediately send for the evidence that appeared before the governor, and I would also have the case as it was recorded in the governor's jurisdiction book, and I would satisfy myself to the best of my judgment whether the governor had acted fairly or not.

3051. In such a case would the prisoner be confronted with the warder?—Well that is a rule that I always exercise, that all the evidence in the case be gone into, and that the prisoner be allowed to ask any questions that he might think proper.

3052. Of the person whom he makes the charge against?—Yes. If there were two or three witnesses I would separate them, and have only one of the men present at the time.

3053. What power has a prisoner of calling witnesses in support of his allegation?—He would tell me who he wanted to call and I would call them.

3054. Suppose that he wanted to call as witnesses one or two of the prisoners who were associated with himself, what would you do?—That we would not allow. We would not allow him to call on the evidence of prisoners. That has never been the practice. We should never allow such a practice as taking the evidence of a prisoner directly. I have frequently asked another prisoner afterwards, but I would not have him at the inquiry. I might try and get the information by seeing the other prisoner in the ward, or in some special way; but I would not draw attention to it. We should never dream of calling a prisoner up in support of another prisoner's statement. I may add, while we are on the subject, that I have frequently cancelled the punishments awarded by the governor to prisoners.

3055. You have frequently cancelled the punishments awarded by the governor to prisoners?—Yes, I have frequently cancelled them. I could not cancel his giving the bread and water, for that had been done, but I have often restored the man's marks, if I was satisfied that the officer did not give his evidence in a candid way. I would not let the prisoner know that I disagreed with the governor, but I would say to the governor "There are circumstances which call for the cancelling of this sentence." You must be very careful in interfering with a governor's power, and you must do those things in a judicious way so as not to interfere with his power.

3056. I think there are eight treason-felony convicts in this prison at present?—I think there are, my lord. I have not got the memorandum.

3057. At the time they were sent here, were there any special instructions given by your board, or by yourself to the governor as to their treatment?—There were no special instructions from the Secretary of State or the board; but when I came down here I suggested to the governor that it would be better to keep them separate.

Mr. W. Fagan.
15 June 1870.

3058. Did you suggest that it would be better to keep them separate from each other?—Separate from the ordinary prisoners. The men saw me as a body, and complained of being brought over here. We considered it an objectionable thing, I think, that they should have come to the English prison at all, but we could not refuse it. They came and said they had grievances to complain of.

3059. To what grievances did they allude?—That they were away from their friends, and from indulgence that they would get in their own country; that you could not expect their friends to come over here, or to a distant land to see them, as they would in Ireland; that a prisoner could be visited by his friends according to our rules, and the same rules applied to Irish prisons that does to ours.

3060. In consequence of complaints they made to you, you took it upon yourself they should not be allowed to associate with one another?—No, they never complained of that, but they complained of being associated with the ordinary felons in this prison.

3061. Then you took upon yourself that they should be kept separate?—Separate from the ordinary criminals, and they are still treated in that way.

3062. Then in point of fact they have been kept as a separate little community?—Yes, as a separate class.

3063. Will you allow me to ask you, what arrangements have been made by you, or what directions have been given by you with a view to the present inquiry?—A copy of the communication that your secretary sent to us was sent down here for the governor to carry it out.

3064. Then the governor will tell us how that has been carried out?—Yes; he submitted certain points to me and I approved of them.

3065. (Mr. Bradick.) When you say that a director has the ordinary powers of visiting justices, is it the practice for them to have the cells thrown open and to invite complaints from any persons who choose to make them?—In the case of men who are under coercion, that is, locked up under punishment, that is always done. I see the ordinary prisoners at their labour, but I do not invite complaints from them individually.

3066. In what way does an ordinary prisoner notify his desire to see you?—Through the governor; or if he was in the infirmary in this place, it would be through the medical officer.

3067. Would it be possible for the governor to suppress such a complaint?—Oh, it would not. It would be a most dangerous thing for him to do. I do not think he could dare to do it.

3068. Supposing a prisoner has some grounds of complaint against his medical treatment, what redress would he have?—I should ask the doctor to be present, and as far as I could understand it, I should inquire into the prisoner's grounds of complaint.

3069. Is there any special medical authority to which the board of directors are in the habit of referring any medical case?—No; but a sum of money is in the estimate to pay for special consultation.

3070. Supposing a case of complaint against the governor himself of oppressive treatment, in what way should you hear such a complaint?—I should hear it in the presence of the prisoner. I should get the prisoner to put it down in writing; and if I thought that there was any ground for it, I should lay it before the chairman of the board of directors to consider whether the governor's conduct should be submitted to the Secretary of State or not.

3071. Should you hear it in the governor's presence?—Oh, clearly.

3072. Certainly?—Certainly.

3073. Would it be possible for the prisoner to see you in the absence of the governor if he were to request it?—No; I think not. I do not think I would consent to that.

3074. What power do you exercise over the letters of prisoners? How far is their privilege to write letters within your control?—The prisoner would write his letter according to his class. He would notify his wish to write. The schoolmaster keeps a register under the chaplain, of prisoners by classes, entitled to write. He is allowed to write every four, or three, or two months according to the class he is in. The chaplain at the school hours would issue paper to those men, and it would be recorded in a book kept for the purpose.

3075. Are the prisoners sometimes allowed to write letters, so to speak, out of their turn? Is not special permission sometimes granted to prisoners to write letters to their friends?—Oh, frequently.

3076. Application for that purpose should be made to you?—Yes. No party in the prison would have the right to give that permission out of the ordinary course.

3077. The governor would not have that power?—No.

3078. Do you remember applications made to you by treason-felony prisoners, for permission to write such special letters?—Oh, frequently. To-day, Mulcahy, Power, and Ransome saw me, and they all asked me for permission for special letters, which I granted.

3079. Are you able to state whether you have frequently granted that indulgence?—Almost every month when I come down.

3080. To those treason-felony prisoners?—To those very men, so long as they see not under a report.

3081. All such letters I presume would be read?—Oh yes, both in coming and outgoing.

3082. With respect to the visits of the friends of prisoners, what power do you exercise; is that within your jurisdiction also?—It is entirely according to the man's class. If a man has a privilege, he gets it and claims it, and on his claiming it, it is looked into, and there is an order sent to his friends. I should not think, even under exceptional circumstances, if one of those men was getting a special letter, to prevent it. In fact, so much letter writing is equal to so many visits.

3083. Then you look upon the greater liberty of letter writing allowed to those convicts as in some degree a compensation for the difficulty of receiving visits from Ireland?—Yes, and they put it that way themselves: "I wish a special letter this time, as I am due for a visit; I hope you will give me a letter in lieu of it;" and I say "Yes." It came almost originally from themselves.

3084. You spoke of the difficulty of seeing their friends as one of the hardships of their being confined in England?—Yes.

3085. Can you mention any other hardship resulting from their being transferred to England?—I think that the principal one.

3086. Have they complained to you of their treatment in Irish prisons, or the contrary?—No; I do not recollect that they ever complained to me of their treatment in Irish prisons; not any of the men now in prison.

3087. Have they ever complained to you of their treatment here being severer than their treatment in Irish prisons?—No; they complained to me here of their treatment in this prison and in other English prisons; but they did not make any comparison between their treatment in English and Irish prisons.

3088. If I understand you, they complained chiefly on the ground of their being more or less associated with ordinary convicts?—Yes.

3089. Have they ever complained to you of their having been treated worse than the ordinary convicts?—Oh no.

3090. I think you said that they were allowed to talk during work; how is that?—Here we have never got any work from them lately, but during exercise they were allowed to converse.

3091. What is the rule on that subject? Have they been allowed to talk freely during exercise?—Yes.

3092. I need hardly ask you whether in the dormitories we saw they could speak to one another?—You could not stop them.

3093. (Dr. Greenhow.) When letters to or from the prisoners are read are they ever detained?—Yes, they are.

3094. On what ground?—On the ground of what is contained being objectionable matter, political information, or abuse of the authorities, abuse of the Government, and many things of that sort. And, speaking not with regard to the treason-felony prisoners, many letters are suppressed on the authority of information we receive that the person writing the letter was a bad character. The rule is that the prisoner is allowed only to keep up communication with the outer world with those friends who are considered and known to be respectable.

3095. But you have not applied that to the treason-felony prisoners specially?—No.

3096. As a matter of fact, have you detained many letters which came for, or were sent by, treason-felony prisoners?—Formerly we have detained a great many.

3097. Have you detained many letters sent for the prisoners?—Yes.

3098. Have you detained many letters sent by them?—Yes, we suppressed them because they contained statements in abuse of myself or of the governor or of the Government.

3099. Have the treason-felony prisoners been treated in any exceptional manner?—In the way I have described; so far as having special letters, special visits from friends, and special books.

3100. They have had special visits?—Yes.

3101. That is, they have had visits that were not due to them?—Yes.

3102. As a matter of favour?—As a matter of favour; and I wish to add that they have been allowed to see each other's friends. Supposing the friends of one man came over, and that they were acquaintances outside, we never would allow applications of this sort by the ordinary convicts.

3103. Then they in point of fact have had indulgences which the other convicts have not?—They have.

3104. I clearly understand that?—And I clearly understand your question, and clearly understand my answer.

3105. (Mr. Brodrick.) In respect of diet have they had any special indulgence?—They have. A medical recommendation was submitted to the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of State approved of the medical recommendation.

3106. Have they not all been placed on full hospital diet?—Yes, while in the hospital, and the doctor requested a special diet when they are out of the hospital.

3107. (Dr. Greenhow.) Would the mere fact of a letter containing unfounded complaints lead to its being withheld?—Yes.

3108. Have letters been withheld on that ground?—Yes.

3109. You said that you have never got any work done by the prisoners here; how is that?—They have generally been more or less in hospital; they are here for medical treatment.

3110. Have they had special medical treatment?—Special medical treatment.

3111. Have they been treated differently with regard to ordinary work?—Yes. I have been told at my visits that they were idle, or not much work got out of them according to their health; and they have not been subject to any forfeiture of their marks on that ground as the other prisoners would have been. It all comes to that.

3112. What complaints have they made of their treatment here; have they complained of their diet or of their clothing?—Not so much of these as of the manner of the warders towards them; that was the principal thing; of the warders ordering them to do this and that, or of the governor being severe in speaking to them, or something of that kind.

3113. When they have spoken of the warders' orders, were these orders reasonable?—I considered them reasonable, and on investigating the complaints I could not satisfy myself that they had any just grounds of complaint.

3114. You have investigated some of these cases?—Oh, carefully.

3115. (Chairman.) Have you investigated all of them?—I should think all, my lord, except when on leave.

3116. (Dr. Greenhow.) You ordered the treason-felony convicts to be kept separate from other prisoners?—Yes.

3117. Did you consider that an indulgence?—No; I thought it more a matter of security. This is a very open, weak prison. I do not think that at the time I ordered it to be done that I had in view any special treatment. I considered it a point of discretion, for security merely, and then it grew from that.

3118. Not as an indulgence?—Oh, certainly not, but as a point of security. I considered the prison a weak one, and I was responsible for the safe custody of those men.

3119. You stated that they complained of being associated with ordinary prisoners as a grievance?—Yes.

3120. On what grounds did they so complain?—They complained of being associated with men who committed unusual crimes. That was carefully gone into by Messrs. Knox and Pollock. They have no means of knowing what a prisoner is in for. No warder even in the prison knows what a man is in for, unless he tells him. The only person who knows that is the clerk in the office and the governor himself.

3121. Then the prisoners do not know the crimes of which the prisoners who are associated with them have been convicted?—No; nor do the officers of the prison. They complained that they were associated with such men, but I investigated the case and there was only one treason-felony prisoner to be located in the hospital in one of those dormitories which you saw, and we were compelled to select two other prisoners to go in, it being one of the Secretary of State's rules that there must be three prisoners associated. Two invalids were selected and put in, and he was under the impression that these men were guilty of some unusual crime, which was not the case.

3122. Did you gather that the impression on the minds of the treason-felony prisoners was, that their crime was of a different character, and that they ought not to be associated with ordinary prisoners?—Yes; they have always called themselves "State prisoners."

3123. You said some time ago that these treason-felony prisoners were allowed letters in lieu of visits from their friends, in consideration of their being removed from their own country?—Yes.

3124. Now is it the fact that they have had fewer visits than other prisoners?—Yes, I think in point of fact that they have had fewer visits.

3125. I understood you to say that they had extra visits?—They had extra visits in this way, that when one man's friends came the other prisoners were allowed to see them.

3126. (Chairman.) I suppose you or the governor will be able to put on paper a statement showing what the allowance of visits and of letters would be in each class, according to class?—Oh yes, my lord.

3127. I think it would be very desirable if you or the governor can show us, in what this practice with regard to the treason-felony convicts has differed from that of the other prisoners, in limitation or excess?—You shall have that out of the visiting book.

3128. Give us a statement of the rules first as regards receiving and writing letters?—They are all the same, my lord, as regards every prisoner.

3129. (Dr. Lysney.) If a letter is suppressed on account of its being supposed that there is anything wrong in it, would the prisoner be allowed to write another letter in lieu of it?—Yes, generally I should say.

3130. Would that be as a matter of special favour, or as a matter of right?—I think there would be a certain discretion exercised. I have known cases where a man wrote in that strain, and the governor marks the letter that it would be suppressed, but that the prisoner may write in lieu of it; that is the practice in the first instance; and if the prisoner persists again in writing objectionable matter, the governor would not give him a second option.

3131. What are the classes of things that are objectionable in a letter going out?—All prison treatment; all reference to prison officers; and until a recent decision of the Secretary of State, the state of his health would have been; and that was laid down by Sir George Grey because it involved great trouble to the Home Office in consequence of the prisoners' friends constantly referring to the Home Office about their health.

3132. Who is the judge of the fact that the prisoners' letter is well founded or not?—I suppose the director would be, because he may ask that the letter be produced.

3133. What is done with those suppressed letters?—They are all kept for a certain time.

3134. Could these letters be produced for the inspection of the Commission?—All of them.

3135. Would you kindly give directions to have those letters produced at our next visit?—Yes.

3136. In case of the death of a prisoner's mother, wife, sister, or brother, or any other relative, and that a letter was received announcing it, would the prisoner be allowed to receive that letter, although it was out of time?—He would not be allowed to see it until the time arrived that it was due, but the information in it about the death would be communicated to him at once.

3137. But the letter itself would not?—It would not until the director approved of it.

3138. Supposing, as in the case of Luby, whose mother and uncle died very suddenly, would the information be conveyed to him of those deaths?—Yes; I should say immediately.

3139. How would it be done?—The governor would hold the letter in his hand, and say, "This letter is with regard to the death of so-and-so, and if you will ask the director at his next visit for the letter, he will no doubt give it to you."

3140. What interval might elapse between the receipt of that intelligence and the coming of the director?—I should say not more than three weeks.

3141. Supposing that the day after you leave the prison such intelligence arrives, what course would be taken?—The governor would send up specially to ask me.

3142. Supposing that it became necessary for the prisoner to take any action outside, in consequence of the death of his father, or mother, or wife, or any other near relative, and that he desired to write a letter in consequence of receiving such intelligence, would he get permission to do so?—Oh yes, as a special letter, but not with regard to the disposition of property; that we should refer to the Secretary of State, because he is inside this prison as dead, and we would have to get directions from the Secretary of State.

3143. But where a man is sentenced to be in prison for only a limited time, and it might affect his interests very materially on the expiration of his sentence to be enabled to communicate with his friends outside as to that property?—That we should have to refer to the Secretary of State. We should ask the man to put his statement in writing, and refer to the Secretary of State for his instructions as to whether it should be sent out; because as the law exists now, the Crown may seize on the property of a felon.

3144. You stated that the prisoners complained of being brought over to England?—I do not know that they complained of it; they mentioned it to me as a grievance at Portland, not in this prison.

3145. Did any of the prisoners in this prison make that complaint?—No. The greater number of them must have seen me at Portland, Captain Gambler, they have been transferred to this prison, except Dillon and Thomas Barker.

3146. Many of them went to Portland at first?—The whole of this batch with Ross, and I think and understood from my colleague, Captain Gambler, that they made the same comments when they were first received into Pentonville from Ireland.

3147. They complained that they were brought from Ireland to England?—Yes.

3148. And the weightiest of their grievances was that they were separated from their friends?—Yes.

3149. That the visits of their friends must necessarily be fewer?—Clearly.

3150. In consequence of being more difficult of accomplishment?—Yes.

3151. Do you know any other general complaints they made or grievances they complained of in consequence of their being brought over?—No, I do not.

3152. Might I ask you whether it is a customary thing to transfer ordinary felony prisoners from Scotland or from Wales, or from a great distance to any of those prisons?—All prisoners sentenced to penal servitude in Scotland and Wales come to England; they have no separate prisons there.

3153. That is, no convict prisons?—No convict prisons. There is a general prison in Perth, and they undergo separate confinement there, but after the nine months they come to us to do public work. In fact I think there are two or three men who were convicted of treason-felony in Wales, now undergoing sentence, and one man here.

3154. If circumstances came to the knowledge of a prisoner that made it necessary for him to have recourse to legal advice outside with regard to the disposition of property or otherwise, and that he would represent that to the governor or to you, how would it be dealt with?—It would have to be sent to the Secretary of State. I can tell you that every two or three months cases of that kind turn up.

3155. And what is his usual decision?—The Secretary of State, I think, has invariably allowed the prisoner to see his legal adviser.

3156. He has invariably allowed the prisoner to see his legal adviser?—Yes.

3157. Have any of the prisoners here to your knowledge made such an application as that?—I think not. They have made some application, I think, to see a legal adviser, and some commission, I think, went to Portland, but that is not within my prison inspection.

3158. But have any of the prisoners here made any such application as that?—No, not as far as I can recollect.

3159. If a prisoner complained that his health was falling off, and that he believed he was running down the hill, and if in consequence of apprehensions in his mind that he was going to die, he wished to be removed elsewhere, would such application be attended to by you?—Yes.

3160. Or would he be removed by the governor?—The governor would have no power in a question of that kind.

3161. How would it be dealt with?—It is very seldom that such a case does happen, but it actually has happened in the case of Doctor Power. He was sent away from Portland in consequence of the strong wish of his friends on account of the supposed bad state of his health. He was sent here and was dissatisfied with his medical treatment, and he asked me to remove him to Millbank, for he had great confidence in Dr. Gover of Millbank. I went to Parliament Street and laid the question before the chairman and my colleagues, and suggested that the man's application should be acceded to. It was sent to the Secretary of State, and he at once issued his warrant for the man's transfer to Millbank in accordance with his wish.

3162. Then he was transferred?—He was.

3163. (Chairman.) That is Edmund Power?—Yes.

3164. (Dr. Lysons.) Have any of the prisoners here been allowed special books which they have asked for?—Yes.

3165. What class of books have they been so allowed?—Many of them. Malenby wanted professional books to keep up his medical knowledge.

3166. Were they granted?—They were all granted to him by Colonel Henderson before he left our department.

3167. (Chairman.) Is Edmund Power here now?—Edmund Power has come back again, my lord.

3168. Under what circumstances did he come back?—The medical officer reported that he had not got any benefit by his six weeks or two months' detention in Millbank, and he recommended that he should be sent back again to Woking, as it afforded better air, and was better suited to his ailment; that he did not think there was any organic disease of a dangerous character.

3169. I find that he was removed to Millbank from Portland on the 26th March 1870?—That must be a mistake, my lord; it must be from Woking. (He handed a document, and reads: "7th November, Portland, removed to Millbank prison.") This is quite right, my lord; this is a Woking return signed by Captain Harris, deputy governor here. From Portland prison he was removed to Millbank.

3170. Oh, the word prison refers to Woking?—Yes, this is a Woking return, my lord.

3171. (Dr. Lysons.) As a matter of fact, was he at Millbank on the 9th November last?—No, he was here.

3172. (Chairman.) Give us, as far as you can, the history of Edmund Power, as far as it is within your own knowledge?—He was received into Millbank on the 23d March 1867, and he was removed to Portland on the 26th February 1868, and received on that day. He was removed to Woking from Portland on the 9th November 1869, and received on that day. He was removed to Millbank on the 28th March 1870, and received in Millbank on that day, and he was removed back to Woking on the 21st May 1870.

3173. (Mr. De Vere.) Have you had any correspondence with the governor of Portland prison since the 1st January last, with respect to the discipline of that prison?—Of Portland prison, no.

3174. That does not come within your beat?—No, unless there was a question brought before the board of directors to have our opinion upon, but not as a rule.

3175. May I ask you whether you have been the medium of any communication to the governor of Portland prison with respect to work done or refused to be done by the treason-felony prisoners there?—No.

3176. With regard to appeals, if a prisoner considers a sentence imposed on him by the governor excessive, has he the power of appealing to you?—To me.

3177. I think you said that he would have to enter his name with the governor as wishing to see you?—Yes.

3178. Now, if his name had not been registered for that purpose, could he personally ask an interview from you?—I do not think he could. I do not see very well how he could do it. In public works prisons they are generally sent by the director either marching out to labour or coming in from labour. We should not allow a man to fall out of the ranks and come up and speak to a director.

3179. Would you consider it a sufficient answer to give to a statement of your not attending to an appeal made to you by a prisoner that his name had not been set down by the governor for making that appeal?—Yes, I think it would.

3180. Then practically, what recourse has a prisoner in case the governor refuses to or neglects to record his name for an appeal to you?—Well, I can hardly imagine such a thing taking place as the governor declining to make such a return; he would lay himself in the hands of so many officers about the place, who would be only too glad to take up the question against the governor.

3181. Would any of the officers be cognizant of the application of the prisoners to the governor?—Oh, certainly.

3182. In what way?—The governor would not venture to see a prisoner alone. As a matter of fact he does not do so. He would be liable to be accused or to have things said against him by the prisoner.

3183. I think you mentioned that the complaints made by the treason-felony prisoners generally before you, were far less or harsh behaviour on the part of the officers?—Yes; generally harsh behaviour.

3184. What would be the course they would pursue in making that complaint?—They would simply record their names to see me on my next visit to the prison.

3185. Then their course in originating a complaint before you would be the same course that they would have to pursue in appealing to you from a sentence imposed by the governor?—Yes.

3186. If such a complaint, which I may call an original complaint on their part, were brought before you, how would you investigate it?—I would investigate it in the presence of the accused; and as they have very often been very lengthy in their communications I often, rather than reject the matter which they were saying, and most generally speaking, made them put it in writing, and ordered paper to be bound to them to any extent.

3187. I am now referring to complaints of harsh treatment against a warder, not against the governor?—In this case, I have dealt with these men in that way, and I have invariably made them put it in writing, called in the officer, and read the statement in his presence, and asked him what he had to say in explanation.

3188. Does it often happen that there is only one warder present with a number of men?—Yes. We should consider that a gang of 12 or 14 men was sufficiently severe with one officer.

3189. Is a case of complaint against an officer for harsh and insolent language, where there were 14 or 15 prisoners present and only one officer, would you investigate it in any other way than by taking down in writing the nature of the complaint and asking the officer for an explanation?—No, I do not think I would. I would try and get other evidence, if possible.

3190. What further evidence would it be possible to get, except the evidence of prisoners?—I should not attach much importance to prisoners' evidence, certainly not.

3191. Then would it not come simply to this, that in such a case the prisoner would have no power whatever of appeal against the simple word of a warder?—Well, no; I do not think he has, except that we know every officer's character thoroughly, and can judge of the statement he makes.

3192. Now, Mr. Fagan, will you be good enough to state the regulations enforced in this prison with respect to appeals to the Secretary of State?—The ordinary course is that the prisoner applies to petition the Secretary of State, and the directors invariably grant it.

3193. To whom does he apply for permission?—He applies to me, when I am here, or if I am not here, and the governor thinks it urgent, he would send up the application. He would send up an application to allow the prisoner to petition the Secretary of State.

3194. Is there any limitation as to the number of those appeals?—There is no limitation generally speaking, except where a man petitions on the ground of his trial. On the justice of his trial he is only allowed to petition once a year, but in any other case he is allowed to petition any time.

3195. Have you ever known a case in which a prisoner has been refused the privilege on the ground that he had already presented a petition to the same effect within a certain time?—Not on the ground of a general complaint of his treatment in prison; but with regard to his having already petitioned and received a reply from the Secretary of State that there were no grounds for his interment; those things are only allowed once a year. The first petition of a convict regarding his trial or severity of his sentence, I believe it to be the inviolable practice of the Home Office to send to the judge who tried the case. With regard to other questions there is no limit, and the Home Office would be very much displeased if it was to limit a man's power of petitioning.

3195. Would you be kind enough to say what course exactly the prisoners would take in applying for permission to lodge that appeal?—Well, he would tell me that he had this complaint to make, and request authority to petition, and I would say "Yes."

3197. He should first apply to the governor to see you?—Yes, to see me. He is not called on to tell the governor what he wishes to see me about. In fact, as a rule, they do not tell the governor what they wish to see me about.

3198. I will ask you whether any notification is given to the prisoners themselves, either specifically or in a general way, of their possessing that power of appeal to the Secretary of State?—I do not think that is exactly that. I believe before they come to us that in those prisons there is such a notification, but after they come down here there is no such notification.

3199. You said that when the treason-felony prisoners came here you thought it better to separate them to a certain extent?—Yes.

3200. Did that separation extend to them on the whole?—Yes, so far as it was possible to do it.

3201. Will you state to the Commission in what way they were worked separately from others?—They were kept from the others by working at the same bench. I think Malins became a very expert carpenter. The man Dillon used to help him, when he was in good health. They used to work in that way separately. The officer was told not to cause them to associate with other prisoners, though they were working at the same bench. It was their own fault if they associated with other prisoners. They were not called on to mix with them.

3202. Did they appear to you to value that peculiar exemption?—Well, they did at first, but latterly I think they did not care about it; but first my impression was that they did value it. Some of the men who have been discharged particularly valued it. Kishlam, who was here, and three or four of the others.

3203. They seemed to feel the exemption a value?—Decidedly.

3204. I think you have said that the prisoners had not the means of knowing the crimes for which the prisoners associated with them had been convicted?—Yes.

3205. Is it not a very notorious fact in prison management that prisoners, when allowed to converse, speak in the most open way before each other as to their own guilt and the crimes for which they have been convicted?—No, I think not; that has not been my experience, and I have seen a great deal of prison life both in this country and in Australia. You never get the crime they committed out of them. They never do tell it, as a rule.

3206. (Chairman.) You mean that they will not tell it either to the officers or amongst themselves?—They do not; nor do they tell it amongst themselves, my lord.

3207. Would not a man be found who would sometimes boast of having committed a crime accompanied by circumstances of great bravery?—If that statement was compared with his actual conviction it would not be found at all to be the crime that he was convicted of.

3208. But would a prisoner not be likely, supposing he had committed a crime accompanied by circumstances of what he considered bravery, to boast of that in his conversations with the other prisoners here?—

Well, I think not as a rule. I have particularly in my mind's eye one particular case; the man was very silent and sulky about it. That was Cusley, a prisoner who was convicted of a burglary. He took a great deal amongst the criminal class in the prison, and I had to threaten to set him at liberty, but I recollect distinctly that he would not say what he was convicted for. In his case it was the second conviction, and the second time he had been a convict. He is now in Australia.

3209. (Mr. De Vere.) Who inspects the letters?—With regard to the treason-felony convicts would you ask, or the ordinary way?

3210. Just give us the ordinary way?—In the ordinary way they are read by the chaplain.

3211. I am speaking of letters both written by the prisoners and received for them?—They are all read first by the chaplain, but in the case of Roman Catholics they are not read by the chaplain.

3212. You mean the Protestant chaplain?—I mean the Protestant chaplain. He is the chaplain, because in England the Roman Catholic clergyman is only called a "visiting priest." When you say "the chaplain," it is understood to mean a clergyman of the Established Church.

3213. In the case of Roman Catholic convicts by whom are the letters inspected?—By the deputy-governor or the governor; nobody else.

3214. If any objectionable matter is found in their letters, either those which have come in or those which are going out, they are suppressed?—Well, not in all cases; they are not now, and in a great number of instances the objectionable matter is obliterated, and the letter passed out or in. I think that has been the invariable practice for a long time with reference to the treason-felony prisoners.

3215. But the rule is that they are suppressed?—In the cases of ordinary prisoners they would be suppressed.

3216. I think I understood you to say, that you have in your possession a number of their suppressed letters?—Yes; but I recollect that a great many were written within the first year or more, and that since then we have obliterated the objectionable matter and let the letter go on.

3217. When you did suppress letters they would be suppressed by the governor or the deputy-governor, whichever of them would have read the letter?—No, the governor is the only person who suppresses a letter.

3218. Are the writers informed whenever letters are suppressed?—Invariably.

3219. And are they then given an opportunity of writing an unobjectionable letter in place of that which has been suppressed?—They are generally.

3220. When letters are suppressed on the ground of unfounded complaints by the prisoners being contained in them, to whom is it referred to decide whether the complaint so set forth is unfounded or not?—I do not know. Whenever a man complained to me I have gone into the complaint he has pointed out. If it is a complaint with regard to their medical treatment, the doctor has been sent for, and consulted in it, and the letter suppressed in consequence.

3221. Suppose a prisoner's letter contained a charge against warden A. or warden B. for the use of harsh and insolent language towards the prisoner, would that letter be suppressed?—It would.

3222. Would there be any investigation as to the fact whether the allegations were true or not?—I think not; as a matter of fact there would not be if the prisoner put it in that way.

3223. You have already stated that letters are suppressed in consequence of containing unfounded complaints?—Yes.

3224. Would it be assumed of any complaint so made against an officer that it was an unfounded complaint?—Unless the prisoner brought it forward as a distinct charge and brought it before me to be investigated.

3225. Then any complaint made in a letter, which had not been previously made the subject of a specific charge before you, would he held to be unfounded, and sufficient to suppress the letter containing it?—Yes.

3236. (Dr. Greenock.) You have some Welsh treason-felony prisoners here?—Yes.

3237. They are not included in our list?—I think they are. There is one man convicted in Wales of tampering with soldiers, Ryan, I think.

3238. Have the treason-felony prisoners been supplied with special books?—They have.

3239. On what ground has that been done?—Well, I suppose, I do not know there is any ground that I could give you, but it has been considered that it was a benefit to those men, and that they should have it.

3240. Has it been considered an indulgence?—An indulgence, decidedly.

3241. (Mr. Broadbent.) You have mentioned some indulgences which have been allowed to those treason-felony prisoners; by what authority has that exception been made in their favour?—In some instances it has been done by the authority of the Secretary of State, in other instances on the direction of the directors of convict prisons.

3242. Is there any general authority, is there any letter of the Secretary of State that could be produced generally authorizing a relaxation of discipline in their favour?—Yes; I think there is one of not very old standing, but of recent date, with regard to the diet of those prisoners, and that certain relaxations, as they were political prisoners, should be extended to them, as in other countries. I think that was the very expression that the Home Office made use of.

3243. (Chairman.) Where would that letter be?—It is in our office, I think, my lord.

3244. I think we ought to have that letter?—It is only a very recent decision, but there is such a letter my lord, and I think that in a great measure guided us.

3245. Mr. Fagan, will you be kind enough to produce that letter?—Yes, my lord.

3246. (Mr. Broadbent.) I am anxious to be clear on the right of petitioning the Home Secretary. As I understand, the right of petitioning the Home Secretary on the justice of a prisoner's sentence has been held only to arise once a year?—Once a year, as a matter of course.

3247. As a matter of fact, does it ever happen that a prisoner is allowed within a year's interval to petition the Secretary of State on other grounds, as, for instance, on the ground of alleged mistreatment?—Yes, certainly.

3248. That is a thing of frequent occurrence?—Oh, yes.

3249. And does it lie with the governor or with the director to permit it?—That special permission would certainly only lie with the director. The governor would not consider himself authorized to do it. The governor would consider a man authorized to petition at the end of 12 months as regards his case; but he would not consider himself authorized to permit him otherwise, without the directors' special permission.

3250. Would the governor then, have no power practically, of allowing a right of petition?—No, excepting in the ordinary once a year.

3251. That right would, we may say, be independent of the governor?—It would, certainly.

3252. (Chairman.) You stated, Mr. Fagan, with regard to the indulgences given in certain cases to the treason-felony prisoners, that some were conceded under the authority of the Secretary of State, and you gave as an instance of that the case of an addition to the diet. Others you said were given at the direction of the directors?—Yes.

3253. Can you classify the indulgences so as to show us what were given under one authority, and what were given under the other?—I think the indulgences of writing, of extra books, and special books, were given by the directors at each visit.

3254. And in any other respect, except that of diet, you think the indulgence was not given under the authority of the Secretary of State?—I think not, my lord. I do not think there was any other.

3255. Do you wish to add anything to what you have said to us?—I do not, my lord.

3256. Mr. Fagan, you are aware that we have expressed a wish that the prisoners, during the course of their preparing their statements, shall not hold any intercourse with one another?—Yes, my lord.

3257. Are you also aware that in a letter addressed to you by the Commission, we conveyed an intimation of our desire that any restraint that may be considered necessary for securing that object, should not be construed as placing any difficulty in the way of their attending mass. In taking such steps as may be necessary to prevent them from communicating, do you see any difficulty in permitting them to attend mass?—No, certainly not; there is no difficulty about it.

3258. (Dr. Lyons.) You will take care that they have a proper opportunity of attending mass to-morrow?—Yes.

3259. (Dr. Greenock.) At the same time you will take care that there is no communication between them?—We must take the risk. It is surprising what ways they take to communicate. It is only to-day when they saw me passing that two of them were seen telegraphing to one another.

3260. (Mr. De Vere.) In the case of confinement in the dark cells, is there any system of periodical disturbance of the men at night?—Oh, yes; the same system exists here as in all prisons.

3261. How often at night?—He would not be more than half an hour at night without being visited, but not necessarily disturbed.

3262. And when disturbed would he be awakened?—No, unless they cover themselves in and put their heads under the blanket. The officer when he visits must know whether the man is sick or dead, or there at all. If a man laid himself down with his blanket off his cheeks he would not be disturbed at all.

3263. (Dr. Lyons.) When a prisoner is in a punishment cell, and Sunday falls within the period of his punishment, is he allowed to go to religious worship?—No.

3264. Would there be anything inconsistent with or impracticable in the prison discipline or arrangements, in allowing him to go to mass?—Oh, yes; it is never done; we could not do it.

3265. I am aware that it is not done; but I want to know could it be done?—It would be letting one off punishment, which would be a serious course.

3266. At the same time it would be submitting him to the most serious agency of reformation that is known to the human mind?—Yes, it would.

3267. I wish to know is there any impossibility in the matter. Take the case of a Catholic, with whom it is the highest obligation to attend mass on Sunday. Would there be any impossibility of sending him to mass on Sunday?—Except that it would be a relaxation of the punishment, and it would be treating him exceptionally with regard to his fellow prisoners.

3268. But would it not be possible for half an hour to send the small number of Catholic prisoners who may be under punishment, to mass?—It would be possible; but it would be giving him a greater indulgence than the others.

3269. At the same time I would say, that shutting him up in a cell is the least possible way of reforming him?—Still it would make a very great exception in his case as compared with the others.

3270. (Chairman.) Would there be any difficulty in having a particular part of the chapel set apart for such prisoners, and so arranged by means of a screen or partition, or anything else, that they would still be separated from the other prisoners?—I do not think it could be done. It would be no benefit to a Roman Catholic unless he could see what was going on.

3271. (Mr. De Vere.) Might it not be managed in this way, that the period required for attending service, whether Protestant or Catholic, might be added at the end of the period of punishment, so that the relaxation would be only so far as there was a slight mitigation?—Then don't you see, that that would be an illegal punishment for it would be after the sentence that had been passed on the man had expired.

3262. You are authorized by law to award a punishment of so many hours?—Yes.

3263. If in the middle of that you permit a prisoner to attend divine service, you are not adding to the number of hours, by dividing the time into two periods with a short interval between them?—Those hours must be consecutive, you know.

3264. (Chairman.) It could only be done by the

Capt. Harris.

Captain WILLIAM FREDERICK VRESCON HARRIS examined.

3267. (Chairman.) You are the deputy-governor of this prison, I believe?—I am, my lord.

3268. How long have you been here?—Since the 4th December last year.

3269. Were you previously in the same department in another prison?—Yes; I was at Dartmoor.

3270. You have, I think, received through the director letters from us, requesting that certain arrangements might be made with the view of facilitating the preparation by the prisoners, should they so wish, of statements to be laid before us, and at the same time of preventing communication between them for a certain period before our visit. Will you state what steps you have taken in consequence of that?—On receiving instructions from the Commission, I directed that the treason-felony prisoners (including those in hospital who were well enough to be moved) should be located in a separate ward, that they should be placed in brick cells, with alternate empty cells between each prisoner, that a special officer should be in charge, that they should be allowed to leave their cells one at a time, and should be kept apart when at exercise. Writing materials were furnished to each prisoner.

3271. To how many of them does that apply?—To six out of the eight, my lord.

3272. Where are the other two?—In the infirmary, in dormitories by themselves; at opposite ends of the building.

3273. One of those two being?—Richard Burke.

3274. And who is the other?—Bryan Dillon.

3275. Have you received any intimation from any of those men, and if so, from how many, of their intention to lay before us written statements?—Some of them applied to see us when first I issued your instructions to them, they said, "Perhaps we may address the Commission; perhaps we may not."

3276. That was the general tone?—That was the general tone; they also asked permission to destroy their documents if they thought it necessary.

3277. (Dr. Lysons.) That is after they had written them?—After they had written them. They said, "Will you consider whether we shall be allowed to present or destroy them?" I said I thought that was a question for consideration. I saw no objection to their handing them to the Commission or disposing of them as they thought right. They asked permission—one or two of them—to hand them in themselves without passing through the hands of others. To that I said I could not give an answer, but that I would take the opinion of the prison directors.

3278. If I were you I would give them an envelope and tell them, "Put it into this cover, seal it up in my presence, give it to me so sealed, and I will give you an assurance that it shall come before the Commission" in the same state, without being examined; or if you prefer to hand it in yourselves you can do that?—Very well.

3279. (Mr. De Vere.) It ought to be perfectly understood that the paper is their property until they hand it to us, and they can destroy it, or do as they please with it?—Yes.

authority of the Secretary of State?—Yes; only by his authority.

3280. (Mr. De Vere.) It could only be done by the Secretary of State?—Yes; but I think we should make such objection as possibly would resist it.

3281. (Dr. Lysons.) Are you aware that in other countries prisoners are allowed to attend divine worship, and that at the same time each prisoner is in a state of complete isolation?—I am not aware that it is the case. I know that we attempted it in our own country, and it signally failed, because a prisoner is always trying to know who is in the next compartment. They were always trying to have communication, and we find the men behave now with greater decorum than when they were isolated in boxes.

The witness withdrew.

3282. (Chairman.) It is to be understood that they can destroy their documents if they wish, before they deliver them in, but that once they deliver them in they become our property?—The question put to me had reference to the disposal of their documents before they were handed to the Commissioners.

3283. Could you give us, Captain Harris, all extracts relating to any of those prisoners, in the "Governor's Application Book," the "Report Book," and the "Prisoners' Misconduct Book"?—Yes, my lord.

3284. You can have copied out for us the entries which relate to the whole of those prisoners in these books?—Yes, my lord. They can be furnished.

3285. This, as we know, is technically called "an invalid prison"?—Yes.

3286. What description of work is performed by those prisoners here, who are able to work?—The able-bodied prisoners?

3287. Yes?—The able-bodied, in the first place, work outside, in the open air.

3288. What work do they perform; is it agricultural labour?—No, there is no agricultural work carried on now. They are employed in building, in fitting up the new prison, and in the construction of four new houses. These are the able-bodied, (Harris in a card).

3289. You had in a card showing the morning state of this prison on this day, the 18th June?—Yes, this day, the 18th.

3290. You will be kind enough to show under which mode of distribution the prisoners are described who would be employed in building up those houses; would they come under the term "prison employment"?—No, they would not. "Prison employment" would mean those employed inside.

3291. I do not see under what classification here they would come?—This does not show the employment, my lord. In this return they are shown; "at prison works, 170." This is merely a card for the director on his visit.

3292. Supposing you were not now engaged in building houses for this and the adjoining prison, what work should you have to set them to?—Up to within a recent date, before the female prison was commenced, the invalids were employed on the farms at agricultural work; light work on the farm.

3293. Has that work ceased?—That work has ceased altogether; there is hardly any carried on at present.

3294. Why is that?—For a variety of reasons. The principal of them is that the invalids fit for outside work are sent to the able-bodied in building the new houses. There is other work for them, in fact. The invalids at work inside are employed as tailors, shoemakers, bookbinders, knitters, and oakum pickers.

3295. When the building of the houses is completed, will the agricultural work be taken up again?—That I am not prepared to say. I believe it is an open question.

3296. At what work is a treason-felony convict put?—They have some of them from time to time been employed in trades. Murphy, for instance, was employed in the carpenter's shop for some time.

3295. That is associated work?—Yes, they all work together.

3296. Have any of them been employed shoemaking?—They have never, that I am aware of, been employed shoemaking.

3297. Have any of them been employed at tailoring?—Dillon was so employed for a short time.

3298. Have any of them been employed in building?—Not that I am aware of.

3299. (Mr. De Vere.) Considering, Captain Harris, that you have been so short a time here, could you furnish us the next time we call, with reports showing the works that each of those treason-felony prisoners has been employed at, and the length of time?—Certainly. Their ordinary work has been pumping water. They take it in turn. There is a small tank which they are in the habit of filling. It would take able-bodied men about three hours to do the work required of them in a day.

CAPTAIN HARRIS recalled.

3307. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, are you prepared to hand in the returns of which we spoke the other day?—Yes, my Lord.

3308. What returns are those in your hand?—I will hand in first the morning state, showing the various employments of the prisoners.

3309. This is the morning state of the distribution of those convicts at Woking prison this day?—Yes, my Lord, and the card I had the honour of submitting before only explained certain things for the director.

3310. Then this you will hand in?—Yes, my Lord.

3311. Do you hand in also certain other returns?—I do, my Lord.

3312. Will you describe them?—I hand in a return of the treason-felony prisoners now in this prison, specifying the crimes for which they are confined, their sentences, dates of reports received, also dates of interviews with the directors and the governor.

3313. (Mr. De Vere.) Have you the issue of those reports and the action taken upon them?—Yes, I can give the replies in each case, but they are very voluminous, and it would take some time to copy them.

3314. (Dr. Greenhow.) What we want are the reasons for the interviews and the results?—I can have copies made for you.

3315. (Chairman.) You have of course the materials to supply them?—Yes, my Lord.

3316. What is the second return that you hand in?—The second return shows the reports received by the treason-felony prisoners in this prison, and the punishments awarded upon those. It is a summary of the reports, which I presume is what you wish. It is the summary that goes up to the visiting director, and is approved by him.

3317. This is complete then as far as it goes?—Yes.

3318. (Dr. Greenhow.) Does it give all the reports against every treason-felony prisoner in the prison, from the time of his admission here up to the present time?—Yes.

3319. (Chairman.) The Commissioners have under consideration the expediency of deferring for a few days the personal examination of each of the prisoners

3300. Have they always been willing to work?—They have. They have done it as a sort of amusement more than anything else.

3301. (Mr. Brodrick.) Have any of them refused to work?—Not that I am aware of. I never heard of their refusing to work, because the work is so very light.

3302. (Chairman.) The governor of this prison is at present on leave, I believe?—Yes, my Lord.

3303. Is that absence occasioned by an attack made on him by one of the prisoners?—It is.

3304. An attack was made on him by a prisoner?—Yes, my Lord, in last December. Ever since he has been suffering.

3305. (Dr. Lewis.) What sort of injury did he sustain?—He was stabbed in three places.

3306. (Mr. De Vere.) The prisoner who made that attack on the governor was an Italian, I believe?—He was.

as wish to come before them, in order that sufficient time may elapse for the attendance of any of the friends of the prisoners on them, if they choose to avail of that permission if granted. Before we decide that we wish to ascertain what is the position of the prisoners?—They are now in separation.

3320. How long have they been in separation?—This is the fourth day; since Saturday evening.

3321. What would be their position supposing the separate state were to terminate?—They would immediately be bonded together in the usual way, and they could communicate freely and interchange their ideas in any way they thought fit without restraint.

3322. (Dr. Greenhow.) Would it be possible to allocate the suspension of intercourse by granting them a somewhat extended time for exercise?—I do not think that could be done. We now have some difficulty in carrying out the instruction of the Commissioners to keep them entirely separate, and I hardly think it could be maintained for so long.

3323. (Mr. De Vere.) Do I understand you to say, Captain Harris, that you perceive a difficulty in maintaining their separation for some days longer?—No, I do not think there would be any difficulty in it, nor do I think myself it is any very great hardship, but they themselves may call it a hardship. The cells are as good cells as any in the prison, and there is no great hardship that I can see. Of course their great grievance is that they cannot communicate with their fellow prisoners; and if you allow me I will hand in a communication Dillon sent to me the first day of the Commission (hand in a document) which explains their views on this point.

3324. (Chairman.) He sent it to you in this shape?—Yes.

3325. Addressed to you?—Addressed to me.

3326. (Mr. De Vere.) Do they not complain very much of the hardship of the separate confinement?—They complain that they cannot communicate with each other.

3327. Do they complain of the want of association with one another as interfering with their making their statements?—They do, and they made that request once or twice that they might be associated and allowed to communicate together; but I never heard them complain of separation for any other reason.

3328. (Chairman.) Have you received any similar communication to that from any other prisoner?—No written communication. The document received from Dillon ought not to have been addressed to me in writing at all; but the fact of their having been supplied with pens, ink, and paper to write out their statements has enabled them to do this. Of course he would have no opportunity of doing so at another time. I should add that one man, Power, stated that the confinement in the brick cell was injurious to his health when he was under medical treatment. That I referred to the medical officer, and he said there was no sufficient ground for interfering on such an objection, and that the man was not so ill as to be affected by separate confinement.

3329. Have you received any representation from the prisoners besides that memorial now referred to, since our last meeting?—None, but I have received one or two verbal requests.

3330. From whom?—Thomas Bourke and Dillon.

3331. To what effect?—Dillon asked for what he has entered there, extracts from all the prison books, anything that applied to him; that I said I was not in a position to grant; all suppressed letters, in fact he repeated the request contained in the memorial. Thomas Bourke asked me on Saturday evening to be allowed to have a copy of his last petition to the Secretary of State. That of course I could not give him as it is not here.

3332. (Dr. Lyons.) Did I understand you to say awhile ago that you thought it a slight thing to have men shut up four days continuously in separate cells?

23 June 1870.

3333. (Chairman.) Captain Du Case, have you received any communication from the Secretary of State in reference to a recommendation laid by the Commissioners before him on the subject of access to the treason-felony prisoners on the part of their friends?—I have received a communication desiring me to put myself in communication with the Chairman of the Commission as to two applications which were made to see two of the prisoners at Chatham.

3341. The communication from the Secretary of State gave you no distinct intimation as to the course that you were to take in reference to the applications?—Simply to put myself in communication with your Lordship. Perhaps I had better read this letter.

3342. Read it if you please.

" My dear Sir, June 18, 1870.

" In case I do not see Captain Du Case, please give him the three enclosed letters, and say that Mr. Bruce wishes him to see Lord Devon as to the persons who should see the Fenian prisoners, as I believe Lord Devon thinks it important that the matter should be settled at once. Mr. Bruce desires the directors to comply with the wishes of the Commissioners in regard to the mode in which the convicts shall be permitted to prepare their statements; but Mr. Bruce is sure that Lord Devon will —No, what I intended to convey was that I did not think, under the very peculiar circumstances, it was a very great hardship. Undoubtedly it is a hardship for men associated together to be confined in this way, but considering the circumstances I do not think it so.

3335. The Commission made certain requests on Saturday last, with regard to the men being allowed full access to their religious duties on Sunday. Will you be kind enough to state to the Commission what took place in consequence of that request?—On the morning of Sunday the prisoners were informed that they would be allowed to attend divine service. They all availed themselves of that privilege with the exception of one man.

3334. Who was that?—Malcahy. When he was told that he was to go to chapel, he asked whether he was to be subjected to the surveillance of an officer or not. He was told that he would only be allowed out in that way to chapel. Thus he said he would not go.

3335. Did all the others attend?—All the others, but those in the infirmary did not attend.

3336. Will you be good enough to put in a return of those who attended mass last Sunday, or can you name them now?—I can name them now.

3337. (Chairman.) Put it in as a return, in a more formal shape?—I shall.

3338. (Dr. Lyons.) You informed them that they had full authority, in accordance with the consent of the Commission, to attend divine service?—Yes, and they availed themselves of it with the exception of one man, Malcahy. Roostree did not attend in the afternoon.

3339. And each of them was separately informed that he had the privilege of attending mass on Sunday?—Yes, that is so.

" carefully consider any suggestions on the subject " that Captain Du Case thinks it right to make.

" Yours truly

" A. O. RUTSON."

3343. By whom is that letter signed?—By Mr. Bruce's private secretary, Mr. Rutson.

3344. This was received by you?—Yes, on the 18th June. It enclosed the applications of Mrs. Rossa and of James Delaney. This letter was written to me in consequence of a letter dated 17th June, in which these applications were enclosed to the Home Secretary.

3345. From whom were those applications?—From James Delaney and Mrs. O'Donovan Rossa.

3346. (Dr. Lyons.) Captain Du Case, are you in a position under authority from the Secretary of State to give full effect to the recommendation of the Commissioners in paragraph 4 of their letter of the 18th June, in which they state: "The Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State that access to prisoners at a reasonable hour and for a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting them in the preparation of their statements, should be allowed to friends of such prisoners, under such regulations and conditions as the Government may think necessary. Application in such case should "be made to the Home Office?"—I am prepared to give effect to that certainly.

3347. (Chairman.) And you feel yourself empowered to do so?—When the regulations and conditions are settled I am prepared to give effect to that at once.

3348. Having regard to the words of the fourth paragraph of the Commissioners' letter to which your attention has been called, have you any doubt that the regulations and conditions therein alluded to are those which are to be imposed by the Government? It is your view that it rests with the Government to define what are such regulations and conditions?—I have no doubt that that is your view; but I observe in this letter which I have quoted that "Mr. Bruce desires" the directors to comply with the wishes of the Commissioners in regard to the mode in which the convicts shall be permitted to prepare their statements, but Mr. Bruce is sure that Lord Devon will

The Commission adjourned.

Woking Prison, Wednesday, 29th June 1870.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. ROBERTS,
S. E. DE VERN, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENHOW.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

Captain HARRIS recalled.

3351. (Chairman.) Since the period of our last visit, Captain Harris, have you had any communication with any of the treason-felony prisoners here on the subject of the present inquiry?—I have had almost daily communication with one or other of them, my Lord.

3352. Does that mean that you have communicated with them all in turn?—Almost all in turn; some of them two or three times, and others not so often.

3353. To the best of your power, have you put these prisoners in possession of the facilities which they should have for the preparation of their statements, and the laying of them before this Commission?—I have. I have given them every information in my power.

3354. Can you tell us in detail, what you have said to them?—The first question they asked me was, whether they would be furnished with a copy of the advertisement ordered by the Commission? I said they would. I wrote for a copy, and furnished it to them.

3355. Has each prisoner had a copy of it?—Each prisoner has had a copy of it. They sent in a special application for assistance—legal assistance, which was forwarded to the chairman, and that was also allowed.

3356. (Mr. Broadrick.) When you say "they," which of them sent in that application, do you remember?—I allude to all of them with the exception of Richard Burke, and of Murphy, who have up to the present time declined to make any communication or to have any assistance.

3357. (Chairman.) Have you received any written application from Denis Mulcahy?—Yes, I have, and from several of the others—Power, Dillon, and Ryan also.

3358. What course did you take in reference to these written applications?—They were forwarded to the chairman of the board of directors in the usual course, and I hold the answer to one of their cases in my hand now.

3359. Will you read it, please?—

Yes. Whitehall, 28th June 1870.

"I am directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, forwarding memorials addressed to the Commissioners on the subject of the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons, by the treason-felony prisoners in Woking prison named in the margin."

3360. (Dr. Lyons.) Captain De Case, do you see any objection to the different prisoners being allowed to see one personal friend and one professional adviser?—The prison department is prepared to do anything, but they must lay before the Government the risk which they consider they incur in departing from the rules which are laid down for prisoners in the case of interviews between convicts in public prisons and their friends. Subject to that, and having relieved themselves to that extent of the responsibility, they are prepared to do anything which may promote the objects of the inquiry.

3361. Practically you do not see any difficulty in each prisoner being allowed to see one personal friend and one professional adviser?—Subject to the remarks I made respecting the responsibility of departing from the usual precautions.

Capt. De Case.

22 June 1870.

Capt. Harris.

29 June 1870.

3362. Are you cognizant of any representation made by Mulcahy, Power, Ryan, and Dillon, in writing, to this Commission?—The application, the answer to which I have just read, is the only one I am aware of.

D. D. Mulcahy, E. Power, B. Dillon, and P. Ryan, are named in the margin—

"requesting permission to consult with, and to have the assistance of, treason-felony prisoners in other prisons, with reference to the statements which they are preparing for the Commission, and I am to acquaint you that their requests cannot be complied with."

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"A. F. O. LEXELL.

Captain DUNN, R.E., &c."

That was sent to me this morning with a note to the governor at Woking, to communicate the decision to the prisoners, and to inform also the Commission of Inquiry.

3363. Are you cognizant of any representation made by Mulcahy, Power, Ryan, and Dillon, in writing, to this Commission?—The application, the answer to which I have just read, is the only one I am aware of.

3364. You have placed in our hands a communication forwarded to us here by the Secretary of State, and in it Mulcahy says in conclusion that, "General Thomas Bourke and William Roanmore applied for permission to sign that document, but the governor up to this moment has given no reply to the application?"—Yes, that is the case; they were locked apart, and I did not think it necessary that they should sign that document.

3365. It is also stated that they were desirous of making communications to us in a closed envelope. Was there application for leave to do that made by any of the prisoners?—Yes, that application was made.

3366. And how was it dealt with?—That I would not allow it. I said they could not communicate direct with the Commissioners under cover; that any statement they might make, or any written document might be handed, but that they could not communicote through the ordinary channel in that way under cover.

3364. When you say "might be headed," do you mean headed directly to the Commission without undergoing intermediate inspection, either by you or any of the warders?—Exactly; these were the instructions the Commissioners gave me, and these I conveyed to the prisoners, that they might hand any statement direct to the Commissioners.

3365. And that such documents should not be examined?—Certainly, my Lord.

3366. And they fully understood that?—They fully understood that.

3367. I understood then that your refusal went to the point simply that they should not transmit them by post?—Yes. They also applied to communications in the same way under cover to the treason-tolony convicts in other prisons.

3368. And that you refused?—I forwarded it to the chairman. Their request was refused in the latter read this morning.

3369. (Dr. Lyons.) Did they ask you for envelopes in which they may be able to place their statements?—No, they merely said "under cover, under seal; not subject to inspection by anyone in the prison."

3370. (Chairman.) But you believe that they fully understood they were to have full opportunity to present them to this Commission?—Certainly.

3371. (Mr. Brodriek.) Did they claim the right of transmitting to the Commissioners by post, and not through you, a statement in a closed envelope?—Not that I am aware of; they never expressed themselves in that way. When the Commission first arrived, I asked them whether they wished to hand in documents themselves or to transmit them through me, they said it was immaterial. Power, particularly, said that he did not care; that I could hand them myself. That I declined to do. I said you can hand them to the secretary, but I will take them myself if you like.

3372. You think they fully understood that they should not be examined?—They perfectly understood this. In the first instance, I think, they were in doubt as to whether they would be inspected or not.

3373. (Mr. De Vere.) Do the writing materials that you have furnished to them contain the means of making up a statement enclosed under seal?—No, they do not. They are merely furnished with sheets of paper, ink and pens.

3374. You are aware that we have mentioned our being ready to receive either oral or written statements?—I am.

3375. If one of the prisoners were to decline to make an oral statement and to prefer to make a written statement to the Commissioners, has he the means of making a written statement to the Commissioners under seal?—Perfectly, if he wishes it. The documents remain in their possession, their own property, and they have nothing to do but to hand them to the secretary.

3376. Did I not understand you to say that amongst the writing materials given to them they are not provided with the means of sending a statement to us under seal?—I do not think I understood your question. Those documents are in their possession now; they are subject to no inspection.

3377. Suppose a prisoner prefers making a written statement to making an oral statement, has he the means of making that statement in a closed or sealed envelope?—He has.

3378. (Dr. Lyons.) In other words, did you furnish them with envelopes?—No, they have no envelopes at present; but the documents have been entirely in their own charge. They have never been inspected or subject to any restriction; therefore they are actually their property at this moment.

3379. What objection have you to furnish them with envelopes?—None whatever. It was simply an omission.

3380. If they had asked for envelopes would you have given them?—Certainly.

3381. (Chairman.) They probably will hand the documents to us themselves when they come in?—Certainly. That I believe is their intention.

3382. In the case of any prisoners that we do not examine to-day, we should be glad if you would give them envelopes?—In case there should be any question of this, perhaps the secretary would kindly go to the men and receive the statements from their hands.

3383. To show that the documents have not been out of their hands yet?—They have never been subjected to any inspection since they first began to write them.

3384. Captain Harris, shall you be prepared to comply with the wish of the Commissioners, that you should now communicate with the different treason-tolony prisoners in this prison, and place in their hands respectively an envelope to enable them to enclose their statements in that envelope, and seal it up for the purpose of its being laid before the Commission in the precise state in which it is received by you?—I am quite prepared now. As an additional safeguard, if the secretary would take the envelope when closed from their hands, and not allow it to pass through any officer's hands, it would be more satisfactory to me.

3385. We shall ask you then, Captain Harris, in each case, is this document in the same state in which you received it from the prisoner?—Very well, my Lord.

3386. (Mr. Brodriek.) You said that some of the prisoners had applied for legal assistance?—Yes.

3387. Have they had legal assistance?—They have not had up to the present time; but a communication has been made to a Queen's counsel, Isaac Butt, Esquire, whom they all expressed a wish to consult.

3388. Do you mean to say that they of themselves addressed a communication to Mr. Butt?—They have.

3389. And it has been forwarded?—It has been forwarded, but of course there may be some delay.

3390. When was it forwarded?—It was forwarded on Monday, the 27th.

3391. Into whose hands did it go from your?—Into the post. I posted it myself.

3392. To whom do you say?—In the post office.

3393. Direct to Mr. Butt?—Direct to Mr. Butt. It was drawn up in the form of a memorial. I told them that a joint communication would not be forwarded; that each prisoner would be allowed to address Mr. Butt separately; eventually they each sent a copy of the memorial which had been prepared for their joint signature.

3394. How were Thomas Bourke and Rosseter aware of the existence of the document which they desired to sign?—They communicated when at exercise with others; since the last visit of the Commission there has been no restraint placed on their communication.

3395. Upon what principle were the others permitted to sign, and not Bourke and Rosseter?—The others are all located together in the infirmary; Bourke and Rosseter are not; therefore they only meet at exercise. It did not appear also a very material point; they have every opportunity of making statements; they said they wanted to sign the memorial, which I did not permit.

3396. (Mr. De Vere.) Did Bourke and Rosseter express to you their concurrence in the memorial?—No, they did not; but I feel quite confident that it was arranged amongst themselves during the hours of exercise, that they would sign it.

3397. What would have been the practical inconvenience of allowing them to sign it?—There would have been no practical inconvenience; I simply thought it unnecessary.

3398. May I ask whether you have communicated the answer from the Home Office, bearing date 28th June, to the prisoners who sent the memorial?—I have, this morning.

3399. (Dr. Greenham.) Captain Harris, have you seen the paper which I hold in my hand, addressed to the Right Honourable the Earl of Devon and the members of the Commission, and signed by some of the treason-felony prisoners, namely, Denis Dowling Mulmahy, Edward Power, Bryan Dillon, and Patrick Ryan?—Yes, I have.

3400. You have seen this before?—Yes, I have seen it.

3401. Have you also received statements from any of the other treason-felony prisoners addressed to yourself?—Yes.

3402. Were they written applications?—Written applications.

3403. To what effect were these applications?—Two or three of them—they were nearly all the same—applied for copies of their suppressed letters, all communications referring to them in the hospital books, all applications made by them to the governor or to the visiting director; in fact, anything that referred to them in the prison books.

3404. What answer did you give to these communications?—I forwarded them to the chairman. He has not authorized me to give any answer up to the present time.

3405. And they have had no answer?—They have had no answer.

3406. (Dr. Lyons.) Are these documents in your possession now?—No, they are not. They are in Parliament Street, in the office of the directors. Of course I may be allowed to explain that to comply with their request would necessitate the production of the whole of the prison books for their inspection. They would not have copies, but originals; finally they asked for copies.

3407. (Mr. De Vere.) When a letter is suppressed what is done with it?—It is filed in the office. A note is put on it, and it is filed in the office.

3408. Is it then returned to the prisoner?—Not to the prisoner, except for information, that he may know the reason that it was suppressed; but it is never left

The witness withdrew.

THOMAS BOURKE, prisoner, examined.

3413. (Chairman.) Is your name Thomas Bourke?—Yes.

3414. The gentlemen who are here now, are a Commission appointed by the Government to inquire into the treatment of yourself and the other treason-felony convicts in this or other English prisons, and are prepared to give you the opportunity of making any statement which you may wish to make, and to inquire into its allegations. The Commission consists of Mr. De Vere, Dr. Lyons, Mr. Brodick, Dr. Greenhow and myself, Lord Devon; and we shall be prepared to receive any statement from you, which you may wish to make, bearing on the question of your treatment. You have already been informed, so doubt, that it would be open to you to make your statement out in writing, or orally, or both ways?—Yes, so I have been informed.

3415. Are you prepared to hand in any written statement?—I have no written statement prepared, sir. If you will permit me, perhaps we can better understand each other by my giving you—I will just read this with your permission.

3416. I should tell you, at first, that there is a shorthand writer in the room who will take down anything said, and a report will be published; that this room is a private room, and you are out of hearing of any official of the prison; and that whatever you may say, will not prejudice your future position in this or any other prison?—That is very important to understand, sir. I perceive that the subjects upon which the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts will permit such prisoners to address them are: first, treatment, diet, discipline, or disregard of the conditions necessary for health; second, exceptional treatment or subjection to any hardship beyond that incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of penal servitude. I respectfully submit, that there is not anything that a prisoner has to undergo that cannot be sanctioned by that qualification; that there is not anything we suffer that cannot be set down as being not beyond the things incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of penal servitude. I have made a few notes here that I should like to read for you if you allow me, giving an account of some of them.

3417. If you please. Make them as definite as you can. You will go into nothing vague, I hope?—Just as, sir. I shall endeavour to adopt that course. I have noted a few things here which are quite incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing penal servitude: broken limbs, loss of the use of limbs, total loss of limbs, death by accident or design, 20 consecutive days' bread and water and punishment cells, six months' penal class diet in penal and punishment cells.

3418. Is this the result of your own experience?—Much of it, sir.

3419. You will be kind enough to state what relates to yourself?—None of these have I suffered, but all of them are things which I have seen and observed, and they would not be outside any condition undergoing any term of penal servitude.

3420. I think it would be convenient if you first state what you have to complain of, and then you can make any general statement you think necessary?—Pardon me, sir. In fact, I have been deterred from making a statement by the fact that if you were only going to inquire into a condition of things outside the hardships incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing sentence of penal servitude, I would have nothing to say; but if you are going to inquire into the actual things that occurred to us; if you are going to inquire into the treatment, discipline, or disregard of the conditions necessary for health, I could make a statement; but I hold that this qualifying phrase, "incidental to the "condition of a prisoner undergoing sentence of penal servitude," does away with everything that I could state.

3421. It is perfectly open to you to make any statement as regards diet, discipline, or health. You will go on if you please?—You will permit me to read this, if you please: broken limbs, loss of the use of limbs, total loss of limbs, death by accident or design, 28 consecutive days' bread and water and punishment cells, six months' penal class diet in penal and punishment cells, and in addition six months' leg-bolts and loaded with 14 pounds weight of an iron chain fastened to the legs, and suspended from the ceiling, and to be worn day and night, in summer or in winter, in the prison or at labour; to have the hands manacled behind the back for 35 consecutive days; to be dogged to death with a cat-o-nine-tails, as in the case of convict Wilkinson at Portland.

3422. (Dr. Lyons.) What date was that, do you know?—I do not, sir. To be compelled to labour until your clothes were wet through on your back; to continue to work in them until they dried again on your back, and to have to sleep in them if not perfectly dry when you left off labour; to be confined in a cell through the roof of which the water poured down on your head when you slept in at night; to ignore disease until fully developed; to neglect it when active; to be sent to the cold, bleak, humid climate of Dartmoor in consumption; to be taken out of bed in the last stage of consumption; to be discharged to the prison from the hospital, and punished with penal class diet in punishment cell in the last stage of consumption, and to die within two months after the infliction of such punishment.

3423. (Dr. Lyons.) Whose case was that?—The case of Dunn, sir, in this prison.

3424. What was his christian name?—Thomas Dunn, sir.

3425. (Chairman.) Was he a treason-felony prisoner?—He was, sir. To be driven mad, as in the case of Martin Henry Carey, of Dublin; Mr. Kearns, of Cork.

3426. (Dr. Lyons.) What is his christian name?—I do not know his Christian name, sir. I believe it is John; and Colonel Richard O'Sullivan Burke at present in this prison.

3427. (Dr. Lyons.) Were they all political prisoners?—All three political prisoners; to be driven to attempt suicide, as Mr. Millard, political prisoner in Portland, was; to commit suicide, as scores of criminals have done to escape the hardships incidental to a sentence of penal servitude. These, sir, are some of the matters that suggested themselves to me after an experience of some three years and a half as a convict. I know that these are things that are to be met with every day. Of course if you are only going to deal with matters outside these we have no statement to offer. In fact, I am almost inclined to say, sir, that from the commencement of our preparation everything has been done by the authorities here to prevent us from giving our attention to the facts of the case.

3428. (Chairman.) That is a general statement. Will you specify any particular instances?—I will, sir. We were taken on Thursday, as well as I can remember, sir, from labour.

3429. That was Thursday last?—No, it would be the Thursday previous to Tuesday the 21st instant.

3430. (Dr. Lyons.) That would be Thursday, June 16th?—Thursday, June 16th, sir. One of the officers came to me and called me from labour and said, "You are to go to your room." I went to my room. He said, "Pack up your things." I put my books together and took my sheets as is usual when about changing location. He brought me down and put me in B ward. This is the strongest ward in the prison; a ward set apart for the most desperate characters in the prison; it is peculiarly a separate ward. Well, we were put in there. I asked why I was separated from my friends, without having done one single thing. They told me that some time I would hear, by-and-bye, perhaps. In the evening the chief warder of the department brings me three sheets of paper, and this statement of subjects that the Commissioners would inquire into, that I have read for you.

3431. An extract of the subjects of inquiry?—Yes, sir. I asked him to name the Commissioners. He refused. I saw the governor and asked him the names of the Commissioners. He told me in the most curt possible manner, that it was enough for me to know that there was a Commission, and that was quite enough for me to know. I told him I thought it was not enough to know inasmuch as a Commission had come here before and had been received by the political prisoners in good faith, and it not alone did them no good but misrepresented; that I thought before I would make any statement or communication in writing, I should know the names. He refused to give them to me. I finally got them four days afterwards, on the 20th June, at 1 o'clock p.m.

3432. How did you get them on the 20th June?—I got them from the officer of the ward. He was supplied them by the governor, I presume. Well, here we were, scrupulously kept apart, never being allowed to see one of our friends, this and two succeeding days. Before I go further, I will say that I asked the governor if it was by the orders of the Commissioners that we were kept in separate confinement. As he told me before, he said that it was enough for me to know that that was his order, and he would give no further answer. I told him if we are to take this as an index of the character of the Commission, I do not think that any good can possibly result from it, because it was implying that if we were allowed to be together, we might concoct a statement, or tell something that was not true. We were compelled to exercise separately in a punishment yard, about the width of this room, and to go in and out we were not allowed to see the face of a friend; and of course we were all taken without having the slightest knowledge in life what the meaning of this thing was. We knew nothing of its being on the topic that a Commission was to be appointed. We were told that we would receive a statement. I made application for some statements I made, that would be essential to give you an idea of the treatment I received.

3433. (Dr. Lyons.) What statements were they?—One was to the Secretary of State, on the 10th August 1869, I think; one to the directors, in November 1868, I think, and another to the directors, the date of which I do not recollect. These we were told we would get, but up to the present moment I have not received them; so that you see I am quite unprepared to give any statement, inasmuch as we were promised many things to enable us to make a statement, and have not yet received any of them. The governor on one occasion came and asked me if I wanted any assistance in preparing my statement. I told him I did not clearly understand what was meant by the word "assistance." He said, "Do you want any legal assistance?" I said, "If you will allow me some time to consider, I will let you know this evening." On that evening, on the evening of the 24th June 1870, I wrote this. This is a copy of a letter that I then wrote to the deputy-governor:

"To the Deputy-Governor.

"3.15 p.m., 24th June 1870.

"In answer to the question of the deputy-governor, as to whether I required any assistance in preparing my statement, I said I did not quite understand what was meant by assistance. This he explained by saying that what was meant by assistance was, did I require the presence of a solicitor or lawyer? My answer to this question as explained is, 'Yes,' and I suggest the name of Isaac Butt, Esq., Q.C., Dublin, as the only person by whom I would wish to be advised or represented. I feel, too, that the presence of this gentleman would be a further guarantee that the gentlemen composing the Com"mission, in whose honour I have every reliance,

 "tend to deal fairly and impartially with the pri"soners and the authorities.

"THOMAS FRANCIS BOURKE,
 "Irish State Prisoner."

This is a copy, sir, of the letter that was sent to Mr. Butt. Up to this time we have heard nothing from Mr. Butt, although firmly impressed with the idea that we should have his services.

3434. (Dr. Lyons.) When was that forwarded, let me ask you?—It was forwarded on the 26th June 1870; the deputy-governor of this prison received this. No answer has been had to it yet. When the governor came to us—in fact, on last Sunday, the 26th, the governor came and said, "You can put in writing anything you have to say to Mr. Butt; you can address Mr. Butt through me." Well, on that occasion I wrote this:

"Woking Convict Prison,
 "Survey, England,
 "Monday, 27th June, 1870.

"Dear Butt, Esq., Q.C., Dublin.

"DEAR SIR,

"I presume that the Commissioners appointed
 "to inquire into the treatment of the Irish political "prisoners in British convict prisons have already "communicated to you the contents of the following "letter which explains itself—

Here follows the letter I am just after reading.

"On yesterday the deputy-governor of this prison
 "verbally informed me that I might communicate my "wish in writing to you through him. I presume
 "therefore that the Commissioners have acceded to "my wishes as above expressed, and that they have "already retained you to assist me in the proceedings "of the Commission. As the Commissioners have "notified that they will permit me to address them on "the 29th instant, I shall feel obliged by your tele-
 "graphing on receipt of this to Captain Harris,
 "deputy-governor of this prison, as to whether I "shall have the aid of your valuable services on that "day or not.

"I am, dear sir, respectfully yours,

"THOMAS FRANCIS BOURKE,
 "Irish State Prisoner.

"P.S. You can give me your views.
 "More fully by post, bearing in mind, however,
 "that your letter will be read by the prison autho"rities."

So that you see no answer has come up to the present moment, while I have been fully impressed with the idea that Mr. Butt was to be here.

3435. (Chairman.) Did the governor give you to understand that any legal adviser would be permitted to represent you before us?—He did, sir.

3436. Or to assist you in preparing a statement in your cell?—Not alone did he give me to understand it, but he said that was the meaning of the order he received. When I said, "I do not know what you mean by assistance," he said, "Do you require the assistance of a legal gentleman?" It was in answer to that question of the governor that I wrote this letter to him. So that you will see, up to the present time, sir, we have been in a state of uncertainty, shifting from moment to moment from the different positions assumed by the authorities here, and we have never had a regular opportunity of writing a statement of our treatment. By the way, at half-past 4 o'clock last evening, the principal warden came and gave me this document. This was the latest account. It struck me very much, and I was quite unprepared for it—

"3 Parliament Street, 21st June 1870.

"The Commissioners appointed to inquire into the "treatment of treason-felony convicts in English pri"sons have hereby given notice that they will sit at the "Convict Prison, Woking, on Wednesday, the 29th
 "instant, at 12 o'clock; and at the Convict Prison,

"Chatham, on Monday, July the 4th, at the same "hour."

This I got last evening at 20 minutes past 4 o'clock. I believe it is a copy of an advertisement read some time ago by the secretary of the Commission to us:

"The Commissioners will be prepared to receive "from any treason-felony prisoner any statement as "regards his treatment in English prisons which he "may wish to submit orally, or in writing, or in both "forms. The Commissioners will be also prepared "to receive any statement in writing which may be "submitted to them, on behalf of any prisoner," and "so on. I merely read this for the purpose of showing
 "you, that up to last evening, up to 20 minutes past 4
 "o'clock, I had no knowledge whatever that this Com"mission would sit to-day; no knowledge whatever;
 "because the intervening facts between the reading of "this document, which was read to us—I believe the "secretary will be able to inform me what time it was "read?"

3437. (The Secretary.) Yes, it was on Tuesday, the 21st?—On Tuesday, the 21st, this was read. Very well. The date on which I wrote the letter leaving the matter to Mr. Butt, threw this matter completely over, so far as I could understand. Then there was nothing left for us to consider but the arrival of Mr.
 Butt, and the reception of such documents as we required to make up our statements. These documents you will bear in mind, I have not yet received, and up to last night, at half-past 4 o'clock, I was fully impressed with the belief that Mr. Butt was to be here; and then, at half-past 4, I was told that the Commission would sit to-day; so that you find me not at all prepared to give the evidence I would wish.
 I do not think any of my fellow prisoners are in a position to give evidence. This, I think, will clearly show that the authorities have no desire to aid us in making up our statements.

3438. (Chairman.) All your statement hitherto has gone mainly to general allegations, illustrated particularly by particular instances. Are you prepared to supplement those general allegations by any statement as regards either yourself or any other person?—I wish to state, sir, that those allegations that I have made, which you may consider allegations, I have merely used as illustrative of the facts, and under this qualifying clause I specified there is nothing in the world that could not be justified; there is not anything that could not be justified; all those things that I have mentioned, which are not allegations, but merely to show that all those things occur every day, for many of them I have seen myself occur, they are all included in the condition of a prisoner undergoing penal servitude. I say they are certain things that could scarcely be looked over. I merely use them as illustrations.

3439. You see it is impossible to go into general allegations, and therefore I must ask you to define particularly, anything of which you, or within your knowledge any of the other treason-felony prisoners, have to complain?—You will pardon my asking you a question. Would it not be well that we wait to understand, as we to get the assistance of Mr. Butt?

3440. No, I think it better frankly at once to tell you that the Commission has decided that no counsel or friends of a prisoner shall be present during the examination. Facilities will be given to admit any legal adviser or other friend to assist a prisoner in preparing a preliminary statement; but it is not the intention of the Commission to admit any person but the prisoner to be present when the statement is made?—Just so, sir; but I understand from you that during preliminary arrangements we might receive all assistance necessary from our friends. We have received none of this assistance.

3441. I will read to you what we have told Mr.
 Butt. "First, the prisoners will have full opportunity "for making an oral statement to the Commissioners
 "as regards their treatment; such statement to be "made in a private room, in the absence of any

"prison officer, and after a distinct intimation from the Commissioners, to which they will give full effect, that no statement so made will in any way prejudicially affect the prisoner's position and treatment." That I have already mentioned?—Yes, sir.

3442. *Second, the prisoners will have further, full opportunity for making written statements and for offering such oral explanations of them as they may desire. Writing materials will be provided for them, and three days' intermission from labour allowed, if wished. Third, the Commissioners will be prepared to receive any statement in writing from any friend of a prisoner, or any person acting on his behalf, and to take the oral evidence of any witness,—including, if desired, any released prisoner,—which may appear to be relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts. Fourth, the Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State that access to prisoners at a reasonable hour, and for a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting them in the preparation of their statements, should be allowed to the friends of such prisoners, under such regulations and conditions as the Government may think necessary. Application in such case should be made to the Home Office. Fifth, the evidence will be taken down by a shorthand writer. Sixth, the report and evidence will be made public?—"The report and evidence." Do I understand, sir, that the statements that we make will be published with your report?

3443. Yes?—Then that is a very admirable thing; but I would beg to remind you, sir, before we go any further, that you will find many of these conditions, that it was the intention of the Commissioners we should enjoy, that we have not received.

3444. Will you tell me one by one, if you please, which of these conditions you have not had the benefit of? You have every opportunity of making an oral statement as regards your treatment, in a private room and in the absence of any officer of the prison, and you have been informed that your position here will not be prejudiced by any statement; and you have, I believe, had full opportunity of making a written statement, having been provided with writing materials, and intermission from labour allowed?—Yes, sir, quite so. What I regard as a hardship in this fact, that there are many statements that I have written since I have been in this prison when I had cause of complaint. I asked for those, and I was told that I should receive them. Those are necessary to my stating my case. I have not received them still.

3445. Are there any statements except those you have received, namely, August 1869, and November 1869?—Those are two that bear particularly on the treatment I have received.

3446. You tell us that in order to make out your statement satisfactorily to yourself, you believe that you ought to be in possession of those statements?—I do, sir; I have done so; and I do feel so.

3447. I do not know what those statements are, or what they may contain, but we will take care that you be put in possession of a copy of those statements that bear on the subject of our inquiry. You will be put in possession of copies of such portions of them as bear on the subject of our inquiry?—When shall I receive them, sir?

3448. You shall receive them at an early period. I cannot tell where they are; they are probably in London?—I did make application for them a week ago, in fact, and was expecting every day to receive them.

3449. You made application to the deputy-governor?—To the deputy-governor, in the usual way, sir. I made application in writing.

3450. What did he say in answer to your application?—He said of course I would receive them. He forwarded my application, and I have heard nothing of it since. My application runs in this way: "The following are the dates of the statements which I "require." I then gave the dates, and I submitted this, of which this is a copy, to the deputy-governor.

3451. You will be put in possession of the necessary parts of them?—I should ask permission to be allowed to see my friends for a few minutes, if the Commissioners have no objection.

3452. Has any application been made by my friends to see you?—I mean my fellow-prisoners in this prison.

3453. You have seen them at exercise, have you not?—I have seen them this morning. I merely wish to see them now, if it is not at all objectionable.

3454. (Dr. Greenhow.) To consult with them?—To give them an idea that the Commissioners are here.

3455. (Chairman.) The governor has informed every one of them that the Commissioners are here, and will be prepared to see them?—I quite understand, but I thought you would not have any objection to my seeing them.

The prisoner withdrew, and after the Commissioners had deliberated, was recalled.

3456. (Chairman.) The Commissioners have considered the statement made by you, and will be prepared to use their endeavours to obtain for you an opportunity of seeing all material parts of the letters of August 10th, 1869, and November 4th, 1869, as you say that an opportunity of reading those letters is necessary for your statement. That being so, as you are not able to make your statement satisfactorily now, you will do it on a future occasion. Therefore the Commissioners decide on adjourning to a future day, of which you shall have due notice, for your examination?—Thank you. I feel greatly obliged to the Commissioners, because I may then be in the possession of those documents which I have considered from the first essentially necessary. I will then be in a position to make a statement to the Commissioners much better perhaps than now.

3457. I wish at the same time to explain to you, lest you may have some misconception in the matter, what the real facilities are which will be given to you and to the other prisoners as well. We have decided on not admitting anybody to speak for a prisoner, or assistant to a prisoner when he is before us; but every facility will be given for any friend, legal adviser or otherwise, whoever he may be, to assist in preparing any necessary statement?—Just so, sir. I wish to state in explanation that I was clearly at fault, inasmuch as it was the deputy-governor who set me at fault. I had said nothing at all of a lawyer or of legal assistance being required until he said so to me. "What the Commissioners wish to know is, do you require a lawyer?" These are the deputy-governor's words.

3458. (Mr. Brodribb.) Did you understand a lawyer to consult, or to speak for you?—I did not clearly understand. I do not think he understood the order, nor did I understand, and at the present time I do not know what a solicitor or Mr. Butt are to do for me.

3459. (Chairman.) I will read to you again the Commissioners' award: "The Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State that access to prisoners for a reasonable hour, and at a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting them in the preparation of their statements, should be allowed to friends of such prisoners, under such regulations and conditions as the Government may think necessary?"—Very good, sir.

3460. With that understanding your further examination may be postponed?—I thank you.

3461. (Dr. Lysons.) You now clearly understand the position in which you are with regard to the Commission?—Yes, sir; I am to receive those documents I spoke of and visits from my friends or any person who comes to help me in making my statement, and to appear before you and go into the facts.

3462. (Chairman.) Yes, and the visits of friends are to be subject to such conditions as the Government may impose?—Just so.

3463. (Mr. De Vere.) Are there any other documents that you wish for besides those you have stated?—I think there are three.

3464. (Chairman.) You can hand a list to the governor?—I have already handed him a document on the subject.

3465. (Dr. Lyons.) If anything else occurs to you within a day or two you can hand in a memorandum to the governor?—On a couple of occasions I wished

The prisoner withdrew.

DENIS DOWLING MULLOCH, prisoner, examined.

3468. (Chairman.) Is your name Denis Mulochy?—Yes.

3469. The gentlemen around this table are a Commission appointed under the Government in order to inquire into the treatment of the treason-felony prisoners in the different prisons of England, where they are confined. The Commission consists of Mr. De Vere, Dr. Lyons, Mr. Bredinick, Dr. Greenhow, and myself, Lord Devon. You will have an opportunity now of making any statement to us, in a room which, as you see, is a private room, in the absence of any official or person connected with this prison, and in such a way as that your evidence will be in no way prejudicial to you, whatever statement you may make, or your future position interfered with in the prison. It will be taken down by a shorthand writer, and hereafter our report and the evidence taken by us will be made public?—In extenso, my lord? Will all that I state be published?

3470. All that you state will be published: yes, all that is relevant. Whatever is relevant to the subject of the inquiry will be published in extenso. The Commissioners reserve to themselves to say what is appropriate. It may be satisfactory to you to know that although we are appointed by the Government we are entirely independent of Government. Have you been informed of the facilities which, by our desire, it was intended to afford to you for the purpose of enabling you to make any statement in writing, or orally, which you might wish to give?—With your lordship's permission, I will read the notice which I got. "§134. Denis Dowling Mulochy. Subjects upon which the Commission is appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts, will permit such prisoners to address them: first, treatment, diet, discipline, or disregard of the conditions necessary for health; second, exceptional treatment or subjection to any hardship beyond that incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of penal servitude." I would wish to know, my lord, if the qualifying sentence or clause is that, "or subjection to any hardship beyond that incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of penal servitude," would be understood to imply that the Commissioners are not empowered to inquire into the hardships that are incidental to the condition of persons undergoing a sentence of penal servitude, and therefore will permit us to address them on the subjects of treatment, diet, discipline, or disregard of the conditions necessary to health, only in such cases as we can prove were beyond those incidental to the condition of prisoners undergoing penal servitude, so that we would not be permitted to address them on subjects which are incidental to such prisoners?

3471. Our inquiry will be directed as to whether there is anything in the treatment to which prisoners undergoing penal servitude are subjected, which is unnecessarily severe or harsh, or prejudicial to health; and beyond that, we shall enter into the question whether the treason-felony convicts have been subjected to any exceptional treatment, or have suffered any hardship beyond that. If, therefore, you have to complain of anything incidental to all the prisoners in this prison which you think a particular hardship on to address the Commission, but the governor refused, and said he would forward nothing to the Commission. Although it was given to him open in an undecoded envelope he declined forwarding anything to the Commission. This occurred to Mr. Mulochy, a political prisoner, who wanted to forward a letter to the Commissioners desiring an explanation we could not receive from the authorities here.

3466. (Chairman.) We are going to examine him. He can make his own statement?—Just so, sir.

3467. You understand that you will have an opportunity of calling any witnesses in support of any statement you may wish to make?—Yes, sir.

Yes, you are open to state it?—I would state some of the things which are incidental to the condition of prisoners undergoing penal servitude, if your lordship has no objection:—broken limbs; loss of the use of limbs; total loss of limbs; death by accident or design; 28 consecutive days' bread and water and punishment cells; six months' penal chain diet and punishment cells, in addition to the bread and water; six months' leg bolted and loaded with 16 lbs. weight of an iron chain fastened to the leg and suspended from the loins, and to be worn day and night, in summer or in winter, in the prison or at labour, no matter what that labour may be, my lord; to have the hands manacled behind the back for 35 consecutive days; to be flogged to death with the cat-o-nine-tails as in the case of convict Wilkinson, at Portland; to be compelled to labour until your clothes were wet through on your back; to continue to work in them until they dried again on your back, and to have to sleep in them if not perfectly dry when you left off labour. If you are taking it down, my lord, I will read it more slowly.

3472. The shorthand writer can follow you, I believe. He will take it down. Proceed, if you please?—To be confined in a cell, through the roof of which the water poured down in your bed when you slept in it at night; to suffer from ascaries, which I believe is owing to the quality of the food; to ignore diseases until fully developed; to neglect it when active; to be sent to the bleak, cold, humid climate of Dartmoor in consumption; to be taken out of bed in the last stage of consumption, discharged to the prison, punished with penal chain diet in penal cells, and die within two months or nine weeks after the infliction of such punishment.

3473. (Dr. Lyons.) Whose case is that?—It is the case of a man who was in the hospital, Dr. Lyons, of the name of Durne.

3474. What was his Christian name?—I do not know his Christian name, Dr. Lyons.

3475. (Dr. Greenhow.) Was he a treason-felony prisoner?—No, he was not.

3476. Who were sent to Dartmoor in consumption?—There are convicts in this prison who were sent to Dartmoor in consumption. To take no notice of men being subject to any hardship not beyond that incidental to the condition of a convict is of no use to the treason-felony prisoners.

3477. (Chairman.) We ask the fact merely, for we shall inquire into it?—There is one man named Brennan in this prison; I think he is in the hospital at present.

3478. (Dr. Lyons.) Brennan was sent to Dartmoor?—Yes, and returned from Dartmoor not many months since.

3479. How do you know he was in consumption?—I only heard it from statements he makes, that he threw up a large quantity of blood and was returned as in consumption. I cannot state that he is in consumption positively.

3480. I only want to ascertain how you know of it?—I had no opportunity of ascertaining, Dr. Lyons, that he was in consumption, but I believe there is no doubt that political prisoners were sent from here in self state to Dartmoor. I was sent to Dartmoor myself after I had severe hæmoptysis in Portland.

T. Bourke.

3481. (Mr. Broadbent.) After you had severe hæmoptysis?—Yes; bleeding from the lungs.

3482. (Dr. Lyons.) We will ask you particularly to state all about that when you have done with the general statement?—To be driven mad by the punishment of the prison director, as in the case of Martin
Hanley Carey, treason-felony prisoner, and Mr.
Kearney, I don't know his christian name, a treason-felony prisoner, and Colonel Richard O'Sullivan Burke, another treason-felony prisoner; to be driven to attempt suicide as in the case of a treason-felony prisoner of the name of Milady. He was convicted of some offence under the Treason-felony Act, I believe, in England, and he is now a convict in Portland, and I am informed by one of my fellow prisoners who returned from Portland, that he attempted to commit suicide in his cell, for which, I believe, he was punished, and owing to the severity of the punishment he made some attempt to strike the governor, for which he was sent back to 21 days' bread and water. In these prisons a charge from bread and water is given every fourth day to penal-class diet, but I believe in Ireland it is continued for eight consecutive days. I myself was sentenced to seven days and kept on it six days.

3483. (Dr. Lyons.) You were six days on bread and water?—For six days, consecutive days, on bread and water in Mountjoy prison, Dr. Lyons.

3484. Will you give the dates, please?—Well, I cannot give you the exact dates, but I will give as near as I possibly can remember: it was somewhere between the 14th November 1866, and probably the 21st, somewhere there. I was removed to Ireland to attend the Court of Queen's Bench, on a writ of error which was being argued at the time. I was removed under the Act of Anteas corpus to attend that court.

3485. (Chairman.) You were removed on the 15th of November 1866?—Yes, my lord; I thought it was somewhere about that. I came back to Millbank on the 1st December 1866. When I was taken to Mountjoy prison they read to me the rules of separate confinement. I told them that they were already read to me in another prison, and that as I was under Anteas corpus there, I thought I was not to be under punishment. Every prisoner is supposed to be nine months in separate confinement, and during those nine months he is supposed to do certain work within certain hours; and when I was sent to Mountjoy they wanted to compel me to conform to the rules of separate confinement which would amount to a punishment, to pick oakum. But when I went to the prison after I returned from the court, I refused, and said, I will pick no oakum in the intervals of attending the court. Mr. Murray, the director, came to me and asked me if I was disobeying the regulations. I said
I did not disobey the regulations through any spirit of inobedience, but I did say on principle, that I was there under the Anteas corpus, and I thought it most unfair to ask me. He did not object to that at the time. "Well," says he, "if you object on principle
I see what you mean," so after having full time for consideration, which I detailed in my statement, Mr.
Murray came in about 10 o'clock at night, a most unseasonable hour, and on the following Monday morning the governor came to the cell where I was located and read the decision of Mr. Murray, that if I did not pick the oakum I was to be punished with seven consecutive days bread and water. I was kept on the bread and water, I think, six days, and on the evening of the sixth day I was taken off by, I understood, the order of Dr. MacDonnell.

3486. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you assert positively that you were for six consecutive days confined on bread and water?—I was. I am positive that I was at least five days and a half. I was put on bread and water
I think, on Monday evening, as well as my recollection serves me, at half-past 3 o'clock, and I was either five days and a half or six days.

3487. Are you prepared to state positively to us that you were kept for five and a half consecutive days on bread and water?—I am. To the best of my recollection it was five days and a half. I got a dinner on the evening of Sunday, after I returned from exercise by the order of Dr. MacDonnell.

3488. (Mr. De Vere.) At the end of that period, were you examined by Dr. MacDonnell to see if your health suffered?—I was neither examined after
I was put on the bread and water or before.

3489. Do you know, of your own knowledge, why the latter part of the sentence was removed?—I do not.

3490. (Dr. Lyons.) But you think that it was done in consequence of a representation made by Dr.
MacDonnell?—I was told so by the warden when he brought me the dinner. He handed me the dinner through a trap door about 9 inches by 6. He handed it in and said, "Here is your dinner." I said, "Who ordered this?" He said "Dr. MacDonnell sent it to you." I said, "Am I not on bread and water yet; the punishment will not be up until to-morrow." He said, "Dr. MacDonnell ordered that you are to get no more bread and water." So I got no more bread and water. I got a pound of bread a day.

3491. (Mr. De Vere.) As a question of fact, had your health suffered in that period?—Oh, I cannot tell that. Of course it must have suffered from bread and water for six consecutive days.

3492. (Chairman.) Continue your statement if you please?—To be driven to attempt suicide, as Mr.
Milady, political prisoner at Portland, was, and to commit suicide to escape the hardship incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing sentence of penal servitude. This has been done by several convicts.

3493. (Dr. Lyons.) What case do you specify there?
—I specify the case of a great number.

3494. But who did commit suicide?—I cannot specify, but I understand that shaving was stopped in the prisons in which suicide has been committed, and several cases I believe can be shown in Millbank.

3495. You do not specify any cases?—I cannot specify any others. Milady, I think, is with the convicts.

3496. How does he spell his name?—I think he spells it M-I-L-A-D-Y. With regard to the other facilities, I was going to enumerate that we were served with a second notice here. These are some of the things that we consider incidental to the condition of prisoners undergoing penal servitude, and which of course, my lord, if the Commission has not power to inquire into, it would be useless for us to come forward with statement, at all; because if you have not power to inquire into things that we consider incidental to our condition, I contend that all those are incidental, and can be proved to be incidental to the condition of a convict, every one of these.

3497. (Chairman.) I must ask you, are you prepared with proofs of those allegations which you have made, and witnesses to support your statement?—
Well, my lord, this morning I made a communication, which I do not know has been forwarded to you or not. Captain Harris came to me on the 24th of June and asked me if I wanted any assistance in preparing my statement. He did not specify what he meant by assistance, nor did I understand. He had a document in his hand, and asked me did I want assistance. I thought he meant a clerk to copy something for me.
He did not say any more than I came to know if you require any assistance. As the matter was so vague, I said that I would take time to consider. I afterwards learned from my friends that he meant legal assistance, and I wrote to him this note—"Sir, in reply to a question you put to me this morning, namely, if I wanted any assistance in preparing my statement for the Commission appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts, and owing to the scanty and vague information you afforded me, I felt unable to give you an answer at the time, until I learned more fully from my fellow-prisoners the import of your communication."

"I now beg to inform you that I do require the assistance of Isaac Butt, Esq., Q.C., Dublin, in preparing my statement and watching the proceedings of the Commission on my behalf; and of my friend or friends who may assist me by advice or assistance, in preparing for the Commission. With reference to the documents which I require," they were some documents I applied for and have not got.

3498. What documents are they?—I will read them for you. "I beg to inform you that I shall want the original, or a true copy of a statement forwarded by me to the board of directors of convict prisons, about the end of September, or beginning of October, 1867, and the reply to the same; the original, or a true copy of a memorial forwarded by me to the Secretary of State, in the month of July, or beginning of August, 1868, the medical certificate accompanying the same, and the reply of the Secretary of State."

3499. From whom was the medical certificate?—From Dr. Campbell. I think it was about the 10th of August. I think as I since have written this, as well as I can recollect.

3500. Any other document?—The original, or a true copy of a statement forwarded to me by the board of directors of convict prisons, in January or February 1870, and the reply to the same; "I won't be positive whether it is January or February. The medical notes of Dr. Gover in Millbank convict prison, forwarded by him to the medical officer relating to my health in the end of Dec. 1866, or beginning of January 1867; the medical notes made by the medical officer of Portland convict prison, between the month of May and the month of November 1866; the medical notes relative to my health, made by the medical officer of Dartmoor convict prison, between the date of my reception as such prisoner, and my removal to the invalid convict prison, at Woking, in May 1867." I think I was received at Dartmoor in February 1867, and removed to the prison in May 1867.

3501. You came here on the 11th May 1867?—Yes. We are not allowed to copy any entry of any sort in the prison whiteners. "Also a copy of the report relative to my health, made by the medical officer of Dartmoor convict prison, and forwarded to the medical officer here, when I suffered from hemorrhage from the lungs, in the month of May 1867."

3502. Do you state to the Commission, then, that an opportunity of reading those various documents to which you refer, or so many of them as are material, is necessary to enable you to make a statement?—I do. There are certain facts that are not detailed in my statement that are detailed in those statements; and those statements were not made with an object, for there was no Commission then likely to be. "Also a copy of the report of the Commission held by Messrs. Pollock and Knox relative to the treatment of State prisoners in English prisons," made in (I think it was in probably June or July, I cannot say). They came here in May."

3503. (Dr. Lyons.) What is it you want?—I want to get a copy of their report, Dr. Lyons, particularly.

3504. (Chairman.) We took down all that you want; but it will be for us to decide by-and-by, how much we can give you?—Very good, my lord. The reason I want that particularly is, that I gave certain evidence to the Commission which I understood they did not publish, and they suppressed "copies of medical case sheets relative to my treatment in this prison; the originals or copies of my suppressed letters." I should prefer the originals.

3505. (Dr. Greenlaw.) Can you give us the dates?—I cannot give you the dates.

3506. How many of them are there?—Well, really, I could not tell you that either. I believe there is a page of a book signed by each prisoner, and they make an entry there of the letters he writes and receives.

3507. (Mr. De Fern.) Do you know which of your letters were suppressed and which were not?—Yes; I know letters relative to my health were suppressed, because I mentioned the state of my health at the time when I came from Dartmoor.

3508. Has it been communicated to you why those letters were suppressed?—Oh yes, because I spoke of my health. Any matter relating to the prison I would not be allowed to state.

3509. (Mr. Broadbent.) When a letter has been suppressed, does the governor inform you that it has been suppressed?—He may in a week or a fortnight, or in two or three days, or it may be a month. In one instance he did not inform me for a month. If he expects the director here he may hold it back until he comes here. The director visits on the 15th of the month, or on every 25th, he may come before the 15th or not until the 30th. If my letter was on the 15th he may keep it until the director came. For instance, a letter I wrote was kept until Mr. Fagan came to the prison.

3510. (Mr. De Fern.) When you are informed that a letter is suppressed, are you informed of the objectionable matter on account of which it was suppressed?—Yes.

3511. (Dr. Lyons.) When a letter is suppressed, are you allowed to write another in lieu of it?—Sometimes.

3512. Has it occurred to you that when a letter has been suppressed you did not get the option of writing another letter in place of it?—Yes, for months; for over a year. I will detail that in my statement. Copies of reports entered against me in the prison books, a copy of my option sheet.

3513. What is that?—It is some sort of official document in which I believe a sort of "huc and cry" of the prisoner is given, the number of reports against him, and other remarks. This letter was addressed to Captain Harris with the view of having it forwarded to the Commissioners, when he asked me what I would require; on this occasion that I gave no answer.

3514. (Chairman.) When was that written?—It was written on the 24th June 1870.

3515. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you wish to read that?—I have read the letter for you. Those things have been enumerated in that letter. On the 26th June, Captain Harris said to me, "You mention a wish to see Mr. Butt, Q.C., to assist you?" I said "Yes." "You can write to him," said he, "and I will forward your letter in the morning." That was on Sunday when he told me that, and I have not since heard from Mr. Butt.

3516. That was on Sunday, you say?—That was on Sunday, Dr. Lyons.

3517. You are quite sure that you were not informed before Sunday?—No, not before Sunday, about 11 or 12 o'clock, I think.

3518. (Chairman.) Sunday last, I suppose?—Sunday last, the 26th.

3519. (Dr. Lyons.) What did you do then?—I wrote the following note.

3520. To whom?—To Mr. Butt.

"Woking prison,
Sunday, 26th June 1870.

"I PRESENT that the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in convict prisons have already caused to be communicated to you the contents of the following letter which explains itself:—

"Woking convict prison,
Infirmary ward, A, 1,

"Sir,
24th June 1870.

"In reply to the question you put to me this morning, namely, if I wanted assistance in preparing my statement for the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of the treason-felony convicts, and owing to the scant and vague information you afforded me, I felt unable to give you an answer at the time until I learned more fully from my fellow-prisoners the import of your communication. I now beg to inform you that I do require the assistance of Isaac Butt, Esq., Q.C., Dublin, in preparing my statement and watching the pro-

"readings of the Commission on my behalf, and of "any friend or friends who may apply to assist me
"by advice or assistance in preparing for the Com"mission. With reference to the documents I "require, I beg to inform you that I shall want the "original or a true copy of a statement forwarded
"by me to the Board of Directors of Convict "Prisons, about the end of September or the begin"ning of October 1867, and the reply to the same;
"the original or a true copy of a memorial forwarded
"by me to the Secretary of State in the month of "July or beginning of August 1869, the medical "certificates accompanying the same, and the reply
"of the Secretary of State; the original or a true
"copy of a statement forwarded by me to the Board "of Directors of Convict Prisons in January or "February, and the reply to the same; the original
"notes of Dr. Gower, in Millbank convict prison,
"forwarded by him to the medical officer relating "to my health, in the end of December 1866 or "beginning of January 1867; the medical notes
"made by the medical officer of Portland convict
"prison between the month of May and the month
"of November 1866; the medical notes relative to "my health made by the medical officer of Dartmoor
"prison between the date of my reception at that "prison and my removal to the invalid convict "prison at Woking, in May 1867; a copy of a "report relative to my health made by the medical "officer of Dartmoor convict prison, and forwarded "to the medical officer here when I suffered from "hemorrhage from the lungs, in the month of May "1867; a copy of the report of the Commission
"held by Messrs. Pollock and Knox, relative to the "treatment of the State prisoners in English
"prisons; copies of medical case sheets relative to "my treatment in this prison; the originals or "copies of my suppressed letters; copies of the "reports entered against me in the prison books;
"a copy of my capias sheet.

"I am, sir, yours,

"Dennis DOWLING MURRAY.

"To W. G. V. Harris, Esq."

"Captain Harris that day verbally informed me
"that I might communicate my wishes in writing
"to you through him. I presume therefore that "the Commissioners have acceded to my request as "above expressed, and that they have retained you
"to assist me in the proceedings of the Commission.
"As the Commissioners have notified that they would "permit me to address them on the 29th instant, I "shall feel obliged by your superadding on receipt of "this to Captain Harris, deputy governor of this "prison, as to whether I shall have the aid of your "valuable services on that day or not.

"I am, dear sir,

"Respectfully yours,

"Dennis DOWLING MURRAY."

"P.S.—You can give me your views more fully by "post, bearing in mind, however, that your letter
"will be read by the prison authorities."

"That letter was handed on the morning of the 27th
"instant to Captain Harris to be forwarded to Mr. Butt,
"and I have had no reply from Mr. Butt since.

3521. (Mr. Broadrick.) Did you receive any reply
"from Captain Harris to your application for all those "documents that you have mentioned?—I asked
"Captain Harris whether he had received any of those "documents, and he told me he had received no docu"ments.

3522. He told you that by word of mouth, did he?
"—Yes, on the 32nd. (Reads.) "Saw the acting "governor this day and asked to be furnished with a "copy of notice read to us in the afternoon of yester"day by the secretary to the Commissioners. I "asked also if I could communicate freely under seal
"with the Commissioners, and for copies of the "documents mentioned in this slip. He promised to "let me have a copy of the notice, refused to let me
"communicate with the Commissioners, and told me

"send my application for the documents in writing,
"which I did."

3523. (Dr. Lyons.) What did you mean by "com"municating under seal with the Commissioners"?—I "wanted to state to the Commissioners what things I
"required; for instance, here is one of the documents I "required.

3524. What did you mean by "under seal"?—In "an envelope that would not pass through the hands of "the prison authorities.

3525. Have you since got an envelope?—I was "offered one to-day by the governor to put my state"ment into to hand to the governor, but I did not mean
"that; I meant that during the interval which elapsed
"between your leaving here on Tuesday evening I "think it was, yes, Tuesday evening, and to-day, that "I might communicate anything I had to say on such "matters to the Commissioners themselves, not allowing
"it to pass through the hands of the prison authorities.

3526. (Chairman.) In point of fact no statement
"from you has passed into the hands of the prison
"authorities?—These statements that I have read have
"all passed through the hands of the prison authorities.
"I had to give them to the prison authorities to have "them sent to you.

3527. (Dr. Greenhow.) What you objected to "their seeing, you kept back?—For instance, here is "what I kept back particularly.

3528. You had the opportunity of keeping back
"some?—Yes, I kept back the last of the subjects which "I regard as incidental to the condition of a prisoner
"undergoing sentence of penal servitude, and which I "have already read for you with regard to what I "consider incidental treatment. That I did not forward "to you which I intended to do. I also have not read
"the whole of it to you. This was a part of the state"ment. I stopped, my lord, in reading it to you some "time ago. (Reads.) "But if the Commissioners," it "went on to say, "are empowered to interfere into the "treatment which evidences per se a disregard for "health, or calculated to permanently impair health
"of lunatic-dolour convicts, we are ready to lay "before them statements we have made and which "contain an account of the treatment we have received "in British convict prisons, provided such conditions
"are guaranteed to us as we will secure a truthful know"ledge of the facts to the public and justice, alike to "our jailers and ourselves." This was a part of the "documents I intended to forward to you under seal,
"and I did not give it to the prison authorities as I "could not do so under seal.

3529. (Mr. Broadrick.) Have any of the papers that "you now hold in your hands passed out of your hands
"into the hands of the prison authorities?—Yes, all "these; for instance this is a copy of a note which I "addressed to the governor on the 22nd June.

3530. But the governor has never seen, I presume,
"the actual copy that you now hold in your hand?—No;
"he has seen the original.

3531. (Chairman.) It was addressed to him?—
"Yes, it was addressed to him, my lord.

3532. (Mr. Broadrick.) But as I understand, the "papers that you are actually holding in your hand now,
"have been in your own custody, and no one has seen
"them?—Oh, they have been always in my custody.

3533. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you been allowed to "keep private what you wanted to keep private?—Yes,
"I have.

3534. (Dr. Greenhow.) We want to know if you "have had an opportunity of preparing this statement
"which you meant to submit to us?—Well, I cannot "say that I have had an opportunity as fully as I "would wish.

3535. (Chairman.) In what way?—Because I "should have known from you if you intended to pub"lish our statements in extenso or not, with your report
"as an appendix, or whether you intended to admit the "press.

3536. I thought it was mentioned in the notice that "publicity would be given to the evidence?—No, my "lord; the only notice was this notice which was read to us the morning we were separated. We were separately placed in B ward with a cell or two between each of us, and we were not allowed to see each other while we were in the ward in any way, in going to exercise or returning, or at the closet, or in any way. In fact, I considered that the punishment to which I am put was an impudent that if allowed to remain with my fellow-race that I would consider a tale. I consider it was very unfair.

3337. As I understand the statement that you have now made, it relates to two classes of subjects: one being points which apply to all prisoners within convict prisons with regard to which you allege various evils and grievances. Now are you prepared with any evidence on those points?—On those points.

3338. Yes?—Well I think evidence will be prepared, and some of my statement will bear on some of those points.

3339. When I say evidence, I refer to oral evidence?—To oral evidence.

3340. Yes; because a written statement is not evidence, it is a document that stands to be proved. Do you wish to produce any proof of any of those charges, such, for instance, as heads manacled behind the back, and other charges of that character?—Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa; I will read a document which probably will explain what I meant with regard to this matter. This is a document addressed to you, my lord; a letter after I have had a communication from Captain Harris with regard to assistance, when I understood what "assistance" fully meant, at least what I thought it meant at the time:—

"Waking Invalid Convict Prison,
" Surrey, England,
" Infirmary Ward A.I.

" I wish to convey to the Commissioners appointed " to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony prisoners that I feel I was embarrassed by restrictions " placed upon me in not allowing me to communicate " freely under seal, and to forward to them my communications; also by the unsatisfactory way in which " communications from the Commissioners up to the " present have been sent to me by the governor or " officials." Your communications were never read to me; I was simply told verbally what was meant. If a communication was sent by you to me it was not read. I was simply told verbally what was meant. If a communication was sent by you it was not read. I was merely told verbally what was meant. I got information this morning that the Secretary of State cannot permit me to communicate with my fellow prisoners; therefore that precludes the possibility of my bringing several matters into my statements which I otherwise would do.

3341. Into the portion of your statement which has special reference to yourself?—Yes.

3342. What evidence do you wish to get with regard to that?—As I have said here, there are several of my fellow prisoners in Portland who were there when I was there, who saw what I suffered, as I saw they suffered.

3343. If you make any distinct allegations, when we are at Portland we will examine them on the subject?—But I cannot be there then, my lord. You see that I was misled by the Commissioners, because I can again tell that I can consult with my friends, and here is a statement which excludes any political prisoners.

3344. Yes; we have the decision of the Secretary of State on that point?—Then, my lord, if you cannot allow me to examine witnesses, it is useless, because if my friends outside cannot know what I say it is no privilege to me whatever.

3345. We can allow you to examine any witnesses you please, and amongst them, prisoners; but the Secretary of State, with whom the decision rests, has decided that you cannot examine prisoners who are confined in other prisons, in your presence. We will take a note of your statement, and when we go to the prisons in which such prisoners are as you may choose to refer to, we shall examine them on the point?—I also wish to know, is there any communication from Mr. Butt? I have also this morning a communication from my sister, to say that a friend from Dublin would call on me in reference to the Commission. Therefore, under those circumstances I am not prepared to go on, because if Mr. Butt is to assist me I wish to wait.

3346. I had better explain to you at once what has been done. We have decided, and shall not alter that decision, that we shall not admit any counsel or friend into the prison to be present in the room while the prisoner is making his statement to us, but that full facilities will be given to the friends of a prisoner, under such regulations as the Government may think necessary, whether those friends be legal or not, to assist him in preparing his statement?—But, my lord, the great question on which much of the evidence will depend is this: you ask me, for instance, if I can prove certain statements which I make in the documents that I have already read for you, with regard to what I consider incidental to the condition of persons undergoing penal servitude. The Secretary of State deprives the Commission of much of its value by not allowing me to examine those prisoners that saw my treatment. Will he allow me to examine the prisoners in this prison?

3347. Yes?—Then I cannot see, my lord, the legality of the objection of allowing me to examine the prisoners with whom I was associated a number of months, and who saw the treatment I received as well as I saw the treatment they received. I think it is most unfair to deprive me of that privilege, my lord.

3348. (Dr. Greenhalgh.) If you make any allegations with regard to your treatment which those prisoners can verify, we shall take down the allegations, and shall take care to examine any of those prisoners that you refer to, on all the points which you state.

3349. (Chairman.) We cannot go further than that?—But don't you see, sir, that my objection to the Secretary of State's decision is this, that it is quite unfair to say—it is a plausible thing for the public, to say to them, "we will give every facility to the prisoners to prove their cases," and at the same time I am deprived of the privilege of writing to my friends with regard to those statements. I cannot write a single line, even to my sister; so that I consider any privilege given to me is a mere cover to the matter.

3350. (Dr. Lyons.) You can see your sister?—Oh, yes, Dr. Lyons; but see the expense of bringing her here for a few minutes. The governor read a document to me, saying that the Commission was coming, and he comes and he says, "Do you want any assistance?" I did not know what assistance may mean; whether it was to copy this statement.

3351. (Chairman.) We have explained to you that if you wish to see anyone before making your statement you can do so; that is, under such regulations as the Government may allow. We cannot go beyond that. Are we to understand that you are not now prepared to go further into any statement respecting your own case until you have seen the documents that you have referred to?—The documents referred to, my lord; and I understand you will let me have in writing the questions on which the Commissioners are prepared, with regard to the publication of the evidence that may be offered. I have got no document relating to the evidence being published.

3352. (Dr. Lyons.) What do you want to know about that point?—I want to know, Dr. Lyons, will the statements I may make there be published as evidence in that document; that is my statement.

3353. (Chairman.) We are not prepared to say more than that we will publish what is material to your case, giving you full opportunity to prove your case?—That was what Messrs. Pollock and Knox said, that they were to give what was material, which was not done. If you publish only what you consider relevant and not the whole evidence as I have stated, it will not be satisfactory.

3354. (Dr. Greenhalgh.) The evidence will be published if it bears on your treatment or on that of any of the prisoners.—Then I won't hand in any statement until I see Mr. Butt.

3555. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you understand the conditions under which you can see your friends?—I do not. Probably it would be better to let me have it in writing.

3556. (Chairman.) That shall be supplied to you?—And if you will let me have a copy of the regulations under which the friends of the prisoners will be allowed to see them.

3557. Oh, that we have not any power over; it rests with the Secretary of State?—Which, my lord?

3558. The regulation of the mode in which persons who may wish to come for the purpose of seeing you will have access to you, as to the house and so on?—What is the restriction, my lord; supposing Mr. Butt comes here, will I have to see him in the presence of the governor or any of the officers?

3559. (Dr. Lyons.) No, certainly not; you shall see him by himself?—When will you be prepared to let me have an answer with regard to those documents, my lord?

3560. (Chairman.) We will make inquiry whether they can be procured, and all such parts as are material to your allegations shall be supplied to you?—The medical certificate sent with my statement is material to me. For instance, as I detailed in this memorial when I was some 10 weeks subsisting on 20 ounces of solid food daily, and that of not a very good description, the doctor allowed me to go on, and would allow me, I may suspect, as long again. He inquired, of course, to be able to state that he had not neglected the matter. I wish to see what the certificate of the doctor was that accompanied that memorial. I consider that of vital importance to me.

3561. We will do our best to obtain for you all that may seem to us material?—But, my lord, if you would allow me to have those documents, and afterwards if you consider that the use I make of them is not relevant, of course you can controvert that, and I will submit to your decision on the matter. They would be of very great use and importance to me. I am now nearly five years confined in convict prisons; I have suffered severely in that time, and have been very badly treated as I am prepared to prove to you. There is another question that I wish to ask your lordship before I go. Supposing, my lord, that our statements are laid before you, I object to have my statement placed in the hands of the authorities or prison officials, or abstracts of it in order that they might reply to them, unless we be also furnished with copies of their statements and be allowed to prove those charges that they may controvert or deny in writing or verbally.

3562. The Commission must reserve to themselves the opportunity of recalling you if you make any charge against a warder. If the Commissioners are not satisfied they may perhaps recall you?—Will you allow me to ask questions of the doctor?

3563. (Dr. Lyons.) We will receive all statements or such as you may choose to make?—Just so. Will you allow me to ask the doctor questions?

3564. We will ask such questions ourselves arising out of what you say as may be necessary to elicit truth as regards any statement whatever that you may make, and those inquiries will be as fully made, if not more fully than you could possibly make them?—Then will you submit to others any statement that I may make in order that they may refute it?

3565. (Chairman.) No; we are ready to have any complaint that you may make. The prison officers will have an opportunity of answering these, and you will have an opportunity of supporting them by evidence?—You will, then, furnish me with such portions of my evidence as they controvert or deny, my lord.

3566. Upon making your statement you will of course be at liberty to support it by such evidence as you can adduce?—But if I were in a court of justice I would know what the opposite party said. Here, if you call me up I cannot be so well prepared. Others have books and dates and entries, and every facility for preparing their cases, but I have no such facility. They can come up and state certain matters; I might call them certain occasions.

3567. I think that you might leave to the Commission the duty and responsibility of conducting the investigation fairly, which it is our desire to do. Do I understand you that you wish to withhold making any further statement until you have been supplied with the documents to which you refer?—Yes, my lord; the conditions on which the Commission is going to act with regard to the publication of the evidence.

3568. That you shall have?—Very well, my lord. I did not yet give you the names of the persons that I require to substantiate my case.

3569. We will take them down?—Now, I respectfully submit, my lord, that if "assistance" means the assistance of my fellow-prisoners who can aid me in preparing my statement before I place it in the hands of the Commissioners, then I require the assistance of John O'Leary and Thomas Clark Leahy now in penal servitude in the convict prison of Portland, and of Jeremiah O'Donovan (Boan) and Charles Underwood O'Connell, also in penal servitude in Chatham convict prison.

3570. Those persons are all prisoners in other prisons?—Yes, now in the convict prisons of Portland and Chatham, undergoing penal servitude.

3571. I have already explained to you that this will not be granted?—If I call other prisoners, my lord, who will pay their expenses?

3572. I tell you that you cannot call them from other jails?—Supposing I call upon released prisoners who are in Ireland at present, who will pay their expenses of coming? You see, my lord, it is useless to give the prisoners permission to call released prisoners who are in Ireland, in Cork or Dublin, for instance without paying their expenses.

3573. (Dr. Lyons.) At all events let me know who the persons are that you want to give evidence on any point that you think important?—Charles Joseph Kickham.

3574. (Chairman.) Where is he?—At Mellinsahone, in the county Tipperary. There are others whose addresses I cannot give you; but my sister, Miss Mulcahy, of 3, Merrion Terrace, Merrion, I think, will be able to find them. James O'Connor, Martin Hanley Carry, and Patrick Barry.

3575. (Dr. Lyons.) You refer us for their addresses to your sister?—Yes; Miss Mulcahy, 3, Merrion Terrace, Merrion, Dublin.

3576. (Dr. Greenhow.) Do you call those released prisoners with a view of their giving evidence with regard to your prison treatment?—With regard to my prison treatment and the general treatment of prisoners when I was a prisoner with them.

3577. (Chairman.) They can give important evidence bearing on your prison treatment?—Yes; we were all treated in the same party. They were near me and saw me explain as you now see me; they were around me, and they saw what was done to me, more or less, when I was a prisoner and had hemorrhage from the lungs in Portland, and that I consider a very important matter for me to establish.

3578. (Dr. Greenhow.) We are exceedingly anxious, as you may see, to arrive at the truth, and are willing to receive from you any statement you may wish to make, and also that you should mention any witnesses who may be able to give evidence confirmatory of that statement who may be in other prisons. You have been told that we will take particular care that the evidence of those witnesses shall be carefully taken on the points you specify. We are also willing to receive the evidence, as Lord Devon has told you, of released prisoners if they choose to come, but we cannot bring them unless they choose to come themselves?—Then, in that case I cannot produce them. This you must record for me, I humbly submit; that I have stated that these are material witnesses for my case; that I am a convict and cannot procure them, and that I have no means of bringing them.

3379. (Mr. De Vere.) We have the power of receiving your application for the evidence of those persons, and we have the power of communicating that wish in some way to them?—But I would not wish that wish to be conveyed to them, because I know they would go to expense that probably some of them may not be able to bear, and I do not want to embarrass my friends in that way.

3380. (Chairman.) Do you not wish that they should be informed you want them?—Not at my expense. As this is a Government inquiry, and as I think them material witnesses for the support of my statement, I respectfully submit that the Government should bear the expense of bringing those witnesses.

3381. To what charges would you want O'Connor, for instance, to speak?—On the treatment which I consider capricious on the part of the governors of Portland, coining where we were working and telling the jailer in charge of us to "report three or four of these men to-morrow," without any specific reason. These prisoners were on that occasion punished with seven days' bread and water and penal cells.

3382. How does that affect you?—It is part of the treatment that prisoners with whom I was received. On that occasion I was asked by the officer in charge "What am I to do; the governor has given me orders to report four or five of you for talking?" Well, said "I," "I am blameable for that much as anybody else; you should report me as well as the rest." The names I understood were sent in and the governor objected, and he brought up the names of some other prisoners, and the governor punished them. That I consider important, because whatever was done to any one of us when we were together in prison, I am in the same place and subject to the same treatment, whatever it may be. And I understand, Lord Devon, clearly, that you are prepared to go into the matters that are incidental to prison life. I had probably better read the paragraph for your lordship. "But if the Commissioners are empowered to inquire into the treatment which evidences per se a disregard of the conditions necessary for health or calculated to permanently impair the health of the treason-felony convicts, we are ready to lay before them statements of the treatment we have received in British convict prisons, provided there is a guarantee that the Commissioners will secure a truthful knowledge of the facts to the public, and justice alike to our jailers and ourselves."

3383. What we are prepared to do is this; if you or any of the treason-felony prisoners are treated in the same manner as the other convicts in the prison, we are prepared to ascertain whether there is anything in that treatment so common to you and them which either proves injurious to your health or is unnecessarily severe or harsh. We are also prepared to inquire whether, if you are not treated in the same way as the other prisoners, there is anything in the exceptional treatment which is injurious to you?—But what is the ultimate object of this Commission, Lord Devon?

3384. Well, I can not here to answer questions; but I have told you what the object of the Commission was?—If we establish these facts, if we prove these allegations, and if ascertaining those things is the object of the Commission bona fide, although it is a private inquiry, those things will come into the possession of the authorities and we will be then subject to punishment doubly severe, which caused other Pollock and Knox's report.

3385. (Dr. Lyons.) Are you prepared to state that as a fact?—Yes, Dr. Lyons; after the report of Pollock and Knox our punishment was made doubly severe. In an invalid convict prison I was an invalid suffering in Portland. I will lay before you some statements on the labour I had to go through and other matters on that point.

3386. (Chairman.) The Commissioners will take special care that no prisoner shall suffer in any manner by reason of his giving evidence before the Commission?—Lord Devon is not aware of the improbability that prisoners will suffer nothing for giving evidence. Supposing you left this to-morrow, what guarantee have I that I would not be sent out of hospital? When Mr. George Henry Moore moved on the 25th June for an inquiry into our treatment, we were kept in hospital five or six months. I was received there in January and kept to July, and I would not have been kept there probably a month, but that there were some other reasons. In the meantime there was an amendment, and this question was pending as to whether there would be an inquiry. We were kept all this time by the doctor and books allowed. In April I suffered much and could not use much food; but Dr. Campbell as soon as he got an order, discharged me and every treason-felony prisoner.

3387. Do you tell us that your detention in hospital was consequent upon Messrs. Pollock and Knox's inquiry?—No, but I say that the bad treatment we afterwards received was owing to it, and that the comparatively good treatment that we received in 1869 was due to the inquiry being about to be granted; and at the same time Mr. Moore, as I afterwards learned from my friend when he visited me, had a motion before the House of Commons for an inquiry into our treatment. The very moment that that motion was defeated—it was to come on on the 2nd of July I think—Mr. Fagan came down here, and said we would be no well in prison, and every man of us was immediately discharged from the hospital on the 5th of July, and we were then taken, and altogether different treatment pursued towards us.

3388. (Mr. Brodick.) Is that in your written statement?—That is in my written statement.

3389. (Chairman.) Your statements will be fully published so far as is connected with your own treatment or with the treatment of any of the treason-felony prisoners; but if you indulge in any political remarks we shall reserve to ourselves the discretion of publishing such parts or not. But anything in the statement which relates to your treatment or to the treatment of those suffering in the same way as you, will be published?—Very good, my lord; then I shall have no objection to that course.

3390. We will take care that so much of those documents you ask for as is material to your case shall be given to you, and we will fix a day at which the examination shall be resumed?—I will reserve the statement I have at present until I see Mr. Butt. In the meantime will you tell me, my lord, whether I can communicate with my friends outside on those matters; for instance, those parties that I have named as important witnesses. I cannot communicate with them. If I write a letter to them it will be sent to the directors and the Secretary of State.

3391. If it is simply a communication to any of those persons that you wish to have as witnesses and asking their attendance, we will take care to have it sent?—Then, my lord, I will consider with regard to some of them. I know that some of them could not come at their own expense.

3392. You will understand that we have no power to pay the expenses of such witnesses as you may choose to call.—If Mr. Butt comes he is not retained by the Commission?

3393. No; if he comes it is as a friend of the prisoner?—May I ask your lordship if you have been at Portland?

3394. We have?—Then you have taken the evidence at Portland already.

3395. We are probably going there again?—If I have my friend here, will he be allowed any opportunity of seeing the parties there that I consider necessary?

3396. The facilities that I have explained to you will apply to all the prisoners?—I understood that the Secretary of State will not allow me to see the prisoners in other prisons, but will he allow my friend to see them?

3397. If he goes there as a friend of a prisoner whom he wishes to see, he will be admitted?—But will he be admitted to anyone, whether it may be to prepare a statement or not?

J. D.
Stokely.
29 June 1870.

3398. If he goes as a friend of a prisoner to Portland he will be admitted to see him?—But must the application come from the prisoner in Portland?

3399. Yes?—But you say, my lord, I can communicate with the prisoners in Portland.

3600. But you will have opportunities of communicating with parties outside?—Yes, but if I communicate with friends and send for them—your lordship is not at all conversant with the enactments and restrictions placed in the way of convicts with regard to communication,—if I were to communicate now with my friends outside and said I wished John O'Leary in Portland to do so and so, and that they were to communicate to John O'Leary that he was to communicate with a certain party, the governor would not pass it on.

3601. We will take care that anything you consider necessary for establishing the truth shall take place?—But, my lord, may I have the communication headed to you?

3602. No; the communication must be forwarded in the usual way. We will communicate with the governor, and see that there must be full opportunity for communication afforded.

3603. (Dr. Lyons.) You see, that one adviser or friend, legal or otherwise, may see you and another prisoner also?—But, Dr. Lyons, I may remark that any observations I am making here are entirely suggested by the course which has been pursued by the governor of the prison. You will understand that the governor told me "You are at liberty to require assistance," without explaining what assistance that was; he tells me something vague.

3604. But you now know what it is?—I now understand.

3605. And that the same legal adviser may see you as well as other prisoners?—I understand that now,

The prisoner withdrew.

Captain Harris recalled.

3610. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, we have examined Thomas Bourke and Denis Dowling Mulcahy. We propose now to proceed to examine Richard Burke. We understand that he is an invalid. Is he in a position in which he can be properly brought down here, and in which if he were here we may expect to carry out his examination satisfactorily?—At the present moment I think he is quite incapable of moving from his bed, and if he does appear before the Commission I think he is quite incapable of giving them a clear account of his wishes; in fact of what is being done at all. He is quite incapable.

3611. Is he in a room by himself?—No, he is not.

3612. Is he allowed to be in a room by himself?—No; he is lodged with two others.

3613. The Commission are of opinion that we ought to see him. We can see him, I presume, better there than here?—He could not get up; I know that. The doctor told me so.

3614. Could he be conveyed down?—He could not walk down.

3615. (Dr. Lyons.) Why do you state that he cannot give evidence here?—Because to all the questions that I have addressed to him since the Commission has been ordered he has not given coherent answers.

3616. Do you mean to say that he is out of his mind?—I mean to say that his mind is affected. You cannot make a favourable impression on him.

3617. In what way is he affected?—He appears to be listless; he knows what you mean by words, but has no coherent ideas.

3618. Why do you think he is incapacitated from giving evidence?—Because his replies to all questions are rambling and incoherent. He does not appear to understand what is said to him.

3619. Then you think that he is of unsound mind?—I should say his mind is very much affected.

3620. Is it because you consider him of unsound mind, or that you consider him incapable of giving proper answers, that you say you think his mind is affected?—I think his mind is so affected now that he cannot give evidence.

3621. How long do you know it to have been so?—It has been so to a marked degree for the last four weeks.

3622. Are there any precautions observed in regard to him so that if he be really out of his mind he should not have an opportunity of damaging himself or others?—Not that I am aware of. He is not so much out of his mind as to require those precautions. But of course these are purely medical questions.

3623. No, I do not think they are; if they were, I would not ask them of you. Has he exhibited any disposition in regard to doing violence to himself or others?—No, he is perfectly quiet and tractable.

3624. But you say that he is incapable?—That is my opinion.

3625. I want your opinion, nothing more. Do you think that he is incapable of coming here and giving evidence before the Commission?—I do. Lately he has displayed more violence, more unruly temper, than he has within the last four months—within a month, I think.

3626. Could you mention any instances of the exhibition of such unruly temper?—One or two instances. He made use of gross language on one or two occasions, swearing, which he never did before.

3627. What else did he do?—He on one occasion attempted to push the officer from his dormitory.

3628. Did he attempt to strike anyone?—No.

3629. Has he taken his food?—No; I have seen a great deal of food in his dormitory from time to time.

3630. For how long have you observed that?—I have observed it since he returned from Millbank about a month ago.

3631. (Mr. Brodrick.) When you speak of four months, you are dating back to the time before he went to Millbank?—Before he went to Millbank.

3632. (Dr. Greenhow.) Did you consider him to be as much affected in mind before going to Millbank as he is now?—I think he is more affected now than he ever was. He seems to be getting worse.

3633. (Dr. Lyons.) Was he ever in Broadmoor criminal lunatic asylum?—Not to my knowledge.

3634. Can you state, Captain Harris, whether Richard Barker was ever an inmate in Broadmoor?

The witness retired.

RICHARD BARKER examined in bed in the prison infirmary.

3635. (Chairman.) Can you tell me what your name is?—(No answer.)

3637. Do you know your name?—Of course I know my name.

3638. Well, tell me what it is?—No, I won't.

3639. These gentlemen here are come to inquire whether you are well treated or not?—(No answer.)

3640. We are come to inquire into how you are treated?—(No answer.)

3641. These are gentlemen forming a Commission sent by the Government to see whether you are well treated, and whether others with yourself are well treated. We want to know whether you have anything to say to us?—Who are you?

3642. Because if you have anything to say to us, we will inquire into it?—(No answer.)

3648. I will tell you who we are. I will give you the names of the Commissioners. That is Dr. Lyons; this gentleman is Dr. Greenhow; that is Mr. De Vere; that is Mr. Brodick; and I am Lord Devon, and we all come down here, sent by the Government, to see how you and the other treason-felony prisoners here are getting on. I want to know whether you have anything to say to us?—(No answer.)

3644. Have you anything to say?—I'll see. (Rolls the clothes about himself and turns to the wall.) By-and-by; by-and-by.

3645. Do you want to see anybody in order to assist you to make a statement?—I have no friends; no friends; no friends. (Turning round suddenly.) You would roast me; you would roast me alive, you would.

3646. No, we would not roast you alive. We merely want to know whether you are well treated here?—(No answer, but turns away.)

3647. Don't you feel inclined to talk to us?—Please let me alone.

3648. Do you wish that we should go away?—Oh yes.

3649. (Dr. Greenhow.) Are you satisfied with the way you are treated here?—(No answer.)

3650. Answer my question?—Go away from me; go away from me.

3651. Can you not answer a civil question?—Let me alone, I tell you. I won't stand it any more from any of you (sitting up). I don't interfere with any of you. You, let me alone; stand off from me, or by God I'll make you. (Lies down.)

3652. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you understand what Lord Devon said, that we are a Commission come here to inquire about you?—(No answer.)

3653. Won't you answer?—Let me alone, I tell you; I know you are all my enemies, every one of you. You would roast me; you would roast me alive.

3654. No, we would not?—You can't cheat me; you can't cheat me.

3655. Have you any complaints to make of your food?—Complaints? (derisively.)

3656. Is this a comfortable bed you lie on?—(No answer.)

3657. Are you able to sleep well at night on it?—Sleep? I sleep first-rate.

3658. Do you rest pretty well?—Oh yes.

3659. How is your appetite?—You are no friends; no friends.

lunatic asylum?—I cannot say positively of course, cannot speak from the time of his conviction. The medical officers, no doubt, could give you every information on that point.

3635. So far as you know, has Richard Barker ever been an inmate in Broadmoor asylum?—So far as I know I can say he has never been in Broadmoor asylum. This morning I was at his bedside with the secretary. He was then, as I have seen him for days past, rolled up in his blankets in a bed with his head under the clothes.

The witness retired.

RICHARD BARKER examined in bed in the prison infirmary.

3660. Have you any friends of your own outside that you would like to communicate with?—No friends. Where is Tom?

3661. Who is Tom?—You took him away from me; Tom.

3662. Have you any friends that you would wish to see?—I want Tom.

3663. Who else besides Tom?—No, Tom; I want to see him.

3664. Would you like to see your sister?—I want to know why am I in hospital. I want to know why I am here.

3665. Where are you?—Why I am here in this hospital.

3666. What hospital is this?—This hospital here; this prison hospital. Why am I here I want to know.

3667. What prison is this?—Do you suppose I am a damned fool or no, that I don't know those things? I know all things most accurately. I have a most thorough, accurate knowledge of everything.

3668. Are you properly treated here?—What have I to do with any of these men?

3669. Have you any complaints to make?—I want to see Tom. I am entitled to that by the rules. I want Tom.

3670. Have you any complaints to make of your food or medicine?—I won't take their medicine from them; no damned mixture either. Do you see that? (Pointing to a speck on one of his fingers.) I won't take as much medicine as that; not if I want to see thousands of beds, not so much as that (emphatically.)

3671. (Dr. Greenhow.) It has been stated by friends of yours and others outside, that you have been badly treated here. We want to know is that the case, for if it be so we would try to get it put right. Have you anything to complain of with respect to your food or your treatment generally?—Please let me alone.

3672. We really want to learn the truth. Have you any complaints to make?—I want Tom; I do.

3673. Tell us who is Tom and where he is to be found?—Oh, my God!

3674. Who is Tom? Is he your brother or your friend, or who is he?—Oh, damn it! Tom, Tom; you know Tom.

3675. Are you in good health now?—Oh, you let me alone; first-rate. You see me here; I am strong, strong, every way strong; nothing the matter with me in any particular; nothing the matter with me in any way. I can stand anything.

3676. And do you eat?—Eat? I don't want to eat; eat be damned. I want my friends; I want my friends. I want Tom again.

3677. Who are your friends that you want?—I want Tom.

3678. Who is Tom?—He is my friend.

3679. But where is he to be found?—My dear sir, I know the rules; I know the rules as well as any man.

3680. Where is Tom to be found; tell us that. We cannot send for Tom without knowing his name and address. Where is he?—I know where he is.

3681. Will you tell us where he is?—They took him away; he is gone somewhere.

3682. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you get your dinner, too,

Capt. Harris.

29 June 1870.

R. Barker.

and breakfast?—Don't ask me such damned nonsense. You know very well I know all these things.

3683. I want to know if you are satisfied with the dinner you get to eat?—(No answer.)

3684. Have you any complaint to make of the food?—I don't want to take anything from any of them: not a bit.

3685. (Mr. Brodick.) Do they not see you well then?—Who?

3686. You say you don't like to take anything from them?—I would take nothing from anybody.

3687. I was afraid from what you said that you were not well used?—I want my friend. If you are my friends you will give me my friend. I want my friend directly.

3688. (Dr. Lyons.) Is this milk yours (showing him a vessel of milk)? Why didn't you drink that to-day?—What is that? (pointing to the snow on it)

3689. That is only from the boiling of it?—You can't cheat me.

3690. Was this can of milk sent to you this morning?—[The prisoner turned away and gave no answer. As the Commissioners were leaving the room he looked towards the door and said, "Upon my soul I don't want them."]]

J. Campbell,
M.D.

JOHN CAMPBELL, M.D., examined.

3691. (Chairman.) You see the medical officer of this prison I believe?—Yes, my lord.

3692. How long have you been medical officer here?—Since the beginning of this establishment.

3693. How many years is that?—Since March 1860.

3694. Where were you before that?—I was formerly at Dartmoor.

3695. How many years?—I joined the invalid prison at Dartmoor in 1852, August 1852, and I have been ever since in the service.

3696. Postponing any more general evidence that we may wish to receive from you, allow me to ask you in reference to the case of Richard Burke, one of the treason-felony convicts in this prison, how long he has been under your charge here?—Since the 10th December 1868.

3697. What has been his medical state during that time?—He has been very strange in his manner and very confused.

3698. Has he been in hospital all that time?—All the time; he went to Millbank some time ago, the time that he was discharged to Millbank.

3699. When was that?—That was March 28th.

3700. Was his removal for the purpose of placing him under any particular medical observation?—He was removed by the directors' order.

3701. On what ground was he removed, do you know?—I do not know, but I rather think it was for observation.

3702. Was he brought back here?—He was.

3703. When he returned to this prison was he in the same state as when he left it?—He appeared to be rather worse.

3704. And has he so continued?—He has so continued; he is more reduced in weight, but I understand that arose from his refusing to take his food.

3705. In Millbank?—In Millbank.

3706. (Dr. Lyons.) Do they specify any reduction in weight?—Sent back from Millbank; found him "more reduced in appearance since he left: he is "also pale, symptoms confused, incoherent, excitable," weight on leaving Millbank not given.

3707. (Chairman.) He is one of the persons into whose case we are charged to inquire, and from whom we are charged to receive any statement that he may wish to make. Is it your opinion that he is or is not competent to make a statement?—I incline to think he is not.

3708. You think he is not competent?—Yes. When I thought the case very doubtful, I recommended that the opinion of a physician that made insanity a special study should be taken; Dr. Meyer was sent over, and he came a second time.

3709. From Broadmoor?—From Broadmoor. He examined him very accurately, and returned a second time and again spent some time examining him, but the man would not at that time allow that he had ever seen Dr. Meyer before.

3710. Are you aware that Dr. Meyer has sent in a written report to the Secretary of State?—I have not seen the written report. I understand a report was sent in.

3711. Do you concur with that view?—I concur with that view.

3712. Does he vary from week to week, or is he always in the same state?—He is in much the same state now as he was at the time of his reception.

3713. Is he at times very violent?—He is at times very excitable.

3714. We have just seen him, and he talked to us about his friend Tom. Tom, I understand, is Thomas Bourke?—Thomas Bourke.

3715. So far, he seems to have a knowledge of having friends?—Yes, but some time past he has been in a more delusional state, not inclined to speak and he has refused his food. That is since he was in hospital. He has always been in hospital here.

3716. Does he desire not to be in hospital?—No; he sometimes asks why is he there.

3717. Those who were with him were treason-felony prisoners?—Yes, Mulcahy and Dillon: they are both located in the same small room with him.

3718. Has Tom been allowed to see him at any time?—They always met each other when they went out for exercise.

3719. Has this man been out for exercise lately?—He has not been out lately.

3720. Is it your opinion that he is of a sufficiently sound state of mind to render him fit to undergo examination, and to make him competent to answer questions rationally?—Well, I don't very much that you will get much information from him. I am unable to get him to answer a question. He always turns away from me and avoids me in every possible way.

3721. Is he violent?—He is inclined to be excited.

3722. Does he strike?—He has not done so here. On one occasion he threatened to assault a strange officer who was put in charge. I then requested the governor to place another officer in the ward.

3723. (Mr. Brodick.) Has he shown any special excitement during the last fortnight or ten days?—I think he has been more sullen, and not inclined to speak. When I visit him morning and evening he is in bed and turns away from me.

3724. Does he appear more sullen when he is in the room by himself than when he is sleeping in a room with others?—Well, I have not an opportunity of judging. He has been very sullen ever since he has been removed away from the others.

3725. (Dr. Greenham.) Can you tell us the dates on which Dr. Meyer saw him?—Yes; on the 3rd January of the present year, and again on the 10th January.

3726. Did Dr. Meyer make any notes of his case here which you have?—He examined him alone. He was in the room with the prisoner alone.

3727. You have no document drawn up by Dr. Meyer?—No.

3728. You said some time ago that the prisoner was incoherent; would you explain how he has been incoherent?—He is confused, and cannot give a connected answer.

3729. Does he give a quite unconnected answer. Does he give an answer irrelevant to the question asked?—Generally he does not answer the question at all, but puts me off with "I don't want to have anything to say to you."

3730. But he has never given you an answer which was directly irrelevant to the question?—No, perhaps not.

3731. Has he spoken in an incoherent manner?—He has spoken in a rambling sort of manner if I wished him to take a little medicine. I have done so on several occasions, but he always refuses and becomes very much excited.

3732. Does he assign any reason for refusing to take medicine?—He said it would poison him.

3733. Has he said that more than once?—I have not asked him to take medicine for some time. That was the cause I believe of the first excitement. He made some complaint of that kind, of some medicine having injured him.

3734. (Chairman.) Has this been his state from the time of his first coming under your charge?—He has varied very little since coming under my charge. He complained first of loss of memory.

3735. (Mr. Brodribb.) Has he ever expressed the conviction that he was being poisoned?—No, not that I know.

3736. (Dr. Lyons.) Dr. Campbell, what is your professional opinion as to the mental state of Richard Burke at present?—At the present time I think he is a man of weak mind; I think his mind is affected; but I should not say that it is a decided case of insanity. It seems to me rather a doubtful case.

3737. Would you apply any term to define what his condition is at present?—Well, I should say that the man is labouring under dementia.

3738. Upon what grounds do you form your opinion, and now state that he is labouring under dementia?—Well, from his general symptoms and manner, his confused manner, loss of memory, excitability, refusal to take food, and incoherence.

3739. How far has his refusal to take food gone at any time?—It lately has gone to a great extent. He has taken very little for some days past. He has begun to take his food again. This is the hospital cook showing the food returned by the prisoners. This is the "returned food book."

3740. (Chairman.) Will you state the entries in his case?—Yes, my lord.

3741. (Dr. Lyons.) I will ask you to favour us with a certified copy of the case sheet of Richard Burke, and a certified copy of all the entries of refusal of food by Richard Burke?—Yes, sir.

3742. May I ask you is his state getting worse?—I think he has been worse since he returned here from Millbank.

3743. Do you think his condition is a progressive one since his return from Millbank; that he is getting worse day by day, or week by week, or month by month?—I did not detect much change until he was pined from his companions the other day. He has been in a low state ever since. Before that he was not much changed.

3744. You said that on some occasions he has exhibited symptoms of violence?—Yes, he is inclined to be excitable.

3745. May I ask if any precautions are taken, or have been taken or contemplated in regard to him in case he should suddenly exhibit any symptoms of violence and do injury to himself or to others?—I took that precaution when he threatened to assault the officer. I went to the governor and requested him to place another officer in the ward, which was done.

3746. Is that officer still in charge of the ward?—I am not quite sure if he is there to-day.

3747. Would you kindly send in a statement of the length of time during which this officer was there?—Yes.

3748. Has this officer been specially in charge of him?—There are two officers in the ward; this officer was specially in charge of him.

3749. Will you put in a return of the length of time that the extra warder was in charge of him?—It was only during the time that he was away from the others. There is not an extra officer now.

3750. Are there any extra precautions taken with regard to him at this moment?—Not at this very moment. Malesky and Dillon are with him. Power is in the same room during the day, but he is locked in a cell in hospital corridor at night.

3751. (Mr. Brodribb.) Does Richard Burke converse freely with his companions in the ward?—No; to my knowledge he does not. He has been so told and wishes to hold no conversation; but formerly he used to go down to the exercising yard with the others.

3752. (Dr. Lyons.) If he exhibited symptoms of violence at night what means are there now at hand to control him?—There is an officer commanding the ward; and if that man or any other patient got violent, he would at once get assistance.

3753. It is stated by Mr. Liddell, in a letter of the 24th February 1870, that "Richard Burke is now an inmate of Broadmoor Insane Asylum." Can you state whether the same Richard Burke was ever, at any time, an inmate of Broadmoor Insane Asylum?—Not that I am aware of, sir.

3754. Do you believe that he was?—I have no reason to believe that he was ever there.

3755. Is it at all likely or possible that he could have been for any time, however short, in Broadmoor Insane Asylum, in the interval between his being on two occasions in this prison?—I should think not without coming to my knowledge. I understood that he went direct from this prison to Millbank and was sent back here from Millbank.

3756. It was here that Dr. Meyer saw him?—Yes.

3757. And he saw him here on two occasions?—On two occasions in this room.

3758. Is there any record in the books of this prison as to the result of the examination made by Dr. Meyer on either of those occasions?—I should think not, because it was a private examination, and Dr. Meyer asked me to leave the room when he made the examination. Dr. Hoffman, assistant surgeon, and myself were in for a short time, but Dr. Meyer thought it necessary to see him alone.

3759. Quite properly. Was it at your suggestion that Dr. Meyer was asked to visit Richard Burke?—Yes.

3760. Why did you think it necessary to have him seen by Dr. Meyer, who I believe is specially conversant with mental disease?—It appeared to me rather a peculiar case; and I therefore thought it desirable to recommend that a physician who had made insanity a special study should be called in to give an opinion on the case.

3761. To whom did you make the application?—To the directors.

3762. Did you name Dr. Meyer, or request that he should examine?—I did not suggest any one.

3763. By whom was Dr. Meyer sent here?—I am not aware; I suppose by direction of the Secretary of State, but that is merely a supposition.

3764. Have you observed any illusions or delusions of any kind in Burke's mind temporarily appear?—No delusions. I have not been able to detect further than his great dislike to medicine. He has always a dislike to medicine seemingly.

3765. You stated in answer to Lord Devon that he was losing weight?—He had lost weight when he returned from Millbank.

3766. How is that shown?—I have got it here. When he came here first of all from Chatham, he increased very much, 12 pounds, and before coming here from Millbank he had refused his food for some time.

3767. Have you entries of his weight on his return from Millbank and at any recent date?—Yes, his weight on his return from Millbank was 161 pounds.

3768. On what date was it?—He returned from Millbank on the 21st May.

3769. Then on the 21st May his weight was 11 stone 7 lbs.?—On the 21st May.

J. Campbell,

M.D.

22 June 1870.

J. Campbell,
M.D.
—
29 June 1873.

3771. Has he been recently weighed?—He has not been weighed since that time.

3772. Do you believe from observation that he has lost weight?—I think he has lost weight lately. He has been taking little food for some days.

3773. Do you think he has lost much weight?—I think he must have lost a good deal from his appearance.

3774. Can you suggest any way in which it can be positively ascertained, beyond any doubt that he never was at any time in Breconshire asylum?—I have no idea.

3775. Can a record be given of the days spent by him here and at Millbank, day by day, from any the 10th December, the time that he was admitted here, up to the present day?—Yes; the medical officer at Millbank will be able to give that information for the period of his stay there.

3776. Will you kindly furnish a record, day by day, from his reception here in December, until he was removed in March, and from his return to this day, and I will get from the medical officer at Millbank a return of his attendance there?—Yes, I think his caption sheet would give you the information.

3777. Where can we get that?—I can get it from the officer here.

3778. Get it, if you please. Can you put in the caption sheet?—The governor has got it in his possession.

3779. (Mr. De Vere.) What sort of food does he refuse, and what does he take?—He has been refusing almost everything for some days. His diet has been very liberal all along, consisting of low hospital diet, with chop and potatoes, porridge and milk, bacon and eggs, pudding, and half a pint of port. On the 27th finding him refusing his chop and potatoes, I ordered him chicken broth.

3780. (Chairman.) Did he take it?—He is taking a little of it, and some of the other things.

3781. (Mr. De Vere.) Does he reject the milk?—I think he takes a little milk.

3782. (Dr. Ligon.) Perhaps you would be kind enough to put in an extract from that book showing all the food he has refused?—Yes.

3783. (Mr. De Vere.) I asked you the question, because when we saw him just lately, he showed a particular repugnance to the milk, and pointing to it said, "I know what that is," or words to that effect. I ask you whether he has shown any special repugnance to any of his food?—No, sir; I have not observed it.

3784. Has he ever said that he believed it contained poison?—No, sir.

3785. Will you state, Dr. Campbell, for the Commission, how the symptoms of his insanity first presented themselves?—Shall I read the report; the remarks that I made.

3786. (Chairman.) What time was that?—At the time of his reception here.

3787. (Mr. De Vere.) I should like to ask you first, whether the symptoms had shown themselves in any degree, before the time referred to in your report?—Yes, he was sent here in this state.

3788. Can you state from anything in that document before you, whether the symptoms of his insanity had manifested themselves for some time before he came under your notice?—I had no opportunity of judging. He was sent here simply for debility, arising from abstinence from food; but they at the same time mentioned that he had been very peculiar, and refusing food for some time, and was a good deal reduced in consequence.

3789. Was his conversation incoherent at that time?—Yes, it was much the same as it has been all along.

3790. Then you cannot state what the symptoms were which first presented themselves when this insanity commenced?—No, sir.

3791. Do you know who the person is that he spoke to as of, calling him Tom?—Yes, that is Thomas Bourke. He seems very much attached to him, and always wishes to be with him. That was his great grievance when he was parted from him.

3792. When was he parted from him?—At the time you gave the order for the separation of those men. He was moved from that small room into one of the hospital corridors.

3793. They have not been together since then?—Not since.

3794. How is it that they did not return to their former condition of association when that separate confinement ceased?—Because one was in prison and the other in hospital. Thomas Bourke is in prison; the other is a patient in hospital, and has been in bed. He has been in bed ever since.

3795. Richard Bourke was in hospital, was he not, before the separation?—Oh yes, but Thomas Bourke was not.

3796. But before the period of separation, were they not associated together?—No, sir; Thomas Bourke was in the prison and Richard Bourke in the hospital.

3797. But he complains very much of being separated from his companion, Tom?—Yes, because they have always been allowed, although some have been in hospital and the others in prison, to exercise together down in the yard, and he might have seen his friend, Thomas Bourke, when they would go down.

3798. Can you inform us why they have not been restored to the same condition of association since the restriction has been removed?—There is no difference but this, that Richard Bourke is not able to go down stairs.

3799. When he and Tom were together did they appear to converse freely with one another?—I have seen them walking about together, but I am not aware of the nature of their conversation.

3800. Have any of the other prisoners ever complained to you of being disturbed by Richard Bourke?—They have, but not very often; they have told me sometimes that he has been restless during the night, but in general he appears to sleep well.

3801. Have you ever had any opportunity of seeing whether they take an interest in the same subject, or whether they converse on any matter of common interest between them?—No, sir; I have had no opportunity of judging.

3802. You said that you considered him as a man suffering from dementia?—Yes.

3803. Is this the proper place to keep him, assuming that he is labouring under dementia?—No; I think it would be advisable to move him.

3804. Have you ever recommended that he should be removed?—I have not recommended it; no, sir.

3805. Have you ever made a distinct report to the Home Office or to the Directors of Prisons, to state that he is suffering from dementia, confirmed dementia?—No, sir; because the case has always appeared to me a little doubtful, and I have never had a good opportunity of forming an opinion on the case. He is always mixed up with the treason-felony prisoners.

3806. I think, that in answer to Dr. Ligon, you stated very distinctly that he is now suffering from dementia?—Well, my opinion all along has been that his mind is affected, to a considerable extent; I formed that opinion shortly after he came here, and my opinion has not varied. But still at Millbank there seemed to be a different opinion. But that has not seemed me to vary; my opinion has been the same all along. If you allow me I will read a letter that I wrote on the subject.

3807. You can read the letter by-and-by, thank you. Has the progressive nature of his complaint confirmed the opinion you previously had formed of his mind being insane?—Before he left this for Millbank, he seemed very much improved, both in his bodily and mental state; but since he returned he has not been quite so well.

3808. Is it the case that since his return, and very recently he has shown symptoms of violence. I mean threatening language, cursing and violent expressions that he had never shown before?—No, not to any extent; the only instance was when he threatened to attack that officer.

3809. He is very anxious to be restored again to association with his old companions, I believe?—He is.

3810. Is it not the case that he wants to be restored to association with his old companions, particularly with Thomas Bourke?—Yes; I should think that very likely, because he alluded to Bourke several times when I visited him in the cell.

3811. And his being in hospital prevents his being associated with those companions?—Yes, as long as he is unable to go down and take exercise. But before leaving this he commonly went down and took exercise with the others.

3812. Is it not in consequence of his mental rather than his bodily state that you keep him in hospital?—I keep him in hospital for observation, both mental and bodily, because he is a good deal weaker.

3813. Is his bodily condition such as requires his being kept in hospital?—It is.

3814. It is?—It is.

3815. Was that the reason that he was all along kept in hospital?—No, the reason that he was kept was his mental condition and bodily.

3816. Must he not have been aware that the proper way to be restored to the association of his friends would be to get out of hospital as quickly as he could?—Yes.

3817. Does it not therefore strike you that if he is shamming insanity, which is the only alternative if he is not insane, he must be doing the thing that keeps him in a position that he very much dislikes, that is being in hospital separated from his associates?—Yes; that might be. He has asked me to go down before this inquiry commenced; he asked me to discharge him from hospital with the like view, to restore him to his friend Tom Bourke.

3818. Is he aware that it is in consequence of his mental condition that he is kept in hospital?—I am not aware; I cannot say.

3819. (Mrs. Broadrick.) Was it since this Commission of inquiry was announced to come that he made that request?—Oh, before it.

3820. (Dr. Greenwood.) I want to go back to the question of weight. By whom are the prisoners weighed?—By the principal infirmary warder.

3821. Is there any record kept of their weights?—Yes.

3822. Where does the record appear?—In this book.

3823. What do you call that book?—It is called the nominal roll.

3824. Does this contain the weights of the different prisoners at different times?—Yes.

3825. And of the same prisoner at different times?—Of the same prisoner at different times.

3826. Does this contain the weights of Richard Bourke at the several prisons in which he has been placed?—I have got that here, sir.

3827. May I ask you what was his weight when he was in Newgate prison?—I have not got that.

3828. What is the first weight that you have?—The first weight is from Chatham prison; he then weighed 154 pounds.

3829. That was on his discharge from Chatham?—On his discharge from Chatham.

3830. What was his weight on admission to Chatham?—172½ pounds.

3831. What was the weight on admission into Millbank previously to that, before going to Chatham?—Millbank 171 pounds.

3832. Millbank 171, on removal to Chatham 172½, and on discharge from Chatham 154 pounds; is that so?—Yes, according to medical history.

3833. When he was admitted at Woking from Chatham what was his weight?—169 pounds.

3834. What was his weight on discharge from Woking to Millbank again?—166 pounds.

3835. And the weight on admission to Millbank?—165 pounds.

3836. And the weight on return from Millbank to Woking?—161 pounds.

3837. Do you recollect what was his mental state in December 1869, when he came here?—I have got down here the remarks I made at the time.

3838. Read them out if you please?—“Richard Bourke arrived from Chatham 10th; medical report states he has been keeping flesh for some time and that there was a decrease of 18 pounds on the 8th instant; that he also has delusions about his medicines containing corrosive sublimate and that poison has been introduced into his food; that his behaviour was otherwise eccentric (real or assumed); had refused his food for some time and was considered to be suffering from debility the result of abstinence, there being no sign of organic disease. At the time of his reception here this man was tolerably robust in appearance and well made; he seemed absent and strange in manner, had considerable hesitation in expressing himself when questioned about his delusion, and said his memory has been affected for some time; complained of an unpleasant sensation in the neck and back part of the head, pupils acting well; pulse of good strength; tongue a little furred. With the exception of a peculiar hesitation and impairment of memory, and the idea that medicines would kill him, he appears free from delusions, and his mental faculties unaffected. Since reception he has taken all his food and regular out-door exercise, and from that time he went on improving in health and strength and increased in weight.

3839. How long did that improvement go on?—“On the 17th ordered scidlitz powder this morning, but he only took a small portion of it; seems little changed. His weight on his discharge from Chatham on the 16th instant is stated as 154 pounds, but on being weighed the following day it is 159, and on the 17th December it is 167.”

3840. Do you think he has become worse since December last?—I think he is worse now.

3841. And from what period do you date the deterioration?—I think from his reception from Millbank he has been worse than before.

3842. You mean that in your judgment he came back from Millbank worse than he went there?—I think so.

3843. When prisoners return food a record is kept of the returned food?—Yes.

3844. Does the book in which that record is kept come under your observation?—Oh yes, it is kept for my information.

3845. How do you set when you see that a prisoner has refused his food?—I give him a charge of diet if necessary.

3846. Do you examine into the state of his health?—Yes, at my regular visits I do, and this is pointed out to me. If the officer at my visit mentions that a patient is returning his food, I then look at the book to see what he has been returning and change his diet according to circumstances.

3847. But at all events the fact of a man's returning his food is a reason for your examining into the state of his health, is it not?—Do you mean, sir, in an ordinary case?

3848. I mean that when you hear that a particular prisoner has been returning his food, you find it your duty to inquire into his state of health?—Oh yes, sir; but I am alluding at present to patients in the hospital. This is the hospital book belonging to the ward that the man Richard Bourke is located in. I have got a book similar to this in each of the hospital wards.

3849. If prisoners who are not in hospital but in prison return their food, is there a record kept of it?—Yes, and it is reported to me.

3850. Do you, in consequence of that report, examine into their state of health?—Yes.

3851. Has Richard Bourke assigned any reason for refusing his food?—No; I am not aware.

J. Campbell,
M.D.
29 June 1870.

3852. Has he stated that the food disagreed with him?—No, sir; I think not.

3853. Has he returned his food for breakfast or supper especially, or has it been food from all his meals?—It is latterly food from all his meals.

3854. But he has never complained to you of the food having disagreed with him?—No, sir; his appetite has been very good until lately; he has returned very little.

3855. You have seen no reason to suppose, I presume, that the prison fare disagreed with him?—No; the reverse. He has had a very liberal diet all along. I put him at the time of his reception, when he was very much reduced, on low hospital diet, with 2 eggs, chop, potatoes, pudding, and half a pint of porridge; but was added to that, extra bread and porridge; and when Dr. Meyer visited him he told the doctor that he had not sufficient, and on Dr. Meyer's recommendation I added a little beef tea to what he had already.

3856. Have you yourself observed that his memory is impaired?—I think it is. When Dr. Meyer returned the second time he would not allow that he had ever seen him before, and Dr. Meyer cross-questioned him, and he still adhered to it.

3857. But with regard to ordinary occurrences have you observed that he has forgotten things that took place some time ago?—No, I have not observed it.

3858. (Chairman.) May I take it to be your opinion, Dr. Campbell, that you think Richard Burke unable to give any rational answers to questions put to him?—I think so, my lord.

3859. (Dr. Lyons.) You spoke a while ago of your having written a letter in reference to Richard Burke; to whom did you write that letter?—Either to Mr. Fagan or the chairman.

3860. Will you be good enough to produce that letter?—Yes. It is dated 21st December and addressed to Captain De Cane:—

"SIR,
"I HAVE the honour to report that treason-felony convict 3841, Richard Burke, aged 36 years, was received from Chatham Prison on the 10th instant. The medical report states he has been losing flesh for some time and that there was a decrease of 18 pounds on the 8th instant; that he had delusions about his medicine containing corrosive sublimate and that poison had been introduced into his food, and that his behaviour was otherwise eccentric. The report also stated that he had refused his food for some time, and was considered to be suffering from debility, the result of abstinence, there being no sign of organic disease. At the time of reception here this man was tolerably robust and well made. He seemed absent and strange in manner, had considerable hesitation in expressing himself when questioned about his ailments, and said that his memory has been affected some time; complained of an unpleasant sensation in the neck and back part of the head; pupils act well; pulse of good strength; tongue a little foul. With the exception of a peculiar hesitancy and impairment of memory, and the idea that medicines would kill him, he appears free from delusions, and his mental faculties otherwise unaffected. Since reception he has taken regular outdoor exercise and the whole of his diet, which consists of hospital pudding diet with the addition of two eggs, chop and potatoes, porridge and milk, extra bread, a little butter, and half a pint of pector. When weighed on the 17th he had gained seven pounds, or at the rate of one pound per diem. I beg to add that though I think his health has undergone some improvement I am not prepared to state that his mental condition has improved during the short time he has been here."

3861. Will you be kind enough to put in a copy of that letter, and of any other letter also that there may be, bearing on the subject?—Yes; this is where I recommended that the opinion of another should be taken.

"Working Invalid Prison,

"San, December 28th, 1869
"In compliance with your request to be furnished with a further report on the case of treason-felony prisoner, No. 3841, Richard Burke, I beg to state that, since my last report of the 21st instant, he has been going on favourably as regards his bodily health, and that he continues to take all his food without any hesitation. His mental condition, however, remains unchanged, and, after close and careful observation, I can only arrive at the conclusion that his mind is considerably affected. He is generally quiet and tractable, says he is quite well and has nothing the matter with him; has still the same dull, confused look, and although he has not shown signs of delusions on any particular subject more than the refusal of medicine, as he says it would kill him, his ideas seem quite incoherent, and his memory much impaired. When visited by his sister yesterday there was no perceptible change in his behaviour. He appeared unable to hold a conversation, or even to express his wishes, and when the visit was over, his demeanour, as he left in charge of the officer, was that of an imbecile. As there appears to have been doubt respecting the genuineness of this man's symptoms, and the case being somewhat peculiar, I beg respectfully to suggest an examination by a physician who has made mental disorders his special study.

"I have the honour to be, sir,

"Your most obedient servant,

"JOHN CAMPBELL, M.D.

"W. Fagan, Esq., Director, &c."

3862. Would you be kind enough to put in copies of those two letters?—Yes.

3863. (Chairman.) It was in consequence of that Dr. Meyer saw him?—It was in consequence of that Dr. Meyer saw him.

The witness withdrew.

BRYAN DILLON, prisoner, examined.

3864. (Chairman.) Dillon, you may sit down. I should explain to you, as I have done to other treason-felony prisoners, that we are a Commission appointed by the Government to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony prisoners, and among others into yours. That gentleman is Mr. De Vere, that is Dr. Lyons, that is Mr. Brodick, that is Dr. Greenhow, and I am Lord Devere; and our business is to inquire into whether you have any grounds of complaint, and if so, to inquire into it, as regards either your diet, or the discipline observed, or the medical attendance, or the opportunities afforded to you for religious practices, or in short, if in any other way you have any complaint to make. What you may state will be taken down by a short-hand writer, and hereafter published; but you are making your statement quite privately and in the absence of any of the officials of the prison.

Whatever you may say will not in any way prejudice you in your future position or treatment. Have you any statements to make to us?—I will just shortly draw your attention to the contents of the first notice served on me. (Reads.) "Subjects upon which the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts will permit such prisoners to address them:—First, treatment, diet, discipline, or disregard of the conditions necessary for health; second, exceptional treatment, or subjection to any hardships beyond that incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of penal servitude." When I read this, my lord, it struck me at once that the portion of the second paragraph was framed so that I could not give any evidence at all if you must adhere to that, because I have taken down a note of certain things that are "incidental to the "condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of "penal servitude;" and if you were not to hear me on such subjects, I certainly should have no evidence to give at all. I have taken down a few of them here. I have been present at some—several of them, and I will just shortly read them for you.

3865. We can hear any evidence that you may have to give on the general treatment of prisoners, so far as you and others of your class have been or may be punished?—I may just remark that if that was allowed to stand, it would clear any inquiry of the prison officials. This clause of "subjection to any" hardship beyond that incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of penal servitude," would include such hardships as these have: "broken limbs, loss of the use of limbs, total loss of limbs, death by accident or design, 28 consecutive days' bread and water, and punishment cells, six months' penal class diet, in penal and punishment cells, and in addition, six months' leg irons and loaded with 24 lbs. weight of an iron chain, fastened to the legs and suspended from the loins, and so to be worn day and night, in summer and in winter, in the prison, or at labour." I have seen that frequently, men here in chains, some of whom are now in this prison. I draw attention to a man named Clarke, who suffered, I think, four months' punishment of this kind, and O'Reilly, another prisoner here.

3866. (Dr. Greenhow.) Were those treason-felony prisoners?—No, sir, they were not. These were some of the "conditions incidental to those suffering penal servitude."

3867. (Mr. Broadrick.) What is it that they suffered?—I think both had chest disease, very seriously; at least, Clarke had.

3868. What is it that they were subjected to?—Clarke got penal class diet and punishment.

3869. (Dr. Greenhow.) And Reilly?—And Reilly got the same, and both I think had chains, but I have seen Reilly myself with the chains. I understand that Clarke suffered only four months; that he was taken off by direction of Mr. Fegan.

3870. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you state Clarke had chains?—I think he had. It is very easily ascertained.

3871. Do you undertake to state it?—I know I have seen him in a parti-coloured dress, which carries the chains generally; "to have the hands manacled" "behind the back for 30 consecutive days; to be "flogged to death with a cat-o-nine tails, as in the "case of convict Wilkinson at Portland; to be com- "pelled to labour until your clothes were wet through "on your back; to continue to work in them until "they dried again on your back, and to have to sleep "in them if not perfectly dry when you left off "labour; to be confined in a cell through the roof of "which the water poured down on your head while "you slept in at night; to ignore disease until fully "developed; to neglect it when active; to be sent to "the cold, bleak, humid climate of Dartmoor in con- "sumption." There is a prisoner now in the hospital, by the name of Brennan, who, I understand, is treated for phthisis. He was sent to Dartmoor, and I understand has been sent back from it. He has been sent back.

3872. (Dr. Greenhow.) Is he a treason-felony prisoner?—No, sir. He has been sent back since and he told me that when he went first to Dartmoor the doctor there said he should never have been sent there. "To be taken out of bed in the last stage of "consumption; to be discharged to the prison from "the hospital, and punished with penal class diet in "punishment cell in the last stage of consumption, "and so die within two months after the infliction of "such punishment."

3873. (Dr. Lyons.) Who was that?—His name was Dunne. I recollect the case very well. He was a very bad case.

3874. Do you know his christian name?—I think the name was Thomas.

3875. (Dr. Greenhow.) Was he a treason-felony prisoner?—No, sir. The man who was punished with him was also consumptive, but he is alive still.

3876. (Mr. Broadrick.) Dunne is dead?—Dunne is dead.

3877. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you know when he died?—He died upwards of 12 months ago. "To be driven "mad, as in the case of Martin Stanley Carey?" I saw him here mad, I saw him here mad; "Mr. Kenna, and Colonel Richard O'Sullivan Burke," three political prisoners; "to be driven to attempt suicide, as "Mr. Miley, political prisoner in Portland, was; "to commit suicide, as criminals have done to escape "from the hardships incidental to prison life." These are some of the things incidental to prison life. I presume, my lord, that you will take evidence.

3878. We are ready, as I have explained to you just now, to receive such evidence as you may wish to offer, either on points affecting your own treatment or on points affecting the treatment of prisoners generally, provided that treatment is such to which the treason-felony prisoners might have been or might be subjected?—This meets the case I think. (Replies.) "But if the "Commissioners are empowered to inquire into "treatment which evidences per se a disregard of "the conditions necessary for health, or calculated to "injure permanently the health of the treason-felony "prisoners, we are ready to lay before them a state- "ment which we have prepared, and which contains "an account of the treatment we have received in "British convict prisons, provided such conditions "are granted to us by the Commissioners as will "secure a truthful knowledge of the facts to the "public, and justice alike to our fathers and our- "selves."

3879. Does that mean that you are prepared to submit evidence on any of those points?—I am prepared to submit evidence of what I have suffered myself and undergone if you will publish the statement with your report, and admit the reporters of the press.

3880. No; we cannot admit the reporters of the press. Any statement that you make will be made here, privately in a room with us, and not in the hearing of any official of the prison. It will be subsequently published with any evidence that may be given upon it?—Will you publish my statement in extenso?

3881. Do you mean the one that you have read just now?—No.

3882. Certainly; if your statement relates to nothing else except your own treatment and the treatment to which you might be subjected, it will be published; but if it has reference to political matters in any way, that part of it will not be published?—There is nothing political in it.

3883. I cannot say what it relates to, not having seen it. Would you like to have it read?—No, I could not read it, unless it was granted to me that it would be published; because after the former Commission was here, they gave nothing at all of what I sent to them, and they did not allow my evidences in this room. I gave my statement partly to them, and they did not allow me to finish. They took up their hats and did not give me time. I put myself in a position and was obliged to stand on one leg, and my leg became swollen and inflamed, and I could hardly support myself except by leaning on the table. I reported myself sick after a short time, and the officer came back, and told me that the doctor had left, and that the governor of the prison would not allow me to go to bed.

3884. Where was that?—This happened in Pentonville; and this is one of the reasons why I ask for a full publication of my statement.

3885. (Dr. Greenhow.) Lord Devon distinctly stated that if your statement was merely a statement bearing on your treatment in prison, it would be published in full, and that the only parts that would not be published would be political opinions?—Oh, I have nothing in it about political opinions.

3886. All that you may experience under certain circumstances, provided it be part of the treatment of prisoners generally, you would be allowed to state?—As far as I am capable of judging, I have framed this statement with that view. I have put nothing in the statement that ought not to go into an accurate and just view of the treatment that I have received.

3887. (Chairman.) That is a statement which you wish to lay before the Commissioners and on which you wish to examine witnesses?—Yes, this statement is. But why do you refuse to admit the press. May I ask that?

3888. I am not prepared to argue with you. We have simply decided not to do so?—Well, if the Government are afraid of publicity, we are not.

3889. We cannot go into that?—We court the most rigid investigation.

3890. The question we have to consider is the treatment of the prisoners?—They have already branded some of our fellow-prisoners. A dear friend of mine, they wanted to make O'Donovan Rossa appear a liar.

3891. We are ready to hear everything that bears on your treatment and the treatment of the other prisoners, but we cannot go into extraneous topics?—You won't admit the press then, in that case; but you will publish the statements in full. I furnished outside questions through the deputy governor of this prison. The very first day that I got the notice I furnished, within 10 minutes after I got this notice, I furnished them with a requisition for copies of memorials and extracts from the prison books. I understand that you have those documents before you already, because Captain Harris told me that you had them before you, and would give me no answer.

3892. What do you wish to be provided with?—One of them is a copy of a memorial I sent to the Secretary of State.

3893. (Dr. Lyons.) What was the date?—Last September.

3894. (Chairman.) Sent by you?—By me, sir. The other was a suppressed letter written immediately after that.

3895. A suppressed letter, to whom?—To my mother.

3896. (Mr. De Vere.) Both about the same date?—Yes, sir, written after.

3897. That you should have an opportunity of seeing that letter is, you consider, material?—It is, sir. It is material. What is very material to me is, I am now nearly five years in prison, and my health is not good, and my memory as to events is not so accurate as I would wish. I would not wish to pledge myself to exact dates of things, unless I had them in writing. They can refer at any time to their books, and we have no books or memoranda of any kind. We would be pained if they were found on us. I have merely asked them for copies of the dates of my applications for medical relief to the medical officers; copies of the dates on which I applied.

3898. With the results, I suppose?—No, I beg your pardon, sir. On some of those occasions they treated me in the prison; they did not take me into the hospital. I want to know the number of times that they treated me at the prison, the number of days. That is most essential to me. I find that it has become so. It was in the winter of 1865 and 1867. Then I want to know the dates of my admission into hospital and discharge therefrom, and what I was admitted for. I want also a copy of the report of Messrs. Knox and Pollock, as I was before them, and I understand that they refer to me in it. I also applied for the assistance of Mr. Butt. The deputy governor came in one day and asked me, did I require assistance. I stopped for awhile. I thought first it was to copy out or assist me in composition. I said, "No," first; but on consideration I asked him did it mean legal advice and assistance, and he said it possibly might mean that. Then I said that I should like to have the advice and assistance of Mr. Butt. I have written a letter to that effect.

3899. (Dr. Lyons.) You have written a letter?—Yes; I presume you have got it.

3900. To whom was it written?—Through Captain Harris. It was intended for you. I only look on him as the medium of transmitting my wishes to you.

3901. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you intend by that to express your wish to be allowed to employ Mr. Butt and fee Mr. Butt yourself, or did you mean that he should be employed and retained for you by the Commission?—I meant the latter.

3902. (Chairman.) That I am bound to tell you we cannot do. We have decided to give the fullest facility for my friend of the prisoner's or legal adviser to come and assist him in making his statement, but we shall not admit Mr. Butt to be present here representing the prisoner or assisting him before us?—In that case, then, I presume you have allowed my letter to Mr. Butt to go forward to him.

3903. We have never seen the letter?—The authorities are playing fast and loose with us.

3904. That letter has been sent on to Mr. Butt. When did it go to Captain Harris?—On Sunday he came in and told us this, and on Monday morning I gave him the letter.

3905. (Mr. Bradrick.) Did you give him a letter of your own separately, or one from yourself and your fellow-prisoners?—Separately.

3906. (Dr. Lyons.) To whom was that letter addressed?—To Isaac Butt, Esq.

3907. You gave that letter to Captain Harris on Monday?—On Monday morning. I told Mr. Butt in it, seeing that the time was pressing, and the letter would not reach him until Tuesday, to telegraph to the prison to let me know if I could have his services, and to write more fully by letter. I have seen no telegram and no letter.

3908. (Mr. De Vere.) The tenor of your letter implied, I suppose, that he was to be retained on the part of the Government?—No; I presumed that the Commissioners had already put themselves in communication with him. I gave him a copy of a letter, which explained it so.

3909. (Mr. Bradrick.) Did you ask him to come to you for the purpose of your consulting him, or that he should appear on your behalf?—I said to consult him and advise in the preparation of my statement, for that was the question put to us by Captain Harris.

3910. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you a copy of your letter to Mr. Butt?—I can get it from another; but I have been so unwell that I could not keep a copy of it. I had another one slightly different, but it was substantially the same as that put in by Mr. Malenby.

3911. (Mr. De Vere.) With respect to those documents and copies of reports that you have asked for, did you ask for them for the purpose of refreshing your memory as to the subject of complaints that you may have to bring before the Commission?—Partly as to that, and partly as to specifying the order in which I have put them down.

3912. (Chairman.) To assist you?—To assist me in framing all these. For instance, I am not certain whether in the winter of 1866 and 1867 a certain thing took place in summer or winter. I want to know if it took place in winter; but of the fact itself I am as positive as I could be of anything. I had no idea at the time that this Commission would ever turn up.

3913. Then have you anything further to state to us now, or would you wish to postpone any statement that you may make to us, until you have received each of those documents as we may get for you?—Certainly I should postpone the statement. I cannot hand you in this statement now until I get them. I wish to read another that I was just doing down.

3914. If you make a statement against a prison officer, that statement will be placed before that prison officer, and he will have an opportunity of giving an answer. We cannot assent to your examining the prison officers. Any question that you would suggest would be put by us to the prison officers, but we cannot admit an examination by the prisoners themselves.

selves?—Will the Commissioners guarantee if our statements be placed in the hands of the authorities or prison officials, or abstracts of them, in order that they might reply to them, that we will also be furnished with copies of their statements in reply, verbal or written; and will we be allowed to rebut such charges as the prison authorities may strive to contravert or deny?

3914. We cannot give you any promise on that point. You must trust to us to carry it out in the fairest way with regard to both parties?—We court the fullest publicity; the most rigid investigation; but I am afraid if you knew the prison officials as well as we do, you would find that the way you are proceeding is not exactly the best way to go about it. You do not know anything about prison life, or what the officers are capable of doing.

3915. (Dr. Lysons.) Do you know the privilege that you have of getting advice from any legal friend, or assistance from any other friends in the preparation of your statements?—They are to come here at their own expense, I understand.

3917. We have no authority to pay their expenses. Any one coming here on your part, either as legal adviser or friend, can have full access to see you?—The only condition you grant is that our statements will be published in full with the report. That is the only condition you grant.

3918. (Chairman.) So far as they bear on your case. Perhaps I have already read to you, or you may have already seen the conditions which define the facilities which will be afforded to the prisoners:—“The prisoners will have full opportunity for making ‘an oral statement to the Commissioners as regards their treatment; such statement to be made in a ‘private room in the absence of any prison officer, and ‘after a distinct intimation from the Commissioners, ‘to which they will give full effect, that no statement ‘so made will in any way affect the prisoner’s ‘future position and treatment.’”—How can you guarantee that? because I find that the few statements I did make before Pollock and Knox affected my treatment.

The witness withdrew.

Captain HARRIS recalled.

3924. (Chairman.) The prisoners who have been before us have each severally made application for certain copies of documents and papers which we will go through seriatim, so as to ascertain from you how far they can be obtained. They apply for them thinking them material for the preparation of statements that they have to make. In the first place, Thomas Donker applied for a statement made on August 10th 1869, or thereabouts, to the Secretary of State, and for a copy of another made to the directors about the 10th November 1868, and for a third document to the directors on the 21st April 1869. Denis Malenky applied for several documents. He applied first for a statement forwarded by him to the directors in October 1867, and the reply thereto; secondly a memorial forwarded to the Secretary of State about July or August 1869, with the reply, and a copy of the medical certificate which accompanied the memorial from Dr. Campbell; a statement to the directors made in January or February 1870, and the reply, if any; the medical notes of Dr. Gover as regards his case, where are they?—In Millbank, my lord.

3925. The same by the medical officer of Portland prison as regards his case; the same from Dartmoor in 1867, and a second report in May 1867. Malenky also asked for copies of the medical reports, and copies of his suppressed letters. I told him that he should have copies of those parts of those letters which appeared to be material in any way about his treatment, but that if they contained anything which bore on politics, or expressions which seemed improper, he should not have those copied. You can produce the letters to us, and at the same time give copies of those parts which bear on his case?—Yes.

3926. (Mr. De Fere.) All the suppressed letters

3919. That is a point that you will have an opportunity of proving. “They will further have full ‘opportunity for making written statements, and for ‘offering such oral explanations as they may desire. ‘Writing materials will be provided for them, and ‘three days’ intermission for labour allowed if ‘wished. The Commissioners will be prepared to ‘receive any statement in writing from any friend ‘of the prisoner or any person acting on his behalf, ‘and to take the oral evidence of any witness, including, if desired, any released prisoner, which may ‘appear relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts. The Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State, that access to ‘any prisoner at a reasonable hour and for a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting them in the ‘preparation of their statements should be allowed ‘to friends of such prisoners, under such regulations ‘and conditions as the Government may think ‘necessary. Application in such case should be ‘made to the Home Office. The evidence will be ‘taken down by a shorthand writer. The report ‘and evidence will be made public.’”—The report and statements?

3920. Your statement will be taken as evidence, you know, as coming under the head of evidence?—Will we be allowed to communicate with our friends?

3921. Yes; if you wish to communicate with your friends with the view of securing such assistance as we have told you, proper facilities can be afforded to you in that behalf. In all probability if you name a friend that you wish to write to the privilege will be given to you?—On looking over the statements again, I see Mr. O’Keefe, and Mr. Kiekhun, and Mr. Barry, three released prisoners, I will see whether it is necessary that I should communicate with them.

3922. Then, on the whole, you wish your examination to be postponed?—Yes, if they were present I could go on with it. Will we get a copy of that statement that you have now ready for us?

3923. You shall have it.

see in your hands?—As far as I am aware they are. There are some that I know are not here. Some I know are in Parliament Street, and would have to be got from there.

3927. The same principle might be applied to them; to lay the suppressed letters before the Commission, and give copies of the extracts to the prisoner?—I shall apply for them immediately.

3928. (Chairman.) Then he wants copies of all the reports in the prison books against him?—That was placed on the table at the last visit of the Commission. A copy shall be furnished to the prisoner.

3929. A copy of each of the entries as recorded in the prison books?—We can get that from the books.

3930. Copy of his caption sheet?—That is a private document, which it would not be advisable the prisoner should see.

3931. Dillon asked for a copy of his memorial to the Secretary of State, in September 1869; he asked for a copy of a suppressed letter to his mother about the same date; he asked for copies of applications, with the dates, made to the medical officers by him with the results. Where would that be had?—The medical officer’s “Complaining Sick Book” would show any applications made for casual treatment.

3932. (Mr. Brodribk.) A return of the number of times when he was treated by the medical officer without being sent to hospital, as well as of his admissions to the hospital.

3933. (Chairman.) Do you see any difficulty in meeting those requests?—No, I do not. It is merely a question of time.

3934. Will you put them into hands immediately?—I will, my lord.

B. Dillon.

29 June 1870

Capt. Harris.
29 June 1870.

3935. Have any telegrams or letters been received from Mr. Butt or any of the friends of the prisoner to-day?—None; no documents of any sort except a letter from Mrs. Leahy, which I mentioned before.

3936. (Dr. Lyons.) Will you be kind enough to put in a certificate after you have examined the books carefully, respecting Richard Burke, from the date of his admission into this prison to the date of his transmission to Millbank, and also from his arrival again in this prison, the 1st of May 1870 to the present time, day by day, certifying that you have examined the books, and that he was present here every day during that period.

The witness retired.

The Commission adjourned at half-past 6 p.m.

Woking, Thursday, 30th June 1870.

The Commission resumed at half-past 11 o'clock a.m.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE E. BRODRICK.
S. E. DE VEE, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GUKENBROW.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

Captain HARRIS recalled.

Capt. Harris.
30 June 1870.

3941. (Chairman.) Have you any communication, Captain Harris, to make to the Commission?—Yes, my lord; since the sitting of the Commission yesterday, Thomas Burke has sent in a corrected list of the documents which he wishes to obtain.

3942. Is there any addition in that to the list of the documents he formerly specified?—There is. He has added one, a statement to the directors, on the 21st of April 1868.

3943. Then will you put that on the list?—I will.

3944. Will you be able to take to-day the necessary steps for procuring the documents that have been asked for?—I shall apply for them to-day.

3945. Do you see any objection to the suppressed letters being given?—The only objection I see is, that the prisoners, being in association, might combine to present the same view of any one point they might wish to carry.

3946. You apprehend that A B would tell C D that he wrote so-and-so?—They would quote passages which had been disallowed, and they would reproduce them in their statements. That is the only objection that strikes me. With regard to those suppressed letters, when they are produced, are they to be produced to the Commission, or handed to the prisoners in the first instance?

3947. The Commission is of opinion that we see no objection to their being handed back to the prisoners. Of course they cannot be sent out to others without passing under your notice?—Would you allow me to add that Rosewell has also sent in a list of the documents that he requires.

3948. Will you state to the Commission what those documents are?—A statement to the board of directors; number and dates of the letters written in Portland and Woking prisons; the suppressed letters written in other prisons, and why suppressed; caption sheet; copies of reports of punishments in Portland and Woking; medical notes of the doctors in Pentonville, Portland, and Woking prisons; dates of admission to and discharge from the infirmary in this prison, by whom admitted, and by whom discharged.

3949. No objection to give those?—Except the caption sheet, my lord. Dr. Campbell wishes to ask a question of the Commission with regard to the medical history that he was to furnish. Medical case sheets in this prison were asked for by Mahony, as applied to himself. Dr. Campbell wishes to ask a question of the Commission on that point.

3950. You will take care that as each paper comes 3937. Will you also ascertain who had him in custody on the day of his going from this prison to Millbank?—I know who that was; Mr. Morris had him the whole time.

3938. Who took him to Millbank?—I took him myself to Millbank.

3939. You had him in charge from this to Millbank?—I had.

3940. Put that in the certificate also. Do you know who brought him from Millbank here?—The deputy governor had him in charge.

to hand that may be asked for by any particular prisoner, it is brought under our view. The bulk of there is in hand?—Yes; of course the whole of these I have referred to-day to the chairman of the board of Directors for his sanction in the first place, that being the usual course; but I do not imagine that there will be any objection.

3951. Have you written that letter yet?—No, I have not.

3952. Perhaps you would say that the Commission wishes to express their opinion that it is most important that the permission should be granted?—I will do so.

3953. And at as early a period as possible, inasmuch as they propose to hold their adjourned meeting here on Wednesday next?—Yes.

3954. There was another point which was raised by some of the prisoners yesterday, which was this: after we had read to them a statement that the friends of the prisoners would be allowed to assist them, they raised the question, how would they be allowed to communicate with those friends? The rules of the prison state certain intervals, in which letters are to be written. What we should like would be, that if a letter is written bona fide for the purpose of asking a friend to assist them, and is in accordance with the notice we have given, that the rules of the prison should be so far relaxed as that they may be enabled to write now for that purpose?—There will be no difficulty in that, my lord, but subject to inspection. They asked me this morning whether they would be allowed to communicate freely with their friends, under cover. That I said I could not allow.

3955. That is without its being seen by you?—Without its being seen by me.

3956. I should say you will feel justified in allowing a letter to pass if it is to our purpose, even though the ordinary rules of the prison would not allow it?—Oh, yes, if this course is sanctioned by the Board of Directors.

3957. (Mr. De Vere.) If you find that there are other matters put in which would make it improper that the letter should be transmitted, I think you should inform the prisoner of that, and give him an opportunity of writing a letter confining it strictly to the purpose?—Just so; and in the event of any persons presenting themselves during the sitting of the Commission, and requesting an interview with any of the prisoners, I wish to know, my lord, whether it is desired that I should give permission to the friends of prisoners to have private interviews with the prisoners after the statements are given in and before their final examination.

The witness withdrew.

Dr. CAMPBELL recalled.

3959. (Chairman.) Do you wish, Dr. Campbell, to ask a question of the Commission?—Yes, my lord. Denis Mulcahy applied to have his medical case sheets in this prison. Do you wish me to supply him with all my private notes for the last three years and a half. They are all here, and just in a rough state. I make no alteration in them. But there are remarks here and there which the Commissioners, I think, would hardly desire to publish.

3960. (Mr. Bradrick.) Are those remarks part and parcel of the case sheets?—These are remarks I made day by day.

3961. Do you consider them part and parcel of the case sheets?—(No answer.)

3962. What is a "case sheet," actually. Please to explain that?—This is a history of the case, my lord. I do not know whether you wished the medical history of the man, giving the different times admitted into hospital and discharged from it, or to have all these remarks copied out for his information in addition.

3963. (Dr. Lyons.) What does he ask for?—Medical case sheets in this prison.

3964. (Mr. Bradrick.) Bryan Dillon asks for "extracts from the medical officer's note."—To furnish Mulcahy or any other man with all my private notes, I thought was not perhaps the intention of the Commission.

3965. (Mr. De Vere.) Are those private memoranda or are they official documents?—Oh, those are private for my own guidance. Just a record of the different cases I treat in the hospital.

3966. (Dr. Greenham.) Then they are not official documents?—If the directors called for a history of this man's case, I should compile it from those notes.

3967. (Mr. Bradrick.) You do not consider those notes in their rough form to be accessible to the governor or director?—I have never been asked for them.

3968. (Dr. Lyons.) Whose property are they?—My property, as medical officer.

3969. If you left this institution to-morrow, what would become of them?—Then my successor would have those to refer to.

3970. You would not have them to take away?—No.

3971. They are public property?—Yes.

3972. What objection have you to allow him to see them?—He is a medical man. I consider it unusual to give the patient notes of his case.

3973. What difficulty or unpleasantness do you expect from that? So far as the note you have read is concerned, I cannot see that it shows anything

The witness withdrew.

Captain HARRIS recalled.

3983. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, have you seen the treason-felony convict, Murphy?—I have, my lord.

3984. Will you state what Murphy said to you?—He refused at first to attend the Commission, as he has done frequently before.

3985. What did you say to him?—The exact words?

The witness withdrew.

3986. (Chairman.) I think I am justified in saying that the Commission are of opinion that it is desirable it should extend up to the whole period of their final examination?—Just so, my lord.

Capt. Harris.

30 June 1870.

Dr. Campbell.

against you. On the contrary, I think it is creditable to you, and exhibits care and attention?—(No answer.)

3974. (Chairman.) Would it create any personal irritation, or personal bad feeling?—I think it would. He has shown a bad feeling, not to me personally; but when he sent statements to the directors in petitions, he has alluded to me sometimes not in a very complimentary way, although I am not aware of having given him cause. He has shown bad feeling in that way.

3975. What he ought to have and what we want, is just that which would show the admissions and discharges, and the medical treatment to which he was subjected, consisting any incidental remarks that you may have made honing on his manner; or anything of that sort. Those I should say should not be given?—Very well, my lord.

3976. (Dr. Lyons.) These are public documents. They are documents such as would be produced in the House of Commons, if called for. They are not the personal property of Dr. Campbell?

3977. (Chairman.) Are there any particulars given in those case sheets other than in the case of an ordinary hospital would appear on the record put at the head of the bed?—These are not put at the head of a bed, my lord; these are kept in a portfolio.

3978. Are the particulars that are stated there different from those stated in a medical history?—Just the usual notes I make in cases.

3979. (Dr. Greenham.) If the prisoner was sent from this to another prison, would those notes go with him as his medical history?—No.

3980. Do you know whether it is used for other medical officers to keep such notes as these?—It is used in the service.

3981. We have got the medical history of all the cases that we have examined, and we have got to such notes as these, and we have been told that there are no such notes kept?—They are, to a great extent, private notes. This being an invalid prison, I am more particular.

The witness withdrew, and after the Commission had deliberated, was recalled.

3982. (Chairman.) The Commission has given careful consideration to your question, Dr. Campbell, and I am instructed to convey to you that this is their view: our wish is that you should supply to Mulcahy a statement, showing in full the dates of his admission into and discharge from hospital, with a detailed account of the medical treatment which he has received, whether in hospital or out of it. On complying with the terms of this resolution, you will be considered to have complied with the requisition for case sheets?—Thank you, my lord.

The witness withdrew.

3986. Yes, if you please; if you can give them?—I hardly remember the exact words.

3987. Did you say that we were sitting?—Yes; I said, "The Commissioners are now sitting, Murphy; do you wish to appear before them?" He refused at first, as he has done frequently before, but I urged him to come if he thought it necessary to say anything. He said, "I have nothing to say, but I will go if you like," or something to that effect. I have sent for him and he will be here immediately.

Capt. Harris.

J. Murphy.

JOHN MOUNTJOY, prisoner, examined.

30 June 1878.

2895. (Chairman.) The gentlemen that you see sitting here are a Commission appointed by the Government to inquire into any complaints that may be made by yourself or by other prisoners of the same class, as regards their treatment in this or any other English prison in which they have been confined. It consists of Mr. De Vere, Dr. Lyons, Dr. Greenlow, Mr. Brodriek and myself, Lord Devon. Now you can make any statement that you like to me. It will be taken down by a shorthand writer, and any evidence that you may give will hereafter be made public?—Yes, sir.

2896. We are appointed by the Government, but of course we are quite independent of the Government?—Yes, sir.

2897. And nothing that you may say here will in any way be brought up against you on any future occasion, or will in any way prejudice your position in any respect?—I will say nothing, sir, but what has happened.

2898. We are prepared to hear what you wish to say?—The deputy governor this time, sir, sent me some paper, and I said, I'll write nothing this time; the reason is this: there were two Commissioners here before, Messrs. Pollock and Knox; this is the very room they sent for me; so when I came in, 'twould take me an hour the least, I could say, to state my grievances. I didn't see the gentlemen sit down to take a note of anything. One of them stood with his back up here against the fireplace; another stood here, and I waited here. He asked me, when I commenced to state how I was treated, he interrupted me and he asked me what my name was. I told him. Then I commenced again, then he stopped me again, and asked me my age. I told him. I commenced again. He stopped me and asked me "What's your trade or calling?" I told him. "That'll do," he says. 'Twas all done in five minutes. Never took a note of anything. So I reported the doctor here, Mr. Campbell here, when I was sent to hospital and brought back worse; so, "That'll do," says he, and I was sent away; so that was the reason I wouldn't have any part to do with this Commission. I said 'twas possible I'd be treated the same way. The gentlemen said there was "no grounds." He didn't give me justice.

2899. This is a new Commission and we wish to know have you anything to say to us?—Well, sir, the strict and severe treatment in Mountjoy and Pentonville is hard to suffer.

2900. You had better tell us in detail what you complain of, with the dates?—I forgot, sir. My recollection, and my sight, and my memory are very much impaired. I have been in prison now five years and seven months, since the 13th November 1864.

2901. (Dr. Lyons.) Tell us as nearly as you can remember the dates that you complain of?—Well, sir, in Mountjoy, I was treated worse there than in any of the remainder, and likewise in Pentonville, so far as this: I had at night to strip, and to put out all the clothes, and take them in in the morning. They wouldn't do this here and in other prisons. Every 12 or 15 minutes they'd come and slap the door, and put a lantern over my face, so that I could get no sleep. They didn't do this at other prisons. I told the priest, Mr. Cady, I could get no sleep. They didn't use some that way when I came there first, when I was convicted in Mullingar, in the county of Westmeath. Up to the time the arrests were made in Dublin in September, from that out they persecuted me in every way they could, but previously they didn't; they treated me the same as in other prisons.

2902. (Mr. Brodriek.) When did the change take place in your treatment?—In September 1865, sir. I came there the latter part of July, to Mountjoy. Well, I was treated as any ordinary prisoner; I was allowed my class, and they persecuted me there, and put me on bread and water on account of religion, for I told them I didn't believe in any of them, for they didn't persecute as they preach. And they put me on bread and water until the doctor, Dr. Macdonnell, took me off of it.

2903. (Dr. Lyons.) What was done to you on account of religion?—The governor, I forget his name now, the governor of Mountjoy, in Dublin in 1865, he asked me what religion I was.

2904. (Chairman.) I think it is right that I should tell you we have no power to inquire into anything that you say took place at Mountjoy. We have full power to inquire into any English prisons?—Oh, you have nothing to do with Mountjoy.

2905. No?—Well, in Pentonville, sir, the officer used to come there some time in December 1865, the latter part of December 1865, somewhere about Christmas; I forget the exact date, sir; two or three days before Christmas day, I think, it was. Well, sir, the following week, during January and December it was very cold weather with snow on the ground, they used make me strip in the cell, asked as I was born. Sometimes two or three of them would come and laugh and sneer at me, and I asked them for pity's sake to allow me to keep on my shirt itself; no, I had to take all off, and they kept me standing there, and hurt my feelings as far as ever they could.

2906. Who were the persons that did that?—I don't know their names now, sir, the officers.

2907. How many of them?—Sometimes two of them, sometimes three of them. I don't know what their names were.

2908. But you say that two or three of the officers were present at the time you were stripped, and that they jeered and laughed at you?—Yes, sir; they ordered me to strip. I first thought when the priest came to me and went out, I thought I was treated this way because he might convey something to me; and I said to myself, I'd sooner not have him come at all, if that was to be the way of it; but I found out afterwards they used to do it repeatedly every week when he wouldn't come at all. They used not to do this to the other prisoners at all.

2909. Do I understand that they took off all your clothes?—Yes, sir; asked, asked, nothing on me; my clothes all thrown off, my jacket, drawers, trousers, shirt.

2910. At what time of the day or night was it?—In the daytime, sir; in January and December.

2911. In what time of the day?—As well as I can recollect, somewhere about midday.

2912. (Mr. Brodriek.) Did that happen to you more than once?—Oh yes, sir, repeatedly. I thought first 'twas on account of the priest coming to me, and I said to myself, I'd rather go without any priest, but after that 'twas done repeatedly when the priest didn't come at all.

2913. (Dr. Lyons.) How often?—I can't say how often; 'twas done repeatedly in January and December.

2914. (Mr. De Vere.) Was it done once a week, or fortnight, or month?—Some weeks once a week, sir, and some weeks twice a week, as well as I can recollect. I can't exactly recollect; I didn't know it was done to the others.

2915. (Chairman.) Can you tell us if the same course was taken with the other convicts?—Not with the criminals, sir; for I asked some of the ordinary prisoners that came here from Pentonville. There were carpenters and bricklayers come from there, and we were working together, and I asked them, were they treated so, and they said they never were. I didn't know that the other political prisoners were until I see them since. I was working with them in the new prison here.

2916. You believe from what was told you by those prisoners who were working at the new prison here, not being treason-factory prisoners?—Yes, sir, ordinary prisoners.

2917-11. That they were not subjected to the same treatment?—No, sir they were not. I often heard some of them say, they sympathised with us, when they see us coming in, and see us open the boxes and everything, and they wouldn't do it to them at all. Then at night I'd have to put out everything but the bed, clothes, towels, spoon, wooden plates, and salt cup, and everything in the cell, to be put out on a table.

4012. Had you, when you were first told to put out your clothes at night, made any attempt at escape, or broken the prison regulations in any way?—No, I never broke the prison regulations, sir; I never was reported since I have been in prison but once, and that was by a political prisoner that is here for the same as myself, a man that I helped in his poverty outside, and he insulted me here, and I said you wouldn't tell me that outside or I'd soon stop you; so he reported me to the governor, and got me three days bread and water, and 100 marks. That was the only time I ever broke the prison rules. I never was punished but that once, and never reported by anyone but him, and he a political prisoner, the same as myself.

4013. Have you anything further to state? Is there anything in your treatment at Pentonville, or anywhere else, that you wish to mention to the Commission?—There are a good many things that I forget altogether; 'tis many years since. There's one thing, gentlemen, I'd like to acquaint ye with, if ye could do anything for me in that way. Five years and five months for a convict is the time to serve out of the seven years. There's one year and seven months remission out of the seven years allowed. Now, sir, I'm over five years and seven months in prison. I'm in prison since the 18th November 1864. Well, sir, I was tried in March 1865, the 7th March 1865, in Mullingar; those soldiers swore against me; and some, they were proved perjurers, and the jury disagreed.

4014. I am sorry to stop you, but I do not think we can go into anything that happened at your trial or conviction. What we have to inquire into, is your treatment in prison?—I thought perhaps I might be allowed that four months, sir; that I might be allowed from the first assize, as I was tried at the second assize.

4015. (Mr. Brodribb.) What we want to ascertain is, whether your term of imprisonment has been prolonged unwarrantably.—Well, I think the other prisoners have been allowed the same, from the time of the assizes they were tried; they were allowed from that time and I have not; I have been put back from this assize to another assize, four months longer, sir.

4016. You were tried twice, as I understand you to say?—I was tried at two assizes, sir.

4017. (Dr. Lyster.) What was the date of your first being put into prison?—The 18th November 1864, sir.

4018. (Mr. Brodribb.) How many months before being tried were you in prison?—I was tried the 7th March 1865 following, sir; then the jury disagreed, and I was put back and tried again the 17th July 1865.

4019. (Mr. De Vere.) What you want, as I understand it, that your period of imprisonment should date from the time of your first trial?—Yes, sir. I'm in prison since the 18th November 1864, and my first trial was the 7th March 1865, and the second trial was the 17th July 1865; then I was convicted and sentenced, by the same men that were against me, soldiers; although there was perjury proved against them, still they were the same.

4020. (Chairman.) I will ask you a few questions on one or two points of detail. Have you ever been in the hospital here?—In this place; yes, sir, I have.

4021. Have you anything to complain of as regards the medical treatment that you have received?—When I first came here I was very lame and I asked the doctor for a stick, and he refused me.

4022. He refused to allow you a stick?—Yes, sir. I was very lame when I came here from Pentonville. There was some kind of a corrodion floor, and I was very lame. I asked the doctor for a stick and he refused me. Then another time, I was taken very bad; my face was all swelled, and Dr. Wilson took me into hospital on the sick list. Dr. Campbell wasn't here that day; so he gave me some medicine that operated very freely on me, and I was in that very bad; worse next day, very weak; so I forget whether 'twas the next day after that or the second day, Tuesday, Dr. Campbell saw me and sent me down. I said I felt worse after the operation of the medicine being so powerful. I was a great deal weaker going down, but the swelling was gone from my face; so I came down and told the doctor "I'm not well." He said, "Go down!" so I went down.

4023. (Mr. De Vere.) What do you mean by going down?—Left the hospital, sir. Then after that the cheese was very bad, and I couldn't eat it; so one Sunday I brought the cheese back. This was previous to the other two Commissioners coming here. I returned the cheese, and said I couldn't eat it; so 'twas kept, and I reported this, sir, to the other two Commissioners. That was all the reports they gave me the chance of making, when Dr. Campbell brought in the cheese then, and he said, "You are the man that found fault with this cheese?" "Yes," said I. I returned cheese several times since that, so I had to take bread and water for my dinner on Sunday. They gave nothing in exchange.

4024. (Chairman.) The cheese was produced before those two gentlemen?—Yes, sir.

4025. Did they not taste it?—Yes, sir, they did; they asked me to taste it, but I couldn't taste it. What's meant for one is poison to another, sir.

4026. Have you complained with regard to other food?—Oh, yes, sir; the skin-of-beef soup I never eat, nor the pudding, sir. I used to do it when I first came, but it made me sick more than anything; I had to knock off; I thought it better to suffer hunger than to eat it and be sick, and so I used to return it. Lately they allow the hospital dinner in place of it on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays; they changed all that.

4027. What have you for hospital dinner?—On Tuesday, sir, I don't know what the complement is, or the quantity either; I don't know what weight it is, but I think 'tis five or six ounces; but on Tuesday I know, for dinner, instead of the skin-of-beef soup they give us now beef and greens, and the same on Friday, sir; and on Thursday, mutton and a little soup.

4028. Have you ever had your food weighed at your request?—No, sir. I came down once here to this kitchen; my dinner was all here; that was the only time I ever asked to have it weighed. I came down to return it. When I took it in they kept pawing it, and from what I seen I rather make no repeat over again.

4029. (Dr. Lyster.) Why?—From the way they were pawing it, sir. In fact, what they gave me in place of it was worse than what I brought back.

4030. What did they give you in place of it?—Some cold scraps that were left there that I couldn't eat.

4031. (Chairman.) When was that?—I couldn't say exactly, sir, but about two years since it happened. I never came there any more, nor I wouldn't; I'd rather go without it.

4032. (Dr. Greenhow.) Have you sufficient food?—Well, sometimes, sir, I could use more, especially in winter time. In the cold weather I could eat more if I had it.

4033. (Chairman.) How are you employed?—At the pump, sir, now, but when I was first here I was 20 months picking osiers at one end of a shed; then I was working at carpentry in this new prison, and here in the yard. But this last 10 or 11 months I have been at the pumps out in the yard, sir.

4034. Have you anything to say as to the mode in which you have been treated in any other respect?—There was one officer here, Mr. Roberts; he is sent to Chatham since. I reported him four times successively to this governor here, and still he continued the same.

J. Murphy.

30 June 1870.

J. Murphy.

20 June 1876.

4035. (Mr. Brodick.) Was he a warder?—Yes, sir, assistant warder. He was sent to Chatham since.

4036. (Chairman.) He is now at Chatham?—Yes, sir.

4037. What have you to complain of respecting him?—He gave me a great deal of annoyance, and four times I reported him. He used to come and open the cell at night, and slip the door, and wouldn't let me sleep; he used to unlock the door and open the door, and hold the lamp, and wake me up, so that I couldn't sleep, and I had to work hard the next day at carpentry work; so I reported him to the governor, and I thought the governor would stop it, so he said he would see to it.

4038. (Mr. De Vere.) What was the name of the governor then?—Mr. Branley, the present governor. Then I said, "I was no use reporting to the governor, I'll have to report to the director;" so it was stopped after that.

4039. (Dr. Lysons.) Did you report to the director?—No, sir, I didn't; but then he stopped after I said that.

4040. (Mr. De Vere.) To whom did you say it?—I said it to some of the warders. If the governor, I suppose, wanted to stop it, he would stop it at once. He allowed the man to do it four times. I threatened to tell the director, and then he stopped it. He would open the cell door at 1 o'clock at night, between 1 and 2, and wake me up, and tell me I should keep my head up from under the clothes. Now there was a gas lighting over the door, and I used to keep the clothes up to throw the light away from my eyes. My sight is very weak since, I have been in prison so long. He used to say, I had my head under the clothes, but I used not, and he said he came to see that I was in the cell. If he was to leave a suit of clothes there for me, my own clothes, and the door open and the gates open, I wouldn't run, because I never dare anything that I am afraid or ashamed of, I never ran nor I never will run.

4041. What prison was this in?—In this prison, in B. ward.

4042. How long ago?—I can't exactly say, sir. I suppose the prison books will tell. But I see the governor was trifling with him, for certainly if he had respect any for the governor's authority, he wouldn't respect it the second time; and if the governor was inclined to prevent it, I should think that once ought to be enough to speak of it. As last I said, "I won't report any more to this governor, I'll report to the director," and then 'twas stopped.

4043. (Chairman.) Have you ever made a report of anything to the director?—Yes, sir, I made a report of one of these officers that was here, sir.

4044. (Mr. De Vere.) Not Roberts?—No, sir; I forget his name.

4045. (Chairman.) Have you any complaint to make as to the facilities that have been given to you to see the priest?—No, sir; I have nothing at all to say about that.

4046. Is there any other statement that you wish to make to us?—In fact, I rather feel inclined to forget all I suffered then to remember it.

4047. (Dr. Greenock.) You were speaking about your treatment in Mountjoy prison. Were you better treated there than you have been here or at Pentonville?—Well, sir, I was not.

4048. Were you worse treated at Mountjoy than at Pentonville?—I felt it worse in the beginning, because the opening and shutting of the trap door of the cell every night left me no sleep, and I had the very same as that done in Pentonville, but they didn't strip me there, except twice. They stripped me twice in Mountjoy; that is when I first came there.

4049. Was your food so good in Mountjoy as in Pentonville?—'Twas different altogether; 'twas n't the same kind at all. I preferred the food in Pentonville to the food in Mountjoy. The food in Mountjoy was what they called "porridge," oatmeal boiled thick, in the morning for breakfast with milk; and a pound of bread, and a pint of milk for dinner; and I forget how much bread, and a half pint of milk for supper; with the exception of Thursday and Sunday, they give beef on Thursday and Sunday in Mountjoy, that was all.

4050. Did you consider being sent from Mountjoy to Pentonville a hardship?—Well, yes, sir, because I was told that if I had remained in Ireland, all the prisoners that remained in Ireland the last 18 months they're allowed to wear their own clothes, and a great many privileges; they're not in close confinement as I am here. They are sent to Spike Island after eight months in Mountjoy. Then mechanics are sent to a place in Dublin, from Smithfield, and labourers to a place called Lusk; and I am told a man can walk and go wherever he liked on Sunday; he has to be in to his regular meals, and at night, the same as soldiers, but he is allowed to wear his own clothes and to walk about, and not be in close confinement as I am here. That is a great privilege to be deprived of.

4051. I asked you whether you found it a great hardship when it occurred, to be brought from Mountjoy to Pentonville?—Well, certainly I did, sir.

4052. Why so?—Well, I'd rather stay in Ireland, sir.

4053. (Mr. Brodick.) Why would you rather stay in Ireland?—'Twould be a great privilege to me the last 18 months to walk about where I liked; but if I attempted to leave or to go away, and I was arrested, and put in close confinement, of course that would be only right, sir.

4054. When you reported Roberts to Governor Bramley, what happened? Did he hear your complaint?—Yes, he heard my complaint, sir; but he repeated it the very next night.

4055. Did the governor call Roberts before him?—Not when I was there, sir, he didn't.

4056. Did the governor tell you that he would stop it?—He told me the last time, the fourth time, that he would come there every night at 5 o'clock and to have me answer.

4057. The governor said that?—Yes, sir. That was in winter time. After 8 o'clock, he said, that he shouldn't annoy me any more. Why didn't he stop it at once, the first time?

4058. Did he promise you the first time that he would stop it?—He said he would see to it, sir. I can't exactly recollect the words, but 'twas something to that effect. I know I had to report him four times, and that the last time I threatened to report him to the director.

4059. Is that the only occasion on which you had to make a complaint of an officer to the governor?—Have you ever had to complain of any other officer in this prison? You mentioned Roberts and an officer whose name you could not remember?—No, sir. I never reported an officer to the governor after that. I said, if I had any reports to make I would report to the director.

4060. Have you any complaint to make to us of ill-usage received from any of the officers of this prison?—Well, he used to make me do extra things; cleaning up, and severer than other prisoners. Now he used to make me clean the water-closets, and that I was not entitled to do.

4061. Is that Roberts?—Yes, sir.

4062. You mean other water-closets besides your own?—Yes, sir; one was left up there. I had the same as every one else to scrub out the sinks and water-closets, and clean them out.

4063. (Dr. Greenock.) Do the prisoners do that sort of work in turn?—Yes, sir; but now there's one to do it altogether; one does it altogether every morning and night.

4064. But when you had to do it you merely took your turn with others?—Yes, sir; with others.

4065. (Mr. Brodick.) Have you ever petitioned the Home Secretary?—No, sir; I never petitioned, nor never wrote, nor never asked since I have been in prison. I never wrote a letter, or took a pen in my hand these five years and six months.

4066. Have you not written to your friends?—No, sir.

4067. (Mr. De Vere.) Nor heard from them?—I have had three letters here since, but I never answered or wrote since I have been in prison.

4068. (Mr. Brodick.) Have you anything to complain of about letters?—No, sir; I was entitled to write, but didn't. The first year I was entitled to write two, and the second year, three, and since the time of the first class, four, but I never wrote.

4069. Have you ever received visits from your friends?—No, sir. Nor never asked for visits. I never asked for any privileges. The only thing I ever asked for was, my own spectacles. The spectacles that I had when I first came here used to make my eyes sore, and I found my sight getting very bad, so I asked the governor to have my own spectacles, and he let me have them, and took them away again. There was some man here that had spectacles, and it seems he sold them, so on that account he took mine away, and wouldn't give them to me until I applied to the director, and he gave them.

4070. (Chairman.) Those are your own that you have now?—Yes, sir, but the governor wouldn't let me have them without applying to the director for them.

4071. (Mr. Brodick.) Was that the only occasion on which you saw a director?—Either twice or three times, sir. I can't exactly say.

4072. Can you remember applying to the director on any other matter? I recollect putting down my name to see him for something, but I was sent for by the chief, and he asked what I wanted to see the director for. I told him, and he says "You can't see him."

4073. (Dr. Lyons.) Who is the chief?—He is gone away from this since. His name is Williams.

4074. What do you mean by the chief?—The chief warden, sir.

4075. (Mr. Brodick.) Do I understand you to say that the chief warden refused to take your name when you wanted to put it down to see the director?—Yes, sir; he said I couldn't see the director for that. I put it down after to see the director for something else, and there was the principal here, the name of Mr. Staines; he is sent since to some place in London. He came and asked me another time what I wanted to see the director for. I told him, and he says, "You can't see the director for that." "Well, then," says I, "I never will tell my business to any one any more."

4076. (Chairman.) What was the purpose that you wanted to see the director for?—I can't tell that now, sir.

4077. (Mr. Brodick.) Did you see the governor on that occasion?—No, sir. I never reported after that to the governor. In fact, 'tis against my principles to report any one. I rather put up and suffer in the cells than report. I consider it mean to report, but 'tis worse to deserve to be reported. I put down again, sir, to see the director, and this present chief warden asked me what I wanted to see him for, and I wouldn't tell him. He asked me why, and I said I wanted to see him before three or four times, and when I told my business, I wouldn't be allowed; and so I wouldn't tell my business to anybody but the director.

4078. Have you anything to complain of with regard to the nature of your work?—No, sir. I have nothing to say against the work. The prison work at present is quite easy.

4079. (Mr. De Vere.) You said that you made a report to the director against another officer?—Yes, sir, I did, another officer.

4080. What happened when you made that report?—There was two of them: one was named Wood, and I forget the other man's name; he is here. I would know him if I see him.

4081. (Dr. Lyons.) Is Wood here still?—No, sir; he is gone.

4082. (Mr. Brodick.) Do you know where he is now?—No, sir.

4083. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you state your case to the director?—Yes, sir.

4084. What did he say?—He said he would see to it.

4085. When was that?—It was some time after Christmas, the time this chapel here was newly built; because one morning I was at the chapel, and me and Dr. Mulcahy were sitting on a back seat, and this officer was sitting on the end of a stool; the stool is about 8 or 10 feet long. So Dr. Mulcahy and me were sitting near the middle, and this officer was sitting at the end, I was bleeding from the nose, sir, and it was in the winter time, after Christmas, I felt the blood running down, and I took my handkerchief and put it up. I have the mark of it here in this jacket sleeve; so I took out my handkerchief to stop the blood, and I made a noise this way (prisoner makes a guttural sound). The officer comes over to me, and service going on, and he says, "Don't be making that noise with your mouth, or I'll soon stop you," he says. I looked at the man, and, says I, "What do you mean?" "I'd soon let you know," says he, "if you don't stop that noise with your mouth." Here was the blood on the handkerchief at the same time.

4086. (Chairman.) Was this Wood?—No, sir, this was not Wood.

4087. (Dr. Lyons.) What was his name?—He is here still, sir; I don't know his name.

4088. And would you know him if you saw him?—Yes, sir, I would.

4089. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you report that to the director?—I did, sir.

4090. Did the director take any action on your complaint?—I haven't heard about it since.

4091. Have you ever had any annoyance from that officer since?—No, sir. I never had an annoyance from him since. I showed the blood after to the director.

4092. Did you complain to any person of your having to clean out privies and water-cans?—To the director, sir?

4093. To nobody at all; say officer?—I did to Roberts, sir. The man threatened to "run me in," that is to put me in the cells, if I gave him any more annoyance. If you say a word they call it abuse and annoyance.

4094. Is it part of the usual duty of a prisoner to clean any water-cans except his own?—No, sir; I don't think it is.

4095. Did you see any case in which other prisoners were required to do so?—Oh, now sir, I recollect; the excuse he gave was this, my left arm is bad with rheumatism for years. I was away at the farthest end of the prison in B ward, up two pair of stairs. I applied to be excused to be what they call "orderly," that is carrying dinners and message work around, because I couldn't lift anything weighty by one arm, and 'twas the largest number of dinners of any ward in the prison, to have to bring it from the farthest end of the prison. 'Twas very severe on me with one arm, because I couldn't change it. I applied to the governor to shift me to some place convenient to the kitchen here in one of those lower places here where I could bring it easier, and he wouldn't sir; so I had to do the best I could, and I told him in the end I wasn't able to do it any longer; so then he excused me from bringing it, and because I was excused from that, then this man afterwards used to make me take these large cans that they bring the water in to serve all the dormitories and cells, that because the governor excused me from carrying them, sir; and these tin shades that is over the gas lights he used to bring them, and make me scrape them in the cell, and because I spoke against that, sir, he locked me in the cell and deprived me of all exercise. I understand I wasn't allowed any exercise to keep me in to clean them.

4096. Did you refuse to clean them?—No, sir; I didn't refuse it. He brought them there for me and I had to do it the best way I could.

J. Murphy.
20 June 1875.

4097. When did this happen?—Well, that was in 1865 or 1867, I could not say, sir, which of the two in 1865 or 1867.

4098. Whose duty is it generally to clean those water cans. Is it done by the prisoners?—Well, I don't know, sir; I expect it has been, of course, but I don't know whether there is any specially picked out for it or not.

4099. Do you see any prisoner doing it now?—No, sir; I'm in a room. I don't see anything. I don't take notice of much.

4100. How long is it since you were stripped naked?—The last time I was stripped naked, sir, was in Pontonville; but here I was stripped in this bath-house and had to throw off all my clothes; but I hadn't to stand in my nakedness as I had to do in Pontonville. They would allow me to stand in the bath and throw off my clothes, and I'd have to stand naked inside and then they would put the clothes in again; but they used come in repeatedly to come and search me, but I didn't strip off naked. I believe Dr. Mulvaney had to strip off naked here, but I didn't.

4101. How often have you been stripped in the bath here?—I can't say, sir.

4102. Were you seen by any persons on these occasions?—No, sir; I shut out the door and stand until they search the things, and they would throw them back again. But in Pontonville they would stand in the cell there looking at me, sir.

4103. In Woking, when you were stripped naked, did they ever search your person?—No, not in Woking, sir; but they did in Pontonville.

4104. How often were you stripped at Pontonville?—Several times; I couldn't say how often, sir.

4105. In what sort of a room did it take place?—In a cell, something the same as the cells up in B ward in this prison; isn't so large, I think, as B ward cells; about the same as Mountjoy, in Dublin.

4106. On the occasions of your being stripped in the cell in Pontonville prison, who was present?—Some of those assistant wardens, sir.

4107. How many of them?—Sometimes two, sometimes three; never less than two.

4109. On the occasion of your being stripped, what was done?—When first I came to Pontonville we were all stripped there. I had to stand naked, as when I came to the world, then stand on one leg, then on another, turn round, look at us behind, sir, and stoop down and look at 'tis disgusting, sir; make us open our mouths, feel our hair and our ears. 'Tis disgusting, sir, to tell how we were used. I don't like to speak of it; feel around our ears and our hair, and open our mouth.

4110. How long used this examination to last?—I can't exactly say, not very long, sir; about 10 minutes; eight or 10 minutes; I couldn't say exactly.

4111. Before these examinations, when you were stripped, had they ever found anything secreted on you?—No, sir; they never found anything with most all, never. I made it a rule that I wouldn't leave myself in any one's power, and wouldn't break their rules. If I was to find a thing on the floor I wouldn't take it up.

4112. Can you state the names of any officers who were present and laughed at you when you were stripped?—No, sir. I don't know any of their names, and there are several officers in this place that I don't know their names while I am here.

4113. Were they wardens who were generally in charge of you?—One of them was in charge of me. He would always have one or two others with him. In fact, the man in charge of me, I didn't know his name. I didn't know the name of the warden that used to lock me up; I never asked and never spoke to any person. Nine months and three days that I was in solitary confinement I scarcely spoke to anyone.

4114. Have you any complaints to make as to the searching in Woking. Are you searched in any manner that you object to?—Well, in the end, sir, I protested against it.

4115. Where did you protest against it?—Here, sir, in Woking. I spoke against it the last time I was taken with the cold when we were working at the new prison. They took me to the bath-house and I wouldn't strip, so they never asked me since.

4116. Were you punished for refusing to strip?—No, sir.

4117. Can you tell whether the other prisoners, not the treason-felony prisoners, but the ordinary prisoners, are subjected to the same examination, or whether they are stripped as you describe?—In this bath-house in Woking they are, but not in Pontonville, they are not, nor in Mountjoy.

4118. Mountjoy is out of the question?—Yes, sir, Mountjoy is out of the question; not in Pontonville, nor they never had to put their clothes out at night, nor they weren't searched going out to exercise as we were, nor they didn't so undress themselves. I have asked several of them and they said they used never to be used that way. They used to see as used that way and they used to sympathize with us. We were held up as targets and we were badly used.

4119. (Cries out.) Do you wish to support that general statement by any particular instances that we may inquire into?—What I tell you is all true. I'll not leave it in anyone's power to say 'tis not. I would suffer death before I would tell a lie on the greatest enemy in the world.

4120. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you remember any particular instance of what you say, having accused, that you were scoffed and laughed at?—Pontonville, I could, sir.

4121. At what time was it?—In January and February 1865, sir.

4122. By what wardens?—Well, I don't know their names.

4123. In what division of the prison were you then?—F, I think, was the name, sir, as well as I can recollect.

4124. Did you get proper notice of the intended visit of this Commission to this prison?—Yes, sir; yes. I didn't know anything of it until we were locked up in our cells, and after we were locked up in the cells then they told us. I was brought in; I didn't know what it was for until I was locked up, and then I was told that the Commission was to come down. They asked me if I had anything to say to them, and I said "No." I declined, because I told them as I told you and the other gentlemen that met here, Pollock and Knox, the way they treated me I was determined not to have anything to do with them ever again.

4125. Were you offered pens, ink, and paper?—I was, sir; they took them to my cell.

4126. Did you take them?—No, sir.

4127. Do you wish for pens, ink, and paper?—No, sir, I have no desire for them. I have done the most of my time, sir; so I'll do the rest of it quietly and go away.

4128. You do not wish for pens, ink, and paper for the purpose of making any written statement to this Commission?—No, sir.

4129. Was leisure afforded to you to enable you to write any statement you may have desired to make?—Yes, sir; they kept me in the cell locked up, three or four days; five days I believe.

4130. Were the pens, ink, and paper left with you then?—No, sir, I told them to take them away, I wouldn't write. I haven't taken a pen in hands for five years, and I feel very awkward at it now.

4131. You said that you sometimes rejected the diet?—Yes, sir.

4132. What was your objection to the cheese?—
"Twas bad, sir; bad."

4133. What do you mean by "bad"?—Well, 'twas bad cheese, sir; very inferior cheese; I couldn't eat it.

4134. Inferior in quality?—Yes, sir, the worst kind of it.

4135. Was it bad of its kind?—Twas the worst kind; 'twas quite white; I don't know what 'twas like; I never see such stuff.

4136. Had it a bad smell?—It had, sir. I thought it better not to eat it than to be sick.

4137. Had it a bad taste?—I tasted it, and I couldn't swallow it. I couldn't eat it.

4138. You said that you rejected the share of beef soup?—Yes, sir.

4139. Why did you reject the share of beef soup?
—It used to make me sick, the nasty taste and smell of it, and it used to come up again.

4140. (Chapman.) How long ago is that?—I can't say exactly, sir, how long ago it is. I suppose Dr.
Chapman can tell.

4141. How often did you reject the soup for the bad smell?—I returned it for a long time; I never used it, it used to make me sick. I threw it up; I didn't take it at all.

4142. Do you mean to say that on one or more occasions after taking the soup your stomach rejected it?—Yes, sir, two or three times.

4143. Did you throw it up?—Yes, sir; throw it up.

4144. What was it that nauseated you?—The nasty, stinking smell, sir.

4145. What kind of smell was it?—Very disagreeable.

4146. Did it smell as if it was bad?—Yes, sir.

4147. And stink?—Yes, sir; a bad, nasty smell.

4148. As if it was stale?—I don't know whether it was stale or fresh, but it had a very nasty smell.

4149. Did it appear to you to be bad?—It did, sir; bad.

4150. You cannot state to us on how many occasions you rejected it because it was bad?—Oh, the officer used to take it down every day himself; he used to look it down, I believe. I suppose he has got an account of it.

4151. Did that occur in this prison?—In this prison, sir.

4152. Did it also occur in Pentonville?—No, sir.
In Pentonville 'tis superior to what it is here.

4153. Has that kind of soup ceased to be issued here now?—It is in use, sir; but not to the other prisoners. The other prisoners get it still.

4154. Was there anything else objectionable about it, besides what you have stated?—I don't know what it is composed of; all I know is that I couldn't eat it or use it.

4155. Did you ever notice anything objectionable in it?—I didn't; but I have heard several of them say they found dead mice in it, and that they took it back and showed it to the officer in the kitchen.

4156. Who do you know that stated that?—Some of the prisoners.

4157. Can you name one prisoner that stated it?—I couldn't. I used hear it when I was working at the new prison. I'm not amongst them now as I used to be.

4158. I want to know, can you name any individual prisoner who said that he found a dead mouse in the soup?—They used to be talking about it; these men,
I suppose, are all gone away.

4159. Can you remember any particular person who stated that he had seen a dead mouse in the soup?—No, sir, I can't. I can't think of the names now; there's a great many of them I heard talk and saying it.

4160. Did you hear it mentioned more than once?
—Oh yes, sir, I have; I heard it mentioned more than once. There are hundreds of prisoners here. I don't know their names. I pass them by, but don't know their names.

4161. You stated that you objected to the pudding also?—Yes, sir.

4162. Why did you object to the pudding?—
Because it used to feel very heavy and make me sick.

4163. Was there anything objectionable in the appearance, taste, or smell of the pudding?—It used to disagree with me very much, and I used to find it a great load on the stomach.

4164. I want to know whether you observed anything disagreeable in the taste, smell, or appearance of the pudding?—No, not to say any more than—in fact I am no judge of pudding. When I was outside
I never see any of that kind of pudding going out side.

4165. Have you been punished in any way in an English prison, since you came here?—Only once, that was through this political prisoner that is here.

4166. What punishment did you get then?—Three days' bread and water, sir, and 100 strokes remanding; that is equal to 13 days. The three days on bread and water I had no bed, no exercise, no book to read, only one blanket at night, no bed, but look on the hard boards in the winter, in the cold time of the year.

4167. In what sort of cell were you confined?—In a punishment cell, sir.

4168. Was it a dark cell?—No, sir; not a dark cell.

4169. Could you see to read in it?—Yes, sir; but they didn't leave me any books.

4170. Was there any book in it?—Yes, there was;
the chapel books, prayer books, but no library book.

4171. Was there light enough to read those books?
—Yes, sir; but no bed, only boards and one blanket at night.

4172. For how many days were you kept there?
—Three days, bread and water.

4173. What had you to sleep on at night?—Down on the board, with the clothes I had on me.

4174. Was there a raised place?—Yes, a raised place at the end, on which I slept.

4175. What had you to lie on?—A board.

4176. Had you a sheet under you?—Nothing but a board and these clothes, just as they are now, now on me. I put a blanket over me.

4177. You had no pillow?—No pillow.

4178. Were you kept there the full time?—I was kept there ten days and three nights, without being left out; no exercise.

4179. Was there a pot or closet in that cell?—Yes, sir; and 'tis a very disagreeable thing.

4180. Which was it?—A closet, sir.

4181. Did you observe a bad smell?—All the time, sir; very bad.

4182. What time of the year was it?—Twas cold weather; I couldn't exactly say what time of the year it was, but the governor has it in his book.

4183. Were you ever punished more than once in that way?—No, sir.

4184. Either in this prison or in Pentonville?—I was never punished in Pentonville.

4185. Then since you have come to England you have been punished only once?—Only once.

4186. By bread and water?—By bread and water, and that by a political prisoner the same as myself.
He told the governor I offered to fight him, and that because he wouldn't I called him a coward; I told him he was a coward or any man that would insult a man in here where he knows it isn't allowed; but if he was to do it to me outside I would resent it as a man. I said he was a coward to insult any one here.

4187. Did you suffer in health from the three days bread and water?—I did, sir. I was very bad after; pale and weak.

4188. In what way did you suffer?—I felt very weak and bad health.

4189. Did you suffer from hunger during the three days?—No, sir; I couldn't eat. They allowed me a pound of bread, I think, a day, and three pints of water, but after that I couldn't eat. I couldn't eat while I was in there, I suppose from the close confinement and foul air; there is no air at all there.

4190. Did you eat all your bread the first day?—I forgot, sir; but I know I didn't eat it all, for I left some there after I came out.

4191. Did you eat it the second day?—I forgot.

4192. Did you eat it the third day?—I left some after me in the cell.

4193. Did you feel more hungry the second day than the first day?—No, sir; I didn't feel any hunger at all. The third I day couldn't eat anything at all. I felt very weak, but no hunger.

4194. Did you feel any desire for food?—No, sir.

4195. When you came out of the cell had you any strong appetite?—No, sir. I had no desire for food, and there was bread there, but I couldn't eat.

4196. What food did you next get?—Friendliest, sir.

4197. Do you remember what the hour of the day was when you came out of the cell?—About 10 o'clock, sir.

4198. What was the hour for the next meal?—12 o'clock for dinner.

4199. Did you eat your dinner that day?—I forgot now; I had no appetite when I came out.

4200. Were you hungry or not when you left the cell?—No, I couldn't eat anything.

4201. Will you state positively that you were not hungry when you left the cell?—I wasn't hungry; I couldn't eat the bread nor drink the water.

4202. Had you a wish or a dislike for food at dinner that day when you were let out of the cell?—Well, I can't recollect now my feelings, but I recollect having no appetite at all. I was very weak for some days after; very bad; feverish.

4203. Did you hear any of the prisoners say that he had himself found a dead mouse in the soup?—Yes, sir; I have heard them say they found a dead mouse in it.

4204. Did you ever hear any of the prisoners say that he had himself found a dead mouse in the soup served to him?—Yes, I have heard a prisoner say he found it and took it out, and brought it down to the kitchen, and I have heard other men saying they saw it, and I have heard the man saying himself he took it out of it.

4205. Did you ever hear of any vermin being found in the soup besides the mice?—I have heard a man named Ryan have found some vermin in the gruel that he used.

4206. (Chairman.) Ryan is here?—Yes, sir. He found some rats' tail, I heard him talk.

4207. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you hear Ryan say that?—Yes, sir; that he found mice or rats' dirt in some gruel, and he showed it to the principal here.

4208. Is that Patrick Ryan?—Patrick Ryan, sir.

4209. Have you any complaints to make of the medical care taken of you in the prison, or in Pentonville?—Well, I was in Pentonville, I recollect and I felt bad there, and told the warden or the chief officer, the assistant warden; so he brought the doctor there, but instead of doing anything for me, he deprived me of exercise and wouldn't let me out; so that I forgot now how long I was locked up in the cell; he kept me in the cell and deprived me of exercise, and didn't give me—I forgot how 'twas.

4210. Who was that?—I don't know what the doctor's name was in Pentonville.

4211. What was the matter with you?—I felt very bad; scarcely able to walk; my feet were very bad; so he kept me in the cell, and as I was desiring to be let out I said I was better, to be let out in the air.

4212. You were complaining of your feet?—Yes, sir.

4213. Were you ordered anything to rub to your legs or feet?—No, sir; he didn't; and I told him one day, "Doctor" says I, "will you be kind enough to allow me to leave this bed?" The bed I used to lie on was a common door, so 'twas stretched out for them to lie down at night. I asked him if he would allow me to put it down on the floor and put my feet on it, because I noticed the asphaltic floor when I laid my feet on it and took them up 'twas quite wet. I said I thought the floor had no effect on people's feet says I, "Do you ever feel it?" He said he did. I felt my feet as if pins and needles were sticking through them, or like a person troubled with scum. Well, I asked the doctor if he would allow me to stand on this board to keep my feet off the floor, but he wouldn't; but the doctor said "You may lay it down if you like; I don't care what you do with it." Well, sir, they stripped me of my fannels; I wore fannels up to 25 at 30 years.

4214. They took away your fannels?—They took away my fannels when I was at Pentonville. I got pains all over me. I used to be shivering all day like a person in ague.

4215. How long were you left without the fannels?—Three or four weeks I think. It continued in December, and I forget whether 'twas in January or February I got the fannels back again. I told the doctor repeatedly to allow me to be in bed; he would not; I had to get up and 'twas a very cold time, the winter of 1868.

4216. During the time you were complaining of your feet were you ordered any medical application to rub to them?—No, sir; I never got anything to rub to them.

4217. Are you quite sure of that?—I don't think I ever got anything to rub to them.

4218. Can you remember whether you got anything to rub to your legs?—Well, to the best of my recollection I didn't. I think I did. I told them how bad my feet were, and even when I was coming away from Pentonville here, I didn't know where I was coming, I told the doctor I was scarcely able to walk, that the shoes I had were very bad.

4219. I want to know did you get any liniment or other medical preparation to rub to your limbs?—I recollect getting some medicine. I recollect the assistant or man bringing some bottles in there and giving me something out of a bottle, but I forget now how I used it.

4220. Did you get any medicine to drink by the month?—I recollect using medicine some how or another, but I forget now how I used it; but I don't recollect rubbing anything to my feet.

4221. (Dr. Greenhow.) Did you rub your shoulders with anything?—I had pains all over, sir.

4222. Did you not get something to rub your shoulders with?—I expect I have, sir, but I can't recollect; very probably I have. I recollect the doctor's assistant bringing in bottles and things, but I forget how I used the stuff he gave me.

4223. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you any complaint to make of your medical care and treatment since you have been in Woking?—No more than what I told you, sir.

4224. Has your sight become impaired?—Oh yes, sir, very much, and my hearing.

4225. How do you find that your sight has been impaired?—I can't say, unless 'tis the white wall and bad living; I suppose bad nourishment.

4226. By what means do you judge that it is impaired?—I can't see at all, sir, as I used to, and I had very good sharp sight.

4227. Had you far sight?—Well, I had far sight; I could see a long distance.

4228. Have you noticed any change in that respect; have you found that you cannot see objects at a distance?—Oh yes, I can't at all as well as I used. I often thought 'twas the bad usage and bad living so long, I can't see so well as I used.

4229. Can you see small or near objects as well?—No, sir.

4230. Do you read your prayer book or other books?—Yes, I read library books with the assistance of my glasses, but I can't see a letter at all so I used to, and before I was in prison I could read without glasses.

4231. Were you in the habit of using glasses before you came to prison?—Not very long, sir. How I came to use glasses first, sir, I had no occasion to use glasses, but 'twas a friend of mine that died, and left this, a keesake like, and I kept it, so 'twas for that that I used it. I can't read anything now, sir, without glasses.

4232. You say that you are not able fully to use your left arm. How then did you carry the tin can?—There is a long stick and you have to take one end and another man takes the other end, "Tis carried by two, sir."

4233. Are you now put to work at the pumps?—Yes, sir; that's quite easy.

4234. Does it distress you?—No, sir; a child can do it.

4235. You do not object to it?—No objection at all, sir, to it.

4236. Have you any objection to make against warden Scamond?—Yes, sir; he gave me a great deal of annoyance when I came here.

4237. What complaints have you to make against him?—He has given me a good deal of annoyance when I first came here.

4238. In what way did he give you annoyance?—When I would be coming down and have nothing to do he would make me take these large baskets of clothes, baskets of clothes with the prisoners' changes. They need to take them at a Saturday night. On coming down he would make me take them when it wouldn't be my place to do it at all, and plenty of young men there. He would pick me out and make me bring it on my shoulder which I am not able; and he would make me pick up the dirt buckets when 'twasn't my place; all such little things as that. He would pick me out and make me bring this dirt bucket the whole length of the prison; and he has repeatedly locked me up in the cell, and deprived me of my exercise, finding fault with everything I did.

4239. Do you now wish for pens, ink, and paper, to enable you to write any statement for the Commission?—No, sir; I'm not in the habit of writing now. I don't wish to write any more.

4240. Is there any friend, any legal adviser, or other friend, that you would wish to see and advise with, in regard to any statement you may desire to make to this Commission?—I don't see any good 'twould do me, sir. All I want or seek is, if I be allowed the time from the first trial. Here's Mr. Dillon here, and others, they were allowed from the first assizes and I'm not. I think I ought to be allowed that as well as they.

4241. (Mr. Brodick.) If you were allowed that, how soon would your term be out?—About two months more, sir. 'Twould shorten it four months. The 17th July 'I'll be five years.

The prisoner withdrew.

PATRICK STAN, prisoner, examined.

4256. (Chairman.) Do you come from the hospital?—Yes, sir.

4256. How long have you been here?—Since Wednesday week, sir.

4257. You have handed us a statement which has been carefully read by the Commissioners. I hold it in my hand now. I will first tell you who the gentlemen that you see here are: that is Mr. De Vere, that is Dr. Lyons, that is Dr. Greenhow, that Mr. Brodick, and I am Lord Devon. Any statement that you may desire to make you have the full liberty of making. It will be taken down here by a shorthand writer. It will be made without its being overheard by any person connected with the prison, and whatever you may say you can say and state freely, because it will not be asked in any way to prejudice or injure you in your future position. I will ask you first a few questions connected with what you have stated here, and then you will have an opportunity of stating anything you wish?—I am a little deaf, sir. [The prisoner was allowed to stand nearer the Chairman.]

4258. Have you heard me say who the Commissioners are?—Yes, sir.

4259. Have you heard me say that any statement

4242. (Dr. Lyons.) What remission have you obtained in prison?—There's one year and seven months remission allowed, sir.

4243. How much have you earned?—If I get it all, with the exception of these 13 days and some days I have been in hospital, sir, I expect.

4244. Did any one ever inform you when you came into prison that you had the power of appealing to the Secretary of State?—No, they never told me anything about that.

4245. Are you aware that prisoners have a power of appeal to the Secretary of State?—I never inquired sir.

4246. Are you aware of it?—Well, I know Colonel Burke, here, he wrote to the Secretary of State about something.

4247. How did you know that prisoners had the power of writing to the Secretary of State?—No more than that I know they wrote.

4248. Did any one ever tell you anything about it, connected with this prison or Pentonville?—No, sir; no one ever mentioned it to me at any time, but one of those warders asked me if I ever petitioned. I told him "No, I never did, I never did anything I was afraid or ashamed of, and I wouldn't be begging."

4249. (Chairman.) Are there other treason-felony prisoners sleeping in the same room with you?—Yes, sir.

4250. Who are they?—General Bourke, sir, is one, and the others are in hospital at present; only General Bourke and me, and another prisoner.

4251. Is that Thomas Bourke?—Yes, sir; but I have been all the time in a cell until I believe the last 10 or 11 months. I have been always in a cell. I have been up to four years in a cell, nearly, about.

4252. (Mr. De Vere.) When they took away your fannels in Pentonville, did you complain of it?—I did sir. I told the doctor there. I says, "I have been wearing fannels for the last 30 years and I'm getting a trembling all over me, and pains all over me, and cold and shivering, cold as if I was in a pond, in a lake, naked"; and he caught a hold of the trousers and he says, "That's a very good 'trousers' the doctor says, 'I don't see anything cold in that.'" Well, I says, "I can feel cold without the fannels."

4253. What doctor was that?—I don't know what his name was.

4254. How long after you made the complaint did you get the fannels?—'Twasn't about three or four weeks. I can't exactly say.

you may desire to make, you will now have a full opportunity of making privately to us and out of the hearing of any person connected with the prison?—Yes, sir.

4260. Have you heard me say that what you state will be taken down by a shorthand writer, but that it will not be used in any way to injure you, and that it will not prejudice your position in prison?—Yes, sir.

4261. I will begin with when you came to Millbank. You came there on the 30th March 1868?—Yes, sir.

4262. Tell us what happened when you got there first?—At the first time I went to Millbank, when I was received at the reception ward, I was in such a hurry at the time. Don't take down, sir, what I am saying at the present moment. At the time I was acquainted with the Commission, I didn't know what to say, for I was told they would be here in the preceding week. On my reception to Millbank I was taken to the reception ward and stripped naked, and searched in the presence of two officers and my fellow-prisoners. I had my arms extended from my body while naked, looked in my mouth and the entrance of my ears, up my nostrils and up my fundament, sir, and compelled me to rise up one leg, and looked under my toes, and then the other, and handled my testicles; that was the last thing they did.

4283. While you were asked?—Yes, sir, while I was asked. Then I was taken and put into a bath.

4284. Do you mean to say that they actually touched your private parts?—Yes, sir.

4285. You were then put into a bath?—I was then put into a bath, sir.

4286. How often were you searched in that way?—Once a week, sir. None of the other prisoners were searched the same time that I was, only on two occasions, during the time I was there.

4287. If the other prisoners were searched in the same way, you do not know?—I don't know, but I saw them once. I mentioned that.

4288. On the two occasions that you remember, there was a general search. What took place between you and the warder then?—I washed myself as well as I possibly could, and I got out to get my own clothes to put them on again, and the principal warder told me to lay them down and take up the prison clothes, so I took them up. They were tied in a small bundle. They were worn by other prisoners. I didn't know whom at the time; and then I was conveyed to a cell, and was kept in the cell for that day and night, and then I was put up to the orderly ward.

4289. What is the "orderly ward"?—Where they work, sir.

4290. What kind of work is it?—Tailoring, sir.

4291. Were you at any time found fault with while you were there?—Several times, sir.

4292. What was that for?—For not doing sufficient work, sir.

4293. How was it that you did not do sufficient work?—Because I couldn't; it was strange to me and very awkward.

4294. What work were you at before coming in?—I was a hollenmaker by trade. I asked to be allowed to work at my own trade, but of course I couldn't work there at that time.

4295. There was none of that work there that you know?—No, I don't know.

4296. Were you employed in any other work but the tailoring?—No, sir, only tailoring during the time I was there.

4297. Were you not employed to wash and scrub the prison?—Yes, sir, four times a week.

4298. You took your turn at that?—Yes, I had my morning every four mornings.

4299. Who did it the other three days?—Then were the only four mornings of the week that all the prisoners should do the same. I was doing one part, and another prisoner was doing another part.

4300. Had you ever any conversation with the warder about that work?—No, sir.

4301. Did he find fault with the way in which you did that work?—Yes, sir, he did.

4302. What did he say?—He told me I was like a man that never saw a thing learned in my life, and took the flannel out of my hand to show me how to put the water on.

4303. You were also put to work at the pumps?—Yes, sir.

4304. How many men did it take to work the pump?—29 men, sir.

4305. Not all of them at once?—Yes, sir, 29 men at once.

4306. How long did you work there each day?—Half an hour each day.

4307. Did you work there every day in the week?—Yes, sir, every day in the week.

4308. Did you ever object to working on any one day of the week?—I objected to it once, sir; that was on a Sunday that I was to receive the blessed sacrament, and the officer told me I couldn't, that it would be better for me to work at the pump, that it would do me more service.

4309. What time used you to work at the pump?—When we used to go to exercise in the morning.

4290. What time used you to go to the Cathode chapel on Sunday there?—To the best of my belief I think it was about 9 o'clock, sir.

4291. And used the pumping to be done before that?—Yes, sir.

4292. Can you tell us whether working at the pump was over before 9 o'clock?—I cannot, sir. Several wards used to exercise in the area at different hours of the day, and during different hours the pump used to be continuing work.

4293. (Mr. Brodick.) Were you unable to take the sacrament that day when you were kept at the pump?—No, sir; because, of course, I had to tell the priest about it afterwards.

4294. (Dr. Lysons.) Did you receive the blessed sacrament that morning?—Yes, sir.

4295. You did?—Yes, sir.

4296. After working the pump?—Yes, sir.

4297. (Chairman.) How often used you to bathe while you were there?—Once a fortnight, sir.

4298. Were the baths divided by partitions?—They were divided from each other by partitions, but there were holes in the baths.

4299. At the bottom?—In the sides, sir.

4300. So that the water flowed through?—The water flowed through. It was all one water.

4301. How many men had one water to bathe in?—Sometimes there were would be four men, sir.

4302. How do you know that?—Because I know by the dirt that would be on the top of the water, that there would be no clean water.

4303. The water would be dirty when you went in?—Yes, sir.

4304. You state that men that had sores were often in. How do you know that?—Because I saw them with the bandages tied on their legs.

4305. You saw men going to bathe near you with bandages on their legs?—I saw them after coming out of the baths, sir, and the bandages on again.

4306. Who saw that besides yourself?—Well, I couldn't say, sir.

4307. Was the officer by?—Yes, sir, the warder was by.

4308. (Dr. Lysons.) Could you name any warder that saw it?—Well, I couldn't name any warder there, sir, because I didn't know them.

4309. Could you name any particular day on which it occurred that you had to enter a bath out of which you saw men come with sores on their legs?—No, sir; I could not.

4310. Could you name any man who saw it?—No, sir; I didn't know their names, because I wasn't allowed to speak to anybody; not a single sentence.

4311. (Chairman.) What sort of food had you while you were at Millbank?—I had eight ounces of bread in the morning, sir, and three quarters of a pint of porridge; for dinner, I don't know whether it was four or five ounces of beef or mutton, or three days of the week, and skins-of-beef soup on one day of the week in Millbank; I think it is, and soup on Thursday.

4312. What is the Sunday dinner?—Bread and cheese, sir.

4313. Did you find that you could eat that food?—I could not, sir.

4314. Why not?—Because I was used to better food, sir.

4315. Did you return your food at any time?—Yes, sir, on several occasions.

4316. What was the consequence of that?—Because I couldn't eat it, sir.

4317. That was the cause of it; but what was the consequence of your giving it back; did you get any other food in place of it, or was the doctor sent to you?—No, sir; the doctor was not sent to me.

4318. Was anything else given to you that day when you returned the first food you had?—No, sir, there was not.

4319. Then you went without it?—I went without it, sir. I got nothing for the food I returned. The officer asked me why I was returning my food, and I told him I could not use it. He told me it was quite good enough for me, and that he would keep and help me to use it.

4320. He said he would help you to use it?—He said it was good enough for me, and that if I was there five or six months, perhaps I would be very glad to have it to eat; and that if I didn't eat it, he would come and cut it for me.

4321. You speak of an occasion here when you asked the officer to let you out of your cell to get a pint of drinking water?—Yes, sir; that was at half-past eight o'clock at night.

4322. It was after you were locked up?—No, we were not locked up then, sir.

4323. What did he say to you when you asked him that?—He told me "No;" that I could have no water at that time of the night. He told me to drink the water out of my bucket.

4324. You had water in a bucket?—I had since 6 o'clock in the morning, and pieces of pudding I had inside.

4325. Did he say anything else?—He said it was good enough for me, and I couldn't get no more that night; "You damned Fenian yes," says he.

4326. "You damned Fenian"?—Yes, sir; he hadn't the door open at the time, and I didn't know who the officer was.

4327. He was outside and you inside the door?—Yes, sir.

4328. When he used the words, "You damned Fenian," he was outside in the ward?—He was outside in the ward, sir.

4329. Was there anybody there to hear what he said?—I don't know, sir, unless the men in the next cells may hear it.

4330. (Dr. Ligonier.) Do you know who the men in the cells were?—I would know them by eyesight; but I couldn't tell their names, sir.

4331. (Chairman.) How long ago was that?—It is a good bit ago, sir.

4332. How long have you been in this prison?—I have been 12 months the 12th May last.

4333. (Mr. De Vere.) What is the period of your sentence; how long are you in for?—Five years, sir.

4334. (Chairman.) When were you entering from pain in the back and across your chest; what time of the year was it?—I think it was about winter time, sir, or close on winter.

4335. Did you apply for the doctor?—Yes, sir; I did; I applied to Dr. Wilson.

4336. What did he say to you?—I asked him if he please to give me a bandage. No, sir, I was going astray; indeed I quite forget what I am saying.

4337. Did he say anything about you wanting to see anybody?—I told him I was suffering from pain across the back and chest, and he told me then I wanted to see Thomas Johnson.

4338. What is the meaning of that?—I don't know, sir.

4339. Did you ever hear of any man of that name?—I heard of several men of the name.

4340. You do not know what the doctor meant by Thomas Johnson?—I do not, sir.

4341. What else did he say to you?—I asked him, would he be so kind as to explain to me what he meant by the words "Thomas Johnson," and he said, "That will do." I asked him if he please to give me a bandage to wear round my waist, as I was in the habit of wearing one from my infancy, and he said if I got a bandage all the prisoners in the prison should get them. I told him all the prisoners in the prison wouldn't require them, only those wanting them, or suffering from the same complaint as myself.

4342. Did you ever get the bandage?—I did not, sir.

4343. What complaint was it that you had; were you ruptured?—No, sir; but I had a pain across the chest and small of the back, from the tailoring.

4344. Had you been in the habit of wearing flannels?—Yes, sir, from my infancy.

4345. When was it that they took away the flannels from you?—This was in Cardiff prison.

4346. When did you get the flannels again?—When I was brought back for trial, sir.

4347. Was that in Cardiff?—Yes, sir.

4348. When you came to Millbank, had you flannels on?—I had my own clothes, when I came to Millbank.

4349. When they gave you the prison dress, did they give you flannels?—They did, sir.

4350. Were you allowed to keep the prison flannels always?—Yes, sir.

4351. You have no complaint to make of their having been taken from you?—No, sir, not in prison; not since I got them.

4352. Have you sufficient clothing in prison?—My clothing is not sufficient in winter time, sir; 'tis very bare, and my legs are very bare from the knee down, sir, exposed to wind and all sorts of weather.

4353. You have woollen stockings?—I have woollen stockings, sir.

4354. But you are not accustomed to wear breeches?—I always wore trousers, sir.

4355. You came to this prison on the 12th May last year?—I did, sir.

4356. What happened to you when you came here?—When I came here on the 12th May, I was brought into this ward and stripped naked by the principal warder, and searched after leaving Millbank prison; and I objected to strip, sir, and I told him I had nothing in my possession at that time; and then he said it was a general rule throughout all prisons for prisoners to be searched on their reception, so I had to submit, and was stripped.

4357. And you were searched?—Yes, sir.

4358. Were you searched in the same way as you were at Millbank?—No, sir, I was not.

4359. Not so minutely?—I had to take off the clothes, sir, but they didn't examine my person.

4360. (Dr. Ligonier.) No hand was put on you?—No, sir, not one.

4361. (Chairman.) What ward were you placed in?—D ward, sir, right.

4362. Is that the ward of the separate class?—It is, sir.

4363. What work were you put to?—First I was put into the knitting shed, sir, to knit stockings, and I remained there for a time. I didn't find I was getting my health very well there.

4364. Did you apply to any of the officers in consequence?—I applied to the governor to get work outside to see if I could get my health better, and he put me to outside work.

4365. What kind of work was it?—Drawing cars, sir.

4366. Did you find that better?—I found it better at the time, sir, but still it wasn't very heavy on my chest, and I found it came aguish me.

4367. Did you tell the doctor or the governor that?—I told the governor afterwards in a very short time, because I couldn't agree with the men that were working along with me; they were such very noisy spoken fellows, and I couldn't listen to the conversation.

4368. Are six or eight men, when they are drawing cars, allowed to talk?—Yes, sir, but not to a very high extent.

4369. In consequence of that, what did you do?—I went to the governor and applied to him that I would be very thankful if he would be pleased to take me from that party I was in, and put me in some place else.

4370. What did he say?—He put me back to the shed again, sir.

4371. That is the knitting shed?—To the knitting shed, sir.

4372. How long did you continue there?—Until, I think, the month of January last; I was put out then to work the pump with my fellow-prisoners.

4373. How many work at the pump?—Sometimes three or four, sir.

P. Ryan.
20 June 1879.

4374. It is not hard work, is it?—It is hard work if a man works at it if he likes.

4375. Four men at the time were put at it?—Four men at the time, sir.

4376. You did not find it try your strength?—Of course, if I worked hard; but I didn't, for I couldn't work hard.

4377. (Dr. Lyons.) How long is each man obliged to work at it?—Half an hour, sir.

4378. (Chairman.) That is the work you are at since you came into hospital?—Yes, sir, since I came into hospital.

4379. How did you come into hospital?—I think it was last Wednesday week, sir.

4380. Have you anything to complain of in regard to the attendance and attention of the doctor to you? Did he do everything that was necessary for you, as far as you know?—Well, at the first time I came here, sir, with regard to my food, I couldn't see it.

4381. You were accustomed to other food you say?—Yes, sir.

4382. Has the doctor attended to you, and had you everything you wanted during the time you were ill?—The doctor attended to me, sir, pretty well.

4383. Have you anything to complain of in that respect?—Well, I don't believe I have, sir, this present time.

4384. What is the rule as to the mode of bathing in this prison, is it different from that at Millbank?—Well, it is just the same, sir.

4385. Is the separation between the baths the same?—The separation between the baths and the water is all.

4386. In common?—No, sir; every two baths is one water, and then after two prisoners wash there is clean water put in for two more.

4387. Was there any occasion on which you declined to strip in order to bathe?—In this prison, sir?

4388. Yes?—Yes, sir.

4389. When was it?—On the 18th August, I think.

4390. Tell us about it. How did it happen?—It was a customary thing for prisoners to be stripped; once a month, all prisoners to be stripped, and I being working along with them at the time in the hulking shed, I was taken with the party, sir, to this bathing room, and to the best of my belief there was somewhere about 30 prisoners in at the time. I saw them stripping off their clothes, and the officers taking some of them into the baths, and stripping them naked, and I kept my clothes on, and the officer, Mr. Vaughan, was his name, he came forward and asked me if I objected to strip, and I said, "Yes." "All right, Ryan," said he, "we shall see about you;" so in the course of an hour or three quarters of an hour's time, I was brought before the chief warden and he stated his case.

4391. (Mr. Brodribk.) What is the chief warden's name?—I think Mr. Allison is his name, sir, and he asked me what reason had I for not stripping; I told him that I was a political prisoner, and I thought it was very unjust that I should strip in the presence of so many criminals; and he told that I was no better than any other, and that I disobeyed the officer's order and violated the prison rules. I just told him I never disobeyed the officer's order nor violated the prison rules, that I should be very sorry for doing so. He then told me that I was here as a prisoner, and that I should be treated as any other prisoner while I was here, "and another thing," said he, "your ability is not so high enough, and there's men here of higher ability than what you are."

4392. He used the word "shifty"?—Yes, sir; "men of higher ability than you are, are subject to the prison rules," and with that he ordered me off to the punishment cells, where I was stripped naked and searched, my clothes, not my person, sir.

4393. You told him before that you would be ready to be stripped in a private cell?—Yes, sir, I asked him, what is the reason that I wouldn't be stripped here like I was in Millbank.

4394. Did you say, "Why can't I be stripped in a private cell"?—Yes, sir, I thought it unfair.

4395. How long did you stay in that cell that you were put into on that occasion?—I stopped there 24 hours, sir.

4396. (Dr. Lyons.) What food had you there during that time?—I had the same food, sir.

4397. What bed clothes had you?—I had the same bed clothes, too, sir.

4398. What bed had you?—A plank bed, sir; a small sort of mattress, I believe.

4399. (Chairman.) There was some occasion when you were charged with laughing in school?—I beg your pardon, sir, till I describe the cell I was in. When I went into the cell there was a closet in it with no lid; in the morning when I got out of bed I should wash myself, and empty the water into this closet, and every time I used my pot during the day; there was no water to take the nonsense away, so that there was a very bad smell in it, sir, all day.

4400. Did you remain there until evening then?—I was put in, sir, about 8 o'clock in the morning; I had to remain until about 9 o'clock the next morning, until I was brought before Mr. Bramley, the governor.

4401. When was the occasion on which you were brought before the warden for laughing in school?—Yes, sir, I was.

4402. What was it about?—It is a customary thing with the school prisoners to work an hour in the morning; we go to school from that till dinner time. I stood up from where I was, to go to the watercloset, sir, and the officer told me to go back and take my seat. I turned round, and I may have smiled at my disappointment at not going to the watercloset; but he told me then that I laughed at him, and I never thought of doing so; I hadn't the slightest idea of it. Then he brought me before the chief warden and stated that I laughed at him. The chief warden asked me what I had to say; I told him that I was innocent of what I was accused of. He said, "Take him off to the cell; that will do; do you want to make the officer a liar?" so I was taken, sir, and treated as before, 24 hours.

4403. You were put in the same sort of cell?—I was put in the same sort of cell, sir, and got no exercise.

4404. Could you tell us what day that was?—I could not, sir.

4405. Can you tell us who was the warden that charged you with laughing at him?—Mr. Knoller, sir, was the officer; he is an assistant warden.

4406. Is there anything else that you wish to say to the Commission with reference to what you said in this letter?—Well, I don't believe there is, sir.

4407. Have you anything to complain of besides what you have stated here in this paper and have now stated to me, at any times in reference to your diet, or your clothing, or your treatment by the officers. Have you anything to add to what you have said here?—Well, with regard to my diet, sir, I can't exactly tell what time my fellow-prisoners were put on the change of diet. It was on the 22nd I had change of diet.

4408. (Mr. Brodribk.) The 23rd of the present month?—The 23rd December, sir.

4409. (Chairman.) Your diet was made better?—Yes, sir; it is better three days in the week, but the other days it is the same as the other prisoners.

4410. Have you anything to complain of in reference to the opportunities afforded you of attending chapel. Have you full opportunity of attending at the chapel and of seeing the priest when you wish it?—Yes, sir.

4411. (Mr. Brodribk.) When you were stripped at Millbank, are you quite certain that other prisoners were present?—Yes, sir, I am.

4412. Were they in the same room; was it in a room like this, or where was it?—It was in a corridor, sir, in a large corridor that is round the prison.

4413. And when you were stripped naked the other prisoners could have seen you?—The other prisoners did see me, sir.

4414. Besides the warders?—Besides the warders, sir.

4415. How was it that you were stripped here in the baths; are not the baths divided from each other?—Yes, sir, they are.

4416. Then if a man was stripped naked in one of those baths could he be seen by others?—No, sir, he could not; he might be seen by the men in front, but could not be seen by the men at one side, because the door may not be closed enough at the time.

4417. Then when you objected to be stripped naked here, it was not because you would have been seen by other prisoners?—It was partly that, sir, and partly to not being stripped at all, sir. I had an objection to it both ways, sir.

4418. At Millbank when that officer called you a "damned Fenian," did you complain to the governor?—No, sir, I did not. I was foolish, and didn't do it at the time; because another thing, it would be no use for me, because the governor wouldn't believe me. I didn't know the officer; I couldn't see him; my door was shut; I only heard the words outside the door, sir.

4419. Did you ever complain to the governor at Millbank?—No, sir; I did not.

4420. Have you ever complained to the governor here on any subject?—I complained to him, sir, about the time that I have been separated from my fellow-prisoners, and about the conversation that I heard with other prisoners to be so filthy.

4421. Did you complain to him that you were not associated with the other Fenian prisoners?—Yes, sir, I did.

4422. What did he say?—He told me that it was not in his power to do anything for me; that I should go to the director and hold my own counsel.

4423. Did you make an application to the director?—I did, sir.

4424. What reply did the director give you?—He told me that they were tried in Ireland, and I was tried in Wales, and that I could not be allowed to be associated with them. I told him I was convicted on the same charge as them, and why not be allowed to associate with them. "Another thing," said he, "you are not of the same class."

4425. Did the director say that?—He did, sir.

4426. (Dr. Lyons.) What director?—Mr. Pagan, sir.

4427. (Mr. Brodrick.) Who was it that told you you were not of the same ability as the others?—Mr. Allison, sir.

4428. That was the chief warder?—Yes, sir.

4429. The director did not use any expression like that, but said, "You are not of the same class"?—He said I was not of the same class.

4430. When you were put into the punishment cells, by whose order was it done?—By the chief warder, sir, by Mr. Allison's orders.

4431. If I understand you, you got the same diet as that cell?—Yes, sir, I did.

4432. And was the cell itself as good a cell as the one you had been in?—No, sir; not at all.

4433. What was the difference?—Because, in the first place, sir, there was no stool nor chair to sit on; nothing but this plank bed; and it was both dark and gloomy.

4434. Was it not so light as the cell you had been in?—No, sir; at least, I fancied so.

4435. Were you allowed books to read?—Yes, sir; I was allowed books to read at the time, because I wasn't punished by the governor.

4436. Were you brought before the governor the next day?—I was, sir.

4437. On each of those three occasions that you have mentioned?—Two occasions, sir.

4438. What happened when you came before the governor?—When I went before the governor I staid to him as well as I possibly could, I told him what I had to say, and he discharged me.

4439. On both occasions?—On both occasions he didn't see the case strong enough, I daresay, for me to be punished.

4440. It was on one of those occasions that you were confined on the charge of laughing at the officer?—It was, sir.

4441. You have told us in your written statement that the governor then made some remark to you about a prisoner's word. Do you recollect that?—I do, sir.

4442. What was it that he said?—He told me in the statement that I was making to him there were several prisoners in the room that could certify I didn't laugh at the officer, and the governor told me he wasn't supposed to take a prisoner's word, one way or another. Prisoners in the prison now, sir, will say the very same thing; I didn't laugh at him.

4443. But you were not further punished?—No, sir, I was not.

4444. Have you any other complaints to make against warders in this prison? Have you been ill-treated by them in any other respect?—Well, I have, sir, several times. I have been on several occasions trying to get an opportunity of speaking to my fellow-prisoners when they were separated from me, and the officers would speak very angry to me, and tell me they would report me, and one thing or another, and if I wanted to speak a word or attempted to speak they would threaten in the most bitter language.

4445. Have you ever complained to the governor of that?—No, sir, I have not. I took everything as quiet as I possibly could, sir.

4446. You have spoken of having to clean the mistal which had been used by other prisoners?—So I have, sir.

4447. Was that what other prisoners were expected to do?—Yes, sir, in their turn.

4448. You have also spoken of feeling very cold in winter?—Yes, sir.

4449. Will you say what clothing you wear in winter?—I will, sir. I have got a shirt, jacket of the same material as this, sir, and this waistcoat, and just the same dress as I have at this moment.

4450. Under that waistcoat what would you have in winter?—A shirt, flannel, sir.

4451. And under the trousers should you wear drawers?—Drawers, sir.

4452. Are they woollen drawers?—Yes, sir, woollen drawers.

4453. Is there a frock used in winter?—Yes, sir.

4454. Over the jacket?—Over the jacket.

4455. Do you not find that warm enough?—No, sir.

4456. Not here?—No, sir. I have been in the habit of working in the iron-works in Wales, in a hot place, and was always accustomed to very warm clothing, especially when the weather would be cold.

4457. Have you anything to complain of about sending or receiving letters?—Well, no, sir; I have not.

4458. With regard to the visits of your friends, have you anything to complain of?—I have not, sir. I have got no friends to visit me, sir. Yes, sir, with regard to the visit I received in Swansea from my father.

4459. I am afraid we are not to go into that. We are not empowered to inquire into what happened at Swansea?—Well, I have nothing else to say.

4460. Have you ever petitioned the Home Secretary?—I have written a petition once in Millbank, but I daresay it was not of much use.

4461. Did you ever receive a reply?—I received a reply that there was not sufficient grounds to grant me a pardon.

4462. On what grounds did you petition?—On the injustice of the charge of which I was convicted.

4463. Have you ever petitioned since on that ground?—No, sir.

P. Ryan.

30 June 1870.

P. Ryan.

28 June 1870.

4464. Have you ever petitioned on any other ground?—No, sir.

4465. (Mr. De Vere.) On what occasion was it that the officer said to you "He wants to make his office a bar, that will do, take him off to the cell." When was that said to you?—That was at the time, sir, that I laughed at the officer.

4466. Were you taken to the cell then?—I was, sir.

4467. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you laugh at the officer?—I did not, sir.

4468. (Mr. De Vere.) Was there more than one officer present in the school at the time?—No, sir.

4469. Did you offer to bring forward any person that was present at the time to prove that you did not laugh at the officer?—Well, I didn't offer to bring forward anybody, but I told the governor there were several men that could certify that I didn't laugh at him.

4470. Was it on that occasion that the governor said he was not supposed to take the word of another prisoner?—It was, sir.

4471. You complain about wearing clothes that have been worn by other persons?—Yes, sir.

4472. Were the clothes that were given to you dirty or worn out?—They were dirty, sir, and worn out. The first time I entered them, sir, I never got a new suit of clothing; so that I have been furnished with only this new breeches; I have now a new pair of boots; these are the only new articles I got of prison clothing while I am in prison.

4473. When you say the winter clothing is not warm enough, do you speak of the second-hand clothing that you got, or would you think it warmer if you got it new?—Well, I would think it much better, sir, if I could be allowed trousers instead of breeches to cover my legs.

4474. That coat on you is an old coat; if it was new it would be a great deal warmer?—Yes, it would, sir.

4475. Would you find the clothing warm enough in the winter if it were new?—I couldn't say, sir, but I think it would be warmer.

4476. When is it that you feel the cold most?—Up about the body, sir.

4477. But at what time; is it when you are in or out?—When I am out at exercise, sir.

4478. What is your work?—Pumping, sir.

4479. And it is when you are pumping you feel the cold?—Yes, sir; when I am standing.

4480. Do you find your bed-clothes pretty warm at night?—They are pretty fair, sir.

4481. What clothing do you wear on your body at night?—In summer time we have got two sheets.

4482. What body clothing have you at night?—Shirt and flannels, sir.

4483. Do you wear flannels at night?—Yes, sir.

4484. If the night was cold, would you be allowed to put your day clothes on the top of the bed clothes?—Well, in this prison, sir, they are allowed to do it, but I have not seen it before.

4485. Are you obliged to put your clothing out of the cell at night?—Not in this prison, sir.

4486. I think you said in your statement, that at one time when you were suffering from bowel complaint you had a difficulty in being allowed to the water-closet?—Yes, sir, I had.

4487. Could you put out the signal stick if you liked?—Yes, sir; that was in Millbank.

4488. If you put out the signal stick and told the warder you were unwell, would not he allow you to go out to the necessary?—No, sir; he would not.

4489. Did you ever try that?—I did, sir, on several occasions; I put my signal stick out, and as soon as the officer came and asked me what I wanted, I told him I wanted to go to the closet as I was very bad. He would say, "I can't let you out." Then I would have to use my pot and leave it there until morning.

4490. Did you on any of these occasions say that you wanted to see the doctor?—Yes, sir, on one occasion.

4491. What did he say?—He told me I couldn't see the doctor then, sir.

4492. What hour was that?—About a quarter past eight o'clock in the evening, sir.

4493. Was it after he had refused you permission to go to the closet that you told him you wanted to see the doctor?—No, sir.

4494. How then?—It was at a time that I had been lying down in bed, sir. I had been stripped, and he wanted me to get up, sir, for to give him my pint to put the gravel in; I told him I would be very thankful if he would be so kind as to lay it on the bucket, which was the table in the room, and he told me if I didn't get up he would soon find a way to make me.

4495. Do you know the name of that officer?—I do not, sir.

4496. How long ago is it?—Well, I daresay it is somewhere about a year and seven months, sir, to the best of my opinion.

4497. You say in your paper that the time allowed you for preparation was short. If we were to come here a few days hence, would you wish to have any additional time given you to make any further statement or to recollect yourself better?—Sir, with regard to the statement that I have made, I was in such a hurry about trying to get ready against Saturday, I thought it wasn't good enough to appear before gentlemen. I was very sorry for doing it the way that I did do it; that was the only thing that I meant, sir.

4498. Do you wish to amend it at all. If you had a few days more to think about it, do you think you would make any alteration in it or add anything?—No, sir; I think it will do as present.

4499. (Dr. Greenhow.) Has your food always been wholesome here?—The food, sir, is very wholesome; in regard of that shin-of-beef soup, sir, and the pudding, that is the only thing I couldn't use at all.

4500. You have never found the food not pleasant in any way?—I did, sir.

4501. What did you find?—I found the gruel on one occasion.

4502. What was the matter with it?—I found some vermin dirt in it, sir; mooses' dirt.

4503. When was that?—I think it was some time in the month of August.

4504. You never found it more than on one occasion?—No, sir.

4505. And you never found any other kind of impurity in your food, excepting that one time?—Well, I have not, sir.

4506. (Chairman.) Are you quite sure that it was vermin dirt?—Yes, sir, I am, for I showed it to Mr. Prescott, the principal warder.

4507. Is Mr. Prescott here now?—He is, sir.

4508. What did you say to him about it?—I told him it was fit for no man to use.

4509. What did he say?—That he had no more to do with it, only that I should send it in as a complaint.

4510. Did you send it in as a complaint?—I complained to Dr. Campbell, sir.

4511. How soon after you had found it?—A day or two after, sir.

4512. What did Dr. Campbell say?—And at the time that I did find it, sir, I couldn't use it afterwards; I had a disgust against it. I had no clean water to drink.

4513. What did you do with the gruel in which this was found?—I threw it away.

4514. You did not show it to anybody but Prescott?—I showed it to the warder that had charge of the ward.

4515. What is his name?—I don't know his name, but he is in this prison.

4516. Is he in the same ward now in which you then were?—He is not, sir.

4517. When you complained to Dr. Campbell, what did he say?—He asked me when did I come here. I told him I came here from Millbank on the 12th May. He said I was very soon beginning to complain, and that this was the wrong place for me.

4518. You told him the nature of the complaint?—I did, sir.

4519. Is that all that passed between you?—It is, sir.

4520. (Dr. Lyons.) Are you tired?—I am and I am not, sir.

4521. I have to ask you a good many questions. Do you wish to have your examination postponed?—I will answer, sir, as well as I can. [The prisoner is allowed to sit, and is given wine, some of which he drinks.]

4522. If you feel tired, and wish to have your examination postponed, we shall do so?—I will answer, sir, as well as I can.

4523. Did you get three days relaxation from duty to prepare your statement?—I did, sir. I think from the 16th, Thursday. Mr. Allison came to me and told me there were Commissioners coming here to inquire into the treatment of the Irish political prisoners, and there was three sheets of foolscap for me to make my statement, against Saturday, and they were sure to be here on Saturday. I made my statement as well as I could, sir.

4524. Mr. De Vere asked you whether you wished for any further time, to alter, amend, or add to your statement?—No, sir.

4525. Are you aware that you could, if you so choose, have any friend or legal adviser to see you, or to advise with you with regard to any statement you may desire to put before the Commission?—Well, sir, I thought if my friends would have something that would call.

4526. I ask you are you aware of it?—No, sir, I am not.

4527. You are not aware of it?—No, I am not aware of it, sir.

4528. (Chairman.) Have you seen a copy of an advertisement put by the Commissioners in the newspapers?—By the Commissioners in the newspapers?

4529. Has not a copy of it been given to you by the governor or some officer of the prison?—I got a copy, sir.

4530. Did you read it?—Yes, I did, sir.

4531. Did you not see in it that the Commissioners said the prisoner would have an opportunity of seeing any friend to assist him in preparing his statement?—I did, sir.

4532. You saw that statement?—I did, sir.

4533. The advertisement that you saw was not in the same words as this, but what I am going to read for you now is a statement of the facilities which the Commissioners have desired to give the prisoners for the purpose of making their statements before this Commission of inquiry. The substance of it is in the advertisement which you have seen. In the first place, the prisoners will have full opportunity of making an oral statement, that is, a statement by word of mouth, to the Commissioners, as regards their treatment, such statement to be made in a private room, in the absence of any prison officer and after a distinct intimation from the Commissioners, to which they will give full effect, that no statement so made, will in any way prejudicially affect the prisoner's future position and treatment. Secondly, the prisoners will have further full opportunity for making written statements, and for offering such oral explanations of them as they may desire. Writing materials will be provided for them, and three days intermission from labour allowed, if wished. Thirdly, the Commissioners will be prepared to receive any statement in writing from any friend of the prisoner, or any person acting on his behalf, and to take the oral evidence of any witness, including, if desired, any released prisoner, which may appear relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts. Fourthly, the Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State, that access to any prisoner at a reasonable hour and for a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting them in the preparation of their statements, should be allowed to friends of such prisoner, under such regulations and conditions as the Government may think necessary. Then it states that the evidence shall be taken down by a short-hand writer, and that the report and evidence will be made public. Has the substance of that statement been made known to you?—Well, it has, sir, part of it.

4534. What part has been made known to you. Has that part which stated that facilities would be given to you to see any friend to assist you in preparing your statement?—Yes, sir.

4535. Has it been made known to you that the evidence will be made public?—Yes, sir.

4536. In fact, you had three days intermission from labour, in order to enable you to prepare your statement. You were alone in the cell three days, in order to enable you to prepare your statement?—I was alone, sir, for six days.

4537. Six days?—I think it was, sir.

4538. Are you sure?—I forget now, indeed.

4539. (Mr. Brodick.) What was the first day; was it Thursday?—Thursday, sir.

4540. (Chairman.) Did you remain after Saturday in your cell?—I think it was on, I am not sure whether it was on Tuesday we came out, sir.

4541. I think you said just now that you have no desire to have any friend come to assist you to prepare this statement?—Well, I have no friend, sir, to come.

4542. (Dr. Lyons.) Now that you have heard those conditions read, is there any friend or legal adviser that you wish to consult before making any further statement or amending your statement?—I have got no friend, sir, to advise me; without this alone, that there might a friend come to my fellow-prisoners, that would speak in my behalf.

4543. Are there any persons that you wish to summon to prove any statement that you have made, or that you are about to make?—No, sir.

4544. Am I to understand that there are no witnesses that you wish to produce to corroborate any statement that you have made or that you are about to make?—I have got no witnesses, sir.

4545. You have made objection to the food on several occasions?—Yes, sir.

4546. Can you state how often you made objection to the food?—Well, I could not, sir; on several occasions.

4547. Could you say how many times, did you object three times?—Thirty or forty times, sir.

4548. Have you objected to the food for various reasons on 30 or 40 different occasions?—I have, sir.

4549. When you objected to the food what was done?—Nothing was done, sir, but take it back again and carry it to the cook-house.

4550. Did you get any other food in place of it?—No, sir, I did not.

4551. When you rejected your food had you to go without food at that time?—I had, sir.

4552. Are you sure and distinct about that?—I am, sir.

4553. Did you ever object to your dinner?—I did, sir, on the 30th of last March.

4554. On the 30th of March in this year?—Yes, sir; I had cheese for my dinner, and I objected to the cheese, because it wasn't fit for no man to eat.

4555. What was the matter with it?—It had a bad smell.

4556. Was it mouldy?—It was worse than mouldy, it was beyond use, it was stinking. I took it to the chief warder, Mr. Allison, and my friend, Mr. Murphy, and we told him we could not use it. He tasted it, and said it was very strong; some people would like strong cheese; but what would suit some wouldn't suit everybody. He told the principal warder to take it to the cook-house to get it exchanged; he took it to the cook-house.

4557. Did you go with him?—I did, sir; the master cook said there was no more cheese; so we got nothing, but bread and water that day.

4558. Was that on Sunday the 30th March?—Yes, sir.

4559. On that day did you get nothing for your dinner but bread and water?—Nothing, sir.

4560. You observed you saw mice dirt in the gruel?—I did, sir.

4561. Did you observe that on only one occasion?—No, sir; but I saw it with prisoners on two or three occasions, but not in my own gruel.

4562. Can you name the other prisoners in whose gruel you saw it?—Thomas Bryson, sir.

4563. And who else?—That is the only man, sir.

4564. Did you ever see mice, or parts of mice, in any portion of the diet of this prison?—I did not, sir.

4565. Have you heard of anyone having found mice, or parts of mice, in the diet?—No, sir, not in this prison.

4566. What objection had you to the skin of beef?—I couldn't use it, sir.

4567. Why could you not use it?—There was an awful smell from it, sir.

4568. What kind of a smell was it?—I couldn't describe it, sir.

4569. Did it smell as if the meat was too long kept?—No, sir; but as if it wasn't fit to eat, and it didn't look like skin of beef at all, sir; I don't know what it looked like.

4570. I am asking you about the smell; what sort of smell had it; was it the smell of bad meat, or of meat that was too far gone?—I couldn't describe the smell, sir; I couldn't.

4571. Do you think it was from the meat being bad, the bones being bad?—It wasn't from being bad, but having different qualities; every sort of meat stuck together.

4572. What do you mean by "every sort of meat stuck together"?—Every sort of shins-of-beef, sir.

4573. What punishment have you undergone in this or any other prison?—I have undergone no punishment, sir.

4574. Have you not been in a punishment cell?—Only in a punishment cell, sir, on two occasions.

4575. Each for 24 hours?—Each for 24 hours, sir.

4576. (Chairman.) Those are the occasions that you have spoken of to us?—Yes, sir.

4577. (Dr. Lyons.) On those two occasions, are you certain that you were put into a cell for 24 hours by the chief warder without the governor's directing it?—I was, sir; without the governor directing it.

4578. You stated that you were ordered to get up from your bed by a warder, when you were sick; is that so?—That was in Millbank prison, sir.

4579. What were you complaining of then?—I was complaining of pain in the head and across my breast, and trembling all over my body.

4580. Are you sure that the doctor directed you to go to bed?—No, sir; the doctor didn't know I was in bed. The officer that had charge of me during the day, he told me to go to bed, and he would be responsible for my going to bed.

4581. The warder?—Yes, sir.

4582. Do you know who that warder was?—I do not, sir; I don't know any of their names.

4583. Did the doctor see you that day?—No, sir, he did not; that was the night I applied to see him, and was told I wouldn't see him.

4584. The warder came round and told you to get up out of bed?—Yes, sir.

4585. Who was that warder, sir?—I don't know, sir.

4586. Was he a different man from the other?—He was a different man, sir.

4587. Would you know the warder if you saw him?—I would, sir, I think.

4588. Did you see him afterwards?—Yes, sir, I did.

4589. Did you see the doctor the next morning?—

I did, sir, but I never mentioned about it to the doctor, sir.

4590. Why did you not mention it to the doctor? Because I didn't think it was worth while, sir, saying anything about it to the doctor.

4591. What did the doctor say to you when he saw you the next day?—I stated as well as I could how I was suffering, and he told me I wanted to see Thomas Johnson.

4592. Had you any idea of what he meant by that? I had not, sir, if he didn't mean the watercloset; that is the only idea I made out for it myself after.

4593. That he meant the watercloset?—I don't know what he meant, sir, but he expressed the words.

4594. You thought he meant the watercloset?—I did, sir.

4595. Do you think now that that was what he meant?—I do, sir.

4596. Had you any friend of the name in or out of the prison?—I had not, sir.

4597. Were you sick on that day that you saw the doctor?—I was, sir.

4598. Did he keep you in bed?—No, sir, he did not.

4599. Did you go to work on that day?—I went to work in the afternoon. I got out of bed and went to work.

4600. Did you eat your meals that day?—Part or them, sir.

4601. You mentioned in your statement something about being blockaded; what do you mean by being blockaded?—Political prisoners had an extra lock on their cells every night, sir.

4602. An extra lock on their cell?—Yes, sir. There was the gate and that was locked by the prison keys, and then there was a padlock above in the door.

4603. You have stated in this written paper that you were warned by some warder that you might be haunted by the officers; what does that refer to exactly?—Haunted, sir.

4604. What do you refer to in this sentence of your written statement:—"There are several officers in this prison who will haunt a prisoner, and put questions to him in order that he might commit himself and get punishment; this I know to be a fact."—Well, sir, several times when I have been out exercising in the yards, an officer comes up and tells me, "Go exercise with such a man." Well, I decline, and tell him "No, I rather walk with myself;" and then he puts several questions to me in order that I may perhaps give him a easy answer, and in case I did give a easy answer I was ready for a punishment cell.

4605. But how do you know that he put these questions to you in order that you might give him a easy answer?—Well, I know, sir, that they did it to others in order to gain credit to themselves.

4606. How would they gain credit by it?—Because the more reports they make they get credit the greater, and the more regred the governor has for them.

4607. How do you know that?—Well, I have been told it, sir.

4608. You say that you know this to be a fact. Is there any other way that you know it, except in the way that you say?—Well, an officer told me himself, sir, that once an officer is down on a prisoner, during the whole time he is in prison after every other officer is down on him.

4609. An officer told you that?—Yes, an officer that told me to mind myself to keep off annoyance.

4610. Was he an officer of this prison?—Yes, sir.

4611. Can you give his name?—No, sir, I cannot.

4612. Why can you not tell his name?—Because he is discharged, sir, now.

4613. But you know his name?—No, sir, I don't know his name.

4614. I do not want to force you to give it if you know it?—I don't know his name, sir, I won't tell a lie.

4615. Tell the Commission distinctly what he told you?—He told me for to—be told me that once a prisoner gets into trouble here, or does anything against an officer, then all the officers of the prison are down on him afterwards, while he is in the prison; and for me to take care of myself and keep out of trouble. This a warden has told me.

4616. Have you acted on that caution?—I have, sir, as well as I possibly could.

4617. Did he tell that to others?—I could not say, sir.

4618. But he told it to you personally?—He told it to me personally.

4619. Has it occurred more than once that you were obliged to work on Sunday mornings and holiday mornings before going to the blessed sacrament?—It occurred every Sunday, sir.

4620. But you do not go to receive the blessed sacrament every Sunday?—No, sir; that was at the time I was in Millbank.

4621. What I ask you is, has it occurred more than once that you were obliged to work before going to the blessed sacrament on Sunday morning?—Only once, sir, I asked the officer not to ask me to work.

4622. Did you tell the officer distinctly that on that morning you were going to approach the blessed sacrament?—He told me it would be much better for me to work; that I would have an opportunity of going into the cell if I didn't.

4623. Do you know who that officer was?—I don't know, sir.

4624. Could you identify him in any way?—I could remember him if I saw him.

4625. Are you subject to diarrhoea?—I am, sir; and I am suffering from it now.

4626. From diarrhoea?—Yes, sir.

4627. Were you subject to diarrhoea before you became a prisoner?—I was not, sir.

4628. Take another drink. [The prisoner drinks.] Have you been often subject to diarrhoea since you became a prisoner?—I am subject to it since, I think, it is last March.

4629. March of this year?—March of this year, sir.

4630. Were you subject to it before then?—I was, sir, in Millbank on several occasions, but I blamed the shin-of-beef soup for it at the time.

4631. Was it after those occasions on which you noticed the shin-of-beef soup objectionable in smell, that you suffered from diarrhoea?—Oh no, sir; I objected against it, sir, before I suffered from the diarrhoea.

4632. You have stated that you were disposed to attribute the diarrhoea to the shin-of-beef soup. I want to know did you observe that you were attacked with diarrhoea on any occasion, on a day after, or subsequent to the time when you took the shin-of-beef soup and remarked its being objectionable in smell?—Oh no, sir, I didn't.

4633. Then how do you connect the diarrhoea with the shin-of-beef soup?—I only imagine so, sir.

4634. You have stated in this written paper that you were made to associate with thieves and men guilty of unnatural offences?—Yes, sir.

4635. How do you know that the men were thieves?—Because by their conversation, sir, and by examining with them and walking alongside of them, and hearing them talking and explaining to one another what they did and what sort of crimes they did, and all to this.

4636. In that way you know that they were thieves?—Yes, sir, they acknowledged themselves.

4637. You have used another word of very grave import. Do you know the meaning of unnatural offences?—I do, sir.

4638-40. You are positive that you do so?—I am, sir.

4641. How do you know, and why do you charge, that any of the men that you were associated with were guilty of this crime?—Because they were convicted of it, sir.

4642. How do you know they were convicted of it?—By their own acknowledgment, sir.

4643. Do you state to me, that you know as a positive fact, from hearing the men admit it, that any men you have been associated with were so guilty?—Yes, sir, I do; and it is one of the greatest words that they have got in their mouths—in of sodomy.

4644. That may be, but I want you particularly to pay attention to this question. Do you know, as a matter of fact, from yourself hearing admissions made by any prisoners here, that any one of them was guilty of that crime?—Well, I do, sir, I heard them conversing on it.

4645. Have you heard any man admit that he was guilty of that crime?—I have, sir.

4646. You have?—Yes, sir, I have, at that time that I was working in the female building.

4647. Do you allege that positively?—I do, sir.

4648. Are you prepared to stand by that statement?—I am, sir.

4649. Have you known that in reference to more than one man?—I have, sir; two men.

4650. To two men?—Two men, sir.

4651. Is it known to other prisoners, as far as you are aware, that those men admitted their being guilty of this crime?—Well, I can't say, sir.

4652. Was it openly talked of?—No, sir, it was not.

4653. How did you happen to hear it?—I was filling a wheel-barrow at the time, sir, and I happened to hear the conversation between them; they were talking about what they did.

4654. Are you quite sure that you heard them correctly and understood them correctly?—I heard them correctly, sir.

4655. (Mr. Brodribb.) You are quite sure that they not only spoke of it, but even spoke of having committed it?—Yes, sir, spoke of having committed it.

4656. (Dr. Lyons.) That they had committed it?—Yes, sir; one man saying he did so-and-so, and the other saying he did so-and-so.

4657. Had you been associated with them?—I have been associated with them, sir, on the public work.

4658. Do you mean that you were working in the same party or gang?—Working in the same party, sir.

4659. Had you been working near them?—I have been wheeling barrows with them and rolling carts with them, and walking in and out with them from this to the female prison, back and forward, no more.

4660. There are some erasures in this written statement of yours which I will point out to you, and will you state to the Commission what are the exact parts that you have erased, pointing out the word before the erasure and the word after it. [Hands witness a paper.] Did you scratch that out yourself?—I did, sir, because I heard a conversation with one of those men, and I charged them for the nasty filthy talk that passed between them.

4661. (Chairman.) That was scratched out by you?—Yes, sir.

4662. (Dr. Lyons.) You admit that you made those erasures that I now show you?—Yes, sir.

4663. On page 8?—Yes, sir; I scratched them out myself.

4664. Lines 5 and 4 from the bottom; you admit those erasures to have been made by yourself?—Yes, sir; I thought, sir, that the words might be too offensive.

4665. (Chairman.) At the top of page 6 were those words scratched out by you (the page is shown to the prisoner)?—Yes, sir.

4666. On page 3 was that erasure made by you (exhibiting it)?—Yes, sir; it was.

4667. On page 13, was that erasure made by you (exhibiting it)?—Yes, sir; it was.

4668. We only want to have it appear that we did not tamper with it.

4669. (Dr. Lyons.) Has it often happened that you have been obliged to use a pen or potin, your tool when you could not go to the watercloset after 4 o'clock in the evening?—This was in Millbank, sir.

4670. Yes?—Well, it happened to me on three occasions.

4671. Were those occasions on which you were obliged by the necessities of nature to use the chamber pot so?—They were, sir.

4672. Did you on those occasions ask the warder to permit you to go to the watercloset?—I did, sir.

4673. Were you punished in any way, or were you reported for using the pot on those occasions?—I was not, sir.

4674. Were you reported for using it?—I was not, sir; I was told to use it though.

The prisoner withdrew.

E. Power.

ERWINE POWER, prisoner, examined.

4680. (Chairman.) We are a Commission appointed by the Government, but at the same time entirely independent of the Government, for the purpose of making such inquiries as we think necessary into the treatment of the treason-felony prisoners in this and other English prisons. The Commissioners are, Mr. De Vere, Dr. Lyons, Dr. Grosvenor, Mr. Brodick, and myself, Lord Devon. Before I ask you what statements you have to make to us, I will read to you the conditions as to the facilities which exist in each case by the Commissioners' desire:—

"The prisoners will have full opportunity for making an oral statement to the Commissioners as regards their treatment, such statement to be made in a private room, in the absence of any prison officer, and after a distinct intimation from the Commissioners, to which they will give full effect, that no statement so made will in any way prejudicially affect the prisoner's future position and treatment. They will have further a full opportunity for making written statements, and for offering such oral explanations of those statements as they may desire. Writing materials will be provided for them, and three days' intermission from labour allowed if wished. The Commissioners will be prepared to receive any statement in writing from any friend of the prisoner or any person acting on his behalf, and to take the oral evidence of any witness, including, if desired, any released prisoner, which may appear to be relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts. The Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State that access to any prisoner at a reasonable hour, and for a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting them in the preparation of their statements, should be allowed to the friends of such prisoner, under such regulations and conditions as the Government may think necessary. Application in such case should be made to the Home Office. The evidence will be taken down by a shorthand writer. The report and evidence will be made public." You have been made aware of the substance of what I have now read to you?—I understand the substance, but I would rather if I could, have a copy.

4681. Some copies are in preparation?—The last document you are after reading, my lord, saying, "Under such regulations as the Secretary of State may determine on," I do not understand.

4682. Any regulations that the Secretary of State thinks necessary will be made. I have every reason to believe that those regulations will interpose no reasonable difficulty in the way of any friend seeing you?—I think it would be quite useless seeing our friends, unless we could see them in private.

4683. You will have the opportunity of seeing them in private. You mean not in the presence of any prison officer?—No one present except the friend of the prisoner.

4684. That will be allowed. Do you fully understand those conditions?—Yes; that explains a good deal of this document that we have been furnished with first. I do not suppose there is any need of my 4675. You are sure that there is nothing further you wish to state?—I wish to be examined by the doctor before the Commission is closed, sir.

4676. (Chairman.) Which doctor, Dr. Campbell?—No, sir; but the doctors of the Commission.

4677. (Dr. Lyons.) By the medical men who are on the Commission?—Yes, sir.

4678. (Chairman.) We shall be here next week, and if you wish to say anything further you will have an opportunity of doing so.

4679. (Dr. Lyons.) You may as well drink the remainder of that.

The prisoner withdrew.

going over the same course as Mr. Mulcahy and Mr. Bourke pursued.

4685. (Dr. Lyons.) You had better not for yourself?—This first document I was supplied with states that the subjects upon which the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts will permit such prisoners to address them are, first, treatment, diet, discipline, or disregard of the conditions necessary for health; second, exceptional treatment, or subjection to any hardship beyond that incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of penal servitude. Well, I am afraid that the second will neutralise to a great extent the first. You cannot enter into the first if you carry out the second. Besides what is incidental to the condition of a prisoner undergoing a sentence of penal servitude, I think, is a very fair matter for inquiry. I will read my objections, but it is reading over the same thing as what you heard yesterday. Mr. Bourke and Mr. Mulcahy read the same.

4686. How do you know that it is the same?—I know it is the same, because we have agreed on this course.

4687. (Chairman.) Then that paper is a statement of what is considered by them incidental to the condition of persons suffering penal servitude?—Yes, my lord. I will hand it in. There are some conditions also which I consider necessary to an impartial inquiry. I wish to ask, will you admit the representatives of the press?

4688. No?—Might I take down the answer?

4689. I have no objection (Prisoner is supplied with a pen and ink)?—Will you publish our statements in full with your report, as an appendix to the report?

4690. We shall publish the statements if they are part of the evidence, as an appendix to the report. We reserve to ourselves the power of excluding any part of those statements that might have no reference to the inquiry; for instance, if your statement contained any marked political statements, we should not feel bound to publish them?—I do not quite understand what is meant by "political statements," my lord. Does it mean the state of Ireland at present?

4691. Anything in the nature of a political comment we shall not publish. Anything that bears on your own condition or treatment here, however remote, we shall publish?—Will the Commissioners let us have copies of memorials and extracts from the prison books, mentioned by me?

4692. Is that a letter sent in?—It is from me, my lord.

4693. You first ask for memorial regarding your health forwarded by you from this prison to the Secretary of State with the medical certificate accompanying it; reports made by the medical officers to each other on your removal from one prison to another, including that from Meanyor to Millbank. There can be no objection to any of those. I do not know how we can get Mountjoy?—I think it is essential, for I want to show that when I came to England I was in good health.

R. Penn.
30 June 1872.

4594. You shall have it, if we can, if it is a public document. "All case-sheets containing medical history of your illness in Portland, Millbank, and Woking." That we will be prepared to give. We will be prepared to procure, if we can, a sufficiently detailed account of your illness in those three prisons, and the mode of treatment?—I would like, if you cannot furnish the original case-sheets, I would like to have an exact copy, for I have no guarantee that a right copy will be furnished of some of the case-sheets: they can very easily be altered.

4595. We shall do our best to get all the reports which give an accurate history of your illness. Supposing the case-sheets contain any private notes made by the doctor, we cannot undertake to produce them?—Do you mean the symptoms during the case.

4596. All that we can say will be, that we will procure for you copies of all extracts and statements which are material to the medical history of your illness. That is all we can say?—I do not quite understand that, because the doctors then may only furnish what they like.

4597. If there be—which I do not anticipate—a case in which we shall not think it right to furnish you with everything you ask for, we shall have it before us, and we shall see that the extracts given to you, if they are extracts, are fairly put before you. You may include that as my responsibility?—I shall say "partly" (writing). Will the Commissioners allow me to have the advice and assistance of Isaac Butt, Esquire, Queen's Counsel, in preparing my statement, and watching the proceedings of the Commissioners on my behalf.

(The prisoner retired, and after the Commission had deliberated, was re-called.)

4598. (Chairman.) The next thing you asked for is, "The rule of the Home Office relative to the release of invalid convicts." We have no power to give you that?—Well, I think that is essential, because I want to show that we have been treated exceptionally. If the rule of the Home Office is that prisoners in a certain state of health should be released, I want to show that that has not been carried out to us. The Secretary of State said he was obliged to release Sir Culling Eardley, on medical grounds, as his health was becoming impaired. I want to show that that was not applied to us.

4599. Such an application as that should be made to the Home Office?—Would you recommend it, my lord?

4600. You can make application to the Home Office, stating that you think it material to your statement. The next is, "All suppressed letters written by me in Millbank, Portland, and Woking, with the cause of their suppression, and any other remarks appended." The Commission has decided in another case, that we will examine all these suppressed letters, and that copies of all such parts as it is right you should have, will be given to you?—Only parts of the letters?

4601. We must exercise our discretion as to that. Any letters written by you, if they are within our power, you shall have copies of?—Thank you, my lord.

4602. "Abstracts from the prison books of Millbank, Portland, and Woking, relating to you." Do you mean by that, reports against you?—I mean anything at all in the books relating to me; reports against me, or any I may have made against the officials. I do not mean this prison alone: I mean Portland and Millbank as well.

4603. Yes; we will see to have those procured for you. Do I understand that you wish to have those supplied to you before you make any statement?—Most certainly, my lord.

4604. We shall confer with the governor about this, and we shall be here again next Wednesday?—Will the Commissioners allow me to have the advice and assistance of Isaac Butt, Esquire, Queen's Counsel, in preparing my statement, and in watching the proceedings of the Commissioners in my behalf?

4605. No; we cannot allow anybody to be present at the examination; but we have recommended that any friend of a prisoner, or any person on his behalf, shall be permitted to assist the prisoner in preparing his statement; and, of course, that includes Mr. Butt or any other gentleman who might come?—I forwarded a letter to Mr. Butt the other day, and I have had no answer. I do not know if it is gone.

4606. The governor assured us that the letters were forwarded immediately?—That is very singular, because I told Mr. Butt to forward a telegram saying if he would come or not, and we have all done the same thing.

4607. (Dr. Lyons.) It is very likely that Mr. Butt was on circuit?—Will the Commissioners guarantee that if our statements be placed in the hands of the authorities or friends of the officials, or abstracts of them, in order that they might reply to them, that copies of their statements and abstracts of their verbal evidence against us will be placed in our hands, and will be allowed to rebut such charges as any of the prison officials may strive to controvert or deny?

4608. All I can say is, that we will pursue that course which we deem most conducive to justice?—Will we be allowed to examine the prison officials?

4609. Not directly. We may permit you to put questions through the Commission, but not otherwise?—Will we be permitted to be present when they are giving their evidence?

4610. That is not decided.

4611. (Dr. Lyons.) But you are clearly to understand that all the charges you may have to make you can state, and the Commissioners will most fully inquire into them?—I understand; but I think if I were allowed to ask, supporting the medical officer, some questions, I could show that the course pursued towards me was not conducive to my health.

4612. (Chairman.) We will take the course which is calculated to bring out the whole truth; and if we consider them important to be put on your behalf, we will permit them to be put through the Commission?—Will you furnish us with copies of the report when published?

4613. The report passes out of our hands into the hands of the Government. They can do what they wish with it?—Will it be examined by the medical gentlemen of the Commission?

4614. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you wish to be examined by them?—Oh yes. I do not think the Commission would be any use without that.

4615. Then make a formal application?—I would not go on with the Commission otherwise. You say you will publish our statements, my lord; have you any idea when?

4616. (Chairman.) Not the least idea?—Because it may be an indefinite period.

4617. As soon as we publish our statement your evidence will be published; but when the Commission will terminate we cannot tell you.

4618. (Dr. Lyons.) That depends a good deal on yourselves?—I have no more to say then.

4619. Have you any witnesses that you wish to call, as permission is granted by a rule established by the Commission, to corroborate any statement you might wish to make?—The Commission won't grant these who are able to corroborate my statements, that is some of the prisoners at present in Portland and Chatham.

4620. You can answer the question categorically. Have you any persons that you desire to call to give evidence?—I have, sir.

4621. Will you name them?—Mr. O'Leary, Mr. Luby.

E. Pinner.

4722. (Chairman.) They are at present in other prisons.—They are in Portland.

4723. Who else?—Mr. St. Clair, Mr. George Brown, Mr. Mackay; I think that will be sufficient in Portland. In Chatham there is Mr. Deane.

4724. (Dr. Lyons.) Is there anyone else in Chatham?—No. Outside there is Mr. Stack, Mr. William Moore Stack, in Dublin, Mr. Terence Burns, a released prisoner, and Mr. James O'Brien, of Cork, also a released prisoner.

4725. Are there any others?—No; no others.

4726. (Chairman.) Where does Byrne live?—In Dublin.

4727. Stack and Byrne live in Dublin?—Yes, my lord.

4728. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you know their addresses?—No, but I can easily find out. Mr. Mulesky knows their addresses.

4729. (Chairman.) With regard to the first six that you have named, they are in other prisons, and by a decision of the Secretary of State you cannot call them?—I wish to hand in at all events that I want them.

4730. (Dr. Lyons.) Whatever you state that you think can be proved by any of those persons in other prisons, we will be prepared to make close inquiry into at those prisons?—Very well.

4731. (Chairman.) Anything you say with regard to which they may speak we shall ask them when we go there?—About the other persons I have mentioned outside?

4732. We are perfectly ready to hear them on Wednesday and Thursday, and Friday next?—Who will bear the expense of bringing them?

4733. We have no means by which we can bring anyone?—You might as well not grant it at all then. Some of these are men that could not afford to come across from Ireland at their own expense.

4734. All we can say is that we are ready to receive evidence from these persons or any of them that may be present.

4735. (Dr. Lyons.) You had better state fully to us all the persons you wish to give evidence in your behalf?—Well, I have named them.

4736. Are there any others?—No; no others of importance.

4737. You can make a statement in writing or orally to what you think those or any other prisoners can state in your behalf, and the Commission will make close inquiry when they go to those prisons from those prisoners?—There is one important thing about the medical case-books. I think it is necessary that I should have an entire copy of the original case-books. It is the very—4738. What?—It is the very remarks made by the medical officer that I want.
The prisoner withdrew.

4739. What remarks?—The remarks made every day going around the infirmary.

4740. What kind of remarks?—How I was on the previous day, and how I was when I was admitted, and what I suffered from, and what the medical men found when they examined me.

4741. (Chairman.) We will put you in possession of everything material to the history of your case. You might rest satisfied with that. I have mentioned to you that we have recommended the Secretary of State that facilities should be given for permitting interviews between you and any friend whose assistance you may wish, to aid you in preparing your statement; that the power does not rest with us, but that we have recommended the Secretary of State to allow it, and that those interviews should be private. We hope and believe that the Secretary of State will give the permission. We have no power to do so. We have recommended it. So the matter stands?—You will furnish copies of what you have read.

4742. We will.

4743. (Mr. De Vere.) You are in hospital?—Yes.

4744. What are you suffering from?—That is a question of some difficulty, for my heart and lungs.

4745. (Chairman.) We have recommended Captain Harris to give every opportunity for your seeing anybody; also for writing to your friends, even though you should wish to write more frequently than the prison rules permit, for the purpose of inviting friends to come?—Will our letters pass out unopened?

4746. Oh no; the latter must be laid aside for them to see you here?—I must be able to tell them how much the Commissioners will allow, or there would be no use in inviting them to come.

4747. You can tell them all that we have intimated to you now.

WILLIAM F. ROANETTER, prisoner, examined.

4748. (Chairman.) I will first explain to you that we are a Commission appointed by the Government to inquire into the treatment of the treason-felony prisoners confined in this and other English prisons, and to receive any complaints which you may wish to make and to inquire into them. The Commissioners are, Mr. De Vere, Dr. Lyons, Dr. Greenhow, Mr. Brodick, and myself, Lord Devon. I will explain to you further by reading an extract from a letter which states the facilities that are intended to be given to prisoners in order that they may be able to make such statements to the Commission as they wish:—"First, the prisoners will have full opportunity for making an oral statement to the Commissioners as regards their treatment, such statement to be made in a private room in the absence of any prison officer, and after a distinct intimation from the Commissioners, to which they will give full effect, that no statement so made will in any way prejudicially affect the prisoners' position and treatment. Second, they will further have full opportunity for making written statements, and for offering such oral explanations of them as they may desire. Writing materials will be provided for them, and three days' intermission from labour allowed if wished. Third, the Commissioners will be prepared to receive any statement in writing from any friend of the prisoner or any person acting on his behalf, and to take "the oral evidence of any witness, including, if desired, any released prisoner, which may appear to be relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts. Fourth, the Commissioners have recommended to the Secretary of State that access to any prisoner at a reasonable hour and for a reasonable time, for the purpose of assisting them in the preparation of their statements, should be allowed to friends of such prisoners, under such regulations and conditions as the Government may think necessary. Application in such case should be made to the Home Office. Fifth, the evidence will be taken down by a shorthand writer. Sixth, the report and evidence will be made public." Having given you that explanation, I am now to ask you whether you have had the facilities for making out your statement?—I have not had the necessary documents, sir. I applied for them last week, and did not get them yet.

4749. To whom did you apply?—To the deputy governor. Here is a copy of a letter that I sent in this morning. With your permission I will read it.

4750. Is it an application stating the documents you require?—Yes, I did not get any answer at all, sir, in the matter. (Prisoner hands to the document.)

4751. Are those documents which you wish to have before making any statement?—Before I can possibly make a statement.

W.F. Roanetter.

4752. Independent of these, have you had an opportunity of writing your statements?—Every other opportunity.

4753. This is a copy of a letter you addressed to Captain Harris?—It is merely a copy.

4754. It is a letter addressed to Captain Harris, and dated, "Woking Invalid Prison, 30th June 1870," and in it you say, that you have applied to be furnished with "the dates of your admissions to and discharges from the infirmary in Woking, and by whom admitted and discharged; statements to the Secretary of State or Board of Directors." You mean statements by you?—Yes.

4755. "The number and dates of letters I wrote in Portland and Woking; the suppressed letters at either prison, and why suppressed; caption sheet; copies of reports; medical notes of the doctors in Penroseville, Portland, and Woking." We probably shall be able to provide you with copies of all those, and with the suppressed letters?—I prefer the originals to copies.

4756. The originals of the suppressed letters?—The originals of memorials and suppressed letters.

4757. Yes; I suppose they can be got. The caption sheet we do not intend to supply. Of the reports of punishment awarded in Portland and Woking, copies will be supplied to you. Copies of the medical notes of the doctors in Penroseville, Portland, and Woking will be supplied to you, so far as they have any bearing on the medical history of your case. The caption sheet will be in our possession, but we do not feel justified in supplying it to you. We shall have it before us at the time of your examination?—If I got the other documents, I think I can do without the caption sheet.

4758. We will take care that the other documents are supplied to you as early as we can. With that understanding do you wish to postpone your examination?—Yes.

4759. Do you wish to say anything to us now?—I wish to know, is any statement I may furnish to be published?

The prisoner withdrew.

CAPTAIN HARRIS recalled.

Capt. Harris.

4760. (Chairman.) We have had applications from the prisoners Recreance and Power for copies in each case of various documents which you will kindly take a note of and you will say if you see any difficulty in supplying them. Power applies for a memorial regarding his health, forwarded by him to the Secretary of State?—There is no difficulty about that.

4770. All certificates as reference to his health forwarded by the medical officers of Millbank, Portland, and Woking, and reports made by the medical officers to each other on his removal from one prison to another?—That appears to me to be somewhat unusual; private reports made from one governor to another, or from one medical officer to another.

4771. Are those of a private character?—Of course they are "on the public service," but strictly private notes. I do not know that they may not be made use of.

4772. (Dr. Greenhow.) Every prisoner that comes to Woking brings with him a certificate from the surgeon of the prison from whence he came. Is not that certificate a public document?—"Any notes," I understood to be asked for.

4773. (Chairman.) All certificates; "all the reports made by the medical officers to each other on any removal from one prison to another." I do not see why that should not be given?—I do not know.

4774. "All case sheets containing the medical 4760. It will be published in the Appendix to my Report?—In the public press?

4761. That I cannot tell you. The report will be made to the Government, and we shall recommend that the report and statement of evidence shall be published. It will rest with the Secretary of State to publish it?—A full report?

4762. We shall issue a full report of the evidence. With regard to the full publication of your statement, it is right that I should explain to you that every thing in your statement we shall be prepared to recommend shall be published in the evidence that bears in any way on your treatment in prison, but we shall not be prepared to recommend the publication, should you insert there in that statement. I do not suppose you will of any observations of an excessive character or bearing on political subjects?—I could not possibly expect you would.

4763. Do you wish to make any statement now?—No.

4764. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you any witnesses that you desire to call to corroborate any of the statements you may make?—Except the officials, I may find it necessary to call some of them of this prison, and the other prisons I have been in.

4765. (Chairman.) If you wish to call officials of other prisons, you must give notice, as it may take some time to have them come?—I cannot now.

4766. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you state now the names of any that you wish to corroborate any statement you have to make?—I cannot now.

4767. (Chairman.) If you communicate the names to Captain Harris, we will desire him to send those names to London, to require their attendance. Otherwise time would be lost if you wait until we come next week?—I know it is customary to publish the statement, and leave it to the discretion of members of Parliament. I know it is so in other countries, and that each member of Parliament is privileged to circulate it to the press. He asks them to publish it, if they wish to publish it.

4768. We have little doubt that they will make it public. It rests with the Secretary of State to say if they will make it public.

"history of my illness in Portland, Millbank, and Woking." I said we should endeavour to procure for him all such portions as are essential to give a full history of his illness?—Yes.

4775. Fourth, the rule of the Home Office relative to the release of invalid convicts. I told him he should apply to the Home Office?—Just so.

4776. Fifth, all suppressed letters, with the cause of their suppression, and any other remarks thereon. There is no difficulty?—No.

4777. "Abstracts from prison books relating to me;" that is, reports against him, and applications made by him, with the results?—No difficulty there.

4778. (Dr. Greenhow.) Is there any difficulty about getting them from Millbank?—I can apply to Millbank in the same way as I apply to Portland to-day.

4779. (Dr. Lyons.) I asked you, Captain Harris, for a certificate of the presence in the prison of the convict Richard Burke, within certain dates. Are you prepared to hand in such certificate?—I hand in a certificate. (Hands it in.)

4780. This certificate covers his appearance here from the 10th December 1868, to the 28th March 1870, and from the 21st May 1870, to the 30th June 1870?—Exactly so.

4781. You have also conveyed him from this prison to Millbank?—I did. I handed him over to the governor of that prison.

The witness remained.

Dr. Campbell.

20 June 1870.

Dr. CAMPBELL recalled.

4782. (Chairman.) Dr. Campbell, Edward Power has applied for certain papers, which Captain Harris will be kind enough to procure. He has also applied for all certificates in reference to his health forwarded by the medical officer of Millbank, Portland, and Woking prisons to the Secretary of State, board of directors, and governors of prisons, and all reports made by the medical officers to each other on his removal from one prison to another. Do you from your knowledge believe that the reports which are sent from one prison to another would probably be of a nature to be safely produced?—I can show the certificates that I have sent, my lord, and the reports I have received.

4783. Have you any reason to doubt that the reports made on the transmission of a convict from one prison to another, independently of these, would be of a similar description?—They may vary a little, my lord; but I do not think they are proper documents to be given to him. I may get my certificates, and perhaps you will be able to judge.

Captain Harris withdrew.

4784. (Dr. Lyons.) Dr. Campbell, I asked you to be good enough to hand in an exact copy of the case sheet of Richard Burke?—Yes, sir; this is it. (Hands it in.)

4785. You hand this in as a complete copy of the case sheet of Richard Burke?—Yes.

4786. I also asked you to be good enough to hand in copies of your letters to the directors in regard to the state of health of Richard Burke, and asking for additional medical advice in reference to his case?—Yes, sir; this is it.

4787. I also asked you to be good enough to furnish to the Commission a return of the food rejected and returned by him, with the dates of such rejections?—Yes; it is taken from the returned food book. (Hands it in.)

4788. This is an exact copy from the returned food book?—From the returned food book.

The witness withdrew.

The Commission adjourned at half-past six p.m.

3, Parliament Street, Friday, 1st July 1870.

PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. BRODRICK.
S. E. DE VERE, Esq.Dr. LYONS.
Dr. GREENSTOWN.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

Capt. De Cane.

Captain DU CANE recalled.

4789. (Chairman.) Captain De Cane, applications have been made to us by several prisoners for copies of the petitions and memorials addressed by them at different times, either to the Secretary of State, or to the directors or governors of prisons, with the dates of such replies as may have been returned to those applications. Are you prepared to supply them?—We could supply to the prisoners their own petitions and applications.

4790. With regard to the decisions on them and the replies sent to them, what do you say?—We could supply those to the Commissioners, but, I believe, the Secretary of State is of opinion that it would be more proper that that should go to the Commission and not to the prisoners.

4791. Except in those cases where they have already been made acquainted with them?—Where they have already been made acquainted with them there can be no objection.

4792. You would supply that qualification I suppose, that wherever they had already been made acquainted with a document, a copy of it may be supplied to them, and to other cases of a similar character?—Yes.

4793. Applications have been made to us by prisoners for copies of all the entries relating to them in the prison books, those entries being either reports made against them, or, I presume, also sometimes applications made by themselves. Should you be prepared to authorise the supplying of these to the applicants?—I should like to consider each set by itself.

4794. Take the reports made against the prisoners?—There can be no objection to give them that I can see, and the decisions made on those reports.

4795. (Mr. Brodrick.) I believe a record is also kept in prisons, of complaints made by prisoners, and of the mode in which these complaints are disposed of?—Always.

4796. Would there be any difficulty in furnishing prisoners with copies of these entries?—They could be furnished with them. They were always entered at the time, and the decision read out to them. Therefore, it is all matter that they have already heard.

4797. (Chairman.) Application also has been made to us by several prisoners, first for all certificates referring to their health, forwarded by the medical officers of certain prisons to the Secretary of State, the board of directors, and the governors of prisons; also for reports made by medical officers on removal from one prison to another, and also for medical case-sheets in certain prisons. Do you see any objection to supplying the prisoners these different documents, and if you do, how far shall you be prepared and deem yourself justified in supplying the information asked for?—I think they might have the date of their medical treatment; a statement such as the medical officer might think proper of their illness and their mode of treatment; but I think that to ask the medical officer to give full notes of their cases would be considered by them to be rather objectionable.

4798. And in your judgment would it be prejudicial do you think to the service?—I think it would.

4799. As to the certificates forwarded by medical officers to your board or to the governors, do you consider those of a confidential character?—I should lay those freely before the Commission, but I would not give them to the prisoner.

4800. (Dr. Lyons.) Is there any objection to full copies of the case-sheets, or the original case-sheets, in reference to each prisoner, being furnished to the Commission for the use and information of the Commissioners?—Certainly not.

4801. (Mr. De Vere.) Is there any objection, Captain Du Cane, that the original notes and memoranda, with regard to the cases, should be laid before the Commissioners, so that they might test the accuracy of the return furnished by the medical officer to the prisoners?—Certainly, I should say the original documents might be given to the Commission. I should prefer the original documents being given to the Commission.

4802. (Dr. Lyons.) That is a class of documents that I was prepared to ask for. Can you undertake to have these procured?—I will communicate with the medical officers. Those papers are only kept according to their own professional practice and requirements, and not according to any precise regulations. What they will undertake to give I cannot say.

4803. (Mr. De Vere.) With regard to these confidential reports made by medical officers to superior authorities, is there any objection to these also being laid before the Commission with the view of testing the returns of the medical officers to the prisoners?—No objection whatever.

4804. (Chairman.) We had some conversation last time, Captain Du Cane, as to the admission of friends of prisoners to assist them?—Yes.

4805. Have any applications been made to you for admission?—Yes, I have been in communication with the Secretary of State on the subject, and the principle which he thinks a proper one will be carried out; namely, that the prisoners should be asked who they want to assist them to prepare their statement, and why; that in each case he should consider whether the application should be granted; and that the visit should be made under proper restrictions and under proper responsibility, such as the governor may consider to be proper.

4806. Is that intended to imply that they should not see their friends privately?—No; on the contrary, that they are to see them, without the presence of an officer. How it is to be done I do not quite know. We wish to frame our rule on that which is followed at Clerkenwell in the case of prisoners who are under trial, and who have every reasonable facility for consulting their advisers, but with such restrictions as long experience has shown to be necessary. They are allowed there to see their legal advisers privately in a room in view of the officer, but not in hearing.

4807. (Dr. Lyons.) How is that accomplished, may I ask?—By a glass door. The prisoner is always searched both before and after the interview. At Clerkenwell only a legal adviser is allowed to come under these terms. Friends are not allowed to come. In this case we propose to relax the rule, and to allow friends to come, provided that we can be satisfied that they are proper, trustworthy persons.

4808. What limit have you decided on in reference to the number of persons to be permitted to see them?—We have not decided on any limitation, but there was a distinction drawn between those who applied to see prisoners and those whom prisoners wished to see. If a prisoner expressed a wish to have the assistance of a certain person, that would be attended to first; but as regards all the rest, they would be perhaps decided as the applications came.

4809. (Mr. Bradrick.) Are you able to state how many applications of that kind have as yet been made?—I think all the prisoners at Chatham have asked for a friend, and I think they have all asked for Mr. Butt excepting Underwood O'Connell, who has asked for his cousin Mr. Underwood, and Ross, who has asked for the assistance of his wife during the sitting of the Commission.

4810. (Mr. De Vere.) Are you aware whether those wishes on their part have been forwarded to the parties?—Those wishes will be attended to. They have been allowed to write to Mr. Butt, to ask for his assistance. I am not aware that an answer has yet been received.

4811. Are you aware that when they wrote to Mr. Butt they were under the impression that Mr. Butt's services would be secured for them by the Commission at the public expense?—I am not aware of that at all.

4812. (Dr. Lyons.) As a matter of prison discipline, may I ask you whether a chief warder has the power of sending a prisoner to a punishment cell for any set for 24 hours?—No, certainly not.

4813. He has not?—He has the power of putting a man to whose misconducts himself for trial before the governor, but the trial would always take place before 24 hours.

4814. Before the expiration of 24 hours. How long, then, as a matter of fact, could the chief warder put a prisoner into a punishment cell, and leave him there until the governor could see him?—I suppose, if the offense was committed a very short time after the reports had been dealt with, he might be there not far off 24 hours; but he would not be under punishment; he would not be on punishment diet.

4815. But would he be in a punishment cell?—He would.

4816. Then the chief warder has the power to put a prisoner into a punishment cell close on 24 hours?—He looks him into a punishment cell, but he is not under punishment discipline.

4817. He may put him into a separate cell for a period approaching 24 hours?—Yes.

4818. (Mr. Bradrick.) Is not a punishment cell a more comfortable cell than an ordinary cell of the prison?—I think probably it is altogether.

4819. (Dr. Lyons.) It may or may not be?—I think in most cases in public works prisons it is.

4820. (Dr. Greenless.) Would the prisoner's diet be altered?—He would receive the ordinary diet, unless the governor had sentenced him to punishment.

4821. And his clothing?—His clothing would be the same, and he ought to have books or anything of that kind that prisoners not under punishment would have.

4822. The only change, then, would be that he would be in a separate cell?—Yes, and he would not be out at work.

4823. (Mr. Bradrick.) Would he not have a different bed?—In the sleeping berths they sleep in a hammock. In the punishment cells they sleep on a wooden bedstead, but with a mattress on it.

4824. (Chairman.) I understand your answer in effect to be, that a warder has power to put a prisoner in a separate cell until the governor can inquire into his case?—Yes, as in the case of a man apprehended and placed in confinement to await trial.

4825. And that the period of time may fall very little short of 24 hours?—It might. There are certain hours at which the governor deals with those cases.

Adjourned.

Capt. Du Cane.

30 June 1873.

Chatham Prison, Monday, 4th July 1870.

PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. BRODRICK.
S. E. DE VERE, Esq.MR. LYONS.
MR. GREENHOV.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAM PITT BUTTS examined.

Mr.
W. P. Butts.
4 July 1870.

4826. (Chairman.) You are the governor of this prison, Mr. Butts?—I am, my lord.

4827. What time have you been here?—I came in January. I am not sure of the exact date.

4828. In what year?—This year; I do not know the exact date in January. I was transferred from Dartmoor.

4829. How long were you in Dartmoor?—I was in Dartmoor two years all but two months.

4830. Among other prisoners in this prison, you have under your charge six treason-felony prisoners I believe?—Yes, my lord. They are John Doroy, Charles Underwood O'Connell, John McClure, William Halpin, Jeremiah O'Donnovan Rossa, and Henry Smart.

4831. Have you since the appointment of this Commission received any communication from the Secretary of State in reference to the operation of the Commission as bearing on those prisoners?—I have, my lord.

4832. Will you be good enough to state what this communication has been?—I have received several communications.

4833. You have received several communications?—Yes, my lord.

4834. Have you received any communication which it was desired that you should make known to the prisoners?—I have received some replies to applications which they have made respecting the Commission.

4835. Have you received from the prisoners any application in reference to the Commission?—Yes, my lord.

4836. Of what nature have they been?—They have nearly all of them applied—four of them certainly—to have Mr. Butts, of Exeter, come.

4837. Were those applications forwarded to the Home Secretary?—They were, my lord.

4838. And have there been replies?—Yes, the replies have been received.

4839. And those replies have been communicated to the prisoners?—They have.

4840. What was the effect of those replies?—That they might apply to Mr. Butts to assist them in preparing their statements if they wished, and also that I had authority to write to Mr. Butts to tell him so myself.

4841. And have you done so?—I have.

4842. When was that?—It was on Friday I think I wrote; on Friday.

4843. On Friday last?—Yes.

4844. Two days ago?—Two days ago. I could tell you; I have got the letters in my office.

4845. Have any other applications been made by the prisoners through you to the Secretary of State on the business of this Commission?—Yes; they wished to be furnished with several documents, all their suppressed letters, and several reports.

4846. When you say "they," do you mean that they all applied?—No; Halpin has for one, and Rossa and O'Connell, and McClure; these four sent in statements.

4847. These four have applied for documents?—They have applied for documents.

4848. What kind of documents have they applied for?—They have applied for their suppressed letters.

4849. Were their applications in writing?—They were in writing to the Secretary of State.

4850. (Mr. De Vere.) Can you produce the applications?—No; they have not been sent back.

4851. (Chairman.) They have applied for their suppressed letters as you tell us. What else have they applied for?—For the reports that have been made against them; I do not know that all did for the reports, but Rossa did certainly.

4852. Requiring the reports made against them as recorded in the prison books or in any other shape?—In the prison books.

4853. And what was the Secretary of State's reply to that?—Authority to give them their suppressed letters, and the petitions they made to the Secretary of State, and also copies of their reports.

4854. Of the reports made against them?—The reports made against them with the governor's adjunction on them. They have not been supplied with them yet, for I only got this yesterday.

4855. How soon shall you be in a condition to supply them?—Well, it involves a good deal of labour, copying all these out; but I should think that tomorrow they might have them. The clerks are doing them now.

4856. Does the Secretary of State's letter refer to any other documents but those you have already mentioned to us?—I cannot state. I will get the letter that I received. It is from Parliament Street.

4857. You have a copy of the letter?—I have the original; I got it yesterday.

4858. Would you please get it?—Yes. (Witness goes out and returns with a letter.)

4859. Will you kindly read the letter to us?—Yes; it is dated 2d July 1870:

" Office of the Directors of Convict Prisons,
44 Parliament Street.

" Sir, " I am directed by the chairman to request that, in case applications are made to you in reference to the Commission of Enquiry into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons, by the prisoners concerned, to be furnished with their petitions to the Secretary of State or to the directors, or their suppressed letters, they may be furnished to them, but not in any case any reports made to superior authority on these cases; the letter are to be furnished only to the Commissioners. " The convicts may also on application be furnished with extracts from directors' and governor's interview books, giving the applications they made and the replies they received. That prisoners who apply may also be furnished by the medical officer with a statement shewing the dates of admission to and discharge from hospital, and such statement of their treatment as would be made in ordinary professional practice to a patient. The medical officers of Millbank, Portland, and Woking prisons are also requested to furnish, for the use of the Commission, copies or originals of all certificates in reference to the health of treason-felony convicts Edward Power, to the governor, directors, or Secretary of State; also reports made by the medical officers to such other on the convicts removal, including that from Mountjoy to Millbank prison. Medical officers, where treason-felony prisoners now in custody have been confined, are requested to furnish, for the use of the Commissioners, notes of the case of each prisoner kept by them. Careful register should be kept of all documents the governor puts with. " The friends or advisers of prisoners permitted to assist them in preparing their statements for the Commission are to be allowed access at a reasonable hour and for a reasonable time and under proper restrictions, until the morning of the day which the Commissioners appoint for the examination of the prisoners in each prison, and not afterwards, unless

"in any particular case the Commissioners may wish otherwise. This date, as at present determined, is for Waking the 6th July, and for Chatham the 18th July."

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,
* FREDERICK PALMER.
"for Secretary."

This I received yesterday, my lord.

4860. Will you kindly let us have a copy of that letter?—Yes, I will, my lord.

4861. (Mr. De Vere.) I do not perceive that the latter mentioned reports against prisoners on the prison books with the adjudications on them?—Yes. "In case applications are made to you in reference to the commission of enquiry into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons by the prisoners concerned, to be furnished with their petitions to the Secretary of State, or to the directors, or their supposed letters, they may be furnished to them, but not in any case any reports made to superior authority on these cases, the latter are to be furnished only to the Commissioners. The convicts may also, on application, be furnished with extracts from director's and governor's interview books, giving the applications they made and the replies they received."

4862. Will you allow me just to look at that letter?—Yes. (Hands the letter.)

4863. (Mr. Brodick.) In the report book a distinct book from the interview book?—Quite distinct.

4864. (Mr. De Vere.) Do you conceive that you have any power under that letter to give the prisoners copies of the reports against them which are to be found in the report books, with the adjudications thereon?—I am not sure that it does give the authority to do that.

4865. (Dr. Ligon.) Perhaps the governor had better apply distinctly for permission to give the prisoners copies of reports against them, if asked for?—Very well, sir.

4866. (Chairman.) We may be considered as requesting you formally to make application to higher authority for leave to give the prisoners, on application, copies of any entries affecting each in the prison books, or complaints; reports against them, in short, with the adjudications?—I have a copy here, my lord, of all these reports.

4867. But we think it likely that the prisoners will ask for them, and we should like to know whether the authorities would grant it. Will you be kind enough to make the application, adding the recommendation of the Commission?—Yes.

4868. Have any friends been to visit any of the prisoners?—No, my lord.

4869. Not since you received the communication?—Not since. Mrs. Ross has been written to, saying that she might come.

4870. She has not been here?—She has not been here.

4871. Have you had any reply from Mr. Butt?—None at all.

4872. Have you received any written statements from any of the prisoners with the view of their being laid before the Commission?—Yes, I have received one from McClure.

4873. From what prisoner is it?—McClure.

4874. John McClure?—John McClure.

4875. Will you kindly hand it in?—Yes. (Witness hands it a document.)

4876. Is it exactly in the same state as when you received it?—It is exactly in the same state as I received it.

4877. (Dr. Ligon.) That statement has not been read or examined by you?—Oh, not at all; he sent it in to me.

4878. I mean to say it has not been read by you?—I have read it. It is not in a cover.

4879. I want to ascertain that it is exactly now in the same state as you received it; that it is not amended?—Not in any way. It was given to me by the officer. He gave it to the officer and the officer gave it to me.

4880. (Chairman.) They have been put in possession of pens, ink, and paper, I apprehend?—They have, my lord.

4881. Have you also given them envelopes?—They have been told that they may write out their statements, seal them up, and give them to me, or else that they may deliver them to me personally.

4882. And have they had envelopes?—I do not know that their statements are ready yet.

4883. It would be well that they should be told they would have envelopes?—Oh, they will.

4884. (Dr. Ligon.) It is better to give them envelopes and let them see them if they wish?—The prisoner Shaw came up to me shortly after I gave them notice that there would be three days' intermission from labour given, and he stated to me next day, that for reasons of his own he did not wish to have anything to do with the Commission; that he was quite ready to make a statement if required, but that he did not wish to have anything to do with it. He gave me no reasons.

4885. What steps did you take with those prisoners in consequence of receiving a communication to the effect that this Commission was about to visit this prison?—On the 29th June I had each one up separately and told them the Commission was going to be held; I read the circular; I said each would have three clear days to prepare a statement, and they would be provided with pen, ink, and paper, and anything else that was required to assist them.

4886. Were they in any way differently treated after that notice?—They were kept three days separate from each other, agreeably to the wishes of the Commission, and they did not do any work.

4887. Are they still kept separate?—They are.

4888. They are still kept separate?—They are still separate.

4889. In separate cells?—In separate cells, and exercised separately.

4890. And exercised separately?—Yes.

4891. Has that continued up to the present time?—Except yesterday; they were allowed to attend mass, and they went to it as usual.

4892. Was each prisoner served with a copy of this printed document?—I gave each prisoner a copy of it.

4893. For how long have they been now in separate confinement?—The treason-felony prisoners; do you mean how long they are kept apart from each other?

4894. Yes?—Since the 30th of June.

4895. (Chairman.) In consequence of what you understood to be the wish of the Commission, I apprehend that those treason-felony convicts have been kept in separate cells for the purpose of enabling them to prepare their statements?—Yes, sir.

4896. They have been so kept you say, from the 29th June to the present time?—From the 30th inclusive. I warned them on the 29th June.

4897. That I may mention to you was done for the purpose of enabling them to have the fullest leisure for the preparation of their statements; but as the period of their examination is necessarily deferred in consequence of their asking for various papers and from other circumstances, the Commission are of opinion that the separate confinement should now cease, and that they should return to their usual modes of association. Will you take care that that is done?—Yes.

4898. We will now see, if you please, O'Donovan Rossa?—Yes, my lord.

4899. You will be kind enough to see that the warder who brings him will be out of hearing but within call?—Yes.

4900. (Dr. Ligon.) You understand that you are to set the other prisoners at liberty at once?—At once.

The witness withdrew.

JEREMIAH O'DONOVAN (ROSSA) examined.

4901. (Chairman.) We are a commission, I should explain to you, appointed by Government, but entirely independent of the Government, for the purpose of inquiring into the treatment of yourself and the other prisoners under the treason-felony Act, at present confined in prisons in England. I had better name for you the Commissioners first; that is Dr. Greenhow; that is Mr. De Vere; that is Dr. Lyons; that is Mr. Brodribk; and I am the chairman, Lord Devon. Our object is to receive the fullest and freest view from any one of the prisoners into whose cases we are going to inquire, any statement, orally or in writing, or both, which he may wish to submit. The statement will be made to us in a private room and out of the hearing of any person connected with the prison, and whatever the statement may be, it will in no way prejudice the future position of the prisoner as regards the prison in which he is. He will be none the worse for it in any way. It will be taken down by a shorthand writer who is sitting there, and it will be our distinct recommendation to the Government that the report and evidence should be printed afterwards when the inquiry is concluded. We have now had handed to us from the Prisons Directors Office in Parliament Street, a letter addressed by you to us, and we have had it under our consideration. In it you make application in your behalf that certain papers should be placed in our possession. We understand from a letter which we have received from the Government, that those reports, or so many of them as they have, will be placed before us for our consideration, and we understand also that the suppressed letters written by you will be supplied to you?—It is to you, sir, that I wish to hand them in.

4902. Very well, you can hand them in to us when you get them. Am I to understand that you are prepared to-day to make any statement, written or oral, to us, or that you wish for further time?—On Friday, my lord, the governor sent for me and told me he had a letter from the Secretary of State stating that we could have the assistance of any of our friends that we desired to aid our case; so I asked if I could consult my wife, and I was told "Yes," as I was writing up to that time, and since have not written, expecting she would come. However, what I have written I am prepared to lay before you. However, it is as much as I intended to write, unless her interview changed my mind.

4903. That rests very much with yourself. We shall be here again the 19th of this month, that is to-morrow fortnight, and if you wish, instead of going into your examination now, to defer it until you have an opportunity of seeing your wife or any other friend who calls in the meantime, you can defer it to then, or we can take your evidence and statement now, just as you prefer?—Just as you prefer, my lord, I am entirely in your hands. Anything that is convenient to you will be convenient to me.

4904. (Dr. Lyons.) Were you furnished with a printed copy of the regulations as to the facilities that would be afforded to you?—On Saturday I was furnished it.

4905. Have you read it?—Yes, I have.

4906. Are you aware of the facility afforded you in paragraphs numbers 2 and 8 in that for consulting with your friends with regard to preparing your statement?—Yes, on Friday I was told of it, sir, and of course I had no opportunity since I wrote to my wife. The governor gave me a sheet of paper to write to my wife. I have not heard anything since.

4907. Do you wish to defer your examination until you have an opportunity of conferring with your wife or other friends to aid you in preparing your statement, written or oral, to be laid before this Commission?—Well, I have written something, and I am prepared to give it up to you, and I do not know whether it would be too much delay for you, but if you would look over it I then would be prepared to answer any questions you put to me on it, and then be ready when you come again to be examined further.

4908. (Chairman.) If you hand it in to us now I do not know that we should examine you on it to-day. —Well, I was writing out some sheets of them that are badly written again. I was engaged at it when I was sent for. However, you will be able to make it out with some little trouble.

4909. Have you finished it?—No, not finished it, but I have just signed my name to it.

4910. You had better put down all that you have to say?—This is all I have to put down, sir, until I see my wife.

4911. (Dr. Lyons.) It should be understood that your giving this in now will not prevent you from handing in more.

4912. (Chairman.) This shall be considered only as a part of your statement?—As part.

4913. But we think it would be better now not to enter on your examination. If you after seeing your wife wish to make a supplementary statement, it can be put in an envelope and handed to the governor, who will hand it to us?—I would have no objection, my lord, he should get a copy to send to the director or Secretary of State, or any others you wish.

The prisoner handed in the following statement:—

To the Commissioners of Inquiry.

"Quod tibi sentis vis, short ac brevis."

GENTLEMEN, Chatham Prison, June 30, 1870.

If you were prisoners in France under Napoleon the Third, as you might be if William the Conqueror and his immediate successors had ruled England from France instead of becoming English, and if you had been treated as I have been in England, and been somewhat misrepresented and belied, and after having had experience of one commission of inquiry being a pretence, if you learned that another was coming on, you would be able to understand why I commence with the above quotation.

Taking it for granted that you may be determined to elicit the whole truth, I have reasons to fear that you cannot succeed, and here is one of them.—I was 35 consecutive days in this prison with my hands tied behind my back. The address of the officers displayed itself in rendering me able one day to count eight locations of the flesh on both wrists from the sides of the irons, and these I believe were given intentionally. (In anything I say in this paper, do not understand me to express any opinion as to whether any punishment I underwent was merited or not.)

I have reason to believe that this putting of me in irons was by order of the board of directors. Well, the story was by or another goes into the world, and though it is in accordance with prison discipline, the Government deem it proper to contradict it, and the board of directors who order the punishment do actually, through one of their body, hold an inquiry at this prison to prove that no such punishment took place. Reasons similar to that which arises from such a circumstance as this make me very reluctant to engage in any prison investigation where the ordinary means of cross-examination for eliciting the truth from witnesses of easy memory is denied. Here is an incident in the inquiry of 1867: the governor of Portland prison seized a letter which I was sending out surreptitiously. It was addressed to "Mrs. Mary Moore," the mother of a fellow prisoner, "for Mrs. O'D," my wife. The governor entered on his books a charge against me to the effect that I was holding an illicit intrigue with the wife of another prisoner, Michael Moore, and he subsequently told Michael Moore that I was writing to his wife. Michael Moore had a wife, but her name is Kate. I tried to explain away the matter to him; I also tried to get the governor to have the charge recorded aright in his books, and I could not succeed. He said to me one day, "I believe the letter was intended for 'Moore's wife, and that the words 'for Mrs. O'D.' 'in small writing in a corner on the back of it was 'only a sisterly, and I told the board of directors

"so, and I told the Secretary of State so." "Then," said I, "you told them what was false." He immediately ordered me to be taken to the punishment cells. Now you may fancy what my surprise was when Messrs. Knox and Pollack informed me that the governor of Portland and his officers had contradicted all that I had stated regarding this matter. These reports as to my holding an intrigue with the wife of another man are written somewhere, and as written things last longer than we do, I can anticipate the unpleasantness of having them turn up some day to defame my name. I applied to the board of directors to have such papers destroyed, and their reply was that they would do what to them seemed proper. I now again bring the matter before you with a view to your doing me justice.

The second paragraph of what purports to be the object of your inquiry runs thus:—

"Whether there is anything in the treatment, diet, or discipline of the convict prisons to justify any charge of unnecessary severity or harshness towards the prisoners confined therein, or of the neglect of the conditions necessary for the due preservation of the health of the prisoners."

The word "unnecessary" in this paragraph is the qualifying one, and I would be afraid to venture an opinion as to what degree of "harshness" or "severity" you would consider unnecessary towards keeping in subtile order the very hard characters that find themselves in English convict prisons. Flogging is a legalised punishment, but I have not been flogged. Bearing in mind the fifth paragraph of your letter, which confines me to facts within my own knowledge, I am unwilling to put anything that happened to myself before you with a view to your pronouncing it unnecessary, harsh, or severe. An Irishman has said that Englishmen have one word which in these institutions covers up everything, and that word is "discipline." I have felt it very severe to be stripped of fannels in mid-winter and left shivering night and day for two months till an attack of diarrhoea brought me the doctor and a fannel waistcoat. A fellow prisoner, named John Lynch, told me one of these days that the cold was killing him, and he died shortly after. Discipline required that we be stripped of our fannels.

I felt it pretty harsh to be forcibly charged with "idleness," and to be punished on such a charge while I was daily doing the amount of task work struck out for me. I thought it pretty severe to be put on starvation diet under such circumstances, and seeing that the interests of discipline required this in my case, I gave up all hope of being able to accommodate myself with any equanimity to the requirements of my masters.

Discipline required that in a black hole cell I be left during two nights without bed, blanket, or even rug, and I should like to see the prison rule which authorises this. To give me a rug and blanket and deprive me of my body clothes in such a place is sleep what I experienced often. I was at last tempted to refuse to give them my body clothes, and for this I paid dearly. Three officers seized me, threw me on the ground, one of them placed his knee on my neck, while the others were pulling off my trousers. Then it was necessary to turn me over, and while on the flat of my back this gentleman who had charge of my neck lifted himself up and leaped with his knee foremost on my chest. My recollection of the matter is fixed in my mind by the burst of air that shot up my throat, somewhat like the escape from a full-blown bladder if the foot be stamped upon it. And yet that did not satisfy them; they had possessed themselves of my clothes; they were just out of my cell, and I in a recumbent position, rising from the ground, one of them turns round and dashes me back against the wall. The interests of discipline will not allow this to be called "unnecessary" severity, for, if I had stripped myself according to order the thing would not have happened. But I was fool enough to think that those people had no right to lay hands on my person while I remained quietly in my clothes and my black hole.

As to anything that may pertain to "neglect of the conditions necessary for the due preservation of the health of the prisoners," discipline will cease to the relief here also. To be confined for months in a darkened cell, specially furnished with a privy unfurnished with a lid, and one month of this without even stirring out of it, except to the black hole, and on 16 oz. of bread and 40 oz. of water daily, may not be necessary for the preservation of health, but it is deemed necessary for discipline.

A prison doctor's opinion as to what is necessary for a prisoner's health is the opinion that must be taken here. I heard one of our prisoners speak to our medical officer one day about a sore foot. The doctor said if a hole or anything that way came in it he'd see what he could do. The prisoner asked if prevention were not considered better than cure. Yes, replied the doctor, but in some cases we are not allowed to prevent. I am transported for life; I am made partly deaf to see that it is my life is wanted, and not the preservation of my health, and I do not mean to be squabbling about it. But this I claim a right to, a right to, even since this Commission sat, but I might say in contempt of it, been interfered with, and that is the natural right to speak to my wife about the state of my health. I had a visit from her on the 5th of February, and I then told her of some affection of the spine that troubled me. She went home, and feeling ill, the doctor who attended her asking how I was, she told him. He said there was a special treatment for that, and wondered I did not receive it from the prison doctor. This she told me at a visit three weeks ago, and as I had spoken to our medical officer about a dozen times without effect, I told her so, when the deputy governor, present at the visit, immediately interposed, and said he would not allow that conversation to be continued in that style, as it implied a neglect of duty on the part of the prison officers, and so the matter ended. Now, gentlemen, this is one result that I would wish your inquiry to have, the result of releasing us from that restriction which imposes silence on us regarding our treatment.

Mr. Gladstone is, I believe, at the head of the English Government at present; he is a writer as well as a statesman, and if my memory serves me right he has in some book written that in any nation or institution where publicity is guarded against and secrecy provided for, always must necessarily exist. It is a truth that all men (except some) recognise. The exceptions are those who are "infallible" and cannot do wrong, but in christianity, "constitutional" England, where criminals are punished only to deter others from crime, the end professed to be aimed at cannot be attained in our case, when such extraordinary efforts as come under my experience have been made to keep our punishments hidden from the world.

My letters are suppressed because I speak of my treatment, and the British Government defines my character by saying that it is because I have told lies in them. I have asked you to call for these letters to question me on them, and I hope you will do so.

The English people might have more reason to be pleased with the working of their convict system if this criminal-looking veil of secrecy were lifted from it. If they would even only get the press represented at the criminal sessions that are every day held in prisons it would be something.

I was breaking stones one day alongside of a prisoner convicted of thieving. The officer kept goading him about something, but the prisoner dare not reply as his "good character" was at stake; he only inclined his head to me, with the expression, "By Christ I'll make someone pay for this yet." And thus it is here men are "reformed." The humanity is crushed out of the man; his soul, his spirit is trampled on, and then we give him a Bible to teach him religion! to teach him that he has a soul. I am not reflecting upon religion

J. O'Donoghue
(Moss).

4 July 1878.

J. O'Connell of any denomination or its ministers. I am only speaking of "discipline," which governs all.

4 July 1873. "Crimine ab uno disco senu" and "omni."

Mr. Gladstone, in speaking of the treatment of prisoners in Naples, writes these words; but where is the man coming to see an English prison can speak to an English prisoner and ask him for information as to the treatment? That man is not to be found. The visitor will find everything in the nicest applicable order, and as Mr. Gladstone saw in Naples he will see excellent rules and regulations hanging up in every corner; he will see a Bible in every cell, even in the one where the victim is chained and being starved; and if he comes on a Sunday he will see 1,500 men parading for chapel, each with a Bible and prayer-book exposed to view. What wonder if he say to himself, "Oh! this is the paradise of saints;" but he little knows the curses that are heaving, the hell that is seething under this phylactery, and which discipline makes her votaries assume, at the peril of losing their daily bread. If it be a digression to speak here of what does not tend to the reformation of these English children of misfortune, I will, for an excuse, again borrow the words of another, and say, "Howe scus, Ausonii nihil a me offensum patet."

I do not see any rule which authorises discipline to deprive a man of the use of the Bible for six months, and yet this sentence was passed on me. If you will inquire why, you will perhaps be told that I injured some of the books given to me, but you will do well not to believe it until you question me. It is in matters that affect the constitution or explaining away of anything I say that I deem it absolutely necessary to be present in order to your eliciting the truth.

I do not see anything in the rules to warrant the authorities stripping me naked once a day for three or four months, and yet discipline does it. But refusing one day to be the agent of my own shame, five officers seized me and giving me a terrible choking, left me naked on the floor.

In youth I acquired a very strong prejudice, if I may so use the word, against appearing naked before anyone, and in these places I have not been able to get rid of the unpleasant feeling. A very painful position it has been to me often to see myself in a bath with an officer standing over me looking at me. I suppose he had instructions not to take his eyes off me. One of the rules says that the governor and officers are at all times to show examples tending to inculcate principles of morality, &c., but in Ireland we would not consider this thing in accordance with morality or decency.

I also fail to see any rule that obliges me to bathe in water in which other men had bathed and washed, and this I had to do often.

That I should be treated in this country in a manner that the Government would be afraid or ashamed to have known to what I cannot understand; but I know that their fears one time as to my being to write anything of my treatment and get it out, went so far as to deprive me for months of that waste brown paper which is supplied to every prisoner for purposes of nature.

When I applied to the director, Captain Gambler, for a sufficiency of coarse bread, and remarked that that was what England would not refuse as a right to the state prisoner of any other country, he refused it, with the observation that "England has no state prisoners nowadays." England may not like to have the odium that attaches to any country having state prisoners, and she may try to get rid of it by labelling us as thieves and murderers. She would have her vengeance and her christian character at the same time, and she hopes you will assist her. I can only hope that you will be just.

Hearing how I was treated in the report of Messrs. Knox and Pollock, I asked to be allowed to see a copy of it. I thought English fair play would allow this, but the Secretary of State told me not. Will you please tell me if I might expect a copy of yours?

The third paragraph of your paper runs thus:—
"Whether the treason-felony prisoners have been subjected to any exceptional treatment in any way, or have suffered any hardships beyond those incident to the condition of a prisoner sentenced to 'penal servitude.'"

Were you to see one day of our life you would see that in every respect our treatment is exceptional; better in some respects, worse in other respects than that of other prisoners; better, in so far as that we are for some time past saved the annoyances that come from officers goading us on to work, and seeing that everything we do is done wrong. I feel the absence of this now, because I suffered from it a long time.

At present I think the instructions given to these in charge of us seem to be, to take no notice of our work, but to keep the most vigilant eyes and ears upon us, so as to render it impossible that a look or a whisper could visit us from any mortal thing outside ourselves. In saying this is better I speak only for myself, for while I am allowed to enjoy my dignity in peace, I care not what eyes are upon me or what walls are around me. Since I came to this prison I have not been outside the walls which surround the building, and that is what none but a treason-felony convict can say. The thief or the murderer can have a look at a river and a green field, if it be any relief to his eyesight, but I cannot. He can have a hammock to lie on, but I am for years in a punishment cell and have to lie on the harder boards. The ordinary prisoner can pray if so inclined without an interdicted stone, but if the treason-felony prisoner pray, it is with three officers sitting on the bench in front of him looking him in the face, and if the treason-felony prisoner go to communion he has an officer parading him through the chapel, while the ordinary prisoner can approach the rails without such distinguished notice. During the past month we got four hours' exercise in the open air every day, and sometimes in a more airy yard than the small penal class one in which we were hitherto exercised during two hours each day; and on last Sunday I got two hours' exercise instead of one, which I got every Sunday up to that. This is an act of grace to me, because I must be two years in prison to entitle myself to that, and though counting by the calendar I am going on five years in England, if you count by discipline I have not spent one yet.

Touching any exceptional treatment, I state that I was one morning in my cell, the gas was turned off pretty early, and left me unable to read a book I hold in my hand. There was an iron blind on my window then, which has since been taken off. I reflected that the ordinary prisoners had light enough, perhaps, having no blinds on their windows, and that while I was not supposed to be under punishment I might reasonably be allowed daylight when the daylight was artificially excluded. I pulled my bell. The officer came. I asked him civilly enough if I could not have the daylight, and he commenced to abuse me; he said, "he knew what I was, that I had the same light as any other prisoner, and that I should behave like any other prisoner, or that if I did not I would soon find myself in a darker place." He shut my door and kept talking outside of my innocence and presumption, and in the moment I was busy enough to say, "Ah! get out." He reported me for this "innocence," and he positively denied that he said a single word of what I state. I told the governor that the prisoners in the next cells must have heard him as well as I, but the governor said he could not take prisoners' evidence where the word of an officer was concerned, and gave me 48 hours bread and water. Understood that to accommodate matters to my exceptional treatment, the English prisoners of "good character" were chosen to occupy punishment cells in Chatham six days before I came there. They naturally enough felt the restraint, and some of them applied to be placed in their own position before and after I came amongst them. One of them a few days after my arrival said to me, "I wish it was the devil" "had picked me out the night I was picked out for this party." And these men, too, were made to see that I was the cause of their exceptional treatment, for on those days during which I used to be kept in on bread and water they used to be taken outside the walls to work. This was what I would call foul play.

Amongst these prisoners, too, my masters must have a special one to act as spy upon me. The first day I was with them he gave me a bit of a newspaper; but when we came in from labour the officer in charge of the ward visited his cell, then came to my cell, and ordered me to strip. The bit of newspaper was of course found. Those to whom I told the story say that the officer went so far as to give the prisoner this paper to trap me, but I will not go that length. I spent nine or ten days in punishment before I went to labour again, and when I went out I learned that some of the other prisoners had been reproaching this trait for the trick he had played upon me.

Assistant to this first report against me in Chatham was another, relative to my work and my "insolence." The officer kept spurring me the first day I took my hammer in hand. I am left-handed, and he made me work with the right hand; then he kept telling me that my stroke was very light, and at last said, "Oh, officer, the wages are rather light too." I was aided by a superior officer who visited the party, and he talking of my "insolence," I told him the prison rules did not permit me to be insolent to any officer, nor did they permit any officer to be insolent to me, and this only made matters worse. I told the governor I came to prison determined to be insolent to no one, and intended to remain with that disposition, and he fish-tailed my words so as to make me say that I would not be insolent any more. I have seen the improper way in which reports are fashioned, and how the prisoners work are fashioned, to suit the reports; and finding myself invariably misrepresented in this way, I have again and again asked for paper to put my replies or my charges in writing, and it has been refused. This is a thing that would be remedied if the secrecy of prison life was done away with. I saw those prison hooks were being made up for the purpose of making me a most desperate character, and I had to help for it but to reflect that an impost on my body would one day show me most wicked and my masters most humane. I'll give you a few items. I am one day shaving and I cut my throat; the blood flows pretty freely, and with the point of my state pencil I write on the door of my cell, thinking of something a duke of Burgundy said, dying on a battle-field—

"Le sang rouge d'Irlande coule en Angleterre."

I am called out of my cell, the officer sees this writing, and next day I get 48 hours bread and water for having written in letters of blood on my door, "The red blood of Ireland will rise in England," and it turns out that this was at a time when there was some Anglo-Irish connection amongst you. Again, I am on bread and water in a darkened cell, and to keep myself company I am repeating some lines; the officer addresses me and says, "You must not be going on this way." I reply, "Oh, by Jove I will," and next day in the offence charged against me it is, "By Jove I will," which makes the affair look very wicked. The two things I state are offences, and I have nothing to say as to being punished for them. I only cite them for the purpose of showing how "bad characters" are made. This talking in my cell was after finding myself punished for idleness while I did my work, after which I gave up all hope of being able to get on smoothly, and when I got punishment I spent my time as well as I could, regardless of what noise I made by repeating a piece of poetry. To have one officer see me doing one thing, and another another thing, and to have the first charge me with idleness for not doing his work whilst doing the work of the second, is another way for getting up reports, and it is "reports" that make the "bad character." Having so very had a name myself, it would not become me to assert that the worst characters in society manage to have the best characters in prison. Prisoners know this to be the case, and it is well, in a certain sense; but it would be better were the mind to be marched onward with the badges, were the man cultivated with the animal.

As to exceptional treatment, might I not ask, how is it explained that I have been separated from the rest of the Irish prisoners and sent to Chatham, under the circumstances I state? How is it explained that in Portland I have been separated from the Irish prisoners and sent amongst a gang of English prisoners? How is it explained that while in Portland, the rest of the treason-felony prisoners working in mid-winter in a shed, I was placed outside of the shed, and prevented from having that little shelter from the poison-laden blast which the others had? How is explained that, when under "report" the same day with some of my fellow prisoners, on a charge of talking while at work, they got 24 hours on bread and water, and I got 72 hours on bread, with 14 days solitary confinement on penal close-diet?

These things, of course, are all explained away by saying that I have been a bad character, but may I hint that the desire to give it to me probably stood sponsor for it.

I knew I have been guilty of the most serious offences in trying to get letters out underhand, but the authorities may thank themselves for putting this thought into my head.

While in Portland my wife wanted to know something of my pecuniary affairs. I could not write to her. She wrote to Mr. Clifton, the governor, asking him to allow me to answer her questions. He told me to write what I had to say on a slate and that he would have it copied and sent to her. I did so, and a month after he said to me, "I could not be sending your love letters to your wife." It was that observation that determined me to be regardless of prison rules, if I could get a letter to my wife any way. After his observation I made some remark as to experiencing such treatment in an English prison, and I will recollect his reply to be this, "The treatment is too good for you. 50 years ago you'd have been hanged."

It has been asserted and denied that I was obliged to go on my knees and elbows to eat my food at one time. My hands were tied in front this time, I got a dish of sirloin in a black hole cell, I had no spoon, I was hungry, and had to go at it in the above position. I was ungrateful enough to break the dish after lapping up what it held, to mark this circumstance in my memory, and in that of my keepers. How I came to have those lines on me is a long story. I'll try and shorten it.

Some writing was found on the person of another treason-felony prisoner. I was suspected to be the writer, but my name was not to it. I was this day stripped naked three times, nothing contraband was found on me or in my cell, yet I was sent to the darkened chamber and kept there for 72 hours. I was then told that I was to go back to my ordinary cell, but that I would not be allowed to go to chapel in the mornings. I said this punishment smelt of the old penal laws in Ireland. Three days afterwards I was brought before the director and charged again with the offence; he said he would stop my visit, the ticket of which had been sent to Mr. Richard Pigott, Dublin. I was taken to my ordinary cell again, and I got my exercise with the other prisoners that day, which would not be so if there was further punishment recorded for the offence. Next morning at six o'clock I was put again in the darkened cell. My breakfast came, it was eight oz. of bread and a pint of water. I asked what was the punishment for, and what was its duration, and I could not be told. This to use legal parlance was what I considered an illegal proceeding, and I asked my sense of it by breaking the spy hole which they had in the door for looking in at me, and then the handcuffs came. These handcuffs were left on night and day, and I have some vivid recollections of the disagreeable length of those old December nights. One morning I sent for the doctor and told him that the irons were too tight; he examined and said not, but when the lamp was held close I saw that my wrist was full of blood; they, the officers, said it was from unnecessary exertion on my part, and I had to leave it so. When prison officers know that a man can be worried with impunity, you can have but a very poor idea, however rich your imagination, of the numberless opportunities that offer themselves to a seditious officer.

We had a principal officer in this prison when I came here, named Mr. Allison, and he was very clever. He told me one day that there was a place convenient to this prison called "Jilligan" (Gillingham), and that any prisoner who did not obey the rules very soon found his way to it. This Jilligan is the prison graveyard. It was this officer's duty occasionally during those 35 days to tie my hands behind my back. I used to have no braces, and I had flannelled holes in my clothes to keep up my breeches while my hands were tied; but after putting on the irons this gentleman used to go to the trouble of unbuttoning my clothes, and I could not button them again till the next week. His subserviencies used to follow his example, and one of them, when in the morning I used to stoop down to take in my clothes from outside the cell door, used to kick them up in my face. This was to provoke me, and furnish him with an excuse to use his club on me. Messrs. Knox and Pollock, as I am told, represented me as occasionally defying the authorities. I dare say it was deemed proper to show me up as a fool. I believe I know my own mind better than anyone else knows it, and I cannot see a thought nor the sides of a thought of defiance in it, where, as in prison, ability to do anything is absent. It is not in a spirit of defiance that the stag turns on the closely pursuing hounds, that the rat smooches at the cat, and that the worm turns up its threatening head with pain when trodden upon.

On my arrival at this prison, Mr. Allison asked if in the other prisons I was in they were very particular about the military drill. "Well, not very," said I. "You must be sure to pay particular attention to it here," said he, "for it is a thing that we are very particular about." "That, governor," I observed, "must seem strange to me, an Irishman, for it is one of the things for which I have been transported."

If I had any inclination to be defiant, to be captious, here was a matter to seize hold of any day since I came to England. The attempt to teach men drill was urged by the Government at all the treason-felony trials, and at mine. The word "Halt," spoken in jest or earnest in Ireland, was enough to fix a man in prison, and no sooner do I set foot in England than I am by law exercised in that far which by law I am exercised, but I had no disposition to be captious.

When I came to England all convicts had some hours at school two days each week; but for our benefit, or non-benefit, a new class was made of educated men who needed no schooling, and all the treason-felony prisoners whom I met in prison in the several prisons were forthwith decreed to be men of superior education—by discipline. In Millbank, one day, I thought I might read a book while all the other prisoners of the ward were at school. The deputy governor saw me, and recommended the officer for allowing me to be reading during school hours.

This is the 1st of July, and I have written so far when a letter from the Secretary of State announces that I am to have an assistant in preparing my statement for the inquiry, and that my expressed letters and my letters to the authorities will be forthcoming thereat. You will look over these, and I do not know that I will trouble you or myself with writing much more, unless at the guidance of my assistant. One matter, however, I will allude to, it is that of having committed the offence of throwing water on the governor of the prison.

I was, as I say, placed in company here with nine English prisoners. I did not like my position, the prisoners did not like them, and the officers kept worrying me. One day I was yoked to a cart with these men drawing stones, and I had a noose of the rope over my neck, the cart heeled over, the shaft flew high in air, and the rope slipped off my neck without doing me any injury; the danger was in its kicking on my neck. A second time the same day the cart heeled over before its time, and at this occurrence I was in no danger for it had arrived at its destination, and the rope was off my neck or breast. However, the first adventure told me that it was high time for me to be released from the party, and soon after I applied to the governor and visiting director to be allowed to work in my cell rather than with them. The result of my application only made matters worse, by having the prisoners removed several paces apart at work, and preventing them from holding conversation with each other. After refusing twice to work with them, and getting punished, a third time and last time I refused on the 1st of June 1868. The governor kept giving me bread and water till the 17th of June, first for refusing to labour, three days, and then for refusing to pay him silence during the time that I was being starved into compliance. I one day deemed it proper to tell him, with a well intention, that it was not to him but to the authority that was subjecting me to such treatment that I refused this homage of the will, that I could not conscientiously bow down before these who were humiliating me, and harshly to me, "I treat you with contempt." I would be satisfied that he would trust me with contempt if he let me make my punishment without disturbing me, and if he made his officers keep their hands off me; but he would not, for they used physical force to get my hands and body in the position of "attention," and he kept giving me the bread and water after his saying he would treat me with contempt. So when he came to my cell door again, and when the officer called upon me to salute the governor, I did what I alluded to. This occurred about noon, and next day about the same hour I was put in irons. I calculate that in the meantime a report of the matter was sent to London, and that the order to put me in irons came from London. It cannot with truth be said that I showed any signs of being violent other than was shown by the commission of the offence. My reply to the director when charged was, "that it was the reflex of the treatment I received." To be sure it is an act that I once thought I would never commit, and would not believe it in my anti-prison days if a Columbkille had prophesied it. These who undertake to pronounce judgment on such a matter might do well to remember the opinion of him who said that it would be a charitable thing to refrain from pronouncing judgment on a hungry man who stole a loaf, until you found yourself in the same plight and pinched with the same hunger as the thief. He alone who would have gone through my prison course would be competent to estimate the moral taint attaching to my act. Discipline was lenient enough to vindicate itself by 37 days with my hands tied behind my back, 28 days on 16 oz. of bread daily, and 30 days on penitential diet. This was the last of my extra prison punishment, save 10 days in solitary confinement two months afterwards, on a charge of writing a letter which I did not write. I will repeat here that if the authorities had been contented with a respectful demeanour from me, and humility becoming my position as a convict, they could have had at any day since I came to prison; but they forced me to see that it was humiliation they required, and I did not care to play the hypocrite by affecting what I could not feel. There are numberless annoyances that I endured which to me appeared to have no object, only annoyance, but as they are past, and as the authorities put in no appearance now of not wishing to have them repeated, I will bury them.

I have left a margin on these sheets that in reading them over you may mark anything deemed relevant to your inquiry. I also refer you to my suppressed letters, to my letters to the board of directors and the Secretaries of State, and to my letter to you dated June 25th, in which I suppose that the truth or falsehood of the statements made in the newspapers regarding us must be a matter of issue to the public and of concern to you.

If you are pleased to examine me thereupon, or upon whatever you examine me, I am disposed to give you as much satisfaction as regard for truth will enable me.

I remain, Gentlemen,
Yours respectfully,
JER. O'DONOVAN RUSSA.

4914. Your examination being deferred to the 19th, is there any matter that you wish to state to us now before you withdraw?—Well, my lord, you said that any thing I would say would not prejudice me in future.

4915. No.—Well I have some experience of prison life; and I do not know how, though you may be very much inclined to protect me, I do not know how you could, if the authorities desire to keep punishing me; for they can get thousands of excuses to punish me; say that it is a breach of discipline; and I do not know how you would be able to learn it or become aware of it.

4916. We can only tell you that it is our anxious desire and that we will take every possible mode of securing that no injury shall follow.—I will take it for granted my lord: however, I am not afraid. As I have offered to have the matter sent to the Secretary of State or board of directors, I am not afraid to make any statement.

4917. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you inform the Commission, in what way you experienced any injury by reason of giving evidence before the Commission?—Well, things that occur in prison are that are not seen. For instance, having a spot on a vessel that you had in your cell: that spot might be there for twelve months perhaps; it is not seen, and the officers are not very strict; and after you leave to-morrow that may be seen, and I might be punished and get bread and water for it.

4918. (Dr. Greenwood.) Did you give evidence before the last Commission?—I did, sir.

4919. Did you find any change in your treatment after giving your evidence at that Commission?—I did, sir.

4920. In what way did you find a change in your treatment?—About a few weeks after they visited me, I was doing my work—stak work, doing daily the full amount, and one day I had it done about ten minutes before the time for the officer to come to take it. I had a book, and I took it in my hands, and I was seen by a superior officer and reported for idleness, and next day got 48 hours' bread and water in a private cell and dark hood.

4921. (Chairman.) Can you fix the date of that?—The 3d of June the Commissioners were here, and this circumstance may be in the latter end of June or beginning of July.

4922. (Dr. Greenwood.) How long was it after you gave the evidence to the Commission?—About three weeks or a fortnight.

4923. (Chairman.) What year was it?—1867, sir, I made up my mind that there was no use to try not to commit myself, and I gave them plenty of opportunities of punishing me.

4924. What was the name of that warder?—The name of the warder who ordered me to be reported was the chief warder of Millbank, Mr. Power.

4925. You were in Millbank at the time?—In Millbank, sir; chief warder Power; and the man who was over me in the ward was Percival I think.

4926. (Dr. Greenwood.) Did you attribute your punishment to having given evidence before that Commission?—Well, I could not say that. Of course I would have no evidence to prove it.

4927. (Chairman.) I understand that what you say is this, that having given evidence before Messrs. Knox and Pollock, you on a day which followed shortly after, were reported for idleness at a time when you had in point of fact done your work; and you leave us to put whatever construction we please upon it?—I have no evidence to give beyond it.

4928. It was a fact?—Yes, my lord; it is the fact.

4929. (Dr. Lyons.) Is it your impression that you were punished with bread and water in consequence of having given evidence before Messrs. Knox and Pollock?—I could not say, Dr. Lyons.

4930. I want to know what is your impression?—Yes, it is my impression that, as we say in prison, the servers were laid on then.

4931. (Mr. Bradick.) You were actually placed on bread and water, in a dark cell?—Yes, a darkened cell; not entirely dark. On those gentlemen coming to make inquiry, they said to me "We have nothing whatever to do with the prison discipline;" and when I was laying before them the matters that concerned me, they said "that comes under prison discipline, and we have nothing to do with it." Coming to make an inquiry under such circumstances, of course does not appear honest.

4932. (Mr. De Vere.) You have seen the instructions under which this Commission has been appointed?—Yes, sir, part of them.

4933. (Mr. Bradick.) You will have observed that one of the questions submitted to us is whether there is anything in the treatment, diet, or discipline, of convict prisons, to sustain any charge of undue severity or harshness towards the treason-felony prisoners confined in English prisons. You will therefore see that under our commission, it is not only within our power, but it is our duty, to inquire into any point of prison discipline whereby you may feel that you are unjustly affected.

4934. (Mr. De Vere.) We have two heads of inquiry; one, whether there was any exceptional treatment towards treason-felony prisoners; the other, whether there is anything in the discipline of the prison which is unduly harsh towards the prisoners or injurious to their health. We have the two subjects. You understand that?—I do understand, sir; but of course it would be very hard to say what is necessary to keep in servile order the people who are confined in such a place. But whether harshness or severity is necessary or unnecessary, it is very hard to say.

4935. It may be necessary for a part of your case to understand that we are not confined in our inquiry to any special treatment of the treason-felony prisoners but have very large powers of going into the question generally, providing it is discipline to which you might have been or might yet be exposed.

4936. (Dr. Lyons.) When did you get notice of the proposed holding of this Commission?—This gentleman, who represents himself as your secretary, was here with me last Saturday week and gave me notice of it.

4937. Did you get any further notice of the probable coming of the Commission from the prison officials?—Well, not officially; we did not officially, but it was communicated to us. It came in a letter to me from my father-in-law that there was to be a commission, and Mr. Colton, member of Parliament, visited O'Connell, the prisoner, and said there was to be a commission.

4938. Within the last week what official notice did you get?—Last Wednesday the governor read part of that paper for us, and there are extracts from that paper which he read, telling us the Commission would be here at 12 o'clock on this day, and that we were to have three days to prepare our case.

4939. What happened to you after receiving that notice?—Wednesday we received the notice; we went to work as usual that day, and Thursday morning we were kept in our cells, kept from prayers, and cash morning since, except yesterday, and have been in our cells preparing our statements, and with the exception of a few hours' exercise each day—exercise in the open air—kept in separate confinement.

4943. Before you got this official notice were you and the other treason-felony prisoners associated together?—Yes, working in a room together.

4944. What work are you employed at?—Mending stockings.

4945. How long have you been at that work?—I have been at that work since last March twelve months, I think.

4946. Had you full opportunity of going to mass on yesterday?—Yes, sir.

4947. Did you go to mass yesterday?—Yes.

4948. Have you any witnesses to examine to corroborate any statement that you may have made, or that you propose to make before this Commission?—Well, I have not made much; only what concerns myself. I have not introduced the cases of the other prisoners present, and if anything is required to corroborate what I say, why I will see who can be had to corroborate it.

4949. (Chairman.) You will have an opportunity of communicating with any party.—Yes.

4950. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you name now to the Commission any persons that you propose to appeal to as witnesses in corroboration of any allegations you make?—I will tell you one fact, and if you deem it necessary to have the matter corroborated I will speak to others to corroborate it. In Portland, I speak of it as part of the system, I was charged with the offence of speaking while at work in connexion with three or four, or five others, John O'Leary, Luby, and some other prisoners, and each of them got 24 hours bread and water, and on the same evidence I got 72 hours bread and water, and 14 days on penal class diet. Then again I was sent from the prisoners, and sent among a gang of English prisoners to work. If you think these matters would be contradicted, as matters were contradicted before Messrs. Pollock and Knox, I would, of course, have parties to corroborate my testimony.

4951. I want to know, in general terms, if there are any persons whom you wish to refer to as corroborate the statements you have made or propose to make, and if you could now state who those persons are. I do not press you on it now; you will have plenty of time?—One of the men in Portland with me at this time was James O'Connor; he is in Dublin at present.

4952. (Chairman.) It is right that I should tell you, O'Donnell Bross, that as regards prisoners in other prisons the Secretary of State has decided that they cannot be called in support of any statement made by a prisoner in another prison; but you may refer to any parties outside this prison or any persons within this prison, or any released prisoner whom you may wish to call; and with regard to the first class we shall be prepared, bearing in mind your statement when we go to Portland, to examine them there on the points you have raised; but you cannot have them here.—I cannot have them here?

4953. No.

4954. (Dr. Lyons.) I wish him to understand that the Commission would inquire whether the facts were so or not, from persons in other prisons.

4955. (Chairman.) If you make an allegation before us here as to anything that happened to you in Portland, which you think O'Connor or any other prisoner could support, it would be our duty when we go to Portland to question them on it?—I tell you, my lord, that if after reading over my statement, you find there is anything in it relevant to the inquiry, and that you would cross-examine me on those matters and would require evidence corroborating anything I would say if contradicted, if you would send, or have your secretary to send a note to the governor telling what are the matters, I would give you the names of parties who would corroborate them, and thus delay might be prevented. Perhaps it is not right for me, my lord, to be suggesting anything.

4956. (Mr. Bradrick.) You are perfectly free to make any suggestions that you think proper.—Thank you, sir.

4957. (Dr. Lyons.) You have full permission to communicate with any persons outside to advise you or assist you.—Since Friday only, sir, I have written to my wife. As far as I know, she is in London, in Stannard Street. I have not heard from her since.

4958. Is there any person that you wish to advise you that your wife?—If it would not prevent her visit, I would like to see Mr. Butt. I understand the other prisoners have desired to see him.

4959. That is what I wish to understand.—That is, I say, if it would not prejudice my wife's seeing me.

4960. Certainly not.

4961. (Chairman.) With regard to letters, the Government have decided that the ordinary prison rules should be relaxed with regard to your communicating freely with any persons who come. You have hitherto been in separate confinement for the purpose of securing to the prisoners full opportunity to prepare their statements in quietness without being disturbed by going to work. As your examination is now postponed, we desire that that separate confinement should cease, and therefore you will return to the position in which you were before Friday last.—Thank you, my lord.

4962. (Mr. Bradrick.) You have nothing else that you would wish to add?—I do not know that it might be pertinent to the matter.

4963. (Dr. Lyons.) State whatever is occurring to your mind. Do not conceal anything now from the Commission.

4964. (Chairman.) With regard to letters, it is understood that the rule will be relaxed as to letter writing, but that must be understood as applying to letters written bona fide for the purpose of securing assistance; it will not be relaxed as regards general letters.

4965. (Dr. Lyons.) You have still a copy of this document?—[Regulations as to the facilities for making statements]. Yes, I have.

4966. Do you understand under clauses two and three what privileges are afforded you with regard to seeing your friends, to advise or assist you in making your statement now or hereafter?—Yes, I do understand it, sir. Messrs. Knox and Pollock, I understood from a letter from my wife, after their report—at least I thought so—misrepresented me, and that they did not treat me fairly. I am not asserting now that they did not, but it was my impression. I asked the Secretary of State if he would allow me to see a copy of the report, but he would not let me see it; so I intended to ask your lordship if I may expect such a privilege from you.

4967. (Chairman.) No, we are instituting an independent investigation, and are prepared to go into every allegation. We think as this is an independent investigation, that we are not justified in going into the merits of any previous inquiry.

4968. (Mr. De Vere.) I think I may be justified in explaining, that as this Commission is not in the slightest degree influenced in any way by Messrs. Knox and Pollock's report, and so it cannot militate against your interests before us, we see no necessity for making it the subject of discussion or consideration.

4969. (Chairman.) We will leave it out of consideration altogether.—Then I cannot go into any of the matters I did then?

4970. Yes, you can go into any matters that were said there, but what you said then will in no way prejudice you before us.—Well, then, my lord, what contributed to bring on that inquiry by Messrs. Knox and Pollock were some reports published in the newspapers regarding my treatment, and I believe one matter was a letter that I got out of prison myself, underhand, and I would ask to refresh my memory to be furnished with that letter, and the statements made by the public press.

1968. Was that a letter written by yourself?—Yes, my lord.

1969. A suppressed letter?—Not a suppressed letter, but a letter that I got out surreptitiously and which was printed, and which contained statements regarding our treatment.

1970. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you give us the date of it?—Mr. Lyons, if I get the opportunity to write to my wife and friends about these matters I can get them.

1971. (Chairman.) Well you had better get them in that way perhaps?—Perhaps I am delaying you, my lord.

1972. No; your evidence generally we will defer to a future day.

1973. (Dr. Lyons.) Is there anything further that

The prisoner withdrew.

The Secretary read the following communication:

1975. To the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Treatment of Political Prisoners confined in England.

GENTLEMEN, Chatham Prison, 2nd July 1870.

HAVING been requested to write a statement to be submitted to your examination, on the treatment I have received in English prisons, and not feeling justified in doing so under present circumstances, I take the liberty of laying before you my reasons for adopting this course. In doing so I wish to be understood as simply accounting for my own conduct, not as making a vain endeavour to influence you.

It would be a foolish presumption in me to imagine I had any right to point out to you the manner in which your investigation should be carried out, and I should be completely forgetful of my present position, and of the character of the people in whose hands I am, to suppose you would let your mode of proceeding be influenced in the slightest particular by the opinion of a prisoner. I have no doubt your plan of operations is the one you deem best with a view to effecting the object you have in view, and no one can expect you to transact the business entrusted to you otherwise than as you may think proper, or according to the instructions you have received. If, in doing this, you fail to satisfy the prisoners or their friends, it is a thing you can well afford to disregard. The only way they can express their dissatisfaction is by abstaining from having anything to do with your proceedings, and these can go on without them.

After due consideration, and having waited for the best information that can be given to me, this is the course I have decided to follow. My reasons are the following:—In the first place, your inquiry is to be private; thus refusing the only guarantee—publicity—for the impartiality of its proceedings, that the circumstances of the case would warrant me in accepting. Secondly, its programme is incomplete, the instructions read to me by the governor being so worded as to exclude all inquiry into the truth or falsehood of the published reports of our treatment, and the official details of them, the report of Messieurs Knox and Pollock, and the treatment in Irish prisons. And lastly, the refusal to allow the presence of Mr. Hunt even to watch the proceedings on behalf of the prisoners, deprives them of the best chance of an impartial hearing, except in so far as depends on your sense of justice and freedom from prejudice, and gives every advantage to the authorities. I cannot reconcile the promise of impartiality with the reluctance to have the witnesses on both sides examined in the presence of a friend of the prisoners. I have no objection to be examined in presence of all the prison officials in England, if I, you wish to tell the Commission? Do you fully understand now the facilities afforded you?—I fully understand, Dr. Lyons, all that you have said. I do not think there is anything particular I have to ask the Commission; anything which would be right for me to ask. Of course I had my suspicion about the inquiry, and what it would be, and I would like to see the press represented and matters made public, but it would be more prudent for me to say nothing, considering the gentlemen that form the Commission of inquiry, than to leave the matter to them.

1974. I did explain to you that we shall distinctly recommend it, and we think there may be no doubt of it, that the report and evidence will be published? Thank you, my lord.

or some one on my behalf, to allowed to hear their evidence, and see it subjected to the same strict examination as mine. The truth can always bear investigation, and as I know that any statement of mine can stand this test, I am perfectly willing to see it submitted to it, if I have a guarantee for the impartiality of those who conduct the inquiry. But I object to make a partial statement, and will make none, oral or written, except in the presence of a friend, or some person approved of by my friends. This I believe to be the only thing I can do, as matters stand at present, in the interest of truth and justice. If I thought I could serve them better by being compliant, I should be glad of it.

As I don't expect you to see things in the same light as I do, so neither can I let my conduct be guided, in an affair of such importance, by any but my own judgment; that is no doubt defective, but, such as it is, I prefer using it in depending on that of other people. Five years' bitter experience, to say nothing of the record of 700 men, have made me look with suspicion on everything emanating from the quarter in which your Commission has had its origin. The more promising the outward appearance, the greater is my distrust, and my apprehension that "things are not what they seem." You will, I suppose, attribute this to some distortion of my mental vision; but, be that as it may, I can see things around me through no other medium than that which nature has supplied me with. If a person shows me an object, telling me it is gold, and it appears to me, after careful examination, to be brass, I cannot think of it as anything else but brass. In the same way, your inquiry may be very impartial, but, as it appears to me, it is entirely divested of the usual characteristics of impartiality. I speak now of the nearer view of it, as seen from inside the prison walls by the light of the private instructions, not of the more distant prospect obtained through the advertisement and the "regulations" contained in it.

Thinking thus of it, I should be acting inconsistently to have anything to do with it.

If anything I have said above should be thought offensive, I beg to say that I have not the remotest intention to give offence to anyone, I only mean to be candid, and speak as to me to be misunderstood.

You will please consider this resolution of mine as final. In conclusion, I will say that I have never asked for an inquiry, because I believe that a complete and impartial one would not be granted; and that, if friends of mine or of the other prisoners did ask, it was for a public use.

I am, gentlemen, yours very respectfully,
JOHN DEVOR.

JOHN DEVOR, prisoner, examined.

1976. (Chairman.) Is John Devor your name?—Yes.

1977. We have wished to see you in order to explain to you that we are a Commission appointed by the Government, but at the same time quite independent of the Government, for the purpose of inquiring into the treatment of you and the other treason-felony prisoners confined in this and other English goals. The Commissioners are Dr. Greenhow, Mr. De Vere, Dr. Lyons, Mr. Beddick, and myself.

4 July 1870.

Lord Devon. Our object is to inquire fully, fairly, and impartially, into the treatment to which treason-felony convicts have been subjected, so far as they wish to state to us, or as we gather from other sources. Any statement that the prisoners may wish to make to us, either written or made by word of mouth, will be received by us. It will be made by them in a private room, out of the hearing of any of the prison officials. It will be taken down by a shorthand writer, and at the conclusion of the inquiry we shall recommend that our report and all the evidence shall be printed. Whatever may be stated here shall in no way prejudice the position of any man who makes a statement as regards his future treatment in the prison. There has been handed to us by the governor a letter from you dated the 2d instant and addressed to us. From that it appears that you, for reasons that you give here, decline to make any statement or to give any evidence before us. We asked you to come down in order that we might hear from your own mouth whether that be your intention, or whether you wish now or on the 15th, when we shall be here again, to make any statement to us?—No, my lord; I adhere to that.

4978. We shall be here again on the 15th and shall be ready if you choose to reconsider your determination and to be prepared to come and make a statement to us, to hear you that day?—Thank you, my lord.

4979. I will only ask you before you go, whether you have received from the governor a copy of this paper which contains an intimation of the facilities that will be given to treason-felony prisoners who may wish to make statements to the Commission?—Yes, sir, I have seen it, and also the other instructions.

4980. And also the other instructions. Have you been made acquainted with the regulation that if you wish to have any statement you may make, supported by any witnesses from without, you would have facilities for communicating with them?—Yes, I have been informed of it.

4981. If you change your mind between this and the 15th you will have an opportunity of making a statement to us.—(No answer.)

4982. (Dr. Lyons.) When did you get the official notice of the intended holding of this Commission?—Well, I cannot exactly remember the date, but it was the same day as all the other prisoners. I think it is 10 days or a fortnight ago.

4983. Did you get any notice in the course of last week?—I got a notice previous to last week.

4984. Within the last week did you get any notice of the proposed sitting of this Commission?—Yes, either Wednesday or Thursday evening, the governor sent for me and read for me from a written paper as far as I could see.

4985. How were you treated since that notice?—I was taken away from work and got paper and materials for writing to make a statement, and from Thursday

The prisoner withdrew.

J. McClure.

JOHN MCCLURE, prisoner, examined.

5003. (Chairman.) Your name is John McClure?—Yes, sir.

5004. McClure, I have to explain to you, first, the nature of this Commission. This is a Commission appointed by the government, but of persons entirely independent of the government, to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in certain prisons in England. The Commission consists of Mr. Brodriok, Dr. Lyons, Mr. De Vere, Dr. Greenhow, and myself, Lord Devon. We are charged to inquire, as you have probably learned from a paper that has no doubt been placed in your hands, into the diet, discipline, and treatment of prisoners generally, especially treason-felony convicts; and we have come here and shall come here again in a fortnight, to receive from the treason-felony prisoners here, any statements which they may wish to make with reference to themselves. Such statement may be made in writing, or by word of mouth, or in both ways. It will be made in private in morning until I gave them out on Sunday morning. I have been kept from work ever since.

4986. You have been kept from work?—Yes.

4987. Where were you placed?—In my cell; in my own cell.

4988. In your own cell?—Yes.

4989. Were you allowed out to exercise?—Yes, separately, by myself.

4990. Were you allowed out to mass yesterday?—Yes.

4991. Did you go to mass yesterday?—Yes.

4992. Are you aware that you have permission to see your friends to advise you with regard to any statement that you would propose to make?—Yes.

4993. Do you fully understand those conditions?—I fully understand them. I fully understand them; but I also understand that to prisoners who wished to make statements, the visits up to this have been invariably refused.

4994. What is that?—I also know that whenever we have had visits up to this we have been invariably refused to be permitted to make statements.

4995. (Chairman.) What is your allegation?—You will understand me sir not making this as a statement of my own treatment. But as to the question, up to this time we have been refused to make statements of our treatment in visits and letters.

4996. (Mr. Brodriok.) Do you clearly understand that permission is now given you to see a friend, for the very purpose that you may confer with that friend about the very matter you mention?—I see it. That notice has been read; but I do not know of any friend coming.

4997. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you get a copy of that printed document?—I did.

4998. Have you it still?—I gave it out, because I was done with it.

4999. (Mr. De Vere.) Is there any friend whom you wish to communicate with, in order to advise or assist you in making any statement between this and the 15th?—No, sir, not under the circumstances, because I do not intend to make any statement. It would be putting my friends to unnecessary expense and trouble to see no under the circumstances.

5000. Might you not wish to consult with your friends as to whether you should make a statement?—If I could do so without putting them to expense I would. If I was in Dublin, for instance, I would.

5001. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you wish to write to your friends to consult with them as to whether you ought or ought not make any statement before this Commission?—No sir, because my friends do not know the circumstances I am placed in, and I have not been allowed to communicate freely with them.

5002. Do you understand fully that you are allowed freely to communicate with them with regard to the purposes of this inquiry; do you understand that fully?—I do, sir.

The prisoner withdrew.

this or some other private room, out of the hearing of any persons connected with the prison, and whatever that statement may be, it will in no way whatever interfere with the position or treatment of the person who makes it. Having said this, I wish to know, whether you are prepared to make any statement to us, or whether you wish to do so at any future opportunity?—Yes.

5005. I believe you have already had notice that this Commission of inquiry had been ordered?—Yes, sir.

5006. When did you receive that?—I received it on the 25th of last month.

5007. Was that the first intimation you had that the Commission was appointed?—That was the first official notice.

5008. You knew it from other sources before?—Yes.

5009. You have had, I think, this paper, giving an explanation of the facilities that prisoners might have placed in your hands?—Yes.

5010. Was it from that gentleman [the secretary] you received the information on the 25th?—Yes.

5011. When had you the first information from the governor of the prison respecting this inquiry?—Well, on the same day on that afternoon he read to me a paper to that effect.

5012. Did he explain to you at the same time that facilities would be afforded you for bringing forward any witnesses you might have?—Yes.

5013. With regard to the support of any statement that you might make?—He did.

5014. And that facilities would be given to you for communicating with them by writing?—Yes.

5015. Having explained to you this, and having ascertained that you are acquainted with the nature of the inquiry, and the facilities afforded you for making your statement, I am to ask you do you wish to make any statement to us now, either in writing or by word of mouth?—I have written what I would wish to submit.

5016. Do you wish to be examined to-day, or do you wish to allow a longer period to elapse, in order to give you a full opportunity of communicating with your friends?—I made application to be allowed to see Mr. Motley, minister of the United States, and I have been unable to ascertain whether that application has been granted or not.

5017. To whom did you apply?—To the Secretary of State.

5018. (Mr. Bradrick.) How long ago did you apply?—On the 25th June.

5019. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you ask to see Mr. Motley?—Yes.

5020. To see Mr. Motley?—To see Mr. Motley.

5021. (Chairman.) Do I understand that you would desire to put in to-day that written statement that is in your hands, or that you would rather defer it to a longer period for an opportunity of seeing any friends that you have any desire to see. We can hear you to-day or to-morrow, whichever you prefer?—I have a paper made out that I intended to submit to you, and not being able to ascertain whether I can see this gentleman whom I asked to see, I do not know that there is any necessity for me to delay it.

5022. You do not wish to delay it on the chance of seeing Mr. Motley?—I would like to see him before I would make a statement.

5023. Probably your better course would be to hand in the statement to us now, and not to give oral evidence until we meet again?—Just as you like.

5024. (Dr. Lyons.) If you hand in the statement to-day, you can make any further statement in writing or orally afterwards.—Yes. Will it answer the same purpose if I wait for a couple of weeks' time, and then send in my general statement?

5025. (Chairman.) Quite the same purpose. The only thing is, that if you hand in your statement to-day, we shall have time to consider it between this and the end of the next fortnight, and should then be more prepared to ask you questions on it. You could then hand in a supplementary statement of that time if you liked?—The statement will not be very long, and if I hand it in, I should wish it to be general.

5026. Then you would rather defer it?—I think it would be better, sir.

5027. I should explain to you that by the desire of the Commissioners and for the sole purpose of giving full opportunity to the prisoners to prepare their statements, we recommended that you should be withdrawn from your ordinary labour, and be in separate cells for the purpose of enabling you the better to make those statements, which was the object we had in view; but as the inquiry is now not likely to take place for a fortnight, we have asked that you should return to your usual habits. You will from this time be in the same position as regards association and other arrangements as you were before those days.—Thank you.

5028. (Mr. Bradrick.) Is there any other point on which you wish to have any explanation with the Commission?—No, sir, I think not.

5029. (Dr. Lyons.) Were you placed in a separate cell since you got the final notice of the coming of the Commission from the governor?—Yes; placed in a cell that I have been confined in for the last 15 months.

5030. Had you daily exercise?—Yes.

5031. Had you your usual clothes by day and night?—Yes.

5032. Is that a new jacket that you have on now?—It is a new jacket that I got a few days ago.

5033. How many days ago?—Well I should think about a fortnight ago.

5034. Had you permission to go to mass yesterday?—Yes.

5035. Did you go to mass yesterday?—Yes, sir.

5036. You had full permission, and did go to mass yesterday?—Yes, sir.

5037. Have you asked to see Mr. Motley in person?—I have, sir.

5038. Is there any other person whom you desire to see as a friend or adviser, before making your final statement, in writing or orally to this Commission?—I made application on the 13th of last month to be allowed to write to Mr. Motley, requesting him to employ the services of Mr. Butt to be present as the Commission, thinking at the time that that would be allowed, for the purpose of taking note of the proceedings in writing and sending information to the United States government, as I am a native of that country; not receiving any answer to that I made application to the Secretary of State in writing, to be allowed to have a visit from Mr. Motley, and I have not heard anything from that since, and therefore—5039. Have you written to Mr. Motley?—No, sir; I have not written, but I made application to write.

5040. Do you wish now to write to Mr. Motley?—I would rather see him.

5041. But do you wish to write to him to inform him that you wish to see him?—I would.

5042. You would wish to do that?—Yes.

5043. Is there any other person that you would wish to write to, to inform him that you wish to see him?—Before the inquiry comes on?

5044. Yes?—Yes; I would wish to write to Mr. Butt.

5045. You would wish to write to Mr. Butt?—Yes.

5046. (Chairman.) You will have full facilities afforded you for writing to Mr. Butt or anybody else, provided it be for the purpose of endeavoring to obtain assistance or interviews with reference to the subject we have here, and so far as it forms a subject of inquiry. The Commission has recommended that the usual prison rules should be relaxed so far as to afford more frequent opportunities of writing on that subject than would be ordinarily the case. You will have full facilities given you to write to Mr. Butt or Mr. Motley. If you tell the governor, you will have full opportunity of doing so?—Very well, sir.

5047. (Dr. Lyons.) You understand now fully, that you may write to Mr. Motley and to Mr. Butt?—Yes.

5048. (Mr. Bradrick.) You also understand that it will not be possible for Mr. Butt to appear before us, but that you will be allowed to confer with him in your cell if he comes over?—I have been informed to that effect by the governor.

The prisoner withdrew.

CHARLES UNDERWOOD O'CONNELL, prisoner, examined.

5049. (Chairman.) Charles Underwood O'Connell?—Yes, in my name.

5050. I am to explain to you, in the first instance, O'Connell, who we are. This is a Commission appointed by the Government, but entirely independent of the Government, to inquire into the treatment, in respect to diet, discipline, and other particulars, of the treason-felony prisoners in the different prisons in England; your case amongst others. The Commissioners are Dr. Lyons, Mr. DeVore, Dr. Greenhow, Mr. Brodrick, and myself, Lord Devon. We have come here to-day, and shall again be here on a future day, to receive any statement, either in writing or by word of mouth, which you may wish to submit to us. Such statement will be made in privacy and in no way will prejudice your future position. It will be made out of the hearing of any of the prison officials, and may be made with perfect confidence that your position will not be the worse for it. Having thus explained to you the object of our visit and of whom the Commission is composed, I will just ask you when did you first hear of this Commission?—I have heard rumours of it. I could not tell you when first I heard of it; but I have heard rumours of it for the last two or three months.

C. O'Connell.

5051. When did you first get official intimation of it?—I received official intimation of it on—let me see.

5052. Was it from that gentleman [Mr. Ollivant]?—Yes.

5053. (Mr. Ollivant.) On Saturday the 25th June?—Yes, Saturday the 25th June.

5054. (Chairman.) When did you first get any intimation from the governor of this prison about it?—I do not recollect, sir.

5055. Was it after that or before?—Oh, before it.

5056. Did he subsequently put into your hands a paper explaining the nature and objects of this Commission?—No, I got that on yesterday (exhibits a paper).

5057. I mean not this, but another paper. Did he read from a paper explaining the objects of this Commission?—At the same time that this gentleman [Mr. Ollivant] enounced it to me, the governor read a circular sent to him from Parliament Street, and to the governors of other prisons.

5058. Then you have heard that statement?—Yes, my lord (identifies the document).

5059. Then looking at these papers that have been put into your hands, and recalling any information that you might have received, are you fully acquainted with the facilities that you have for making any statement that you may wish to the Commission? Are you, for instance, acquainted with the fact that you might communicate by writing with any person out of doors whom you may wish to have come to assist you in making your statement?—I have applied already, sir, to the Secretary of State to allow Mr. Butt, Queen's Counsel, to assist me.

5060. Are you not in good health?—The doctors tell me I am suffering from heart disease.

5061. Sit down please (The prisoner is given a chair).—Thank you.

5062. (Dr. Lyons.) Put your papers on the table here. (The prisoner takes his papers off the floor and puts them on the table).

5063. (Dr. Greenhow.) Do not stoop.

5064. (Chairman.) You say that you have already applied for Mr. Butt?—I have already applied for Mr. Butt, and my cousin, Thomas Neilson Underwood of Strabane in Ireland, and the Secretary of State has positively declined to allow these gentlemen to be present. He says it would not be for the interests of the inquiry, or the truth of it, or something to that effect; the usual words.

5065. The refusal, you understand, is to permit them to be present, but not to their visiting you in your cell in order to assist you?—I have since been told that I may have assistance and have applied for it. I was told on last Saturday—no, on yesterday, I believe—yes, Saturday I was told that I might write to Mr. Butt, and I have written for him and asked him to tell my cousin to come also.

5066. Having written that letter only recently, and not having received the answer, you probably would wish to defer your statement until you would have an opportunity of seeing them if they come?—Yes, I would wish to have their assistance, because the state of my health does not enable me to do the justice to my case that it requires.

5067. Therefore you would wish to defer any statement you may make for a future day?—Yes, but in the meantime I wish to tell you, sir, that I wish to ask, is this inquiry a public one?

5068. No; it is not a public one. The report and evidence will be made public afterwards; but the inquiry, in the conduct of it, is not a public one.

5069. (Dr. Greenhow.) All that you say will be taken down by a shorthand writer—Just within the last five minutes I received my suppressed letters. All my letters with my family have been systematically suppressed all along. I have applied for my suppressed letters and have got them only a few minutes ago.

5070. (Chairman.) Do you wish to bring that before us now?—I wish to tell you, gentlemen, how I have been dealt with. I have been most cruelly dealt with. I understand that I have been officially represented in good health, while the doctor tells me I am suffering from heart disease, and he is not allowed to do anything for me.

5071. (Dr. Lyons.) Who told you that?—Dr. Burns, the medical officer of this prison.

5072. Dr. Burns has told you that he is not allowed to do anything for you?—I will tell you, doctor, I will give you his exact words.

5073. You have stated that.—Bear with me for a moment. Will you allow me, my lord and gentlemen, to read the last letter I wrote to my father?

5074. (Chairman.) Yes.—My father and family have not heard a word from me since I was made a prisoner, now going on five years.

5075. How many letters have you written during these five years?—I have written five letters, and four of them have been suppressed. They are now returned to me by the governor within the last quarter of an hour or so. I just got them when I was coming in here.

5076. (Dr. Lyons.) You have written five letters, and four of them have been suppressed?—Yes.

5077. (Chairman.) Have you got these four letters now in your hand?—I have, sir. These are the only two letters that I ever received from my family since I came to prison. They are from my brother. My family reside in Lafayette, Indiana, in the United States. "My dear Charles," he says, "Words are inadequate to express the way we feel since your 'imprisonment.' Oh, that is not it. This last one I got in April. He says, 'Dear Charles, I write this 'time through Mr. Motley. How is it we have not heard from you since your arrest? We are miserable about you.'"

5078. (Dr. Lyons.) What is the date of that letter?—April the 20th, 1870.

5079. (Chairman.) Did that letter reach you?—That letter reached me through Mr. Motley.

5080. It was addressed to Mr. Motley?—It was addressed to Mr. Motley, and it was handed to me by the governor. Here was my reply; it was suppressed—

" Sir,
Chatham Prison, 12th May 1870.
" I HAVE received a note from my brother " which he states he writes through you." This is addressed to Mr. Motley. " May I therefore take the " liberty of requesting you will please to forward " the following letter to my father, John O'Connell, " Lafayette, Indiana, United States.

" I am, sir, yours very respectfully,
" CHARLES UNDERWOOD O'CONNELL.
" John Lockport Motley, Esq.,
" United States Minister, London."

" Chatham Prison, 12th May 1870.
" MY DEAR FATHER,
" John's very short but truly affectionate note " of the 20th April last which he states he writes " through Mr. Motley, United States Minister, was

"handed to me by the governor of this prison on the 9th instant, and I now address this through the same channel in hopes it may reach you. I am unable to express the relief it brought to my mind to find that you and my dear sisters and brothers are alive and well after such a long absence of all intelligence of you as I have had to endure. The sad news of the death of poor Sculler and O'Doherty was the only drawback to John's otherwise most welcome and cheering visit. I shed not a few tears in my lonely cell over the loss of our dear departed friends, and then detached to heaven a fervent 'requisite in peace.' Poor Margaret! may God comfort her. I trust she bears her bereavement with fortitude and resignation to the divine will. And so you are to this day without a word from me since my arrest, so am I without a word from you since I was made a prisoner in September 1835; but I now find you wrote to me, and that your letters met the fate of mine to you; all were suppressed or intercepted. No words of mine could tell the anxiety I have suffered about you all during these long weary years. My letters to you and to my kinsman Underwood were suppressed because I alluded in them to the state of my health, and the treatment which had stopped and shattered it, I felt in duty bound to speak of the course of treatment under which I was liable at any moment to sink; and had I died silent on this subject and not spoken of it in my letters the British authorities could then point to these letters and say I had no wrong to speak of, and that I was fairly and humanely treated. Of the manner of my arrest in Cork harbor before I could set foot on my native Irish soil, or commit any overt act against British law, of my trial in Cork, and the treatment I have since endured in these English prisons, I am forbidden to speak, and I refrain from saying a word that might cause the British authorities to keep this from you, and thereby continue to keep you all in such harassing anxiety to hear from me. I have as has been permitted to receive a visit, a right hitherto persistently denied me. On the 3d instant I was visited by Mr. Callan, M.P. May I take a glass of water?"

5081. (Chairman.) Yes. (Prisoner called.) "On the 3d instant I was visited by Mr. Callan, M.P., who is a friend of my kinsman Underwood. I was surprised to learn from Mr. Callan that the Home Secretary, Mr. Bruce, had positively denied certain published statements about my health and treatment, and that he stated I was in sound health, and did so on the authority of a doctor, who told me 'you have heart disease,' and who, when I asked him for something to ease the pain said to me, 'medicine is no use to you, it is not what you want, you want change of food, better food, and that I am not allowed to give you.'"

5082. (Dr. Lyons.) Who was that doctor?—Dr. Burns, the medical officer of this prison.

5083. (Mr. De Vere.) When was that statement made to you?—I cannot tell you the exact date of it, sir; but he made the statement to me some time about the month of October I think; yes, some time in October.

5084. On what occasion did he make it?—Coming around, sir, as usual to visit us. He asked me how I felt, and I told him.

5085. Was anyone by?—No—oh, there was some of the warders.

5086. (Chairman.) Can you name any of the warders?—No, I do not recollect which of the warders were there. "Medicine is no use to you; it is not what you want; you want change of food; better food, and that I am not allowed to give you." He also added, 'I could cure you if I had you out—'side free; but I am not allowed to give you what "would cure you here." Again on the 21st December last, when I was lying in my cell, for there is no hospital or hospital treatment for me, so weak that I was unable to rise, this same doctor seeing I "could not get out, said to me, 'Why don't you try to eat?' 'I can tell you that in the state your heart is in you have not long to live if you don't eat.' I then said to him, 'Doctor Burns, how far gone must I be before the exigencies of the service will allow you to take "regulances of my state." He instantly replied with emphasis, "to the last possible extremity; the Secretary of State has positively refused to allow any change in your food or treatment."

5087. (Dr. Greenhow.) Dr. Burns said that?—

Yes, sir; I am prepared to confirm on oath everything that I now tell you, gentlemen. These are the exact words:—"The Secretary of State has positively refused to allow any change in your food or treatment." I told these things to Mr. Callan, and more or less, so it is likely you will have heard of me before this. Guess who came to see me the other day, all the way from Cork? My nurse, poor Mary Murphy; the faithful soul is in good health, and as active as ever. She lives in Cork with a family of which she speaks in the highest terms. She could not tell me a word about you. She says cousin Morgan and his two sisters are in America, and their poor mother is dead. Now a word as to my health. It is true my nervous system is shattered, the action of my heart is often painful and distressing, and that my appetite and digestion fail me. Yet I think my case is not incurable if I had only a fair chance for my life. My mind holds out all right, and I am perfectly resigned to the will of heaven. Should it please God to bring me alive out of this imprisonment, with what delight I shall meet you all again. I can then look back with a pleasing smile upon the many dark and trying scenes of this captivity. Be assured I am of good cheer, and thus hope the vital flame of faith and love, ever burns as brightly in my breast as my warmest friends could desire. I wish you to convey my esteem to my old colonel, and to remember me most kindly to all my friends in New York and elsewhere. I am in daily expectation of a letter from Underwood; I love him not alone as being my beloved mother's nephew, but also for his own purity and worth. A day or two before George Henry Moore died, he had arranged with that noble spirit to visit me. Alas! he is gone for ever. May the light of God's glory shine upon him! Let me have a long letter from you, as the longest you can write will count no more against me than the shortest none. I want you or John to write to me in future the first of each month. I shall then know when to expect it, and if it is not given to me perhaps I may be told it has come, and even that will be something. Tell me all about yourself and poor Margaret, Anne Maria and Kate. I fondly trust John and Morgan are a comfort to you, and that they are diligent in the pursuit of useful knowledge. I am much pleased with the nice note John writes, and the admirable christian confidence that animates him. You are all ever present in my heart and memory, day and night, asleep or awake. I have now only to ask you will remember me in your prayers, and believe that I am, my dear father, your affectionate son, CHARLES UNDERWOOD O'CONNELL."

5088. (Chairman.) Did that letter reach your father?—No, my lord; it was suppressed.

5089. Are you quite sure that no part of it reached your father?—I have no reason to believe a word of it did.

5090. It has never been answered?—Don't you understand, my lord; it has never been out of the hands of the prison authorities.

5091. You have never had any reply to it?—No, my lord.

5092. What reason have you for knowing that no part of it ever reached your father?—Oh, I feel perfectly satisfied. I have no reason in the world for believing that any part of it did.

5093. (Dr. Lyons.) Were you informed that that letter was suppressed?—Never, doctor.

5094. Did you get permission to write another

C.O. O'Connell. letter in place of it?—I was told I could write another.

4 July 1870.

5095. Did you do so?—I wrote to Mr. Medley.

5096. To Mr. Medley?—Yes. As I failed in my attempts at communicating with my family I wrote to Mr. Medley, telling him I had written to my father in answer to this letter from my brother; and calling on him to lay those facts before the United States Government with the view of that Government taking such steps as they may deem necessary to obtain this letter and have it forwarded to my family.

5097. Have you any reason to know that the letter went to Mr. Medley?—No, but the governor tells me he forwarded it.

5098. That it was forwarded?—Yes.

5099. Can you remember the date of that letter?—I can.

5100. What was the date of it?—I think the 16th September—no, no, the 16th May.

5101. (Chairman.) That letter to your father is dated the 12th I understand?—No, my lord, it is dated—yes, the letter to my father is dated 12th May.

5102. Then, as you were subsequently told that letter could not go, you said you would write to Mr. Medley?—Yes.

5103. And you did write to Mr. Medley?—I wrote to Mr. Medley. I cannot say whether that letter has ever reached him.

5104. (Dr. Lyons.) You never got any answer from Mr. Medley?—None whatever. I have but the governor's word for it that it was forwarded.

5105. (Mr. Brodick.) You said that other letters were suppressed?—All my letters have been suppressed. The only letter that went from me since I came here was one, and I can understand that that letter was manipulated, I may say constructed, in a way that my own cousin did not know me from the way we write to me.

5106. When was that letter sent?—The only letter that was sent from me since I arrived at Chatham was the one I wrote on the 18th November to my cousin Thomas Nelson Underwood.

5107. Was that a letter on recognition?—There! there are two letters I wrote on recognition, and these letters were suppressed.

5108. Were you informed of that suppression at the time?—I was.

5109. And were you offered permission to write other letters instead of them?—After the first one was suppressed I was told I could write another. I wrote another, and that was suppressed. I wrote again, and that was suppressed; and as that I would write them they were suppressed.

5110. You wrote as many as three letters on the same occasion announcing your reception?—Yes, and all were suppressed, sir.

5111. Was there a third besides those two letters that you have there? Are you sure that you wrote more than two on that occasion?—On the occasion of my reception?

5112. Yes?—I have written three, sir.

5113. What are their dates?—Here is the first one I wrote.

5114. (Chairman.) Was that one of the reception letters?—Yes.

5115. What was the first letter that you wrote after coming here?—This is the first letter, my lord, it is dated the 14th April 1869. Shall I read the letter, my lord?

5116. If you please; just as you wish.—“My dear Thomas,” this is to my cousin; “I wrote to you on the 23rd July last from Millbank, but have never received a word in reply since. I wrote to you again from this prison on the 3rd instant telling you of my weakness and anxiety, and the absence of all intelligence of my family and friends.” Oh, I have made a mistake, this is not the first. The 3rd of April was the first: “My dear Thomas, I cannot give you an idea of the anxiety and weakness I have felt at not hearing from you in reply to a letter I wrote to you from Millbank on the 23rd July last,

“but I must say that I am now certain the flesh is not yours, as that very letter never reached you. On the 2nd November, after three months suspense I asked the governor of Millbank, who told me that my letter was duly forwarded to you, to write to you to enquire if you had received it. The governor more than once told me he had done so, but had received no reply to his inquiry. Under these circumstances when I became due to write on the 26th January last I addressed a letter to Mr. Patrick O'Connor, of Dublin, brother to my liberated friend and companion, Mr. James O'Connor, telling him how I felt about your absence, and requesting him to call on you and let me know if you had received my letter. To this letter to Mr. O'Connor also I have received no answer. James O'Connor knows of this matter, and I expect he has called to tell you of it. The visit several in the land is allowed to receive occasional visits from his friends every year, but this right has never been granted to me. On the contrary every application of mine for a visit has been refused, though I am more than three years and a half in prison. About six months before my removal from Portland to Millbank I asked for a visit, and Governor Clifton, after having laid the matter before the authority in London, informed me that the Secretary of State had decided that it was not expedient that I should be allowed to receive a visit.”

5117. That was at Portland?—That was at Portland, yes, my lord. “On the 26th May last I was removed on punishment from Portland to Millbank, where I was kept undergoing a second course of solitary confinement till the 15th of last month, on which day I was brought here. When brought to Millbank my nervous system was completely shattered, and I was so physically prostrated that I could hardly walk. I remained on the invalid list there up to the day of my removal here. Since my arrest in September 1865, I have had to undergo altogether about 18 months solitary confinement, and though I was never very stout, yet I have lost no less than 28 pounds of flesh during this imprisonment. I am not allowed to say anything about the treatment I have received; but the fact that I have never succeeded in getting a visit is a clear proof that the British Government are afraid or ashamed to have their treatment of me known. However, I have the satisfaction to know that whether I pass out of their hands sooner or later, dead or alive, their treatment of me will yet come to light before the world. The truth cannot always be hid. On last Monday week I was summoned into a room, where with the deputy-governor was a gentleman, who introduced himself to me as Mr. Hoey.”

5118. (Dr. Lyons.) Who was he?—Mr. Hoey.

5119. Was he a Dublin man?—I do not know, sir.

5120. (Mr. Brodick.) There is a gentleman of that name well known in the literary world.

5121. (Mr. De Vere.) Is that John Canale Hoey?—“It took me completely by surprise, as I did not in any way seek or expect such an interview; but as he said you wished him to see me, I of course had no objection, though I think it is rather hard that when I applied the second next day to the governor for a visit, I was refused as usual, and told that on arriving here I have 800 marks to earn before I am permitted to receive a visit. Mr. Hoey asked me if there was anything I wished him to do for me politically. I emphatically said no; that I looked to my Government, the United States, for my release. My honour is far dearer to me than my life, and you may rest assured I will never do anything to tarnish it. I am delighted that General Grant is President of the American people. I have the highest confidence in him, and firmly believe that the honour and prosperity of the United States are safe in his hands. Have you heard lately from your kinsman, Judge Underwood, and your other relations in the United States' senate. When you are writing to him again I will thank you to convey "to them my best and most grateful regards for the efforts which you told me they made to effect my deliverance. I have had no word of my family yet. I wrote to my father from Portland in November '81, but I have never heard anything in reply. Most likely my letter never reached him. It would be a great relief to my mind to hear from them, after such a long absence, of all intelligence of them. Please to drop a line to my father: address, Post Office, Lafayette, Indiana, United States, to tell him to write to me, and that I wish him and my brother-in-law, Titus Seallen, my brothers and sisters, and Mr. O'Doherty, to be assured of my warmest affection. Now, Thomas, my dear fellow, I want you to tell me all about yourself, and what was the nature and result of the appeal you were about to make to the House of Lords when I heard from you last in Portland. Write to me, on receipt of this, and let your letter be quite a long one. Writing can be no trouble to a man who can turn out historical novels. More power to your elbow, as they say in Ireland. It was Mr. Hoey who told me of your Donald O'Neill. How I long to read it. Give me an extract or two from the reviews on it. Copy them into your letter. Mr. Hoey also said you did not get my letter. You know I write to you whenever I can. I have never written to anyone else save the two letters to which I have alluded." These were the letters to my father. "When in London again I wish you would try to visit me. I hope my kinswomen, Jane and Susan, are well. Kindly give them my loving regards. Have you any account of poor Kate, that is a cousin of mine, our uncle Charles's daughter. "I have now only space to say that notwithstanding what I have passed through, or may yet have to pass through in this penal servitude, believe me, my dearest kinsman, or Thomas, that I am your heart and soul, and with God's help shall ever continue to be the same—CHARLES UNDERWOOD O'CONNELL." That was the first letter, my lord.

5122. (Chairman.) That was April the 3d?—Yes. 5123. (Dr. Ligon.) On the face of this letter I see it is marked "cancelled by order of the director 3, 4, 69, in lieu;" what does that mean?—I do not know.

5124. (Chairman.) That was the first letter you wrote?—Yes. I do not see why that "in lieu" should be put on it, because it was my right to write that letter.

5125. (Mr. Brodrick.) It may be a note on this letter that another letter may be written to Ben?—But, my lord and gentlemen, this was the first at communication on my arrival here.

5126. (Dr. Ligon.) When were you informed that that letter was suppressed?—I can tell you; I have it here. I cannot recollect, doctor.

5127. Well, can you state whether you got permission to write a letter in place of this letter suppressed?—I did, doctor, a second letter. I wrote in lieu of it. This is that one of the 14th.

5128. The one on the 14th was written in lieu of that?—Date 14th April 1833, written in lieu of the one of 3rd April.

5129. Who was the governor at that time; Captain Powell?—Yes, Captain Powell. The date of this letter is 14th April.

5130. Do you wish to read it?—I do, my lord, if you have no objection. "My dear Thomas, I wrote to you on the 23rd July last from Millbank, but have never received a word in reply since. I wrote to you again from this prison on the 3rd instant, telling you of my uneasiness and anxiety at not hearing from you, and the absence of all intelligence of my family and friends for years. Now, from the manner in which I wrote that letter I did hope that it had reached you this time. Judge of my surprise then when informed by the Governor on yesterday that the directors had suppressed my letter because I had merely alluded to the shattered state of my health, which they now very considerably say is owing to my violation of the prison rules and continuation with others. Well, after all I have seen, heard, and felt, since I was made a prisoner, I should not wonder at anything, but really this last piece of British official information has more than surprised me. Language fails to convey to you an adequate idea of the numerous smirks and constant persecutions inflicted on me by the directors and their subordinates, with the thinly disguised view of reducing me to insanity like Carey and Ahern."

5131. (Dr. Ligon.) Who was the last you have mentioned?—A political prisoner that went out of his mind in Millbank.

5132. Ahern?—Ahern.

5133. What is his christian name?—I do not know the christian name, doctor.

5134. What do you know about him; how do you know that he went out of his mind?—I was told it in Millbank.

5135. By whom?—Oh, by a fellow prisoner of mine. He was in the same ward with me for a while, and he had a few words with me.

5136. Did you know the man personally whom you have referred to there?—Ahern?

5137. Yes?—I have met him at exercise in the yard at Millbank.

5138. Do you know that his name was Ahern?—Do I know that his name was Ahern? Yes, doctor.

5139. (Mr. Brodrick.) Was he convicted under the Treason-bill Act?—Yes, I heard so.

5140. (Dr. Ligon.) But you do not know?—I do not know.

5141. You believe that the name of the party that you refer to to have been Ahern?—I believe his name to have been Ahern. He remarked to me, "They are treating me like one out of his mind; they won't give me a knife to cut my food before I would cut my throat." I heard in a few days that he had a straight jacket on. "Or of consigning me to an antislavery grave with Lynch and Duffy. Hitherto I have baffled all their nefarious efforts, but the state of my health at present indicates their success at no distant day. I may add that in their treatment of us the directors receive all their inspiration from the Home Office. If we speak to governor or other official about our treatment, they hesitate not to tell us that all is done by order of the Secretary of State. Only think of what the doctor said to me a few days ago, when I applied to him about my health, and ventured to remark that prevention was better than cure, 'Yes,' said he, 'but we are not allowed in certain cases to adopt preventive measures.' I will tell you that in fact, my lord and gentlemen, I arrived here from Millbank in such a weak and shattered state that the heavy boots were too much for me to wear, and they made me quite lame. My socks were quite swollen. I was lame and not able to walk. I showed the doctor my foot and my sock swollen, and said, 'Will you allow me to wear my shoes instead of boots.' "That is a thing," said he, "I could not allow; when the boot has worked a sore on it," he said, "I will try and cure it."

5142. "When the boot has worked a sore on it. I will try and cure it."?—When the boot has worked a sore on it I will try and cure it."

5143. Are you positive of that?—I am perfectly positive. My comrades were all pleased.

5144. (Chairman.) Can you tell the time at which that happened?—On my arrival from Millbank in the month of March '60. I have it down here, my lord.

5145. (Dr. Ligon.) What doctor was that?—Dr. Burns.

5146. I would like to know the facts of this. Dr. Burns said that to you: on what date?—Here it is. The heavy boots, on leaving Millbank and coming here, made me lame and swelled my ankles. Dr. Burns visited us, and I applied to him to be allowed to wear shoes. He said, "I cannot let you wear your shoes, but when the boot works a sore on your foot I will try to cure it." "But," said I, "Doctor Burns, is not prevention better than cure?" "Yes," said he, "but I am not allowed, in cases like this, to use preventive means." Rossa mentioned it in one of his letters to his wife, which was suppressed.

5147. What date was that, can you remember?—I do not know the exact date, but it was in the month of March '69.

5148. Who were present?—There were present Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, William G. Holpin, Richard O'Sullivan Burke, John McChere, and John Devoy.

"Now what was the combination to which they refer, and of which I thought they should be the last to speak?—I will tell you:—In Portland, on the 4th May last, myself and thirteen of my companions refused to work. Of this number five of us, including myself, were picked out, and on the 20th of the same month sent to Millbank, where I was explaining that offence, till the 15th of last month, when I was brought here. When brought to Millbank my nervous system was so completely shattered, and I was so physically prostrated, that I could hardly walk, and I remained on the invalid list there up to the day of my removal here. Mark, this was the shattered state of my health for twelve months before the combination of the 4th May, and in which the two Commissioners found me when they visited Portland and recommended my removal to the invalid prison of Woking. This was the combination of Messrs. Knox and Pollock.

"What we suffered before we refused to work is not to be told in words, and can hardly be exaggerated by any fancy, however vivid. Suffice it to say, that I patiently bore cold, hunger and hardship, such as no patriot and political prisoner in the world's history was ever subjected to. I had to wash the dirty hospital clothes for all the criminals of the country. I had to empty privies and to subvert a thousand other indignities, and I had to work in the quarries and how stones, exposed to every vicissitude of summer's heat and winter's cold. The horrors of the winter of 1866 and 1867 we can never forget. Our work was measured, and if we did not come up to the required standard we were severely punished. In short, they kept torturing us till we could endure it no longer, and at last we refused to work. They have completely cut me off from all communication with the outer world, and every effort of mine to obtain a visit has failed, though I have never laid down. When there was no pretext to refuse me a visit in Portland, the governor of the prison, after referring my application to the authorities in London, informed me that the Secretary of State had decided that it was not expedient that I should be allowed to receive a visit. As I said in my suppressed letter, the British Government are afraid or ashamed to have their treatment of me known. However, I have the satisfaction to know that whether I pass out of their hands dead or alive, the truth will yet come to light before the world."

5150. What visit do you refer to there?—A visit I asked for in Portland.

5151. From whom?—I asked to see my cousin. No, let me see, was it my cousin I asked to see—I forget now who I asked to see.

5152. You forget whom you asked to see?—I am not certain, but I think it was my cousin; either that or the sister of one of my companions, Miss O'Leary. I am not sure who of them.

5153. (Chairman.) That second letter you think was suppressed also?—I am positively sure, my lord. If it was not suppressed I could not show it to you now.

5154. Were you told that it was suppressed?—I was, my lord; and here it is marked on it "second letter suppressed," signed W. Fagan; that is the director. He has marked it. "Not allowed to write in lieu."

5155. (Dr. Lyons.) Whose writing is that?—I do not know, sir.

5156. (Mr. De Vere.) You were asked what was the date when you were acquainted with the suppression of the first letter and could not tell. I think you can give it now. The date of your second letter was 14th April, and you say in that letter that you received notice the day before that your letter was suppressed?—Ah, perhaps that is it. In the last letter I read, sir?

5157. In the letter of the 14th it would appear from that that you received notice of the suppression of the previous letter on the 13th. Let me ask you that question, so as to get it in evidence?—I am looking for the letter of the 14th, sir.

5158. (Mr. Broadrick.) Here it is.—"I wrote to you on the 23d July last from Millbank." This is the letter of the 14th. "I wrote to you on the 23d July last from Millbank, but have never received a word in reply since. I wrote to you again from this prison on the 3rd instant, telling you of my loneliness and anxiety as not hearing from you and the absence of all intelligence of my family and friends for years. Form the manner in which I wrote that letter I did hope that it had reached you this time. Judge of my surprise then when informed by the governor on yesterday that the directors had suppressed my letter, because I had merely added—'Yes, I was informed on the 13th.'" 5159. (Mr. De Vere.) Then you are able now to say that on the 13th you were informed of the suppression of the letter of the 2d?—Exactly.

5160. Then it was 10 days written before you were informed of its suppression?—Yes.

5161. (Chairman.) You say that you have written five letters, four of which have been suppressed. These are two. What are the other letters which have been suppressed?—The other two letters, my lord, one of them I have read for you.

5162. You have read three letters, 3d April, 14th April, and 13th May?—The other letter is a letter to my father dated 16th September.

5163. In what year?—'69, my lord.

5164. (Dr. Lyons.) What is the date of that letter, please?—16th September '68.

5165. Is this your third letter?—This is my third letter. May I read this letter?

5166. (Chairman.) If you please.

5167. (Mr. Broadrick.) Before you read it let me ask you, did you write any letter between the one that you last read and this?—No.

5168. You did not write any letter that was allowed to go, between the 14th April last year and the 16th September last year?—Let me see. No, I did not, sir; no. The letter that was allowed to go was a letter written after this one:—"Charles Fennell, this is to my father, '16th September '68. My dear father, John's most welcome note of the 19th May last was headed to me on the 24th of that month. I cannot tell you what an ease it was to my mind to hear that you and all the family were alive and well, after four years of the most distressing anxiety, and total absence of all family intelligence whatsoever." This is the first word I heard from my family for four years; this letter from my brother John. "I will not attempt to tell you my feelings on learning from John that you never received a letter from me, and that you are to this day without a word from me since I was made prisoner. Perhaps you will be surprised to find that your letters also have been suppressed or intercepted and that I remain without a word from you since the hour of my arrest. I should never have known that you had written to me if John had not mentioned it. Of the manner of my arrest before I could set foot on my native land, of my trial by a packed jury, of my conviction upon false and perjured testimony, you are doubtless aware from

"the newspapers of that time. But what I have endured in these English dungeons the great God alone knows. Pentonville was the first English prison to which I was consigned. On arrival there I was deprived of my flannel underclothing, and left in my dismal solitary cell to shiver with cold and hunger all through the winter. It was the specially severe treatment to which we were subjected there that killed poor John Lynch, and but for the perfectly sound and vigorous constitution I then possessed, and which was first sapped there, I too should have succumbed. In Portland they commenced by putting us to wash for all the criminals of the country. The hospital clothes were specially selected for me to wash. I had also to empty potties and clean waterclosets. We were next set to work to the heaviest labours in the quarries. It would take volumes to give you a bare idea of our sufferings through the horrors of the winter of '68 and '67. My old friend James O'Connor, from whom you must have received a letter after his release, can tell how they forced and worried us there, forcing me to seek work beyond my strength, and then punishing me if I did not come up to the required mark; how I got a second dose of solitary confinement in Millbank, where I remained on the invalid list for 10 months. Such was my prostrate state after Portland that I could hardly walk, and the doctor said he would give me a rest with a support for my back while at work, at which they kept me all the time. They took care not to give me the sun, nor to send me to the hospital; it would not suit their purpose. I wrote two letters to my dearest cousin Thomas Nelson Underwood since I was brought here on the 15th March last, but they were both suppressed by the authorities in London. The first letter was suppressed, because I alluded to the state of my health. The second was suppressed without assigning me any reason whatever. I chanced to hear by a visit John Derry had that my cousin had written to me, and that his letters were returned to him. The object of the British authorities in thus cutting me off from all communication with you and my cousin and the outer world is clear, and can be told in a few words. They know that I am now suffering from heart disease and shattered nervous system, the result of the brutal assiduous treatment I have undergone at their hands for the last four years. They are disappointed to find that I am still alive, notwithstanding all the bodily torture I have gone through; and knowing well, scientific and well-practised torturers as they are, what anxiety of mind is certain to accomplish, and that dead men tell no tales, they have continued to do me to death by depriving me of all knowledge of my family and friends. Mr. Gladstone characterized the treatment of the Italian in Neapolitan dungeons as the negation of God. Vengeance has no forgiveness. He cannot now see that his treatment of us is the negation of God and man. I was due a visit and asked to see Mr. George Henry Moore, M.P., and Mr. J. F. O'Donnell, but Mr. Bruce put his veto on it. They fear to have the truth known, and will not let us see anyone. Should you hear of my death, which may occur at any time from the nature of the disease the doctor here tells me I have, I wish my friends to demand my body and lay me in the same grave with my beloved mother, and believe no official intimation that may be made respecting me. Give my love to Margaret, Tina, Anna Maria, Kate, John and Morgan, and to all my friends. I beg you will all remember me in your prayers. God be with you all. Write at once, and believe me to remain, my dear father, your lovingly attached son, CHARLES UNDERWOOD O'CONNOR. To Mr. John O'Connor, Lafayette, Indiana, United States of America." This was the letter to my father, my lord, suppressed by the director 25th of the ninth month '69. I got these letters, as I tell you, about five minutes before I had the honour of being summoned into your presence; and I was not a little indignant to see what the doctor had marked on the last letter I wrote. He remarks here on it.

5168. (Chairman.) The doctor?—The doctor, sir.
5170. (Dr. Lyons.) What letter is this?—My last attempt to communicate with my family, addressed to Mr. Molesley, United States' Minister.

5171. Let us take these letters in order. Is this the fourth letter?—My lord and gentlemen, I am not going to mix my case in order.

5172. Oh, no; we quite understand that. Is this the fourth letter?—Yes, this is the fourth letter, doctor.

5173. Was there a letter that passed out in the interval?—Yes, my fourth letter passed out. That is a letter I wish to say a few words about.

5174. Wait now. The fourth letter was allowed to pass out?—Yes.

5175. What was the date of that letter?—The date of that letter was the 18th November.

5176. The 18th November, was it?—Yes, the 18th November, doctor.

5177. In what year?—'69.

5178. What did you want to say about this letter?—I wanted to say about it, sir, I was told first that that letter would not be sent at all.

5179. (Chairman.) The fourth?—The fourth, my lord. That was to my cousin. I was told it would not be sent; afterwards I was told it was sent, and I suspected something. I went up and asked the governor if there was any of it obliterated, and he told me there was. Now, I have reason to believe that they so obliterated and manipulated that letter, I may say destroyed it, that my own cousin did not know me when it reached him, for he says to me here: "Somerset, Tyrone, Ireland, the 8th December. 'My dear Charles,' my master I see was posted in Chatham, 2nd December and delivered there on the 8th—"

5180. (Dr. Lyons.) On the 2nd December?—On the 2nd December. "In July last I wrote to you" to Clatham. My letter was returned with the statement that it was not due to you to receive it, and also that it consisted of more than one sheet of paper." I shall refer to this matter afterwards. "Pray," he says, "to put this idea away from you. It is duty to yourself, your family, and your friends, you should not give way to despondency. In truth you ought to be more of a Christian man than to permit despondency to master you." I believe he has received this impression not alone from my letter that they destroyed, but from official statements also made about me, because the doctor tells me to my face I am starving myself to death. Now if I were to yield to despair, I would not be alive at all. "I have seen very deplorable consequences to your health, but never believed you would give way to nervous anxiety." It is true that my nervous system is shattered, but I cannot help it. "My friend mentioned you were excited." Well, that is irrelevant here, but I just merely refer to it to show you how I have been misrepresented.

5181. Did you quite understand from the governor that part of the letter had been obliterated?—Yes, he told me so; he told me so.

5182. (Chairman.) Did he show you the parts?—No, the letter was gone out then, my lord. I asked him to tell me the parts obliterated, and he told me he was not at liberty to do that.

5183. (Mr. De Vere.) Can you give any explanation why the letter written by you on the 18th November was not posted until the 2d December?—If you ask my opinion, my opinion is they were debating amongst themselves whether they would send it or not, and that they made up their minds it was better to send it, first consulting it as I say. How is a matter I wish to call your attention to.

5184. (Dr. Lyons.) This is the fifth letter, is it?—There are only four letters here altogether.

5185. Yes, but this is the fifth you wrote?—Yes.

C.E.O'Connor.

4 July 1878.

C.D.O. Canada.

4 July 1870.

5188. What is the date?—The 12th May 1870.

5188. (Dr. Greenhow.) What is the date of that letter?—12th May 1870; and this is signed "Hume, medical doctor." I do not know his christian name. 14th of the 5th month 1870.

5189. (Mr. Broadrick.) Is that letter you had complained of the diet?—I had complained. I have given what passed between the doctor and me in reference to it.

5190. (Chairman.) Will you read again that part which relates to what the doctor said about the disease?—"I have at last been permitted to receive a visit, a right thorough persistent denial me. On the third instant I was visited by Mr. Collin, M.P., who is a friend of my kinsman Underwood. I was surprised to learn from Mr. Collin that the House Secretary, Mr. Bence, had positively denied certain published statements about my health and treatment, and that he stated I was in actual health, and did so on the authority of a doctor, who told me "you have heart disease." He told me that in the presence of the governor; the governor heard him tell me so."

5191. (Dr. Lyons.) The governor here?—The governor here.

5192. (Dr. Greenhow.) This present governor?—This present governor, and more than that, that I can afterwards tell you.

5193. (Dr. Lyons.) In presence of Mr. Pitt Rivers?—Yes, in presence of Mr. Pitt Rivers. "You have heart disease," and who when I asked him for something to ease the pain, said to me, "medicine is no use to you, it is not what you want, you want change of food, better food, and that I am not allowed to give you." He also added, "I could cure you if I had you outside here, but I am not allowed to give you what would cure you here."

5194. Did he say all that in presence of the governor?—No, no; he said this to myself.

5195. How much did he say in the presence of the governor?—That would be a future matter. I will come to that afterwards.

5196. I understood you to say that he said this in presence of the governor?—No, he did not say this in presence of the governor. He told me in the presence of the governor here that I had heart disease. I have another statement to make in reference to that. Well, my lord and gentlemen, what shall I proceed to next.

5197. (Chairman.) You have dealt with those five letters, four of which have been suppressed. You have explained that in detail. What is the next point on which you wish to make any statement?—Oh, my lord, if I was prepared I would wish to have the assistance of Mr. Butt, Q.C., and my cousin, Thomas Nelson Underwood, barrister-at-law, to prepare my case properly, so as to lay it before you.

5198. I have explained to other prisoners, and now have to tell you that it cannot be allowed that either of them should be present here when you make your statement.—But cannot I be allowed their assistance to prepare a statement?

5199. No doubt; distinctly.—Such a statement as I might wish to lay before you, for I am only making a sort of a dying reference now.

5200. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you applied to Mr. Butt?

—I have written to Mr. Butt.

5201. Have you written to Mr. Underwood?—No, I have not.

5202. Do you mean to do so?—I do.

5203. (Chairman.) It is right that you should understand the arrangement. It rests with yourself. We have no power to retain a legal adviser; but if you wish to make application to them to come you shall have full facilities, and they will have free access to you, if they choose to come.—My lord, I wish to have their assistance, and I respectfully apply to you to grant me that assistance.

5204. All that we have the power of doing is to see that if you write to them and they choose to come, there will be full facility for doing so. We cannot undertake to apply to them to come, but shall afford you full facility, and shall speak to the governor to ensure that this facility shall be offered.

5205. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you understand now fully?—I do, doctor.

5206. (Mr. De Vere.) When you were informed that your letters were suppressed, were you told the grounds on which they were suppressed?—Sometimes I was told it was for speaking of my health, and that I must not say anything about my health. At the time I made application in case of my death, I asked Mr. Pagan would my body be given up. He said it would. Then I asked to write this to my cousin, and to tell him the state I was in. He said, "You may write to say your body will be given up, but you must not say a word about your health."

5207. When letters to you have been suppressed, have you been informed the reason that they were suppressed?—Yes, I have, sir.

5208. How often has it occurred that letters written to you were suppressed?—I cannot tell, but when letters from my cousin to me were suppressed I was told it was because they contained political intelligence.

5209. Can you tell the Commission how often have you been informed that letters to you have been suppressed?—No, I cannot tell exactly, but several times I was anxiously expecting to hear from my friends—first my cousin, and after my arrival here I used to go up repeatedly, regularly, from time to time, to ask the governor if any letter had come for me, and he used not to seem pleased. He would say "There is no use" in your coming here asking those questions: if a letter "is come and the authorities allow it to be given to you, it will be given to you." "But, governor," I said, "will you please to tell me if any letter has come for me?" and he said "No, no; no letter has come." At the very time he told me no letter was come for me I learned that a letter had come from my cousin.

5210. What time was that?—It was the close of 1869. John Devey, my fellow prisoner, had a visit from a sister of his, and he told his sister—she begged of her to tell my cousin how anxiously I was expecting to hear from my friends. "Oh," said his sister, "he has endeavored to communicate with him: he has written to him, and the letter has been returned to him."

5211. (Mr. De Vere.) Were you informed of the suppression of that letter?—Not a bit of it, sir. I was told that there was no letter. They played upon my feelings. Knowing how anxious I was to hear from my friends, they wanted to torture me. When I heard through Devey about this letter, I went to the governor and said I heard a letter had come for me and was returned, and he admitted it. He said "Yes, there was a letter, and it was returned; it contained political news." Now here is the reason he assigned to my cousin for returning the letter. My cousin says, "In July last I wrote to you" to Chairman. The letter was returned with one "stating that it was not due to you to receive it, and also that it consisted of more than one sheet of paper." Now there is no rule requiring a person to limit himself to one sheet of paper, because I have known my fellow prisoners to receive a dozen sheets, 40 pages.

5212. Have you applied for documents, or copies of documents, prison reports, or anything of that kind?—I have. I have applied for all my suppressed letters. These I have got to-day. I have asked for copies of all official reports and statements made by medical officers, governors, the directors and members of the government, private and public, in reference to me, including orders and instructions from the Home Office and directors of prisons in my case.

3213. When did you make the application?—The first application I made it on—oh, I should think, is two or three weeks ago; and another application I made yesterday. The governor came to me and asked me "What are those things you applied to the Secretary of State for?" so I told him. "Well," said he, "put it on paper again, what you want," so I did put it on paper.

3214. Would you wish to defer your further communication until you have received an answer to that application for documents?—I would, until I am fully prepared, because I cannot do justice to my case until those are supplied.

3215. (Chairman.) We shall be here on the 19th, and of course long before that time you will be informed whether you can have all those papers. I suppose you will get some notice. You will hear through the governor. I think the better way would be to defer your examination until that time.

3216. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you been in separate confinement since you got notice last week of this Commission being about to sit?—Yes, in strict solitary confinement. We were not allowed to communicate with each other.

3217. Were you allowed out to exercise?—Yes.

3218. Had you the same food as before?—Yes.

3219. Had you the same clothes day and night?—The same clothes day and night. You mean since we have been subjected to solitary confinement?

3220. Yes?—Yes, doctor; the same.

3221. Had you full opportunities of going to your religious duties?—No; we were not allowed to chapel in the mornings.

3222. Had you full opportunity of going to mass on yesterday?—We had.

3223. Did you go to mass?—I did. We all went to mass. By-the-by as it turns up, there is a matter that I would wish to mention to you to show you how there is a difference made between—how I am exceptionally treated. Every other prisoner when he goes to holy communion he sits up, and when I go up I have an officer with his back over my head. He comes up after my heels and stands by at the railing all the time, making an exhibition of me before the other prisoners.

3224. Is that the case all the time?—All the time, since I came here.

3225. (Chairman.) Is that the case with the other treason-felony prisoners?—Yes, any of them that go.

3226. But it is not done in the case of ordinary prisoners?—Not to ordinary prisoners.

3227. (Dr. Lyons.) What work are you at?—Mending stockings, doctor.

3228. How long are you at that employment?—Since the 17th March 1869, the 18th I think. March 1869 anyhow.

3229. Does the warder who conducts you to the rolls sentence you to come forward?—Another officer summons me, he relieves his hand.

3230. Is the warder who conducts you to the mill a Catholic, do you happen to know?—I do not know anything about his religion.

3231. (Mr. Dr. Fere.) How does the officer who summons you know whether you are for communion or not?—Well, I understand that the chaplain signifies or makes out a list and gives this list into

The prisoner retired.

JEREMIAH O'DONOVAN (ROMA) recalled.

3246. (Chairman.) Really, you wish to make a further statement I believe?—These letters sir, I wish to give you. I got some of my suppressed letters to my wife. I wish to give you them up, also with my statement that I gave to-day.

3247. (Dr. Lyons.) It may be better that you should keep your letters; you may want to refer to some of them. If you keep them, and make any use you wish of them before preparing your final the governor. I am not perfectly sure how it is. I know there was quite a scene in the chapel sometime ago; as I was going up the principal officer rushed quite a row, because the officer ordered me at all to go up to the railing, and I understood the priest preferred charges against the officer for the row he raised in the chapel on account of it. I do not know how the matter terminated.

3232. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you ever been punished with bread and water?—Oh yes, punished, doctor, many times. I could not tell you how often.

3233. Can you state in your final statement the number of times?—I could not give you any idea of the number of times. I was often 70 hours on bread and water, and when I would come out could not eat.

3234. Will you furnish us an account of the number of times?—To enable me to do that I should have copies of the reports made against me.

3235. You can have that?—I would also wish to have the governor's feelings against me. And I understood that the Secretary of State wrote a letter which was published in the "Times" newspaper the 17th January about me. I would like to see that letter.

3236. (Chairman.) That will be for the Government to decide. These are communications which I do not think the Government would give; but reports against you in the prison books, with the decision on them, in all probability they will give you.—Yes.

3237. (Mr. Brodick.) You said that you received a visit from Mr. Callon?—Yes.

3238. Was that visit in private, or was there some number present?—Oh yes, the deputy-governor was present.

3239. He was present?—He was present, sir. He was watching every word we said.

3240. Are there any other points on which you wish to have any explanation from the Commission?—Well, Mr. Brodick, I do not know. I am most anxious you know that I should have the assistance of Mr. Butt and my cousin Underwood, and those documents that I have asked for, reports and other documents, to enable me to make out my statement.

3241. (Chairman.) You will be informed at the earliest period which documents you can have and which you cannot. You will have facilities to write to those parties whom you may wish to assist you.

3242. (Dr. Lyons.) In reference to any documents of which you may not get copies, you can make a return of such things as you think may be material in them, and these will be given. Do you understand that?—Yes, doctor. I would wish to be examined on oath.

3243. (Chairman.) We have no power to administer an oath?—Have you not, my lord.

3244. No.—I have no objection to make my statement before any person official.

3245. You had better make it to us privately.—Any way you, my lord, and the other gentlemen of the Commission wish, I will make my statement. Here is a copy of my application:—"Chatham Prison. Sir,—In order to prepare my statements I require all my suppressed letters, all official reports and statements made by medical officers, governors, and doctors and members of the government, private and public, in reference to me, including orders and instructions from the Home Office to the directors of prison in my case."

statement, it would be much better. You may wish to show them to your advisers. I should strongly advise you to keep your letters at present.

3248. (Chairman.) They would be of more use to you than they would to us?—There are two, my lord, I can leave you.

3249. (Dr. Lyons.) Oh, keep them all.

3250. (Dr. Greenham.) They are given to you to help you.—It is to help the Commission that I wanted.

3251. (Mr. De Vere.) They may be of use to you in preparing your case?—Yes.

3252. (Dr. Lyons.) Show them to your friends and advisers.—Well, my lord, in a letter I sent you I made some observations as regards the possibility of my having an opportunity if anything that I stated to you was contradicted, I do not know would you grant facilities to allow me to be present.

3253. (Chairman.) I think it most likely that we shall, but in that case we should put the questions. We should not permit a person who brings a charge to question the person charged, but any question we think important you may put through me?—For instance, my lord, one time here I rendered myself liable to be punished severely. The punishment commenced with binding my hands behind my back. I believe the order to do that came from the Board of Directors in London, because I committed the offence one day and was not put in irons until about the same hour next day. I recollect the Board of Directors were communicated with. Well, the matter got out to the world. I understood the matter was contradicted officially by the Secretary of State, and by the Board of Directors, who I believe issued that order to put me in irons. I believe they sent one of their body to get the governor of this prison to make out that no such thing took place. Now I cannot conceive how it is possible for me to convince you of the truth of anything. I state, if you would take the evidence of the Board of Directors or any gentleman who is not a convict, in preference to the evidence of a convict.

3254. We cannot say beforehand what our course will be. All I can say is that we will hunt up to the very utmost of our power, that, or any other allegation that you may make. That is all that I can say. What course we shall take I cannot say.—Any instance I can give you, gentlemen, any assistance which I may have in my power, you shall have.

3255. (Dr. Lyons.) Every care shall be taken to investigate any charge that you make, to the fullest extent.—Can I speak one word with Mr. Lyons, sir.

3256. (Dr. Lyons.) You had better speak openly, whatever you wish to say.—I think you are a Cork gentleman.

3257. Yes, I am.—Do you know Mr. Robert Lambkin?

3258. I do slightly, not very intimately.—Well, sir, I would be obliged if you happen to see him that you would tell him I owe him some money in the course of business, but was not able to pay him on account of being here.

3259. All right. Is there anything further that you wish to know from the Commission?—I applied to have my wife present. I am under the impression I have been misrepresented and I would wish to have her present at any explanation that may be made.

3260. (Chairman.) You will not be misrepresented here.—Oh, I have been, my lord.

3261. (Dr. Lyons.) If she has any evidence to give she can give it.—I do not think she has.

3262. If she wishes to say anything she can do so.

The prisoner retired.

W. Halpin,

WILLIAM HALPIN, prisoner, examined.

3263. (Chairman.) William Halpin is your name?—Yes.

3264. William Halpin, I have to explain to you in the first instance that we are a Commission appointed to inquire into the treatment of the unconvicted prisoners who are at present confined in English jails, and that we are appointed by the Government, but are entirely independent of the Government. We come here for the purpose of receiving any statement that may be made to us either by word of mouth or in writing, and of receiving any evidence that it may be wished to submit to us. Whatever statement is made to us shall be made in private in this or some other private room, out of the hearing of any of the prison officials, and therefore may be made with perfect freedom; and no evil consequence will attend any prisoner by reason of any statement which he may make. The Commissioners are Dr. Lyons, Mr. Brodrick, Dr. Greenhow, Mr. De Vere, and myself, Lord Devon. We are now ready to hear and to receive any statement from you orally or in writing, which you may wish to submit. Your evidence will be taken down by a shorthand writer, and we shall recommend, at the conclusion of the inquiry, that the report and evidence be both printed. Do you wish to make any statement to us now?—Yes, my Lord. I have to say that I am not ready with my statement, in consequence of not being supplied with the materials that I asked for. This is a copy from memory of a paper that I directed to the Home Secretary on last Saturday week.

3265. (Mr. De Vere.) From memory?—From memory, but I think substantially correct. I thought the governor would have the rest of the papers, but it appears he did not receive one.

3266. (Chairman.) Was that a memorial to the Home Secretary asking for certain documents?—Yes, my Lord.

3267. Has not the governor made you acquainted to-day with an answer from the directors of prisons?—The governor did not read the answer for me to-day, but he told me that he would furnish me with my suppressed letters. He has done so since. I have asked for these and other things in addition. This, as I have stated, was addressed and sent on to the Secretary of State for the Home Department:—"Sir, 'agreedly to instructions contained in a paper read for me to-day by the governor of this prison, I apply as follows:—First, a note which I addressed to Mr. Motley on the 13th instant, through the governor of this prison, asking Mr. Motley to employ Mr. Butt on behalf of Charles Underwood O'Connell and myself to watch the proceedings of the Commission appointed to inquire into our treatment, be forwarded to Mr. Motley, and that Mr. Butt be allowed to receive a seat at the table with the Commissioners. Secondly, that Mr. Motley be requested to employ Mr. Butt to assist me in making my statement of the inquiry, on the same ground as notified in my note of the 13th instant.' It probably might be necessary for me to explain these two particular items. The note that I addressed to Mr. Motley through the governor was addressed to him on the 13th instant, as soon as I learned that a Commission was appointed, asking Mr. Motley to employ Mr. Butt to represent Charles Underwood O'Connell and myself as American citizens at the Commission, with a view to report the facts elicited correctly to the United States Government. That was the purport of the note that I addressed to Mr. Motley, and I have not been able to learn whether the note was forwarded or not, but from the shuffling answers that I received I am inclined to believe that it has not.

3268. We will ascertain for you whether it has been sent or not?—The other item relates to the same subject.

3269. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you write a distinct and separate letter to Mr. Motley, or did you only ask them to communicate to him your wish?—I wrote a separate letter on the 13th June, and addressed it personally to Mr. Motley, and on sending a list along with the letter item I included this second item, when I learned that we had been allowed assistance in making up our statements. That was the case, my Lord and gentlemen, of my making the second application. "Third, 'that inasmuch as I am due to write a letter under the prison rules, I wish to write to Mr. Motley in reference to my nationality and other matters connected with the British Government, as well as "to suppressed letters and visits. Fourth, that I require, to enable me to make up my statement to the Commission, all my suppressed letters, my letter to the Secretary of State written in September, 1866, and written complaints I made against the governor of this prison, and the medical officers thereof."

5270. (Mr. Bradrick.) Do you refer to a memorial written in December 1866, to the Secretary of State?—I do, sir.

5271. (Dr. Lyons.) Was it a memorial or a letter?—Well, I don't know what it is called.

5272. But it was addressed to the Secretary of State?—To the Secretary of State. I received an answer through the late governor, that the Secretary of State had received this letter and declined to interfere. I think that was about the substance of the answer—that there were no grounds for interference in the matter.

5273. (Chairman.) The late governor's name was Powell, I think?—Powell; yes, my Lord. "Fifth, I require for the same purpose the passages in the record books of the governor, the medical officer, and the directors, where they contain any orders relating to me. Sixth, I shall require for the same purpose all the reports made by the subordinate officers to the governor, by the governor to the directors, by the directors to the Secretary of State, and by the Secretary of State to the public, through parliament, the press, or any other channel, relating to me." You are aware, gentlemen, that from time to time certain reports are made by the prison officials in relation to us, to our health, condition, treatment, and so on, and that it will be very necessary for me to have a copy of these reports before I can finish my statement. I may as well say now that I have the best reasons for knowing that some of these reports, at least, have been of the falsest kind; and it is with the view to have the statement so prepared for the Commissioners as to avoid the necessary loss of time, that I asked for these papers now, or asked for them then. I was told by the governor that the proper time to make this application would be when the Commission would be assembled, and I therefore repeat the application now.

5274. Are those all that you ask for?—No, my Lord, I have some more yet to mention. "Seventh, I shall require all the paragraphs, articles, letters, or other matters published that relate to our treatment, or had any influence in promoting the appointment of this Commission." I understand the Commission is appointed in consequence of certain reports that were published relating to our treatment, and subsequently denied by the Government. I have this as official authority. The Secretary of the United States Legation visited me here in last September, and told me that all the public statements that had been made in reference to our treatment had been categorically denied by the British Government, and this denial sent to the United States Government. Now, the reports that were published I understand to be statements that were made by us, the prisoners here, to gentlemen who visited us; and the statements that were made on those occasions were entirely correct, and, if published as they were given to our visitors, were true, and any contradiction of those statements must necessarily be false. I am therefore specially interested, inasmuch as these contradictions have been sent to the United States Government; and that Government having declined, in consequence, to interfere in my behalf, I am therefore particularly interested in having those statements furnished to me, that I may see whether they are correct or otherwise, and state the matter fairly and accurately to the Commission.

5275. (Dr. Lyons.) What is the name of the Secretary of Legation?—Mr. Moran.

5276. (Mr. Bradrick.) He is still, I think, the United States Secretary of Legation?—Yes, sir. He was secretary the last two or three ministers, I think. "Ninth, I particularly require all the orders issued to "the medical officers of this prison by the Secretary of State, the prison directors, the governor or other authorities, and his reports to his superiors." I say here that I particularly require these, because it has come to my knowledge that the reports made by this officer in relation to myself are in every particular, where they have come under my notice, entirely unsubstantiated; and it is necessary that I should see his reports, or a copy of them, and the orders which he claims to have received in reference to our treatment from his superior officers. He claims to have received certain orders from the Secretary of State, and from the directors, which justify him, in his opinion, in treating us in the manner which he has, and which I shall state in my report, if I be so allowed, and be furnished with those papers. "Tenth, I request that a copy of this application be sent to Mr. Motley, with the request that he will forward the same to the state department at Washington." These are all the items that I required. I would prefer to reserve this, my Lord, as it is the only paper that I have, and their papers can be found immediately.

5277. (Chairman.) With regard to the papers for which you have asked, I had better tell you how the matter stands. You have got the suppressed letters?—Yes.

5278. We hope and believe that those documents which are not at present under our control will be supplied to you. You will be able to receive, we hope, copies of my reports made against you, with the decisions of the governor upon them. With regard to the other papers, I am bound to tell you that I think it very likely they will not be given—at least most of those that you have referred to; and that the Government will not think themselves justified in supplying you with them. They will be, in all probability, placed in our hands, so that we shall be able to ask questions upon them; but I think the Government will most probably decide that those documents cannot properly be placed in your hands. You will of course hear from the Government how far your request will be complied with, and how far declined by them. The Secretary of State appears to be of opinion that my memorials or petitions that have been sent to the Secretary of State or to the directors may be furnished to you.—So I understood from the governor.

5279. And also the suppressed letters?—Yes.

5280. With regard to the others, you will hear from the governor what, under the orders of the Secretary of State, can be supplied to you. At any rate if they are not supplied to you they will be on our table, and we shall be able to ask such questions from them as we may think necessary.—You see, my Lord, unless they are furnished to me before completing my statement, that it will be impossible for me to make that reference to them which would clear up matters that must necessarily come before you.

5281. It is quite clear that whatever you are to have, you ought to have at the earliest period. Upon that subject we will speak to the governor before we go, and ask him, as far as he can, to place them in your hands at the earliest opportunity?—I am satisfied, my Lord, that the governor will do all that he can to furnish me with any papers that may be allowed.

5282. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you sent a copy of this to the governor?—I have sent a copy to the Secretary of State through the governor, on last Saturday week.

5283. On last Saturday week?—On last Saturday week.

5284. (Chairman.) We propose to come here again on Tuesday the 19th?—May I ask you one other question my Lord?

5285. If you please?—It is on the question of employing Mr. Bull. You have said nothing on that subject.

5286. I had better at once tell you how that matter stands. We have no power or authority to employ anybody in your behalf. All that we can do is to see that such facilities as can be granted are allowed for the employment of anybody you may desire to advise or assist you. We shall not permit any counsel or any other person who may wish to appear for the person under examination, to be present in the room during the examination, but the fullest facilities, as you will have seen from the printed paper which was given to you, will be afforded to anybody that comes to assist the prisoner in the preparation of his statement?—Yes, so I understand, but I will now, then, make a formal application for the presence of Mr. Motley, Mr. Butt, or some other competent person to represent the United States, to be present during my examination.

5287. That application will be taken down. The Commissioners have decided that they will not admit anybody.—So I understood that they have so decided. I feel it my duty, nevertheless, to make this application.

5288. You are quite right in making the application. Is there anything else that you wish to explain?—There is a paragraph or two that I might read from this paper.

5289. (Dr. Lysaght.) Under number seven you said, "I shall require all the paragraphs, articles, letters, or other matters published that relate to our treatment, or had any influence in promoting the appointment of this Commission." What do you refer to there?—I refer to the published accounts of our treatment, the truth of which the Government denied. These are the papers that I refer to.

5290. When you use the word "papers" do you mean newspapers?—Newspapers; printed matter; yes. That is what I was told by Mr. Moran.

5291. (Chairman.) We have no means of getting any of those. We are ready to inquire into any matter that is brought before us, but we have no means of getting those papers.—This application I made to the Secretary of State, who has every opportunity of furnishing me with those papers that I have mentioned.

5292. It will be for him to decide whether your application should be complied with or not.

5293. (Dr. Lysaght.) I understood you to say that you had sent an application to the Secretary of State, concerning all the items that you have now detailed to us?—I have, sir, on last Saturday week.

5294. Have you had a reply to that?—I have had no other reply to it than that my suppressed letters, and letters to the Secretary of State might be given to me. I have no reply as to whether my note to Mr. Motley would be forwarded, or whether I could get other papers or not.

5295. Have you got a printed copy of the regulations under which this Commission is going to pursue its inquiry?—I got this paper. (Exhibits a paper.)

5296. Have you read paragraphs 2 and 3 of it?—I have, sir, read it all.

5297. Are you aware that under the facilities there specified, you can apply to have Mr. Moran or Mr. Butt, or any person you please, to assist you?—To assist me in making my statement?

5298. To assist in advising you, or in writing it?—I was told that I could write to Mr. Butt on Friday last, and I did so.

5299. Did you write to Mr. Moran?—No.

5300. Do you wish to do so?—I wish to write to Mr. Motley, but have got no permission to do it.

5301. (Mr. Brodick.) Have you applied for permission to write to Mr. Motley?—I have, sir.

5302. And has not that permission been granted to you?—I have got no permission to write to him.

5303. (Chairman.) To whom did you apply?—To the Secretary of State.

5304. Did you apply to the governor for liberty to write to Mr. Motley?—Yes, my Lord, to the Secretary of State through the governor.

5305. (Mr. De Vere.) Was the application to write to Mr. Motley, made for the purpose of his giving you such assistance as would enable you to make your statement, or was it an application to write to him upon other matters?—It was to write to him on several matters, including that; to write to him on matters entirely unconnected with this inquiry, with matters of my own in the United States, and with the subject of my suppressed letters and general treatment. It included everything that, as far as I am concerned, will come before the Commission.

5306. (Mr. Brodick.) The Commission has recommended, and believe their recommendation will be complied with, that the prisoner should have the means of communicating freely with their friends outside, for the purpose of obtaining their assistance in preparing their statements. So far as that goes, we have reason to believe that letters will be forwarded, although the time for writing them has not come according to the ordinary prison rules; but we have not made any such recommendation in respect to letters on other matters.

5307. (Chairman.) Letters upon other subjects must be subject to the ordinary rules of the prison?—Yes, my Lord.

5308. (Dr. Greenham.) You had better write to Mr. Motley on that subject?—I won't be allowed to write to him.

5309. (Chairman.) We have recommended, where it is sought to write a letter for the sole purpose of obtaining assistance in the preparation of a prisoner's statement, that such letters may be allowed to go out, even when they exceed the number which, under the ordinary regulations of the prison, could be written?—But my note of the 13th, which bore upon that subject, the letter touched on nothing about the employment of Mr. Butt; that was not sent.

5310. (Dr. Lysaght.) How do you know that it was not sent?—The governor never gave me any answer. He said he had heard nothing on it.

5311. You stated to me a short time ago that you wrote to Mr. Butt?—Yes, I wrote to Mr. Butt himself.

5312. When did you write to Mr. Butt?—On Friday last.

5313. Do you understand that you may write to Mr. Motley in the same manner upon matters relating to this Commission?—I understood that now, sir. Might I read a paragraph relating to other papers here, my Lord, that I think bears on the subject?

5314. (Chairman.) Yes.—The papers that I refer to particularly now, are the orders issued to the medical officer by the Secretary of State and the directors. "If it should be objected that I have nothing to do with the orders issued by the public authorities to their servants, I reply that the most important facts connected with our treatment hinge upon those orders, and that without them it will be impossible to elicit the truth. If the investigation be so loosely conducted as to enable superior officers to throw the blame on the shoulders of their subordinates, and the subordinates back again on them, it is easy to see that no fair conclusion can be arrived at, and that it will be impossible to fix the crimes committed against me on the right persons. If the inquiry be designed as a thorough sifting of the matter, and not a sham and a cheat, the Secretary of State and the Government will be most anxious to furnish me with all that I ask for, and give every facility to enable me to lay before the Commission all the facts. I must confess that seeing how Messrs. Knox and Pollock's Commission of 1867 acted, and the refusal to allow Mr. Butt to be present, even as spectators, induces me to believe that the inquiry is to be solely conducted in the interests of the Government, and if this application be refused it will be 'proof strong as holy writ' of that intention." That is all that I wish to read, my Lord.

5315. (Mr. Brodick.) Is there any other point on which you desire an explanation?—There is nothing else that I recollect now. You absolutely refuse to allow any party to be present, either Mr. Motley or any other representative of the United States.

5316. (Chairman.) We do.—I claim as a right to have a representative of the United States present, and it will depend, in a great measure, on the allowing or refusal of this application whether I will make any statement at all.

5317. I told you what the decision of the Commission was. We adhere to that—I know.

5318. (Dr. Lyons.) You know that anyone who sees you, may, if he has anything to state in regard to you, tell it to the Commission afterwards; and although he may not see the Commission in your presence, he may come as a witness—Mr. Mosley or anybody else—and tender any evidence that he thinks material in regard to you?—Yes.

5319. For reasons thoroughly well weighed, the Commission has determined on seeing the prisoners by themselves, without the presence of any other person; but any person may see a prisoner, and see the Commission afterwards?—As far as I am concerned, I would as soon make the statement that I have to make in the presence of ten thousand persons, as in the presence of this Commission. It is no matter to me how many are present; but I have made this application simply with the view to have the United States properly instructed, knowing that certain statements have been made by the British Government to the United States that are not true, and I wish those statements to be corrected. That is the reason why I wish the representative of the United States to be present.

5320. You see that if you substantiate anything before us, when the report of the evidence taken by this Commission comes to be printed, all that you have stated will go to the United States Government?—But, gentlemen, how can I forget the investigations that have taken place before in reference to us, in which the statements we made were not published, in which the facts were dishonestly falsified; and what grounds have I now that a similar transaction will not take place again.

5321. You must form your own opinion on that.

5322. (Chairman.) I told you what the decision was, you will make up your mind as to the course you will take?—Would it be proper to make another application now, my Lord, as to the persons that I would like to examine, and how I would like to examine them?

5323. Yes. You can give us the names of those whom you wish to have examined for you?—Yes. I wish to examine them myself, if allowed.

5324. You wish to be present when they come to give evidence?—Yes, I wish to be present at the examination of all the witnesses on the part of the State; I wish to see all the papers furnished by the State; and I wish to have authority to cross-examine those witnesses.

5325. In all probability we shall admit you to be

The witness withdrew.

The Commission adjourned.

Chatham Prison, Tuesday, 5th July 1870.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. BACCHUS.
S. E. DE VRIES, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GARRISON.

W. SPENCER OLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

MR. WILLIAM PITT BUTTS recalled.

5326. (Chairman.) Mr. BUTTS, you have certain letters in your hand?—Yes, my Lord, from Mr. BUTTS. I received those this morning.

5327. Are these letters from Mr. BUTTS addressed to treason-felony convicts?—Yes, to Charles O'Connell and William Holpin.

5328. Have these letters been yet placed in the hands of the parties to whom they are addressed?—No, my Lord.

5329. Do you intend to place them in the hands of present when a person whom you charge may be under examination, and we should permit you to suggest to me any questions which you might wish to have put; but we should not permit an examination by you?—If I can put the questions through you, my Lord, that will answer my purpose. But you will see, my Lord, why I seek to be present with power to ask questions. The statements that I make, you will get officers of this prison, and of other prisons perhaps, to make statements directly contrary—statements that if allowed to pass unchallenged, may completely nullify all that I say; and unless I have an opportunity of cross-examining those witnesses, no truth can be elicited; because the officer's statement that he made heretofore, will be attempted to be supported here; and it is on that account that it is necessary for the purpose of eliciting the truth, to allow me to either examine them myself, or to put the questions through the chair.

5330. We shall allow you to put the questions through the chair.

5331. (Dr. Lyons.) Will you excuse the witnesses you require?—I require the Secretary of State—Mr. Brown, I believe?

5332. Yes.—The former and the present chairman of the Board of Directors, Director Pagan, and the medical officer of this prison.

5333. Dr. Burns is it?—Dr. Burns, and Dr. Stott, the salient surgeon. It may be possible that I would also cross-examine some of the warders, but that will depend on circumstances, and it is not necessary to give their names as they will be always here.

5334. (Chairman.) These are the names which you submit to us, as those of persons whom you would wish to call. Of course it would be for us to decide who should be called?—Certainly. I understood you, my Lord, awhile ago—I wish to ascertain it—that you were going to wait something about postponing it.

5335. The examination will take place on Tuesday the 19th, that is to-morrow fortnight.—Here?

5336. Here; so that you have plenty of time to see any friend that you may wish to assist you. The Commission has recommended the governor that you no longer be kept in separate confinement. That simply was done to give you time to prepare your statement; but as the interval is now necessarily long, you will return to your former position of association.

5337. (Dr. Lyons.) Were you able to go to mass yesterday?—Yes; we went to mass yesterday, but we were not allowed to go to chapel for the last three days before Sunday to morning prayers.

W. Holpin.

the prisoners?—I should not place them in their hands without authority.

5338. By "authority" do you mean authority from the directors?—From the directors or yourselves. (Witness assents to the latter.)

The Commission deliberated a short time.

5339. The opinion of the Commissioners is, in substance, Mr. Butts, that we have no authority to interfere with your discretion in this matter. What has occurred with reference to the letters in this: we, thinking it of great importance that full freedom of intercourse should exist between the prisoners and their friends outside, as far as is consistent with proper regulations, and as far as such communications bore on the subject of our present inquiry, recommended to the directors, and I believe instructions were given accordingly, that facility should be given to the prisoners for writing to their friends with the view of obtaining assistance from them, professional or otherwise, in the preparation of their statements, even though that would involve more frequent letters, at shorter intervals, than might be consistent with the prison regulations under ordinary circumstances. But in doing that we distinctly recognised this principle, that the letters so to be sent should be letters bearing on the question which is submitted to this Commission for inquiry, and statements to be made by the prisoners; and therefore the letters so to be sent out should be examined as in the ordinary course, and that no letters irrelevant to the subject of our enquiry should be permitted to go out under that enlarged condition. While we are of opinion that, as regards the answers, the discretion rests entirely with you as to whether those answers should be communicated to the prisoners or not, at the same time we feel certain that you will bear in mind that our wish throughout has been that full facility should be given for free communication, so far as the subject of our inquiry is concerned, between the prisoners and their friends; and with that suggestion we would leave the matter in your hands, or in the hands of any other parties to whom you may wish to refer it; this being borne in mind only, that it is very important that no time should be lost, and that the prisoners should be, as early as possible, put either in receipt of such communications, if you think it right, or told that such communications are stopped, if you think that the proper course?—Yes, my lord.

3340. But you will bear in mind that our wish and

The witness received the letters from the Chairman, and withdrew.

H. Shaw.

HENRY SHAW, prisoner, examined.

3331. (Chairman.) Show, in the first place I must inform you that we are a Commission appointed by the government, but acting quite independently of the government. The Commission consists of Dr. Greenhow, Mr. De Vere, Dr. Lysons, Mr. Brodbrick, and myself as chairman, Lord Devon. Our instructions are, and our object is, to inquire into the general subject of the treatment of the treason-felony prisoners confined in English prisons, and therefore of yourself and the others that are here. Any statements which, either in writing or by word of mouth, you may wish to make it will be our duty to receive; and it will be our duty also to receive any evidence which you may wish to tender on any points which you may include in your statement. You will make your statement, if you make it orally, in the private room, out of the hearing of any of the officers or persons in any way connected with the prison; and you may rely that no evil consequences shall ensue to you from whatever you may say here, and that no prejudicial result as regards your treatment or position will follow from anything that you may say here. Your statement will be taken down by a short-hand writer, and it will be a recommendation of the Commission, which in all probability will be complied with, that the report and evidence shall in due time be made public. Now, have you received from the governor a printed paper showing you the facilities which you would have for communicating with your friends if you wished to do so?—I have, my lord.

3332. And you have received from him also, I presume, before that, a statement of the nature and object of the Commission?—Yes, my lord.

3333. Now are you prepared to make any statement to us?—Well, my lord, on Friday—Thursday last—I went to the governor and requested him to take a statement from me to the following effect to the Commissioners.

desire is, that the prisoners should have as full facility as can safely and properly be given them for the preparation of their statements?—Exactly, my lord. Ross stated to me, my lord, yesterday, that he had got permission from the board to write to James O'Connor, Dublin, Mr. Pigott, and Mr. Maxwell Irwin.

3341. He mentioned no names to us?—Oh, "my friends," he said. This is a letter that is addressed to me. I told him to put on paper what he wanted.

3342. If they are friends whose assistance is material you will give him facility?

3343. (Dr. Lysons.) We explained to him yesterday that, besides his wife, he could apply to other friends, and I conveyed this advice in consequence of that instruction?—Yes.

3344. (Dr. Greenhow.) He would like to have his wife, but he would like to have others as well.

3345. (Dr. Lysons.) He says here that the Commissioners told him he would have an opportunity of writing to his friends, and that he will to-day, with your permission, write to Mr. James O'Connor, Mr. Richard Pigott, and Mr. Maxwell Irwin?—Yes.

3346. (Chairman.) Of course you understood that he may get the permission?—Oh, certainly.

3347. (Mr. De Vere.) It might be well that the governor should inform him, to save time, that the letters must be confined to the matter particularised?—I always do tell them that.

3348. (Chairman.) With as little delay as possible those letters you have referred to should be given to the prisoners to whom they are addressed, or the fact that they had some communications to them?—Those letters from Mr. Ross?

3349. Yes?—Certainly.

3350. Mr. Ross, before we pass from the subject of the letters, it may be as well that we should inform you that we have not looked into the letters, and are not acquainted in any way with their contents?—Very good, my lord.

3354. Was it in writing?—I did not tender it in writing.

3355. You did not tender in writing?—No.

3356. Then you made a statement to him?—Well, to this effect, my lord,—that the Commissioners had left it optional with the prisoners to make a statement or withhold it; that I, using that option, declined to make any statement.

3357. Very well.—Has the governor communicated that to you?

3358. The governor mentioned it; but we thought it right that you should have an opportunity of communicating it to us from your own mouth. I have now to ask you, do you adhere to that intention of not making any statement to us?—Yes.

3359. You say that deliberately?—Yes, my lord; I come to the conclusion after deliberation on the matter.

3360. You will recollect that we are here to hear any statement from you. Of course it is at your own option. If you decide not to make it the matter ends?—Yes.

3361. We shall be here again on the 18th of this month. If you change your mind by that time, and wish then to make a statement, it will be open to you to do so.

3362. (Mr. Brodbrick.) Are you aware that you have an opportunity of communicating with any friends whom you may desire to assist you in preparing any statements?—I have received a printed form from the governor on Saturday stating forth this, and also from the gentlemen who represented himself as your secretary.

3363. That gentleman [Mr. Offhouse]?—Yes, that gentleman, that such facilities will be afforded, so that in the face of all this, my lord, and knowing from the form set forth that I had this privilege, I come to this conclusion.

3284. (Dr. Lyons.) Were you tendered pens, ink, and paper, for the purpose of enabling you to make a written statement, by the governor?—The governor, yes. I may assure that they would have been granted, because when the governor told me that I could have these facilities afforded me—pens, ink, paper, et cetera, and having concluded to make no statement, I said it was unnecessary—these things were unnecessary.

3285. Do you now wish to get pens, ink, paper, and an envelope, in order that you may make a statement now or at any future time to this Commission?—As to what I might do on a future day I cannot say.

3286. (Chairman.) Do you wish for time to consider?—Well, my lord, I would first wish to ask you a question or two, if you please.

3287. What do you wish to ask?—You say that this Commission is appointed by the government, but altogether independent of the government?

3288. Yes?—That I don't properly understand.

3289. I do not know that I can explain it more clearly, however I will try. I said that we are independent of the government, by which I mean that none of us are members of the government, that none of us hold any office under the government, that none of us are responsible to the government for any opinion that we may choose to express.

3290. (Dr. Greenwood.) We are quite independent. We have come here to learn the truth, and whatever to the truth of the case we shall report it.—That may be true, sir, but yet there is an impression remaining on my mind, now three years' standing; I really cannot get rid of this impression. I do not wish, for a moment wish to reflect on you, my lord, or any of the gentlemen, that you would not act altogether impartially in the matter. I would be very sorry to think, or that you should think I would think any such thing. But I was confined in Kilmainham prison when Messrs. Knox and Pollock made their report on the Fenian prisoners—political prisoners.

3291. (Dr. Lyons.) In Kilmainham prison?—In Kilmainham prison. I was there awaiting trial, or rather I was under the writ of Habeas Corpus; and from information that I have received from the report, and what I have learned from prisoners and my friends since, I have certainly come to the conclusion, very reluctantly I admit, that the English Government will not appoint anything like a Commission—an impartial Commission—to inquire into the prisoners whom, as I know very well, the Government has systematically persecuted.

The prisoner withdrew.

JOHN D. BURNS, M.D., examined.

3292. (Dr. Greenwood.) What are your medical qualifications?—M.D. Member of the College of Physicians of London.

3293. (Dr. Lyons.) M.D. of what university, please?—St. Andrews.

3294. St. Andrews?—Yes.

3295. (Chairman.) You are the medical officer of this prison, are you not?—I am, my lord.

3296. How long have you been here?—From its commencement.

3297. When was that?—1823, I think.

3298. Did you say 1823?—Yes, 1823.

3299. (Dr. Lyons.) Are you a surgeon as well as a physician?—I am.

3300. Of what college?—I am a surgeon of the navy.

3301. Of what college of surgeons?—The Edinburgh College of Surgeons.

3302. (Chairman.) Are you the only medical officer of this prison?—There are two medical officers.

3303. You have an assistant?—I have an assistant.

3304. Were you connected with any convict prison before you came here?—I was, my lord: I was connected with Portsmouth, Portland, Woolwich.

3305. (Chairman.) That is your view, you know. All I am to say is, that if you choose to change your mind between this and the 15th, you can then make a statement?—Yes. You understand, my lord, I mean no disrespect.

3306. We quite understand that.

3307. (Dr. Lyons.) Had you opportunities for going to your religious duties since the meeting of this Commission was announced to you?—No, sir.

3308. In what respect?—On Thursday we were confined—at least I have been—speaking for myself—I was confined to my cell, and not allowed out only to exercise, not allowed to go to morning service as usual; but on Sunday I was allowed to go to mass.

3309. Then did you go to mass on Sunday, as a matter of fact?—Of course.

3310. Do you understand that you are communicating with any friend or friends with a view to their advising you or assisting you in the preparation of any statement that you may desire to make at a future meeting of the Commission here? Do you understand the fullness that are stated in a printed document that was placed in your hands by our directions?—I believe Lord Devon has told me all that now, Dr. Lyons.

3311. Yes?—Well, in answer to that, Dr. Lyons, I would say that it sets forth on the face of it that such are the facts, but that I cannot believe those facts, from the course adopted by the governor, or at least by the prison officials, to prevent me and other prisoners from communicating with our friends.

3312. What I ask you is, do you understand from that document that you have now the power of communicating with any friend or friends outside, with the view of getting assistance towards the preparation of any statement that you may wish to make, in writing or orally, or in both forms, to this Commission?—It is so set forth on the face of this notice, but whether it be true in fact I cannot say.

3313. (Chairman.) We cannot argue with you on that. It is sufficient for us that it appears on the paper you have.

3314. (Dr. Lyons.) I want to know distinctly if you understand that you are now at liberty to communicate with any friend or friends outside, with the view of their assisting you in preparing any statement, written or oral, for this Commission?—I understood it then from the governor verbally, and I am told it by this; but nevertheless the officials may suppress any communication of mine, as they have done hitherto.

The prisoner withdrew.

H. Shaw,
8 July 1870.

J. D. Burns,
M.D.

3315. You must have been a long time in the service?—42 years.

3316. You say that you have been since '38 at Chelsea?—I think it is '38.

3317. I put it down '38. Then you are 12 years here?—Yes. I think it is eight years at Woolwich.

3318. What accommodation have you for prisoners in hospital?—We have at this moment only three wards.

3319. How many are these capable of bedding?—45.

3320. I believe alterations are in progress for the purpose of enlarging the infirmary?—They are.

3321. And what do you expect will be the accommodation when they are completed?—About 80.

3322. The total number of inmates of the prison being how many?—1,700.

3323. Will that be as large a percentage as you would think necessary?—I would expect more.

3324. You would wish for more accommodation?—I would wish for more accommodation.

3325. What number of cubic feet will be allowed to each patient when that accommodation is completed?—In association I should expect about 600.

3326. Do you think 600 would be enough?—I think

J. D. Burns,
M.D.
5 July 1874.

600 would be enough in association; but I should like 1,200 if I could get it in division, in separate classes.

6407. There are, I think, some separate cells connected with the infirmary?—All the upper building that is going on now is to be divided into separate cells.

6408. Have you any prisoners in the separate cells?

—I have two.

6409. How do you decide who is to be placed in a separate cell, and who is to be placed in association?

—I never put them in a separate cell unless I find they have committed themselves in one way or other, or that I wish to keep them under more perfect medical observation.

6410. Have you had under your charge from time to time any of the treason-felony prisoners?—I have, my lord.

6411. Which of these?—I have had Hespia, O'Connell, Ross, McClure; I do not think there were any others, but possibly I might have had some of those men on some trifling things that occurred.

6412. But you have not had any others under your special care?—I think not, my lord.

6413. Have they while under your care received from you the same attention which any other patient in the infirmary would get?—They have, my lord.

6414. What is the average proportion, Dr. Burns, of persons in the infirmary in this prison?—They vary very much of late, on account of the number of prisoners greatly increasing; but before that, 45.

6415. Forty-five on the whole number?—45 on the whole number, my lord.

6416. The whole number is more than 1,700?—It is not 1,700, my lord. I do not think it has ever been that.

6417. We were told 1,700?—1,700; I believe it is that.

6419. These figures are rather wide?—I had better give you the average every year.

6420. If you please?—Yes. I find, my lord, that the average is 38 per thousand.

6421. The average sick?—The daily number of sick every year is 38 per thousand.

6422. (Chairman.) And the rate of mortality?—The average rate of mortality per thousand every year is 18.

6423. I see the statement in your medical report dated 12th of January 1870, that there have been 31,849 casualties during the year?—Yes, my lord.

6424. Do you think the statement accurately printed?—It is so. That is counting every day's casualties. But casualties are not sick cases. They are cases of diarrhoea or cough, or something out of hospital which the medical officer is called to treat. They are called here casualties. The number every day is added up to them that sum.

6425. Then by "casualties" you mean cases of illness of some sort or other?—Some casual illness.

6426. (Dr. Lyons.) Does it involve this: that the same individual may be reported one day after another?—He may be reported one day after another, and he is counted each different time.

6427. Then the 31,849 would not imply so many different individuals?—Not different persons. The same man each day would be counted.

6428. Does it imply 31,849 different prescriptions?—Yes.

6429. But they may be for the same individuals?—Yes; for instance, to-day there are more returned on Sunday it was only 45, but there has been an injury as 120.

6430. (Dr. Greenleaf.) 31,849 casualties a year will represent 80 or 90 a day?—About that.

6431. Who sees them?—The assistant surgeon sees them.

6432. How long does it occupy him to prescribe for them?—About an hour, or three quarters of an hour, perhaps.

6433. (Dr. Lyons.) He sees 84 patients in an hour?—Oh, yes; he would do it in that time frame.

6434. Is how long?—About three quarters of an hour.

6435. Eighty or ninety patients in three quarters of an hour?—Yes.

6436. Are you quite clear about that?—Perfectly sure; I have done it myself. "Diarrhoea, diarrhoea, opening medicine, opening medicine," and he passes on. It takes in half a minute. The compounder is by to give the medicine.

6437. (Chairman.) Do you mean to say that it is done then and there?—Then and there.

6438. So that a minute and a half would do to prescribe and give the medicine?—Half a minute would do it. If I think a man ill, he is put by and sent to the infirmary.

6439. (Dr. Lyons.) Is the assistant surgeon who does that, is it not?—Sometimes I do it; but it is the assistant surgeon's duty.

6440. Do you give advice and administer medicines and appliances to 80 or 90 persons in three quarters of an hour?—There are no appliances. If I find a man is really suffering from anything serious, he is taken and sent to the infirmary. Many of these men have nothing at all to complain of, and no medicine is given to them. It is an idle excuse to come down to talk to one another in this prison. There are many of these things to be guarded against.

6441. (Chairman.) You have to enter the class of diet that is given to the infirmary to the patients?—In the infirmary I have, my lord.

6442. Are you consulted as to the diet in the general prison?—No, my lord; I am not consulted in regard to that.

6443. Into how many classes is the dietary of the prison divided?—Into three.

6444. Will you describe what they are?—I am not prepared.

6445. What are they called?—First, second, and third class.

6446. Diet number one, two, and three?—I would rather show you the printed regulations. I have nothing to do with it in any way.

6447. Are you cognizant of the fact, if it be a fact, that the dietary of the treason-felony prisoners is different from that of other convicts in this prison?—I am aware that it is greater than any of the other prisoners.

6448. In what respect?—In the first place a prisoner has a pint of cocoa in the morning and eleven ounces of bread, and a treason-felony prisoner has a pint of tea and eleven ounces of bread.

6449. Then the only difference in that instance is that between tea and cocoa?—Tea and cocoa.

6450. Was that alteration of the breakfast instituted at your request?—At my recommendation.

6451. At your recommendation?—At my recommendation.

6452. May I ask upon what ground that recommendation was given?—They refused so much, and they asserted me that it did not agree with them; that they had not been in the habit of taking cocoa; and I gave it with this view, that I thought cocoa more digestible to a man at heavy work than to a man who did no work. I thought it advisable to give tea, as it is not prohibited by the rules of the prison. It is almost optional whether they have tea or cocoa.

6453. They had not at the time done heavy work?—They have never done heavy work.

6454. And you thought tea would be more suitable to them?—Yes.

6455. Passing from that to the dinner, is there any difference between the dinner of the treason-felony convicts and that of the other prisoners?—There is.

6456. What is it?—On Tuesdays and Fridays the dinner of the prisoners is a pint of soup with broth, a pound of potatoes, five ounces of bread, and two ounces of cheese.

5487. That is the ordinary prisoners?—The ordinary prisoners.

5488. Now what is the dinner of the treason-felony prisoners?—The treason-felony prisoners have five ounces of roast mutton.

5489. On Tuesdays and Fridays?—On Tuesdays and Fridays.

5490. (Dr. Greenhow.) That is, they get five ounces after cooking?—After cooking.

5491. Without bone?—Without bone.

5492. (Dr. Lyons.) What amount is put down to produce that quantity?—Seven, I think.

5493. Are you quite sure that you are accurate, for these figures do not quite agree with what we saw a week ago?—It may be a quarter of an ounce out, or something of that kind; but it must weigh that, whatever it is before.

5494. Are you sure that five ounces is what it is expected to weigh?—Five ounces it is expected to weigh, because every man's provisions are weighed when given to him.

5495. Are you aware of what the amount is that is put down to produce that quantity?—No, I do not know that exactly.

5496. (Dr. Greenhow.) What besides the roast mutton do they get for dinner?—The others are the same; five ounces of bread and one pound of potatoes, and two ounces of cheese.

5497. That is the dinner on Tuesdays and Fridays?—Yes.

5498. (Chairman.) What is the dinner on the other days?—On Thursday, my lord, there is a difference. The prisoners in ordinary get a pound of oat pudding, a pound of potatoes, and five ounces of bread; while the treason-felony prisoners get better pudding, a pound of potatoes, and five ounces of bread. In fact they have better pudding in lieu of oat pudding.

5499. On what day of the week is that?—On Thursday, my lord.

5500. (Dr. Greenhow.) How much bread?—Five ounces of bread.

5501. (Dr. Lyons.) From what do you take those data that you are now furnishing to the Commission?—From my own paper in the hospital, and the memorandum. I have applied for those alterations. I took it from the letters I asked it in.

5502. (Chairman.) Was it at your recommendation that this substitution of five ounces of meat for soup took place?—It was, my lord.

5503. On what ground did you recommend that?—I recommended it on this ground, that the soup they had would possibly not be so digestible, and it is allowed in getting these other supplies; and they had some bread extra, but that made very little difference. The thing was to do away with the soup which I thought less digestible with those prisoners who took no exercise. That was the chief ground.

5504. Is there any difference as regards the supper?—There is none. Their supper is—two, a pint, instead of a pint of gruel; and I was going to say just now, the meat when it is roasts, they allow two ounces more bread to compensate for the vegetables that are in the soup; so that at supper, instead of gruel—a man who is working on the land gets a pint of gruel and eight ounces of bread—these prisoners get a pint of tea and ten ounces of bread.

5505. And that additional bread you consider a compensation for the vegetables they would otherwise have at dinner?—It is.

5506. When was this alteration made?—At different dates, my lord.

5507. But in all cases on your recommendation, based upon the fact of your finding that they were not put to hard work as the other prisoners were?—Precisely, my lord.

5508. (Dr. Greenhow.) Are you aware that the treason-felony prisoners have been treated exceptionally in any other respect, besides their diet?—Oh yes.

5509. In what matter?—They have had less exercise than the other prisoners.

5480. Less exercise?—Less exercise.

5481. Will you specify in what respect that is the case?—They have been employed at stone breaking, and chopping wood. They have had very little exercise; so much so, that I was obliged to ask for walking exercise.

5482. Was that on the ground of health?—On the ground of health.

5483. Did you find that their health failed for not having exercise?—I thought that it did, and it was partly to employ their minds. I thought they were complaining of things that had no existence, from not having anything to do. A man having nothing to do begins to think about his ailments.

5484. Are you aware that the treason-felony prisoners are placed in different cells from the other prisoners?—I am.

5485. Are the cells in which they are placed larger or smaller than those of the other prisoners?—They are the largest in the prison.

5486. Are they as well ventilated, in your opinion, as the other cells?—They are quite as well ventilated; in fact a great deal of trouble has been taken with the ventilation to improve it.

5487. Do they bask in the same bath as the other prisoners?—As the other prisoners in the penal class; and there are very few besides themselves there.

5488. That is, there is a bath belonging to that division?—There is a bath to that division.

5489. And the penal-class prisoners bask in it?—The penal-class prisoners bask in it.

5490. Are their cells the same as the others?—Yes.

5491. Is their bed the same as that of the other prisoners?—No, it is improved.

5492. How is it improved?—They have two beds. 5493. By "two beds" do you mean two mattresses?—They have two mattresses.

5494. And what else?—I think they have had a blanket more. I am not sure. In winter it was given to them; I do not think it was taken away.

5495. Was the extra food that you mentioned taken away?—I do not think it was. It was not.

5496. Do you examine the prisoners periodically?—I do.

5497. How often do you examine them?—Once a week.

5498. Every prisoner is seen by you once a week?—Yes.

5499. Where is that examination made?—With the ordinary prisoners I make it on Sunday morning at 10 minutes to 10, on the parade ground. With the Penitentiary prisoners I make it at noon.

5500. Where?—In their cells.

5501. What is the nature of that examination?—I call on them and ask them how they are getting on, and if they have not anything to say the door is shut. The warder announces "the doctor."

5502. In point of fact it is rather that you ask them whether they have anything to say?—Yes.

5503. There is no examination unless they ask for it?—No.

5504. No inspection?—No inspection whatever, because I ask them if they wish to see the doctor. They are asked that every morning as well.

5505. Do you examine the prisoners when they first come here?—I do.

5506. Medically?—I do.

5507. In what manner?—They are taken to the examination room, separately, and stripped.

5508. How do you examine them?—I examine the chest, and the skin to see if they have varicose veins, or scalled testicle, or rupture, or eruptions on the body.

5509. When you examine the chest and find it perfectly healthy as regards the lungs and heart, do you make a note of the result?—I do.

5510. Supposing a prisoner to be quite well, what is the course you adopt?—He is asked if he has ever been troubled with any disease, or if his family had any hereditary disease.

J. D. Buss,
M.D.
8 July 1879.

J. D. Barnes,
M.D.
5 July 1929.

5511. My question rather refers to this: do you take a note of the state of the man's lungs and heart?—No, not for each person.

5512. If you found anything the matter with the lungs would you take a note of it?—I certainly would.

5513. Then in fact there is no record kept of the results of the examination which you make when a prisoner comes under your care, unless he is actually ill. If he is in good health you only record "good health"?—Yes.

5514. Are the prisoners weighed?—They are, all of them.

5515. How often is the weighing repeated?—If I find them losing flesh at all, I send them in to be weighed.

5516. If you found a prisoner losing weight what course would you adopt?—I should examine him. If I found that it was from general debility, from bad health, I would take him into hospital immediately.

5517. When prisoners are ill, how do they make their illness known to you?—He puts his brown out, or makes a noise at the door if it is at night, and the officer goes to him.

5518. And finding him ill, what does he do?—Finding him ill, he communicates it to the warden, who passes on the information.

5519. To whom does he pass the information?—To the infirmary, and the infirmary warden then visits him, and if he finds that he is ill the assistant surgeon is sent for immediately.

5520. Then it rests with the infirmary warden to decide whether the man is ill or not?—If there is the slightest doubt on the warden's mind, his course is to send for the assistant surgeon, and he does so probably when there is no occasion, as I have found myself.

5521. Is it possible that a man may be ill at half-past 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening, and be told that he would see the doctor the following day?—I should think not.

5522. That would be contrary to rule?—It would be contrary to rule. If he wished to see him he could see him at once. The doctor is sent for immediately; because he is punished if he sent for him unnecessarily.

5523. That is a standing rule?—That is a standing rule. If a man says he wishes to see the doctor there is no one to prevent him; but he is liable to this, that if he sent unnecessarily, he is reported to the governor. I certainly would report him, for I would have no peace in this world if I allowed that.

5524. Do you visit the punishment cells daily?—Yes.

5525. Every man who is undergoing punishment is seen by you or by the assistant surgeon?—He is.

5526. I suppose that rule does not apply to the transference convicts at present?—No, because their names are not down. They put their names down if they want to see the doctor.

5527. They are in penal cells, but they are not undergoing penal punishment?—They are not.

5528. If you found a man complaining of his labour being too hard, have you the power of altering it?—I have; I put him to light labour.

5529. Have you the power of ordering extras for persons who are not in the hospital?—No.

5530. Are you in the habit of recommending change of diet to those who are not in hospital?—No.

5531. You have done so for the transference prisoners?—I have; but then I got authority from the director.

5532. There is then quite an exceptional case?—Quite an exceptional case.

5533. You have never done so for any other prisoners?—I have not. I have never had the occasion.

5534. (Mr. De Vere.) You have mentioned in that report that there were over 31,000 casualties in the year?—I have.

5535. And you explain those casualties, so cases in which persons receive casual medical treatment from you?—Exactly. I do.

5536. You have stated also I think, that many of those who applied to you for casual assistance, do not receive any prescription from you?—There are many.

5537. Do those cases enter with the list of casualties?—They do.

5538. Then your list of casualties includes the cases of those who make application to you but who receive no treatment?—On medical grounds. This is a very rare occurrence, but they do come down. They complain; they have complained, and I have to ascertain.

5539. Could you state at all to the Commission the proportion of those who call upon you for casual medical assistance, and who really do not require to receive any?—I should think, roughly, perhaps two a day or three a day. But these men give more trouble than the men who are ill. They are the men who take most time. I perhaps have to send them to the infirmary.

5540. I want to get what you consider the general average was?—Sometimes there may be no case of that kind for a week; at other times there may be a dozen down.

5541. The cells in which the political prisoners are confined go by the name of penal cells?—They do.

5542. Do not "penal cells" mean cells in which penal discipline is usually carried on?—It is so.

5543. Now are the political prisoners, who are confined in penal cells, subject to what is called "penal discipline"?—No, they are not, because those who are in the penal cells have to pick a certain quantity of oakum in a certain time, and their whole time is occupied in those cells; they are allowed to exercise till their penal discipline is out.

5544. Then do I understand you to say, that though they are in cells which go by the name of penal cells, they are not actually subjected to penal discipline in those cells?—The transference prisoners are not.

5545. Are those cells more or less comfortable than the ordinary cells in which they would be confined if they were in their usual place in the prison?—They are nearly twice the size.

5546. Is there any inconvenience of any kind attendant upon their being in those cells?—No; I think they are more comfortable. They are considered for more comfortable than any other cells in the whole establishment.

5547. If a prisoner were shown over the prison, and had to select a cell for himself, would he select one of those so-called penal cells?—I would myself certainly select one of those penal cells if I had to live in them.

5548. You have been at Portsmouth, at Portland, at Woolwich, and at Millbank?—Yes.

5549. Comparing the climate of Chatham with that of those other prisons at which you have served, how would you estimate it?—I should say that the climate here to a prisoner is the most exposed place that I ever met with in my life. It is far worse than any of them. At Portsmouth there is the fresh sea breeze, and they are probably more exposed than they are at Portland. Portland I should think was the second; they are sheltered; and at Millbank I think they are subject to ague. We used to have a good deal of that at Woolwich, which we have lost entirely here. That is the most risk I should think.

5550. Can you state if the proportion of able-bodied men who fall sick on full labour is lighter here or at Portsmouth, or at Portland?—Well, I should think it is lighter here. Certainly at present it is lighter here. At Millbank they have disease, they have ague, which made them more frequent there.

5551. Is there anything in the nature of the public works which are carried on here, which you would say is specially injurious to health?—No, I think not.

5552. At any time of the year?—At any time of the year.

5553. Have they to work in winter in the wet?—They have, and exposed to the easterly wind, without shelter almost.

5554. Do you consider that to be peculiarly trying to the health?—Two or three days this last winter it was perfectly impossible for any one to then sit with impunity.

5555. During those days were they obliged to work?—They were, and they suffered tremendously.

5556. (Chairman.) That is the ordinary prisoner?—The ordinary prisoners, my lord.

5557. (Mr. De Vere.) Have you any instances of frost-bite?—A great many. I think I have two men now in the prison who lost all their fingers of one hand.

5558. Was there any increase of illness amongst the labour convict population in consequence of the extreme severity of the weather?—Yes, there was.

5559. Were the political prisoners at any time since they have been employed at any of this outdoor work that you have now been describing?—I think Baines was when he first came, but I fancy he was the only one, to the best of my recollection.

5560. Do you know how long he was so employed?—I do not. Perhaps a month or two months.

5561. Have you ever had an opportunity of judging how far employment on the public works, enforced, outdoor labour of this kind, affects more injuriously men of the more educated class and sedentary habits, than men of the ordinary labouring class?—Well, I do not think that there is very much difference in that respect, except that the labouring class can compete better with those in work, and being more used to it, do it probably more diligently; but those who have to commence it do suffer from weakness—from debility more, from the seasonal labour.

5562. Do they do less work?—They must do less work.

5563. Do they suffer more in health?—I think on the average they do. We are obliged to take them off sometimes; they cannot put on with it.

5564. I need not ask you whether your recommendation is always adopted when you advise to have a man taken from one work and put to another?—I have no power to put a man from one work to another; but there is a party called the "light-labour party," and I take out the men from the general labour, and put them into this.

5565. Is it your opinion that the more severe outdoor labour, even though it does not produce actual illness, yet may lower the general condition and impair the strength of the labourer?—I do not think it would lower the strength of the labourer if he had sufficient food to carry it on.

5566. Taking the present diet of the prison, do you think that, taking on the one hand the dietary, and on the other the work, the condition of the prisoner is lowered in a medical point of view?—I think that if he had more diet the work would be more satisfactory. I think it would stay and wear many of these falling into consumption—phthisis—and the development of scrofula and those diseases, if they had a little more food.

5567. I may put the question in a more compact form. Is it your opinion that convict labour here, taken in combination with the diet, has a tendency to shorten life?—I do not, except under such circumstances as I have mentioned.

5568. What are those circumstances?—Where a man has not sufficient food to support him under the great labour.

5569. Taking into account on the one hand the labour that he does, and on the other hand the food that he receives, do you think the system of diet and discipline in this prison tends to shorten life?—I think in certain cases of hereditary disease that it does, such as scrofula or phthisis.

5570. Would it be within your province to report those cases to the higher authorities, and to have the prisoner's work changed?—I should take such a prisoner immediately from his work, and put him in the infirmary.

5571. Would you do so if there was no actual development of disease?—No, I should not find it out. Perhaps I might, from the appearance of emaciation or debility about him. I have some now from debility alone, without organic disease, in the infirmary at this moment.

5572. Do you consider it a part of your duty to exercise a general supervision over the medical condition and health of the convicts, even in cases where they do not come within your peculiar medical treatment?—Oh, yes.

5573. Do you exercise it?—I do exercise it. I go and ask of themselves.

5574. If you found a man complaining of no actual disease, but becoming emaciated gradually, and becoming gradually lowered in his constitutional state, would you take measures to improve his dietary when at work?—I would take him immediately from work altogether for the purpose of improving his dietary.

5575. (Chairman.) Do I understand you correctly, Dr. Barnes, to say that you have the power to remove a man from hard labour to light labour, at your own discretion?—I have.

5576. But you have not the power to take a man from work altogether?—I have not power to remove a man from one work to another.

5577. Of the same class of labour?—The same class of labour.

5578. I observed that the light labour class to-day consisted of only eight or ten men?—In one division, my lord. I think you would find that there were others in other compartments.

5579. Do those that are put on light labour receive the same dietary as before?—No, they have light labour diet.

5580. (Mr. De Vere.) When a man is ordered exercise, is it usual that he should do labourous work at the same time?—Do you mean at full employment, or under punishment?

5581. No. Is it part of the discipline of the prison that a man at exercise should also be employed at labour such as drawing a roller?—That is supposed to be full labour. If it is supposed to be part of his duty to do it, is it no time for him to take exercise.

5582. (Dr. Lyons.) On the whole, Dr. Barnes, do you think the works of the locality healthy?—I do.

5583. You do?—I do.

5584. Still you have put in evidence that you think the place is exposed to great vicissitudes of weather at certain seasons?—At certain seasons, yes; at certain seasons of the year.

5585. Is there anything in the works going on here calculated to produce or to develop any form of disease?—No; there is ague in the vicinity, but there is nothing in the works, or the place where the men are employed, to induce it.

5586. Is there any ague within the district in which the prisoners work?—No, not within the district where they are employed, but close to it.

5587. Has there been at any time?—Yes; we have two or three cases a year.

5588. Have you had ague within the last year?—I think so. (Refers to a document.) We have had eight cases.

5589. Eight cases of ague within the last year?—Eight cases of ague.

5590. Could you say whether there are any diseases developed which are due to emanations arising from the prison excavations which we saw in process of being carried out to-day?—There are none whatever.

5591. None whatever?—None whatever.

5592. No form of miasmatic disease that you would consider attributable to the excavations?—None whatever; they are continually kept dry. Engines are stationed at different points to take all the water away.

5593. But when you have opened a large quantity of new surface, and emanations are arising therefrom, is it in your experience that any form of disease is consequent on it?—No; the fact is that it is not the case.

3594. You stated in reply to Mr. De Vere, that there was an unusual proportion of prisoners invalided in the course of last winter, in consequence of the severity of the weather?—Not invalided.

3595. Well, that sickness was produced?—On account of the weather there was a great increase of ulcer and foot-bite.

3596. I was going to ask you what class of diseases was produced?—Ulcer and foot-bite.

3597. Were there any thoracic diseases present?—Yes, there were some developments of phthisis—tubercular disease.

3598. Were any of those cases fatal, arising in consequence of exposure to severe weather?—I could not trace them distinctly to exposure, because they were all, most of them, hereditary diseases.

3599. Do you think there is anything in the atmosphere of this place, or in the works carried out here, or the exposure involved when prisoners are at work, calculated to promote the development of phthisis?—No, I think not. I think under certain circumstances it is a healthy place. There was one death only from distinct phthisis during the year.

3600. Only one death?—Only one death.

3601. Have you any supervision over the separate cells in which the prisoners are confined?—I have.

3602. You have?—I have.

3603. Are you consulted with regard to any changes in respect to ventilation or light in those cells?—I have not been.

3604. We ascertained to-day that certain changes were made in the cells occupied by the treason-felony prisoners, with respect to light and ventilation. Were you consulted in reference to that?—I was not.

3605. I observed also that the windows in many instances were rather dirty, so as to obscure the light. Whose business is it to look after that?—There are cleaners belonging to the prison.

3606. But whose duty is it to report it?—The warder in charge of the cells.

3607. If you observed it, would you think it your duty to report it?—I only go there to make an official visit to the prisoners, but I should not consider that my duty.

3608. Have you, as a matter of fact, observed that the cells of the treason-felony prisoners require ventilation?—There is a good deal of trouble taken by them. They have been much improved.

3609. They have been much improved?—They have been much improved. They have been fitted with separate shafts carried up the building.

3610. You think their condition now is better than it was?—The ventilation is better than it was.

3611. But you think there is still room for improvement?—I should think there is.

3612. When was the change made in them?—I cannot say, but I should think about a year ago.

3613. Who can give us the information?—The clerk of the works.

3614. You think some improvement might yet be effected in the ventilation?—I think so.

3615. You do not think the ventilation sufficient?—It is sufficient, but it might be improved.

3616. I believe you have had charge of some of the treason-felony prisoners in the infirmary?—Two.

3617. Not more than two?—Not more than two; not in the infirmary.

3618. You have had two of them in the infirmary?—Two in the infirmary.

3619. I presume the others have been more or less under your care?—At several times the others have been under my care.

3620. Have not Hespia, Ream, O'Connell, and McClure been under medical treatment?—Yes, but McClure and Hespia have been the only two I took into the infirmary.

3621. Have you seen sheets of the treatment of those four?—I have. They have been supplied to you.

3622. When you stated that 31,849 casualties occurred in last year as set forth in your report, I understood you to say that your term "casualties" quite covers all applications for medical aid of any kind, besides accidents?—Trifling accidents and things of that kind.

3623. Am I right in assuming that one prisoner may have more than once applied for relief, and hence recorded more than once amongst that number of casualties as you term them?—Oh, yes; he may apply every day, but each day is recorded separately. These are enumerated more for the purpose of recording the number of calls that one has to get through.

3624. You have stated that the assistant surgeon sees 80 or 90 in three-quarters of an hour?—He has done so.

3625. Is that usual?—No; we had only 64 on Sunday.

3626. On Sunday?—Yes.

3627. Why do you specify three-quarters of an hour?—Because he must do it in that time.

3628. Is that the time set apart for the purpose?—It is a limited time. He commences at a quarter-past 12, and has to be finished at 1 o'clock.

3629. Then within that time he has to see all who came to him?—Their names are put down in the morning. They are drawn up in a line on a different landing. As one is coming down to you another is coming on, and they pass by like soldiers in a row, so that you have no hesitation. It is quite easy to do it.

3630. Can you state what is the maximum that is so examined within three-quarters of an hour?—120.

3631. A hundred and twenty?—Yes, 120.

3632. Do you know that that has been the maximum number?—I do not know that that is the maximum number.

3633. I will ask you to state, either now or at some future time, what has been the maximum number?—I will ascertain that, sir.

3634. You will kindly make a note of it, and state at some future time what had been the maximum number of prisoners that has been examined within that period of three-quarters of an hour. (Witness makes a memorandum.)

3635. Also, you will be kind enough to state what has been the average number of persons examined for the last year, say on any four days within the four quarters of the year? Take an average for the quarters; or on any day within each of the quarters of the last year? (Witness takes a note of it.)

3636. Have the treason-felony prisoners to apply for medical advice within that period of three-quarters of an hour?—No, they have not.

3637. They have not?—They have not. That is a separate part of the prison altogether.

3638. They do not come within that period of time at all?—No; they are seen in the morning at 10 o'clock.

3639. They are seen separately?—Separately, at 10 o'clock, and so are the separate cells at 10 o'clock.

3640. Do you exercise any supervision over the food supplied to the prisoners?—I do.

3641. In what way?—I see it nearly about every other day.

3642. About every other day?—Every other morning, sometimes three or four mornings running.

3643. Have you at any time had to make complaints of the quality or character of the meat?—I have.

3644. In what respect?—In respect to its not being sufficiently tender, it looks coarse and not of good quality, not sufficient fat in it, sometimes too much fat in the mutton.

3645. Have you observed at any time anything else?—It has been decayed, and sent back again by a jury before I see it, because the stewed mutton is back.

3646. But have you yourself condemned it?—I may have sent it back afterwards, after being badly cooked, from the infirmary. I never acted it until cooked, and had I sent back from the stool, after being cooked, to be exchanged.

5647. Then you have on certain occasions observed tainted meat in the food supplied to the prisoners, which had passed other prison officials without being detected?—I have, sometimes seldom. You cannot detect it; it may escape observation, but such an occurrence is rare, but I have done it lately.

5648. You have done it, and done it lately?—Yes.

5649. I observed to-day that a portion of the mutton exhibited to us was tainted?—You did.

5650. Have you any supervision over that meat?—Oh yes, certainly; but that is hardly a fair criterion to go by, because it had not been received. That mutton had just been brought in from the contractor; it is laid before the deputy governor who has to examine it, and the steward.

5651. No better opportunity could be afforded for testing the goodness or badness of the supervision exercised?—Exactly. That meat had not been received.

5652. Do you know, as a matter of fact, what happened with regard to those two pieces of meat that I pointed out?—I do not. They certainly will not be kept.

5653. Who can testify to us what was done with them?—I will ascertain and let you know.

5654. But who is responsible for it?—The steward.

5655. What is his name?—Mr. Brown.

5656. When I went into the bath room, stated to be that used by the treason-felony prisoners, I observed a bad smell. Have you observed it on any other occasion?—I have not.

5657. Were you there?—I was, and I noticed it too. It was very bad indeed.

5658. Have you noticed it on other occasions?—Yes, when it was just erected; but I have not since.

5659. When was that?—I should think it is twelve months ago. It was occasioned by leaving the plug out, a piece of neglect.

5660. I should not think that a sufficient explanation?—The drainage is not good; there is not much fall.

5661. Have you previously observed it, or have you anything to report in reference to the state of the drainage here?—It is very poor.

5662. Very poor?—Very poor.

5663. The drainage is defective?—Well, you can hardly say it is defective, yet the fall is not sufficient.

5664. Have you noticed a bad smell as the result of bad drainage?—I have, sir. It is caused by not having sufficient fall. The tide forces back the drainage here, and makes its appearance.

5665. The tide makes its appearance?—The tide makes its appearance.

5666. Does the tide come into the prison?—The tide comes into the kitchen.

5667. The tide has been known to come into the kitchen?—Outside the kitchen.

5668. Have you made any report of the state of the sewers?—I have, and frequently.

5669. To whom have you reported it?—To the directors always, but I have had the chairman of the directors down with me surveying it.

5670. Then you have made reports from time to time respecting it?—I have. In fact, I have a report on it every month.

5671. Have you made medical reports to the director, or the Home Office, or the Office of Works?—I have, frequently.

5672. In what respect?—On their making inquiry with regard to health. I think principally with regard to that.

5673. Have you copies of reports that you have made to the directors or to the Home Office?—I have some.

5674. Will you be prepared to produce them to the Commission?—I will, if you could give me the date that I have to copy.

5675. I wish you to include all that you have made.—I have no clerk, and possibly I might not have all.

Some notes might have been formed on letters that came down, but as a general rule I have copied them myself. I have marked the letters to be ready in case any should be required; but if you point out any particular one I shall furnish it.

5676. Are they all in the book which you have there?—Yes, all that I have copied are in it.

5677. Can you now give the Commission the dates of any reports that you have made to the directors of prisoners to the Home Office, about the treason-felony prisoners?—I can, those that I have copied.

5678. Have you got some recollection of the date even of any that you have not copied?—There are a few that are not copied; a few not of any consequence that I have not copied.

5679. Can you not give us copies, or even the dates of all the reports which have been made by you in reference to the treason-felony prisoners, to the directors or to the Home Office?—The first one is April the 15th, 1856.

5680. This is only a sample of one?—That is a sample of one.

5681. I am not going to ask you to produce it now.—Oh, here is the first, the 11th May, about Halpin. That is the first that I have, sir.

5682. (Mr. De Vere.) In what year was that report made?—On the 11th May 1859: on the state of his health I see it is.

5683. (Dr. Lyons.) As a general observation, have you, Dr. Burns, come to any conclusion as to whether the health of the treason-felony prisoners has improved or deteriorated since they have been at Clutham prison?—Spending generally with regard to them—I do not think I have alluded to all—I have made that allusion in that, thinking it would make up for any deficiency of exercise that they had.

5684. Will you be so good as to be prepared at your next examination by the Commission to state your opinion as to whether the condition of health of those treason-felony prisoners have improved or deteriorated since they came to this prison?—I will.

5685. Will you be also prepared at the same time to lay the documents before us that I have asked you for?—All the letters I have written, I am certain I have copies of; but there may be notifications on the corners of some of those that I cannot now remember. I think it possible, however, that they are all here.

5686. You will be good enough, Dr. Burns, to look carefully over your books and memoranda, and be prepared to hand us in copies of all those which you have in your possession?—It is a large thing; I have no clerk.

5687. The governor must give you such assistance as may be necessary in making copies of them.

5688. (Chairman.) Speak to the governor and see if he can get you such assistance as you may require?—I will, my lord.

5689. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you think that the boards upon which the treason-felony prisoners sleep furnish as comfortable a bed as the hammock of other prisoners?—That is a matter of opinion entirely. Some men would prefer to sleep in a hammock and think it more comfortable. I think the others more comfortable, because in the hammock you might fall out, and many do fall out, and the strapping gives way. I think it is more comfortable on the floor where they are.

5690. Was it by your order that the drink of oatmeal and water was furnished for those prisoners?—Not for them.

5691. It was not furnished for them do you say?—I applied for it for the whole prison, and I suspect they have preferred it. They have never asked me for it. They got it because all are allowed it when on the public works. I thought it better than cold water.

5692. It was at your recommendation that it was supplied to them?—It was.

5693. And you found it useful?—I cannot say that they derived the benefit I expected from it. At one time when diarrhoea was prevalent. I rather looked to it with the expectation of checking it.

5694. Had it that effect?—No, it had not.

5695. Did the diarrhoea continue as usual?—It did.

5696. Did it promote it?—No, it did not promote it, nor did it stop it, but they liked it. They used to drink water in great quantities and got the colic and head.

5697. Have you had anything to do with the regulation by which the treason-felony prisoners have been put at stocking work?—I had nothing to do with that whatever.

5698. Can you state why it is that they are at that work, and not sharing in the work with the other prisoners?—I know nothing whatever about their employment. I have not been consulted about their employment.

5699. Do you consider them fit for hard labour?—I do.

5700. You do consider them fit to perform hard labour?—I do.

5701. Do you consider them all fit for hard labour?—I would not employ O'Connell at hard labour, for he has palpitation of the heart; but the last time I examined him the palpitation was away, he was free from it.

5702. Is it the custom to keep prisoners here who are not fit for hard labour?—No, the practice is to send invalids away, but there is no opportunity now for sending invalids away.

5703. Why is there no opportunity for sending them away?—Because there is no place to send them. I have only sent one man away in twelve months.

5704. Where did he go to?—To Woking; one of the treason-felony prisoners too, Burke.

5705. What difficulty do you find to operate against your sending prisoners from this prison elsewhere?—Merely that there is no room for them; no place to receive them.

5706. When you find that a prisoner is giving way in health, do you recommend his being sent away?—I do not; he has no place to go to. I have now some on hand to remove.

5707. How many?—18. I have applied to the directors to remove them to Woking, and I believe there is not sufficient accommodation there to receive them.

5708. (Mr. Brodick.) Is there not some difference between the dietary in use here and that in other public works prisons?—They have more at this prison than at the other public works prisons.

5709. Are you able to state in what the difference consists?—I think it is in two ounces of bread additional.

5710. Two ounces of bread additional per item?—Two ounces of bread additional per diet, and the soup on the Sunday.

5711. Have they soup here on Sunday instead of cheese?—(No answer.)

5712. You spoke of soup on Sunday as one of the differences in the dietary between this and other public works prisons?—They have no cheese on Sunday.

5713. In what respect does the Sunday dinner here differ from the Sunday dinner at other public works prisons?—I think that in the other dietary, they have cheese and bread—a very small proportion—but in this prison they have, without the cheese, a pint of soup, and five ounces of bread.

5714. How long have those differences in the dietary been in force?—They were put in force after the Commission that was held here to inquire on a report I made that the dietary was insufficient.

5715. Do you remember the year in which that was?—I cannot exactly tell you the date of it, but of course I can furnish it on another occasion.

5716. What led you to consider the dietary insufficient?—I found the men so weak and debilitated and so much incapable of working that I reported the circumstances to the director.

5717. Was the mortality increased at the time?—It was.

5718. And did you attribute the increase of mortality to insufficiency of diet?—I did.

5719. Was that after the diet had been lowered throughout the convict prisons?—It was.

5720. Was it in the year 1866?—I am not prepared to answer that without making up the notes.

5721. Are there any reasons in your opinion why the diet here should be more generous than at Portland?—My opinion is this, that the dietary is not sufficient here in the winter, but it is ample in the summer. I think exposure to the weather in winter requires an addition to the diet.

5722. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you refer to the present diet?—I refer to the present diet.

5723. (Mr. Brodick.) In your opinion is there any reason why a more generous diet should be afforded here than at Portland?—Well, I think so. I think that here they are in fresh water, and that I imagine is more severe to the people employed in it. Their feet are wet, and they are standing exposed to an easterly wind without any shelter whatever. In Portland they are employed in the quarries, where the high quarry on each side gives a certain quantity of shelter, and under cover, and the sea air is more bracing there.

5724. Do you weigh prisoners when they come into the prison?—Always.

5725. Are you able to state whether the weight of the treason-felony convicts at present in this prison?—Has increased or diminished?—I can only refer to their medical histories. Halpin has increased 11 pounds.

5726. Would you state one by one any increase or decrease in weight that you might have observed?—If they are not in the papers I have put in they are in the medical histories. The first is John Derry. When he came in his weight was 144 pounds, on the 12th May, that is the 12th of last month; I have not weighed him at this period, but the last time he was weighed he was 146 pounds and three quarters. On the 12th May he was 146 pounds and three quarters.

5727. (Dr. Lyons.) When was his weight 144 pounds?—On the 12th March 1869.

5728. (Mr. Brodick.) Take the next?—The next is McGuire. On the 12th March 1869 he was 154 pounds in weight.

5729. Was that on reception?—That was on reception. He is now 150 pounds and three quarters.

5730. (Chairman.) When was he last weighed?—On the 12th May, my lord.

5731. The 12th May 1870?—The 12th May 1870.

5732. Who is the next?—William Halpin. On the 19th August 1868 he was 161 pounds.

5733. (Mr. Brodick.) Was that on reception?—On reception. On the 12th May 1870 he was 178 pounds.

5734. Who is next?—Charles O'Connell. On the 12th March 1869 he was 129 pounds.

5735. That was on reception?—That was on reception. He is now, the 12th May, 119 pounds.

5736. (Dr. Lyons.) 119 pounds?—119 pounds.

5737. Then he has lost weight?—He has lost weight. O'Donnovan Rossa on the 24th February 1868 was 163 pounds and a half.

5738. (Mr. De Vere.) Was that on coming here?—That was on coming here, and on the 12th May 1870 he is 163 pounds and three quarters.

5739. (Chairman.) There is one more?—Yes, Henry Shaw. On the 18th May 1868 he was 148 pounds and a half, and on the 12th May 1870 142 pounds. I may mention that I ascribe in the loss in weight in three of those cases to their refusing food. O'Connell has been refusing food lately. I do not know why he is doing it.

5740. (Mr. Brodick.) When did Richard Burke leave this prison; do you remember the time?—Oh yes; I can tell you that. About the 10th December. On the 10th December 1869.

5741. In your opinion, when he left this prison, what was the state of his mind?—Well, he was in a rather lowish, weak state, but perfectly sound in his mind. I took a great deal of trouble to ascertain the point, because he seemed to feign insanity.

5742. With regard to the dark cells, when a prisoner is confined in a dark cell, how often do you visit him?—Every day.

5743. You visit him every day?—I visit him every day.

5744. And suppose you found that confinement in a dark cell was operating injuriously to health, should you have the power to put a stop to it?—Certainly, I should appeal to the governor to remove him immediately.

5745. Have you done so?—I have done so.

5746. And has that request been complied with?—Always; it always has been complied with.

5747. (Chapman.) Is it your opinion, Dr. Burns, that there is sufficient ventilation in the dark cells?—There is not, my lord, not quite so much as there ought to be.

5748. Speaking medically, you would recommend more ventilation in the dark cells?—I would recommend more, my lord.

5749. In point of fact, is it the practice in the prison to weigh the prisoners periodically?—No, not unless I see a man losing flesh, or I have some reason for doing so.

5750. What would be your opinion of the arrangement if it were made a practice to weigh each man once in two months?—It would be a terrible business to go through all these men, my lord.

5751. But putting aside the inconvenience, should you think it advisable?—I should think it is a very good thing as an experiment, to try the effect of the food and diet, certainly.

5752. (Dr. Greenleaf.) Do you keep any notes of symptoms in the case sheets?—All those that are on treatment in the infirmary, I do.

5753. Are there daily notes kept by you?—Yes, daily notes.

5754. Do you keep notes of the results of the examinations that you make?—I keep notes of the results of the examinations that I make.

5755. And of the treatment?—Certainly, exactly.

5756. That is the system as I understand in the hospital?—Yes.

5757. And those particulars are in your possession?—These are in my possession.

5758. Do you consider these notes to be your own property or public property?—Public property.

5759. Do you see any objection to these notes being seen by the patients?—I never allow them to be seen by the patients.

5760. On what grounds do you not wish they should see them?—There are two or three. In the first place I do not think it does a man any good to know the extent of his disease. Another is that I may have some notes to make of him that are objectionable to him, and he might take advantage of an opportunity to destroy that paper—a further objection.

5761. I gather from what you say that you think it very objectionable that the prisoners should be allowed to see these notes?—I do.

5762. I see by your report, not yet published, dated January the 12th of the present year, that you mention the fact of several patients having refused their food?—Yes.

5763. Does that apply to the treason-felony prisoners?—Not to them alone.

5764. But you have mentioned some of them who do refuse food?—They do.

5765. You have mentioned the names of two or three, and said that their weight had fallen off in consequence of refusing food?—It has.

5766. Do you receive a report of their having returned their food?—I do daily. I had one this morning, and have every day for a long time, which is quite usual.

5767. Do you consider it to be a part of your duty when food is returned to inquire why it is returned?—I do.

5768. If you think the cause is a sufficient one, what do you do?—I try to correct it as much as possible. I consider that these prisoners have sufficient; for instance, two of them say that they do not want it, and I quite agree with them. The food is too much for Ross; too much for Halpin; and O'Connell I question about. I think he would be the better of it, but he is not inclined to take it.

5769. If a prisoner returned his gruel and said that it did not agree with him, or that it caused indigestion, what would you do?—I should possibly put him under treatment in hospital for a time and see what it was or not; give him change of diet for a day or two, and let him eat again.

5770. And finding that it did not agree with him, could you order him tea?—It is objectionable, for this reason; if there is a certain class of men entitled to choose whether they will have tea or gruel, I think it is objectionable to change the diet. My own opinion is against tea at all. I think gruel is far fitter for prisoners than tea.

5771. Then you have no power to alter the diet of a prisoner at full labour if it does not agree with him?—I could not do it without reference to the director.

5772. You said that the treason-felony prisoners have not enough exercise?—They have not.

5773. What is the amount of exercise that these prisoners are allowed?—At first they had the usual exercise allowed, which is one hour every day. I then applied for two hours a day and it was granted; but I found that they did not take exercise at all, but sat down about the yard; and that indigestion that they complained of was possibly owing to insufficient exercise, and I requested that they would have more outdoor exercise to compensate for that, and that is the reason that they have had four hours for exercise of late.

5774. Then they now have four hours exercise?—They now have four hours, when one hour only is allowed.

5775. Are there any other prisoners here who are doing the same kind of work as the treason-felony prisoners?—I don't see, in the tailor's shop.

5776. What amount of exercise have they?—One hour.

5777. Is their appetite good?—They are in good appetite.

5778. Did you find that the treason-felony prisoners suffered in health from the want of sufficient exercise?—I could not say that I did, except their general appearance and complaining of dyspepsia.

5779. You had their time for exercise considerably increased?—I did that merely from the consideration that as the work is not now of particular value to the prison authorities, I thought it better to have them in the open air.

5780. Then they are now enjoying four hours exercise, while the other prisoners are exactly as they were before in respect to the amount of exercise allowed to them?—They are.

5781. You said, in answer to a question put to you some time ago, that "phthisis—consumption—is very prevalent here," do you think that such prevalence is caused by any condition incidental to prison life?—I think not to prison life.

5782. Do you think then, that the prisoners have already a tendency to it before they come here?—I think so.

5783. You think that that is the case?—I think so, but some of those who have died here have died from exposure, from inflammation of the lungs without phthisis.

5784. You do not think that there is anything in the treatment of the prisoners in this prison which produces disease in those who are not already predisposed to it?—I do not.

5785. You do not think that working in the docks produces phthisis?—I think not.

5786. I mean my question to apply to cases having a hereditary tendency to that disease?—From the fact, possibly, you mean.

J. D. Burns,
M.D.
8 July 1870.

5787. As a matter of fact?—No, that has not been found as a matter of fact.

5788. You have also stated that the drainage of this prison is very bad?—It should be better.

5789. That is, it is imperfect in consequence of want of fall?—Want of fall.

5790. Have you found that any disease has been produced by that want of proper drainage?—Not particularly; I should say, "No." I have not found diseases produced by it that I should expect, because I should expect to have typhus or typhoid symptoms. Now it is a very rare disease here.

5791. Typhoid fever?—Typhoid fever.

5792. Have you had any of it?—Yes, we had two or three; but you can hardly ascribe that to the drainage, because it would be considerable if it was that.

5793. Does diarrhoea prevail amongst the prisoners here?—It always prevails amongst the prisoners who are newly arrived. I ascribe that to the water. I made complaints of the water here and it was eventually supplied from the town.

5794. Have you had much diarrhoea in the prison since the water supply was changed?—We have, but chiefly in the case of new prisoners; the water of this place invariably produces diarrhoea.

5795. Even the water of the town?—Even the water of the town. They generally have a slight attack of diarrhoea on arrival.

5796. You have not thought that the diarrhoea was caused by the defective drainage?—No, I do not.

5797. Have you found that diarrhoea prevailed most amongst those prisoners who work out of doors?—No, I have not. It is equally prevalent amongst all classes here.

5798. Is it prevalent also amongst the officers and their families?—It is.

5799. As much as it is amongst the prisoners?—Well, I have hardly had an opportunity of judging of

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. BROWNE.
S. E. DE VERA, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENHOW.

W. SPENCER OLLIVANT, Esq., Secretary.

Captain HARRIS recalled.

Capt. Harris.
8 July 1870.

5808. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, have any letters been forwarded by any of the treason-felony prisoners to you since our first visit here?—A letter and telegram have been forwarded since the first visit of the Commission, my lord.

5809. A letter?—A letter, my lord.

5810. From whom was that letter?—From Malcolmy.

5811. To whom was it addressed?—It was addressed to his sister in Dublin.

5812. Was the telegram also from Malcolmy?—It was, my lord.

5813. Was it addressed to the same person as the letter?—It was.

5814. (Dr. Lyons.) The letter and telegram from Malcolmy were both addressed to his sister?—The telegram was addressed to Mr. Pigott.

5815. (Chairman.) There is also a letter from Dillon?—Yes, my lord.

5816. To whom is that letter addressed?—It was addressed to the secretary, and I have sent it to him to Parliament Street.

5817. Have any letters been addressed by the prisoners, or by any of them, to Mr. Butt?—Not by that, because the officers are here for a long time, with their friends perhaps, and natives sometimes.

5800. (Chairman.) Did I understand you to say that two of the treason-felony prisoners stated they had more food than they wanted?—I did; Bama has told me so frequently.

5801. Bama, Halpin, and I think O'Connell?—Yes, Bama and Halpin have told me so, my lord.

5802. Have they told you so on more than one occasion?—On more than one occasion, my lord. He returns very regularly a quantity. It is 11 ounces one time, 12 the other, and 10 the third.

5803. (Mr. Brodribb.) Is that per week?—No, daily.

5804. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you supply the Commission with a return from your books of the amount of food returned by these prisoners?—I can give you an account, stating the quantity of food they returned every day.

5805. For how long a period have they been returning food?—I can put that down.

5806. You can put that in the return?—Yes.

5807. (Mr. De Vere.) May I ask you, Dr. Burns, whether that return of food has been accompanied by any complaint in regard to the quality of it?—I go there and examine what they refuse. When I ask them why they do not use it, they say, "Well, it is more than I want," or "I do not want it." O'Connell made some objections lately. The last time I had occasion to do this, he complained of the potatoes being bad. The potatoes we stopped at the time of the year, fearing that the contractor could not supply them, in consequence of which they have not been supplied with potatoes, and he asked for them to be continued. That I did, and he then charged me with supplying bad potatoes. Then I said, "You had better take the usual dietary," and I supplied him with it, and he rejected that too.

3826. To whom was it addressed?—Under cover to me, and addressed separately to each of the prisoners whom I have named already.

3827. Do you mean that you received a separate letter addressed to each of them?—Yes, a separate letter to each.

3828. (Dr. Lysons.) Received this day?—This day.

3829. (Chairman.) Under cover to you?—Yes, my lord.

3830. Have you handed those answers to the prisoners?—I have not.

3831. On what ground have you not done so?—I consider that the expressions contained in the letter—expressions of opinion—might hinder the present inquiry.

3832. Do I understand you to say that you consider it undesirable in the discharge of your duty as deputy-governor of this prison to hand those answers to the prisoners?—Yes, to hand them to the prisoners without obtaining superior authority for doing so.

3833. Are the prisoners aware that any answer has been received?—They are not.

3834. By "superior authority," do you refer to the directors?—To the directors. And I may add, that an answer which I received to Malinsy's letter from his sister I have also considered it unnecessary to give him.

3835. (Dr. Lysons.) Unnecessary, or unfit, which do you mean?—Unfit, objectionable: from the expressions that were contained in it.

3836. When did that letter arrive?—It arrived here yesterday. I may say that it referred to correspondence—

3837. I think we had better not go into it?—Very well.

3838. (Mr. De Vere.) Is it your wish to refer that letter also to superior authority?—I have done so.

3839. (Dr. Lysons.) You have sent it?—Yes, it went this morning.

3840. (Mr. De Vere.) To the board of directors?—To the board of directors.

3841. And the letter is there now?—The letter is there now.

3842. Have you referred Mr. Batt's letter to the board of directors also?—I have not had an opportunity.

3843. (Dr. Lysons.) Is it your intention to do so?—It is. I intend to do so to-day.

3844. (Chairman.) You will do it by to-day's post?—By to-day's post. May I add a remark with regard to a telegram I received an hour ago for the prisoner Malinsy?

3845. (Dr. Lysons.) At 11 o'clock to-day?—At 11 o'clock to-day.

3846. (Chairman.) Have you communicated it to him?—I have not, my lord.

3847. Have you refrained from doing so on the same ground or on a similar ground to that on which you have not communicated the letters?—On precisely similar grounds I referred the matter by telegram to the authorities in London.

3848. (Dr. Lysons.) You have?—I have.

3849. (Chairman.) You have got to reply;—No; I expect one by 1 o'clock.

3850. From whom was that telegram?—From "R. Pigott, editor, of the 'Irishman' newspaper."

3851. The time has perhaps arrived when I should mention to you, Captain Harris, that we are not prepared in any way to seek to interfere with the discretion which you have exercised. We do not think it within our province, either to examine the answers, or to interfere in any way with the manner in which you propose to discharge your duty, if it be your duty, as regards these matters. At the same time we may mention to you that it is our intention to communicate direct to the authorities, stating to them that we have felt it beyond our province to interfere, either here or at Chatham, with the discretion of the governor, as regards the handing over to the prisoners the answers received for them. But while we say that, we should express our own view, that it is desirable, so far as the consideration of the prison discipline permits, that the prisoners should have (as we have already recommended that they should have) every facility for communicating with their friends with reference to the preparation of their statements; so, on the other hand, it would seem to be desirable that they should be afforded facility for receiving from their friends whatever replies may bear on the subject of the present inquiry. It is right that you should know that we will communicate, that at the same time that we distinctly decline to interfere in any way with your discretion?—Just so, my lord.

3852. What document, Captain Harris, have you supplied the prisoners, upon their making application to you, in accordance with the letter of the directors?—Doris Malinsy has been supplied with his suppressed letters; second, with copies of interviews with the directors, and third, with the governor; fourth, copies of reports as recorded in the prison books.

3853. With the decision?—With the decision, my lord. He has received in addition to that the medical notes from various prisons—Portland, Dartmoor, Millbank, and Woking, and I may add that these were only furnished to him this morning.

3854. (Dr. Lysons.) These are only extracts from the medical notes?—Extracts from the medical notes.

3855. (Chairman.) These are all that were supplied to Malinsy?—Yes, my lord. Bryan Dillon has received one suppressed letter.

3856. (Dr. Lysons.) Did he receive the original letter, or merely a copy of it?—The original of it; the medical case sheet at Woking.

3857. (Chairman.) Extracts from it, or the whole?—Extracts from it; copies of applications to the directors, and to the governor at Woking.

3858. With the results?—With the results, Roan-tree—

3859. (Dr. Lysons.) Then Dillon has received only three things?—That is all at the present moment. I think he has applied for something else on the 4th July, but he has not been furnished with it. William Roan-tree is the next.

3860. What has he got?—He asked for the number and dates of letters written at Woking by him; that was furnished to him. Copies of reports and punishments awarded here and at Portland.

3861. Did he get the letters besides the number and dates?—The letters he sent away from here—nearly the dates.

3862. Were there some of his letters suppressed?—There were none of his. I will come to that further on. Second, copies of reports and punishments awarded at Woking and Portland; copies of interviews with the director; copies of interviews with the governor.

3863. (Chairman.) Do those copies in all cases record the results?—They do, my lord—any remark that may be made on it; suppressed letters at Woking, two.

3864. (Dr. Lysons.) Two suppressed letters?—Two suppressed letters.

3865. (Chairman.) The originals?—The originals; and three suppressed at Portland; medical case sheets from Portland, Woking, and Pentonville.

3866. (Dr. Lysons.) That is, extracts from them?—Extracts from them, the medical history.

3867. Anything else?—Nothing else for Roan-tree.

3868. (Chairman.) Who is the next?—Edward Power is the next. He has been supplied with copies of interviews with the governor at Millbank and copies of interviews with the director at that prison. He has been supplied with suppressed letters at Woking and at Portland.

3869. How many here?—Two here and two at Portland, in all four: copies of reports at this prison, copies of interviews with the director and governor of this prison, copies of interviews with the director at Portland, and copies of interviews with the governor at Portland. He has also been supplied with extracts from medical case sheets at Portland, medical notes from Dr. Gover at Millbank, and medical notes from the medical officer here.

5870. (Dr. Greenhalgh.) Extracts from the medical notes only?—Extracts.

5871. (Chairman.) That accounts for four of the prisoners?—That is all they have been supplied with up to the present time.

5872. (Dr. Lyons.) What has Thomas Bourke got?—Thomas Bourke has not received anything up to to-day. He applied for certain documents on 24th and 30th June, and I hold in my hand an application now.

5873. (Mr. De Vere.) Have you yet received an answer to Dilke's application for documents which was forwarded through the secretary of this Commission?—I have not.

5874. (Chairman.) Thomas Bourke has not up to to-day, you say, received any paper?—He applied for documents on the 24th and 30th June. He has not received any yet.

5875. (Dr. Lyons.) On this day what did he ask for?—He states in a memorandum to me this morning: "I omitted the mention of a letter to me which was suppressed in April 1869."

5876. (Chairman.) Is that here?—I fancy it will be, my lord. I have not had time to look. I just received this this morning: "I wish to be supplied with this if possible" (I am reading from his memorandum): "my statements to the Secretary of State and the directors; also the answers of the Secretary of State and the directors to them."

5877. Is that all he asks for?—That is all in Bourke's case.

5878. These you will supply to him as far as you can get them?—As far as I can get them. The reply to the petition to the Secretary of State may not, possibly, be given.

5879. There is another prisoner who has applied for documents?—Bayan Dillon. He sent me an application. Does it correspond with that which was received by the secretary? (Mr. O'Leary examines the document.)

The witness retired.

The Reverend JOHN O'LEARY EXAMINED.

5881. Will you be good enough to give your name to the shorthand writer?—John O'Leary.

5882. The Reverend John O'Leary?—Yes, my lord. I would wish to premise a remark before giving evidence.

5883. Do you wish it to be taken down?—If you please.

5884. Very well; go on, if you please?—The remark which I want to premise is, that I have seriously abstained from acquiring any knowledge of the treatment of the prisoners since I came to the prison, for two reasons: first, because my bishop gave me instructions to confine my labours to the spiritual wants of the prison; and secondly, because if I were to interfere on behalf of the prisoners as regards their treatment, I should very likely have a great many who would resort to my ministrations in order to gain the benefit of my influence with the authorities, and in order to prevent the applications which very likely would result from my interference, I have rigorously refrained from acquiring knowledge of the condition of the prisoners, except such as forced itself on my observation. I state this as the general principle of my conduct as Roman Catholic priest of this prison.

5885. I understand your view, and if any question is put to you that you do not feel justified in answering, you can at once take an objection?—Thank you, my lord.

5886. You are the Catholic chaplain or visiting priest of this prison?—My title is Roman Catholic priest of this prison.

5887. How long have you been so?—For two years and a half.

5888. (Dr. Lyons.) What is the date of it?—These are dated 4th July, also 5th July. He has received some of the things that he mentions here. There is one thing mentioned here; he asked for "copies of reports entered against me in the prison books." There are no reports. I have another application here, received from Mulohy, dated the 5th July. He says, "Have you authority to let me have an abstract of the quantity and the kind of food returned by me in this prison, as entered in the return diet book, with the dates and quantity received each day; also an abstract of my weight on reception in this prison, and on the various times when weighed in this prison?"

5889. These you can give, of course?—The medical officer, no doubt, will be able to furnish them, if the Commission think it desirable.

5890. They are simple facts. I do not see why he should not have them. He may have them?—Very well.

5891. That is all that you have to say to us?—That is all I have to say. My lord, there are other copies of the medical certificates received from other prisons, and also this prison, for the use of the Commission alone.

5892. You will put them on our table?—I am prepared to do so.

5893. (Mr. De Vere.) From whom was the telegram for Mulohy that you received to-day?—From Mr. Pigott.

5894. (Dr. Lyons.) R. Pigott, "Irishman" office?—Yes, I think so. I am not quite sure what was the gentleman's name—Pigott or R. Pigott. They spell it wrong in the telegram.

5895. (Mr. Brodrick.) Have you telegraphed to the directors on receipt of the letters?—I have not.

5896. (Chairman.) By what time do you expect to receive a reply from the directors?—By 1 o'clock to-day.

5897. That is to the telegram?—To the telegram.

5898. By what time do you expect a reply as to their decision on the manner of dealing with the letters?—The day after to-morrow, Friday morning.

Rev.
J. O'Leary.

5891. Will you be good enough to give your name to the shorthand writer?—John O'Leary.

5892. The Reverend John O'Leary?—Yes, my lord. I would wish to premise a remark before giving evidence.

5893. Do you wish it to be taken down?—If you please.

5894. Very well; go on, if you please?—The remark which I want to premise is, that I have seriously abstained from acquiring any knowledge of the treatment of the prisoners since I came to the prison, for two reasons: first, because my bishop gave me instructions to confine my labours to the spiritual wants of the prison; and secondly, because if I were to interfere on behalf of the prisoners as regards their treatment, I should very likely have a great many who would resort to my ministrations in order to gain the benefit of my influence with the authorities, and in order to prevent the applications which very likely would result from my interference, I have rigorously refrained from acquiring knowledge of the condition of the prisoners, except such as forced itself on my observation. I state this as the general principle of my conduct as Roman Catholic priest of this prison.

5895. I understand your view, and if any question is put to you that you do not feel justified in answering, you can at once take an objection?—Thank you, my lord.

5896. You are the Catholic chaplain or visiting priest of this prison?—My title is Roman Catholic priest of this prison.

5897. How long have you been so?—For two years and a half.

5898. Were you previously connected in the same character with any other prison?—Never, my lord.

5899. During that time, what number of prisoners of the Roman Catholic communion have you had under your charge?—The average number I should think, my lord, is about 140. Lately it has been much larger than it ever was before, in consequence of some 60 inmates having been placed under my charge who were usually detained and treated in Millbank Prison.

5900. How many?—About 60 convict inmates.

5901. Have you experienced here all necessary facilities for the due performance of your sacred duties?—There is nothing of which I could complain, my lord, with respect to the liberty I am allowed in performing my religious duties towards the prisoners.

5902. Is the chapel sufficient, in point of accommodation, to the number of your flock whom you wish to be present there?—Quite so.

5903. You do not find any obstacle thrown in your way in performing the ministrations of the holy office with which you are charged?—Not a single one.

5904. Amongst those under your spiritual charge here are the eight treason-felony prisoners with whose cases you are specially charged to inquire?—Yes, my lord, with the exception of one, who has been forced by the rules of the prison to declare himself either a Catholic or a Protestant, being neither a Catholic nor a Protestant.

5905. Is that Murphy?—Yes.

5906. John Murphy?—That is his name in prison.

5907. Has he another name outside?—His real name is O'Leary.

5908. In point of fact is it the case that he has declined your ministrations?—He has declined all ministrations at my hands.

5909. With regard to the other seven treason-felony prisoners here, have they had full opportunity, or such opportunities as you would desire, of attending to the chapel service and taking the sacraments of the church to the fullest extent that you would wish and think necessary?—I believe so.

5910. Have you ever received from any of them any complaints on that point as regards their spiritual care?—I believe that on a few occasions they complained of not having been admitted to mass on holidays of obligation; but it was owing to accident that they had not been admitted. They happened to be in the infirmary, and owing to an accident the infirmary warden did not conduct the prisoners in the infirmary on those few occasions to mass on holidays of obligation.

5911. Has that recently occurred?—Yes, I think it occurred once recently, but I could attach no blame to the authorities on account of it; I should rather attach blame to myself for my own forgetfulness to inform the infirmary warden that the following day was a holiday of obligation.

5912. Were any representations that you made on the subject always attended to?—Certainly, my lord, always.

5913. With regard to the approach of any prisoner to the steps of the holy altar, is there anything in the demeanour of the warders while attending them, which appears to you improper, or calculated to diminish wholly the utility of the prisoner?—Of course the warders are Protestants, my lord, and I cannot expect them to show that reverence which would be shown by Catholics to our divine service; but I cannot accuse any of the officers. No positive disrespect to the service has ever come under my observation.

5914. Nothing has been done which would interfere with that concentration of mind which would be desirable at the time?—Not that I am aware of.

5915. (Mr. De Vere.) Did any of the prisoners ever complain to you of any such conduct on the part of a warden?—Prisoners have sometimes complained to me that they have been disturbed at their prayers by being removed from the position which they took in the chapel to another one by a warden.

5916. But on the occasion of their coming up to holy communion did they ever complain to you that they were disturbed by the demeanour of the warden who accompanied them?—No warden accompanies them to communion. They come out of their cells and approach the holy communion just as Catholics do in ordinary chapels.

5917. Have they ever made any complaint of the conduct or demeanour of a warden on the occasion of their going up to communion?—I do not remember of any complaint having been made on the subject.

5918. Mr. O'Leary, with regard to books, may I ask you what are the books from which a selection is made for the use of the prisoners?—The books that are contained in the ordinary prison library. I must say that the directors have also given me a grant for the purchase of Catholic books for the Catholic prisoners.

5919. May I ask you, Mr. O'Leary, who selects the books for the Catholic prisoners?—The selection of Catholic books, that is, of those that are specifically Catholic, is left to me.

5920. And who selects the books for them which are not of a religious character?—The chaplain of the prison selects them.

5921. The Protestant chaplain?—The Protestant chaplain; but I believe that the greater number of the books were selected years ago; that is, before the appointment of this chaplain.

5922. Have you ever had reason to object to any of the books which were supplied to the Catholic prisoners by the Protestant chaplain?—I have had reason to object to some of the books that I found in circulation among the Catholic prisoners here; but I had no reason to complain of their circulation. I had reason to object to them because they were rather offensive to the feelings of Catholics; but still I had no reason to complain of them, because I have had perfect liberty to prohibit the circulation of any book that is in the library amongst the Catholic prisoners.

5923. Did you find it necessary to exercise that power on any occasion?—I have prohibited several books that used to be in circulation amongst all the prisoners, Catholic as well as Protestant; but I believe that the priest has always enjoyed the power of prohibiting the circulation of objectionable books amongst the Catholic prisoners.

5924. The library contains Protestant books of devotion as well as Catholic books of devotion?—It does.

5925. Would it be within the power of the Protestant chaplain to give books of Protestant devotion to Catholic prisoners?—It is not within his power if I should have prohibited their circulation beforehand.

5926. Have you, as a matter of fact, prohibited the circulation of books of Protestant devotion amongst Catholic prisoners?—All books that are specifically Protestant have been prohibited to be circulated amongst the Catholic prisoners.

5927. Then you have no complaint to make as to any persistence in circulating any books that you have objected to?—None, sir.

5928. (Dr. Ligon.) Could you name any of the books which you have caused to be struck off the list of those that may be supplied to the Catholic prisoners?—I could not now, except in a general way. Several books that have been published by the Society for the Diffusion of Christian Knowledge have been prohibited by me as books unfit for the reading of Catholic prisoners.

5929. Have your objections to those books been based upon the fact of their containing things that you considered not suitable for the reading of the prisoners merely, or was it on religious grounds that you prohibited their circulation amongst the Catholic prisoners?—On religious grounds.

5930. Have you had to object to the circulation amongst the Catholic prisoners of any books in consequence of anything contained in them referring to merit in any way that you considered objectionable?—I do not think that I have; I do not think that any book has been brought under my notice that contained anything that would hurt the moral feelings of anybody.

5931. Are there any books which, in consequence of any historical references of any kind, you have found it necessary to prohibit the circulation of amongst the Catholic prisoners here?—Yes, I have found it necessary to prohibit certain books. I believe one is "Sketches of Irish Life."

5932. "Sketches of Irish Life!" Could you name the book or the author?—I know the book, but I could not name the author of it at present.

5933. Is the book still in circulation?—No, it is not.

5934. What was your objection to that book?—I thought it ridiculous a good deal Irish character. I should remark that the literature of this country is mostly Protestant, and that if a person wishes at all to read English literature, or works in English literature, he must be prepared to meet with certain things offensive to the feelings of Catholics in those books; and I should be very sorry to prohibit, supposing valuable history, merely because it contained a paragraph or even a chapter that was offensive to the Catholic mind.

5935. Did I understand you to say, in answer to Mr. De Vere, that you thought the Catholic prisoners had at all times sufficient and proper access to religious service?—I believe so. I do not think the prisoners have anything to complain of in that respect.

5936. Is it the fact if a prisoner is in a punishment cell, and Sunday or a holiday of obligation is the Catholic Church falls within the period of his punishment, that he would not be allowed to go to mass on that day?—That is the case; but the rule extends equally to Protestants.

Rev.
J. O'Leary.
6 July 1870.

5907. Yes, I know it does; but so far as you are concerned with Catholics, and knowing as you do the paramount obligation that there is on the part of Catholics to attend mass on all Sundays and holidays of obligation, do you consider that that is a regulation which you can approve of?—I cannot approve of the regulation in itself; but I cannot complain of it, as Protestants are affected in a similar manner. In an establishment of this kind I could not expect that Catholics would be allowed greater privileges than Protestants.

5908. Do you not consider that it is to be regretted that a prisoner who may be under punishment should be deprived of that which is perhaps the most efficacious means of restoring him to a sense of his guilt and crime by attendance at mass on Sunday?—I regret it as a necessary evil.

5909. Have you ever made any representation of any kind to any of the authorities in reference to this subject?—I have not.

5910. You have not?—No; for this reason, that it is a rule that is enforced in all the prisons, and I should think the initiative should be taken by some person who is my superior, both in position and in wisdom.

5911. Have you ever made it the subject of any representation to your own religious superior?—Never. They were well aware of it before I came here.

5912. They are aware of it?—Yes.

5913. Could you say, as a matter of fact, that it often occurs in the course of a year that a prisoner, by reason of his being under punishment, is deprived of the advantage of hearing mass on Sundays and holidays of obligation?—A prisoner may be confined in a punishment cell six months, and during that time he is shut out from attendance on divine worship, except such as he gets privately in his own cell.

5914. I will ask you again whether it has occurred frequently in your experience that a prisoner has been deprived of the privilege and advantage of attending mass on Sundays and holidays of obligation in consequence of his being under punishment?—It has occurred several times.

5915. It has occurred, you say, several times?—Invariably when the term of punishment included the Sunday.

5916. Could you furnish the Commission with a return of the number of instances in which Catholic prisoners in this prison have been deprived of the privilege and advantage of attending mass, during the last year, in consequence of having been under punishment during periods in which Sunday formed one of the days?—I think I could.

5917. Then will you be good enough to do so?—I shall, with pleasure.

5918. (Chairman.) Are you aware whether any representation on that point has been made to the British Government, either by members of Parliament or by bishops or archbishops?—I am not aware that any such representation has been made to the Government, my lord.

5919. Am I correct in supposing that your power of prohibiting the circulation amongst Roman Catholic prisoners of any books to which you entertain objections is effected?—I think it is.

5920. You never had any difficulty in suppressing the circulation of a book amongst the members of your own communion?—I never had the slightest difficulty in doing so.

5921. (Dr. Lysons.) In reference to the days of fast and of abstinence, is there any kind of provision in the prison regulations to enable Catholic prisoners to observe the ordinances of the church in this respect?—None whatever.

5922. Do the ordinances of the church apply to Catholics in prison, as they do to those outside prison, in regard to such observances?—I believe not. Our church looks upon prisoners in the same light as it looks upon sailors and soldiers, who are exempted from the obligation of abstinence and fasting.

5923. I am aware of that, but I wish to have it in evidence. Do you consider that the prisoners have full and sufficient facilities for going, when they desire so to do, to an ordinary confessor, as well as to extraordinary confessors required by the church, to confession and communion?—Every prisoner in the prison has an opportunity of going to confession every Saturday, and may either day during the week, and also of going to mass every Sunday. I know of no obstacle that is in the way of any prisoner in discharging those duties weekly.

5924. What is the hour at which prisoners have an opportunity of availing of the privilege of going to confession?—The ordinary time which I devote to hearing confessions is from about half-past 5 o'clock on Saturday evenings until a quarter to 8.

5925. From half-past 5 to a quarter to 8 for the whole?—Yes; I find that that time is sufficient for the number of applicants for confession weekly.

5926. Do you consider, when you take into account the occupation of the prisoners, and the service of a meal about that time, that there is sufficient facility allowed to the prisoners for performing the obligations of their religion on Saturday evenings?—I have never heard a complaint made by a prisoner that there is not sufficient facility.

5927. If it did happen to be the case that a prisoner came in from work in his wet clothes, would he have any option between going to confession in his wet clothes, and perhaps hungry, without his supper, and giving up the opportunity of going to confession?—I think that all the prisoners are aware that I am very willing to hear their confessions on Sunday mornings as well as on Saturday evenings, if anything should prevent them from attending on Saturday evenings.

5928. Have any prisoners made any complaint to you in consequence of their having been so circumstanced, by reason of exposure to wet, or the chance of losing their supper?—The only complaint of that sort that has ever been made to me is, that of communicants being forced to remain without breakfast until after the time of exercise.

5929. That is another point that I am coming to by-and-by; but what I am now asking you is with regard to the supper of the prisoners on Saturday evening, and to their returning wet from out-door labour. Have any complaints been made to you by any of the prisoners on account of either of these two inconveniences?—I think not. I do not remember any such complaint being made. With regard to that point, I should perhaps remark, that the prisoners break off work on Saturday evenings at half-past 4 o'clock and I do not commence to hear confessions until half-past 5, so that they have got full time to take their meal in the evening before they are called on to come to confession.

5930. You commence to hear confessions at half-past 5?—Yes.

5931. What is the hour of meal?—I think they can commence their meal at about a quarter to 5, so that they may have three-quarters of an hour for supper before they are called on to come to me.

5932. Are you quite sure of that?—That is my impression; but, as I have remarked in the commencement, I have obtained sedulously from learning any of the grievances of the prisoners.

5933. I quite understand you, but I want to know if you are aware that they have the accommodation you speak of?—I am not quite sure.

5934. Then you do not know at what hour their evening meal is?—I do not.

5935. With regard to the attendance of prisoners on the mornings of their going to holy communion, if the day happened to be a holiday of obligation in the Catholic church, has it happened, or might it happen, that the prisoners are obliged to go to work before they go to holy communion?—I seldom administer the holy communion on holidays of obligation, because all the advantages of communicating on that day are available on the following Sunday; so that those who wish to gain the indulgence attached to a holiday of obligation may give it by communicating on the following Sunday.

3566. I merely ask you, as a matter of fact, if it has occurred. The shorthand writer will read the question I have put to you. (The shorthand writer reads question 3565).—"With regard to the attendance of prisoners on the meetings of their going to holy communion, if the day happened to be a holiday of obligation in the Catholic church, has it happened, or might it happen, that the prisoners are obliged to go to work before they go to holy communion?"—Certainly, if they want to work.

3567. How it happened?—I do not think it has. I do not think it could happen, because certainly they could not communicate if they had first gone to work.

3568. They could not communicate if they had gone to work that morning?—No.

3569. Why could they not communicate?—Because if they went to work in the morning they should remain at work until noon.

3570. Are there any Catholic warders in this prison?—There are a few.

3571. It is not the custom in this prison that the prisoners who are to approach holy communion are conducted to the communion rails by a warder?—It is not.

3572. Has it ever occurred here that a prisoner has been conducted by a warder to the communion rails?—Not to my recollection.

3573. Does the fact that a prisoner is going to communion in any way interfere on a Sunday or holiday with his getting his breakfast?—Several prisoners have complained to me that their going to communion necessarily obliges them to abstain from breakfast until a late hour in the morning.

3574. Do they get a breakfast at all that morning?—They do. I believe they do.

3575. At what hour do they communicate?—They communicate about half-past 9.

3576. What is the hour at which the prisoners breakfast?—The ordinary hour of prison breakfast on Sunday, I think, is about 7 or half-past 7 o'clock.

3577. Then do you know, as a matter of fact, that the breakfast of those prisoners who go to communion is kept for them, or is allowed to be kept by them, until after the hour of communion?—They are obliged to abstain, I believe, until after the hour of exercise, which takes place immediately after mass; but at the same time I believe they are not deprived of their breakfast.

3578. What hour would that bring us to?—That would bring us, I think, to about a quarter past 11.

3579. Have you made any representation with regard to that difficulty, which it is obvious from what you say prisoners labour under in regard to their breakfast on the mornings on which they communicate?—I have not.

3580. How do you make known that prisoners want to go to communion?—It is not necessary that I should notify it to anybody.

3581. It is not necessary?—It is not necessary. When they are in the chapel they are at perfect liberty to come to communion or to remain from it.

3582. Did I understand you to say a while ago, in reference to the treason-felony prisoner Murphy, whose real name you say is O'Leary, that you pronounce positively that he is neither a Catholic nor a Protestant?—That is his profession.

3583. In what manner has he communicated that to you?—In express terms. He is registered a Catholic, but his language I trust any has been most flagrant. It was as far as to deny any belief in the existence even of God.

3584. Was that on a former occasion, or lately?—Repeatedly.

3585. Has it occurred lately?—No, because I have abstained from having any communication with him a long time. In fact he expressed a wish that I should not have anything more to do with him.

3586. How long since have you ordered him any kind of religious administration?—It is 12 months.

He has never been otherwise when I attempted to do it than insulting and abusive.

3587. But you would not mind that if you could exercise any influence over him?—Not in the slightest. I should endure any abuse if I could produce any salutary impression on his mind.

3588. Am I to understand that you have left him for a period of 12 months without any administration on your part?—I thought myself perfectly justified in doing so, and I thought myself not only justified, but I have always found that the result of my conversations with him was to confirm him in his disbelief.

3589. Does he attend mass?—He attends mass, but he sits down from the commencement to the end, even during the consecration.

3590. He remains seated?—He remains seated.

3591. Does he in any other manner show any disrespect?—I do not think he has respect for anybody.

3592. Does he show disrespect at mass in any other manner than by remaining seated?—His whole manner is disrespectful.

3593. Have you by no means visited him in any kind of manner within the past 12 months?—I have gone into the room where he was with others, and he has never taken any notice of me, but sat down in a gruff, rude manner.

3594. (Dr. Greco.) Has the list of the books been submitted to you?—Yes, I have a catalogue of the books.

3595. And have you taken any steps to ensure from that catalogue such books as you disapproved of?—Yes; they are marked with a red mark, and those which are marked with this mark are not circulated amongst Catholic prisoners.

3596. And you have never found that afterwards they were given to the Catholic prisoners?—An instance might occur, but I do not think there was culpability on the part of the distributor.

3597. It was accidental?—It was accidental.

3598. Have you found it necessary to put a red mark in the catalogue to books that you had not originally disapproved of?—I was not conversant with the books when I came, and it was only in the course of time that I became acquainted with their contents.

3599. Are you aware of the chaplain or schoolmaster having circulated any books with the view of procuring any of the prisoners?—Thomas Bourke made a complaint to me once of the schoolmaster who selected a book for him with this remark, that it was admirably suited for him; and it appears that the contents of the book were very offensive to Catholics.

3600. Was that book marked with the red mark in the catalogue at the time?—I think not, but I afterwards prohibited its circulation.

3601. Then in point of fact there has been no attempt on the part of the Protestant chaplain or the schoolmaster to circulate amongst the prisoners under your spiritual care books which you have prohibited?—I do not think so.

3602. (Dr. Lyster.) Could you name the book that you refer to?—I could not name the book.

3603. Did you see the book yourself?—No, I did not see it, but I was satisfied with the representation that the prisoner made to me of its contents.

3604. Was that Thomas Bourke?—Thomas Bourke.

3605. You did not think it necessary to see the book and to examine it yourself?—I did not.

3606. Did you put the red mark to the name of the book on the representation of the prisoner?—Yes.

3607. Then you have great confidence in his discretion and judgment?—I have.

3608. (Mr. Brodribb.) I quite understand that you have suddenly abstained from inviting complaints from prisoners in respect to discipline or treatment. Have you, as a matter of fact, received any such complaints from any of the eight treason-felony prisoners who are here?—Their complaints to me about their treatment have been very frequent indeed.

3609. Without going into detail, would you state of what have they complained?—They have complained of the doctor, and I think they have sometimes complained of the other authorities as well—the governor, and individual warders.

6010. (Chairman.) I understood you to say that you prefer not being the channel of any representation of complaints to us?—Of course my evidence in this respect can be of no value, because it is only hearsay evidence. A case of complaint did not come under my personal observation.

6011. (Mr. Brodick.) Have you ever thought it necessary to make complaints on their behalf to the governor or to the medical officer?—No, I think not. I have sometimes been the medium of expressing their requests or desires to the governor; but I do not think that I have ever been the medium of complaints. They have always made any complaints they had to make direct to the authorities.

6012. (Mr. De Vere.) Has Richard Burke availed himself at all of your ministrations?—No, he has not.

6013. At any time during his imprisonment has he done so?—No, I think not, otherwise than by his standing mass.

6014. Have you visited him?—Yes, almost daily.

6015. Would you think it right to ask him to come to confession?—Well, I must say that if I were to act on my own opinion I should consider him to be unfit, on account of his state of mind, for the reception of the sacrament.

6016. Why, Mr. O'Leary?—Because I think, judg-

Captain HARRIS recalled.

6025. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, you wish to make a statement, I believe?—Yes. I regret to say that no answer has been received to my telegram. I therefore think it will be extremely difficult for me (if I go to London by the next train) to get back here before the Commission adjourns this evening.

6026. You think you could not get an answer for

The witness withdrew.

J. Murphy.

JOHN MURPHY, prisoner, recalled.

6028. (Chairman.) Murphy, we understand from the governor that you are desirous of seeing us again, for the purpose of correcting or adding to the evidence you gave when we last saw you?—Yes, sir.

6029. Is the fact so?—Yes, sir, 'tis a fact.

6030. What is it that you wish to say?—You asked me a question if I was punished the last time I refused to be stripped in the lodging house, and I told you, "No, I was not." Well, sir, I wasn't told to strip that day. It happened like this: I didn't refuse to strip; I wasn't asked to strip. There was about 12 of the men, the prisoners; it wasn't less—not labour, and I was the only political prisoner that was in that number. Well, we were ordered to go to this wash-house up here, the bath-house, to be stripped; so they all went in. Well, there is 12 apartments in the place, sir, partitioned off; so these two officers passed the word to strip—to go into strip. Well, 12 of them went in to the place to strip; they were stripped. I stepped over on this side with my back against the wall, like this (shows the position he assumed). Then another number came out, and they stripped in like manner; so I stood looking on. So when they were all stripped, one officer hollers out, "Well, have they been all stripped?" "Yes," the other says, "with the exception of one," mentioning me, sir. He says, "They have all stripped, with the exception of one." Well, the officer says to the other officer, "Order him to strip." "No," he says; "you order him." So neither of them ordered me to strip, consequently I didn't strip; but if I had been ordered that day I was determined to refuse, and let the consequence be what it may. But I wasn't asked to strip, sir; so I didn't refuse. I didn't disobey no orders, so I wasn't asked to strip; and that is the reason I wasn't punished. I omitted many things to tell you that day that I recollected since. You asked me about being stripped naked in the cells. When ing from my own observations, and my own experience of the men, that he is an idiot.

6017. (Dr. Lyons.) That he is what?—That he is idiotic.

6018. Do you use that term as a special and definite one, as distinguished from any form of insanity?—Well, I think that his state of mind approaches more idly than any other form of insanity, as far as I can judge.

6019. We are asking you only with regard to your own opinion, formed upon your observation of him?—Yes; that is my opinion.

6020. And that is your deliberate opinion?—That is my deliberate opinion.

6021. (Mr. De Vere.) How long have you had an opportunity of judging of him?—I think he has been under my care for more than six months.

6022. Did you arrive at that conclusion at once when you saw him, or have you arrived at that conclusion gradually, after seeing him from time to time?—Ever since I have known him his conduct has been exceedingly irrational and idiotic.

6023. (Dr. Lyons.) Is his state progressively getting worse, or is he mending or stationary?—Well, I should think he is in a stationary state of mind.

6024. Have you tried him with all reasonable diligence in order to ascertain the state of his mind?—Yes, I have often conversed with him, and his answers to my questions were always very silly.

as to-day on the subject on which we have been speaking?—I do. I fear I could hardly get back in time.

6027. (Dr. Lyons.) If you went to London would it not be possible for you to telegraph to us?—That could be done.

first I was brought over, sir, there was Dr. O'Leary, Mr. Luby, and Mr. O'Donovan Rossa.

6031. (Dr. Lyons.) Who is Dr. O'Leary?—John O'Leary. He is in Portland at present. I believe he was educated for a doctor, but he isn't quite.

6032. I only wanted to know whom you meant?—Yes, sir.

6033. (Mr. Brodick.) When was that time that you are speaking of?—That was when we arrived, sir, in Pentonville—some time in '85. Will I continue on, sir?

6034. (Chairman.) Yes?—When we arrived here 'twas about 7 o'clock in the evening.

6035. In Pentonville?—In Pentonville, somewhere about 7 or 8 o'clock; so the six of us were brought in a long hall first. The governor was there, and several officers. He called our names and we answered. He asked some questions of us and we answered; so we were taken from there—a long hall or passage where the rules are—and these officers they told us to stand; so we stood, I might say, on this side. We all stood, six of us, close to each other; so we were told to strip naked there; and here was a number of officers looking at us the same time, besides the officer that was in command of us. Well, there we all had to strip naked, and that he made us go through these forms—stand on one leg, stoop down, turn round, stoop down and looked behind at us, and these officers looking at us. So there were six suits of clothes, and when we went through all this examination naked, we were told to put on these clothes; so we did, and we were put into cells, and in the cells, sir, we were stripped every week after that.

6036. (Dr. Lyons.) Stripped every week in your cells?—Yes, sir. Well, then, when I came here, sir, from Pentonville, we had very good clothing on us, prison clothes, three of us. There was Mr. Lynch; he died since (I suppose about six weeks after) we arrived in Pentonville. The clothes we brought from Pentonville, we were stripped here, and they gave us old, patchy, worn-out, filthy things; worn-out old things, a disagreeable smell arising from them. That was in April 1865—old things; I don't know how many were then before. Well, sir, from that until last year I never got the first of any clothing since. This is the first (indicating his jacket), and this was new. I'll take it off to show you if you wish (takes off his jacket and displays it). That is the first I got since I came here. As fast as I would wear one, I would get another old thing. I have seen the same done to the others as well.

6037. Have you got a flannel jacket under your shirt at present?—Yes, sir. I have at present a shirt on.

6038. Show it, please?—(He shows it.) Well, sir, these are the first new turn-out I have got. They were all worn-out, nasty, patchy; and then Mr. Seasmell used to pick them out designedly for me.

6039. He picked them out designedly for you?—Yes, sir, I could see that.

6040. They do not think that?—Another thing I see him do. When Mr. Kichham came from Portland he had a good new jacket. When a person is carried from one gaol to another; he was in third class; the third class wears black, the second class yellow, and the first class blue. When a man is shifted from one prison to another, they have to take off the jacket; these body clothes are removed and others put on, and they get the same back again. I see Mr. Kichham's jacket; it was a good new jacket, and it was the winter. He was carried to the second class; his jacket was taken away by Mr. Seasmell, and he got another old worn-out thing, as thin as brown paper; and I seen his jacket on another man here from London for rubbery or something;—Percival; and he gave a thing to Mr. Kichham, that there was no—the worst in the prison 'twas. I got the same, all the old worn-out things by the other prisoners; but this is the first new one, and I suppose I'll finish it, for my time will be up about January. And this Mr. Lynch that died here, him and we were in hospital together. The last Sunday he ever came out, when he was severely able to walk, and we went to prayers to the chapel; so after coming out from the chapel we went to one of these yards of exercise, and he says to me, "I feel very weak; I must sit down, Tom." "Very well," says I, "sit down;" so he went over, sir, and sat down on the grass, and I sat down by him; and there was a man here of the name of Nugent; he was the doctor's assistant here; he used to assist Dr. Campbell; he left since; I believe he was discharged from the service and paid off. He comes and says, "Ten minutes be sitting down there." "The man," says I, "wasn't able to walk." He was scarcely able to talk. I says, "The man isn't able to stand, he is so weak." "Well," he says, "if he isn't able to stand or walk, let him go into hospital." So 'twas no use to refuse anything, for 'tis punished as disobedience or insolence. So I took him up and took his arm and carried him to hospital. So he never went out ever again until he went out dead.

6041. What was the name of the person who ordered you to get up?—Nugent.

6042. What was he?—He was a sort of assistant here, or a secretary to Dr. Campbell.

6043. (Choirman.) When was this occurrence?—Well, we came here, sir, in April. 'Twas somewhere in May or June; I forget now.

6044. In '65?—In '66, sir.

6045. Is there any other part of your evidence that you wish to correct or supplement?—That is the only mistake, sir. I recollect you asked me if I was punished, and I told you I was not; but I told you I refused to be stripped that day. I did not refuse, sir. I was not told to strip, so consequently I didn't refuse; but, as I say, if I had been told to strip, I intended to refuse, because I was stripped so often, and there was nothing found with me. I never transgressed the rules of the prison since I have been here, sir; but once a man insulted me and I called him a coward; that was all the reports that was ever against me.

6046. So we understand?—Yes, sir.

6047. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you had all necessary opportunities of going to your religious service at all times since you have been here?—Religious service! Oh yes, sir; plenty opportunities for that.

6048. You have had plenty of opportunities?—Yes, sir. I don't find no fault in that none.

6049. Has the Catholic clergyman been at all times ready to supply you with all suitable ministrations?—Yes, sir, with any I wanted.

6050. Has he been ready to supply you with all suitable ministrations?—If I wanted anything from him, sir; but I never asked him. I never wanted anything from him.

6051. Have you been visited by the Catholic clergyman in this prison?—Yes, when he first came here, sir, he did; but I told him I wanted to have nothing to say to him.

6052. Has he visited you within the last 12 months?—No, sir, he has not; but he has visited the other men in the room where I was, but I never had nothing to say to him. When I was in the hospital he would call to the other men and talk to them, but I never had nothing to say to him.

6053. If you wanted him, had you full opportunity of seeing him?—Yes, sir; the only objection I have to them is, sir, that they don't practice what they preach, but I have nothing at all to say or do with them.

6054. You have no complaints whatever to make to the Commission with regard to religious ministrations in this or any other prison you have been in?—No, sir, I have not.

6055. Near whatever?—No, sir, only that I have been presented in Dublin on bread-and-water there.

6056. You were entered as a Roman Catholic in this prison?—Well, no, sir; well, yes. That was put down, because when I was outside, sir, I didn't go to no place.

6057. Do you attend the Catholic service here?—Yes, I go down every morning and every Sunday. Whenever the men would go of course I go with them, because a person is compelled to go somewhere, and wherever they go I go, because we are here in company.

6058. Is there any other point that you wish to put before the Commission in order that it may be required into?—You asked me if I would like to see any person. On consideration I'd like to see Mr. Butt; he is a lawyer; as the other men are to see him.

6059. (Choirman.) You must make application to the governor, or write to Mr. Butt yourself. You will have full facility for writing to Mr. Butt?—I was talking to Dr. Power here, and he said, I suppose 'twould do as well. If he comes here can I see him?

6060. No doubt if he comes here, and that you ask to see him, you can see him?—Yes, sir.

6061. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you understand that you can write to Mr. Butt, if you want to do so, yourself?—Yes, sir; if I want to do so I can write to him.

6062. Pens, ink, and paper will be supplied to you for the purpose?—Yes, sir.

6063. Do you understand that fully?—I do, sir, understand it.

The witness withdrew.

Dr. Campbell.

6 July 1870.

Dr. CAMPBELL recalled.

6064. (Chairman.) Dr. Campbell, you have seen Richard Burke to-day, I believe?—Yes, my lord.

6065. What is his condition now? Is it the same as when the Commission saw him, or is it in any way altered?—I think he is improved, my lord.

6066. Do you consider him now in a condition in which he will be fit to be asked questions?—I see no objection to his coming before the Commission, but I do not think you will get much information from him. I seldom get an answer from him.

6067. When you say he is "improved," in what condition is he improved?—He is not walking about, much as usual, and taking his food.

6068. Does he give you longer or more sensible answers now than before?—No, much the same.

6069. The Commission will feel it their duty to examine him again before they can make up their minds as to his condition. Is he fit to be put through a more prolonged examination? Should you recommend it yourself, to-day or any future day?—I think it might be well to delay it a little longer. He has been improving some days back, and excitement, I imagine, might throw him back.

6070. Thank you.—I have prepared three cases as you have mentioned.

6071. These you hand in for the use of the Commission?—Yes, my lord.

6072. You are prepared now, Dr. Campbell, to hand in the medical cases?—The medical cases, my lord.

6073. Which is the first case that you hand in?—Edmund Power's.

6074. The next?—John Murphy.

6075. The next?—Bryan Dillon.

6076. The next?—William Roantree.

6077. The next?—Thomas Roantree and Denis D. Malesky. Ryan's case will be finished in a minute or two. It is not yet finished. I handed in Richard Burke's the other day. Those certificates relating to Power I was told to hand in.

6078. What are these certificates?—The medical certificate which accompanied him.

6079. From whom is it?—From myself. Copy of a letter to Dr. Gover. Copy of a letter from Woking relating to him.

6080. (Dr. Greenhous.) To whom?—To the chairman. Copy of my report to Mr. Gover on the transfer of Power from this prison to Millbank.

6081. (Chairman.) Do you hand in those?—Yes, my lord. These are all that I have been asked to furnish. (Fitness sends them in.)

6082. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you, Dr. Campbell, anything unusual to report with regard to the health of the treason-felony prisoners since the last day that we visited the prison, excepting the case of Richard Burke?—No, sir, nothing unusual.

6083. Are they in much the same state?—Much the same state. They made no complaint lately. They seem to be all busily engaged in writing.

6084. Have any of them been under medical treatment since?—Power, Dillon, and Malesky are in the hospital, and are visited by me twice a day.

6085. But nothing special has occurred in regard to their medical cases since?—No particular report to make.

The witness withdrew.

The Commission adjourned.

The Commission resumed after 6 o'clock, p.m.

Captain HARRIS recalled.

Capt. Harris.

6086. (Chairman.) Referring, Captain Harris, to what you said this morning, that you would not feel justified in placing the letters which you had received for certain treason-felony prisoners in their hands without first taking the opinion of superior authority, have you since morning obtained the opinion of superior authority on the matter?—I have, my lord.

6087. As a consequence of the opinion that you have so taken, what course will you adopt?—I am now prepared to hand to the prisoners the letters received as early as possible.

6088. And the telegram?—And likewise the telegram. I shall not be able to give the letters before 7 o'clock to-morrow morning. The authority for the telegram will also come about the same time, 7 to-morrow.

6089. You will place in the hands of the prisoners at the earliest period the communications to which you now refer?—I shall.

6090. Captain Harris, if you think it would be consistent with prison discipline we should wish to give them to-night?—Very well.

The witness withdrew.

The Commission adjourned.

Woking Prison, Thursday, 7th July 1870.

PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. BROWNE,
STEPHEN E. DE VEEB, ESQ.DR. LYONS,
DR. GREENHOW.

W. SPRINGER OLLIVANT, ESQ., Secretary.

Captain HARRIS recalled.

6091. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, do you produce three letters addressed to the Commission?—I do, my lord.

6092. From whom are they?—They were received under cover, and I did not ask who they were received from.

6093. Malesky, requesting to be medically examined by Doctors Lyons and Greenhow; Bryna Dillon the same; and Power. Have you received any communication from any of the prisoners?—None, my lord, with the exception of those three letters, which I have handed in under cover as I received them.

6094. (Dr. Lyons.) When were those letters given to you, Captain Harris?—This morning, at half-past 9 o'clock. I have supplied one or two documents this morning to the prisoners.

6095. What papers have you supplied to the prisoners this morning?—D. Malesky, copies of applications to see the governor and director at Pentonville; copies of applications to see the governor and director at Millbank.

6096. (Chairman.) With the results in each case I suppose?—Yes, my lord; and a special letter, which I delivered yesterday.

6097. (Dr. Lyons.) Malesky's special letter?—Yes, from his sister.

6098. Did you give him the telegram?—I did last night.

6099. The letter from his sister did not reach here until this morning?—It did not reach here until the morning post. Rountree has received copies of applications to see the governor at Pentonville, also one letter suppressed at that prison. I this morning received the answer to certain applications which were forwarded to the secretary of the Commission by Bryna Dillon. The substance of the answer is as follows:—"I am directed by the chairman to inform you that the Secretary of State has decided that such documents are not to be furnished to the prisoners; that they are to be prepared and handed to the Commissioners. You are therefore requested to carry out these instructions at once." Many have already been furnished them. We are preparing others for the Commission.

The witness withdrew.

THOMAS BOWKER, prisoner, recalled.

6113. (Chairman.) Thomas Bowker, the Commissioners are now re-assembled, and are ready to receive any statement from you that you may wish to make?—I am exactly in the position in which I was when I saw you last. You told me then that I would receive some documents that I found necessary for the preparation of my statement. I applied in writing for them three times, and I have not received them yet. I am exactly in the same way as I was when I saw you last.

6114. (Dr. Lyons.) Have you got no documents of any kind?—No, sir.

6115. (Chairman.) When did you apply for them?—First on the 24th June, I think.

6116. You were before us on the 29th June?—I made three written applications, however. The last application was made yesterday—no later than yesterday.

6117. You mentioned to us on the 29th June certain

6100. (Chairman.) That is, the papers asked for by Dillon?—Yes, comparatively recently—the 1st of July. The whole of these are in course of preparation for the Commissioners.

6101. Has Bowker had all the papers that he has asked for?—Not yet; he has asked for two statements that he made to the directors and one petition to the Secretary of State.

6102. I think you said that Bowker up to July the 6th had not applied for anything?—He had not received any document, my lord; that was his first application for a suppressed letter.

6103. That was yesterday?—Yesterday.

6104. Then he has asked also for statements to the Secretary of State and the directors, and the replies to them?—Yes.

6105. Those are in preparation?—They are. I have received one of the statements from the board of directors this morning.

6106. Have any friends come to advise the treason-felony prisoners lately?—None at all. No one has applied to see them, and I have had no communication from any of their friends.

6107. Alluding to the letters upon which you conferred with the board of directors yesterday, did you, in point of fact, deliver those letters to the prisoners last night?—I did, late last night.

6108. Late last night?—Yes; the first letter was delivered shortly after half-past 10.

6109. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you give them light to read them?—I did. They did not express the wish to have a light after they had received them, but Malesky and Dillon. I ordered the officer to have the gas turned on, that they might peruse them. The others said they did not care to read them a second time. I waited until they had read them.

6110. Did they read them in your presence?—Yes.

6111. Has Richard Burke at any time made application for documents?—Never.

6112. Have any means been taken to acquaint him formally with the power that he has of asking for documents?—I tried myself to impress upon his mind the necessity of coming forward and making any statement he had, but I never could get him to understand anything.

documents which you said you wished to have. That was the 29th of last month. Did you then apply for them?—I applied for them, sir, immediately after leaving you.

6118. To whom did you apply?—To the governor.

6119. You have not yet received them?—Not yet received them. I have heard nothing of them.

6120. (Mr. De Vere.) Can you state what those documents were?—Three statements, sir; two of them to the board of directors, and one to the Secretary of State. I can give you the dates of the documents if you require them.

6121. (Dr. Lyons.) Two statements to the directors, and one to the Secretary of State?—Yes.

6122. What were the dates of them, please?—The 21st November 1869, to the directors, the 21st April 1869, to the directors also, and the 10th August 1869, to the Secretary of State. Those are the three documents that I have made application for, sir.

A a

Capt. Harris.

7 July 1870.

T. Bourke.
7 July 1870.

6125. (Mr. De Vere.) When were the applications for such of those documents made?—My first application was on the 24th of last month, sir.

6126. For which of the documents did you then apply?—I applied for the three of them on the 24th June.

Capt. Harris.

Captain HARRIS recalled, and confronted with THOMAS BOURKE.

6125. (Chairman.) Now, BOURKE, state when you first made application to the governor for any documents or papers that you deemed necessary for the preparation of your statement to the Commission?—(Prisoner.) The 24th June 1870.

6126. What did you apply for then?—(Prisoner.) These statements.

6127. Was that after you had the notice read to you by the secretary of our Commission?—(Prisoner.) Oh, certainly. It was after I had seen the secretary.

6128. State again, if you please, what the three documents were?—(Prisoner.) One to the board of directors, dated 21st November 1869, one of the 21st April 1869, to the directors, and one of the 10th August 1869, to the Secretary of State.

6129. Did you apply by word of mouth?—(Prisoner.) Not at all, sir.

6130. Was that application in writing?—(Prisoner.) In writing.

6131. Did you receive that application, Captain Harris?—(Capt. Harris.) These were the three referred to this morning, my lord. They were sanctioned this morning. These were the three I alluded to.

6132. In point of fact, you have had no communication from the directors on the subject of those three letters until this morning?—(Capt. Harris.) Until this morning. The application was made in writing, to the best of my recollection; but it was not sanctioned, or at least I did not get it, until this morning.

6133. When was the second time that you made application to be supplied with those documents?—(Prisoner.) I really cannot remember, sir, but I can find it among these papers of mine. My third application was made yesterday.

6134. What was your application for yesterday?—(Prisoner.) For those statements, sir, and also for a letter that was suppressed.

6135. A letter dated April '69?—(Prisoner.) Dated April '69. That letter I received yesterday, after making that application for it.

6136. You had made no application for it before?—(Prisoner.) Not at all.

6137. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you get that letter that you asked for?—(Prisoner.) I got the letter, sir.

6138. And what you are still without is your three statements?—(Prisoner.) The three statements. This is by no means an essential matter, although it may be necessary. The statements are peculiarly necessary.

6139. Can you from your notes say when the second application for those three documents was made? You have stated that the first was on the 24th June, and that the last was yesterday. When was the second?—(Prisoner.) The second was on the 30th June. With your permission, may I read that application?

6140. (Chairman.) You may?—(Prisoner.) "On the 30th instant I made application in writing for 'statements written by me to the Secretary of State and to the board of directors, which statements I have not yet received. I again make application for those documents, as necessary to aid me in my writing a statement for the Commission. These dates are as follows.' Here follows the dates. 'I should prefer the originals to copies.' This is a copy of my application, made by me on the 30th June."

6141. I understood you to say, Captain Harris, that shortly after the receipt of the first application, you communicated with the directors on the subject?—(Capt. Harris.) I did, my lord.

6142. And you have not received an answer until this morning?—(Capt. Harris.) No; I received no positive answer until this morning. The matter, I believe, has been under consideration all that time.

6143. Then do I understand you to say that you deem it essential that before making any statement you shall have an opportunity of seeing the documents for which you have applied?—(Prisoner.) Oh, certainly; most essential.

6144. (Dr. Greenwell.) Are those documents essential to your making allegations with regard to your treatment in prison?—(Prisoner.) I so consider them.

6145. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, you have received this morning a letter from the directors, have you not?—(Capt. Harris.) I have, my lord.

6146. That letter enclosed one of the three documents for which BOURKE asked?—(Capt. Harris.) It does.

6147. It states with regard to another that they have not as yet been able to find it?—(Capt. Harris.) It does.

6148. And with regard to the third, that it is in the office of the Secretary of State?—(Capt. Harris.) Exactly.

6149. You are prepared to reply to that, giving then certain indications by which they may possibly be able to find the second; and you also informed them the date of the third document to the Secretary of State?—(Capt. Harris.) I have.

6150. You are not in a position to tell us when the documents No. 2 and 3 can be received?—(Capt. Harris.) I can hardly say that.

6151. (Dr. Lyons.) How soon after you got those documents, BOURKE, would you be prepared to make your statement to the Commission?—(Prisoner.) That I could scarcely answer till I got them.

6152. (Chairman.) You know what they are?—(Prisoner.) Yes, I have a knowledge of what the documents are.

6153. (Dr. Lyons.) Within what reasonable time could you make your statement after getting them?—(Prisoner.) I think the fact of those documents would not detain me, possibly, more than two or three days.

6154. (Chairman.) Under the circumstance that those documents have not yet been received, the Commission have decided that they will postpone your examination until a day that we shall subsequently fix.

6155. (Mr. De Vere.) Captain Harris, are those documents of a nature such that when you receive them you will be able to hand them over to the prisoner for the purpose of his writing his statement?—(Capt. Harris.) Certainly.

6156. (Mr. De Vere.) They are?—(Capt. Harris.) They are.

The prisoner retired, and Captain HARRIS'S examination was resumed.

6157. (Chairman.) DILLON has not got all his documents, Captain Harris?—No.

6158. Mulesky has not got all?—No.

6159. (Mr. Broadrick.) Has DILLON not got all the documents which he is to receive?—No, I think there are one or two which are not yet received. He asked for some from some other prisoners.

6160. Mulesky has made applications which have not yet been met?—Some of them.

6161. (Chairman.) BOURKE has made applications for copies of applications and a suppressed letter. The suppressed letter he has had, but the copies of applications he has not had?—Yes, that is so.

The witness retired.

BRYAN DILLON, prisoner, recalled.

6162. (Chairman.) Bryan Dillon, are you now prepared to make a statement to us?—I was furnished with a copy of a letter last night from Mr. Butt, and it was only just now that I was furnished with some of the documents necessary for the preparation of my statement, and I should wish some time to consider it before I could give an answer on the subject. Mr. Butt's letter is a very sensible letter. I should wish time to consider the matter. I have a statement ready.

6163. Then do you wish to state to us decidedly that you believe you cannot make your statement in a way satisfactory to yourself until you have time to consider the letter you have received from Mr. Butt, and also are in possession of documents for which you ask?—Yes.

6164. When you have had time to consider the letter to Mr. Butt, and have received the documents that you have asked for, so far as they can properly be given to you, is it your intention and shall you be prepared to make a statement to us?—Well, I don't know what decision I may come to, you know. I ask for time to consider it in order to come to a decision.

6165. A decision on what subject?—On the advisability of giving my evidence.

6166. If we fix another period for your examination it must be with the distinct understanding, of which I now warn you, that no further time will afterwards be allowed. If you do not desire to make any statement to us, your refusal to do so will be considered final?—Very well, sir.

6167. If you intend to make a statement to us, we shall then go into it, and no further delay can be allowed?—I was anxious from the beginning, you know, to give you a statement. When I was removed, though unable to get out of bed at the time, I wrote on my knees, and I wrote 80 pages of it before you came here of my statement. I have not done anything since. That showed my anxiety to go into the matter, even on the basis of the original conditions. I have written a statement on the basis of the original conditions, and I am prepared to show, even on those conditions, that I have received exceptional treatment in British convict prisons.

6168. Your examination, then, will be postponed?—But I understand, my lord, that you have ordered that I shall not get those papers.

6169. We have made no order on the subject. Certain papers will be supplied to you. Any papers that the Government think it desirable you should have will be given to you?—I furnished the Secretary of State with a requisition embodying the several requisitions I had first made from the date of the investigation; of your coming here. On that day, the 18th of June last, I furnished some requisitions, but I embodied them all in this requisition, and the governor says that the Chairman has ordered that you shall not be supplied with those, but that the Commissioners themselves will have them.

6170. (Dr. Ligonier.) Read that document?—It is directed to the secretary. "Sir,—I find that it is absolutely necessary for the preparation of my statement that I should be furnished as soon as possible with the following documents. I have already requested to be furnished with some of these documents in my two former requisitions, the first of which was written to the governor as far back as the 16th June ultimo, the day the appointment of the Commission was notified to me. Up to this date I have not received any papers or copies of the documents mentioned in these requisitions, which I am told by the governor have been for some time in the hands of the Commissioners." I then say, "Pentonsville. I shall require all case sheets or other papers containing the medical history of my illness at Pentonsville while under medical treatment in my cell there."

6171. Is this an enumeration of the things that you have asked for in your letter to the secretary of this Commission?—Oh, yes; and you know the other prisoners have been supplied, and in fact I was supplied with some of these myself when this order of the Chairman was notified to me. "All reports and certificates in reference to my health forwarded by the medical officers of Pentonsville and Woking prisons to the Secretary of State, board of directors, and governors of prisons, and the remarks made by the medical officer at Pentonsville to the medical officer at Woking on my removal to this prison; rules of the Home Office relative to the release of invalid convicts." Then, "Woking. The dates of my applications for medical relief; the number of days following such applications I was supplied with medicine at the surgery and at my cell from April 1866 to this date." Now, one would consider that a much less important application than the date of my admission into the hospital, and what I was treated for. I have got the latter, and they have refused to give me the former. They have refused that, "and the dates of my admission to hospital, the name of my admission, and the dates of my discharge therefrom." They have given what I consider a doctored report of that.

6172. A what?—Well, I don't know what they call it—a case sheet; "and all my suppressed letters." I have got the last of these this moment, as I was coming in, from Mr. Pelt, the clerk here.

6173. (Chairman.) You have received it?—I have just got it here. "The memorial to the Secretary of State written in the autumn of '68, and the certificate answer or report of the medical officer thereon, and the reply of the Secretary of State thereto." A part of that medical case sheet was that I recovered from the effects of that fall, while I am not able to walk. I respectfully submit that I have not recovered from the effects of the fall. I have got nothing about Pentonsville. "All dates of my applications to me." Dr. Campbell, the notes of the applications, and his replies thereto entered in the application book." They say the books are lost.

6174. (Dr. Ligonier.) What books do they say are lost?—The application books—certain application books here as well as '68—whereas I have got in other books copies of my applications of that date. "All dates of my applications to the visiting directors from 1866," and the dates of Dr. Campbell and other dates. They say they have sent away the books and destroyed them.

6175. (Chairman.) Who told you that?—The clerk, sir.

6176. The clerk?—The clerk says they haven't them; that there is some order, he says, to send up small books to the head officer or something to that effect, for the purpose of being destroyed.

6177. (Dr. Ligonier.) What clerk?—The clerk of this prison.

6178. What is his name?—His name is Bell.

6179. (Dr. Greenhouse.) Is that all you require?—No, sir; "dates of applications to the governor, and the nature of the applications, including the dates and particulars of inquiries respecting letters; his replies thereto; the replies of the clerks and other officials thereto." I have got this partly, commencing on the 15th December 1867, but cutting from April '66 to that date. These, they say, are also amongst the missing books which they cannot put their hands on. "A copy of the report of Messrs. Pollock and Knox."

6180. Just tell us what you have got; begin at the first.

Captain HARRIS recalled, and confronted with the prisoner BRYAN DILLON.

6181. (Chairman.) Dillon, will you hand in a statement of what you want to get?—This is a rough draft, sir. I fear you will not be able to make it out. (Hands to the document.)

6182. Does it begin, "I find that it is necessary"?—(Prisoner.) Yes, sir.

6183. Captain Harris, have you received back from

S. Dillon
7 July 1878.

Capt. Harris.
7 July 1870.

the directors the original paper handed you by Bryon Dillon, specifying a statement of documents with which he wished to be supplied?—(Capt. Harris.) I have, my lord, received it this morning.

6184. That is a duplicate of this, I suppose?—(Prisoner.) Yes. (The document he had handed in is returned to the prisoner.)

6185. Does it appear from anything you have received from the Secretary of State, or from the directors at this time that they returned that statement of documents, what are to be granted to Dillon and what are not granted?—(Capt. Harris.) Yes, that was laid down, my lord, by a letter.

6186. Then are you prepared now to state to us, upon going through it, what, under the instructions that you have received from the control authority, will be withheld from Dillon and what will be given to him?—(Capt. Harris.) Yes, I am prepared to do that. (Capt. Harris withdraws.)—(Prisoner.) My lord, may I ask is there any objection to have my friends come in to arrange the preliminaries altogether? In my opinion it would shorten matters very much.

6187. No?—Very well.

6188. (Dr. Ligon.) What friends do you mean?—I mean the other friends in the hospital who are to come here. There is a very important case bearing on our treatment in prison, the case of John Lynch, who went to Pentonville in January with me, and who died here in the following June.

6189. In this prison?—In this prison. I was placed by five days before he died, partly on Dr. Campbell's account—I was then sick—and partly for the purpose of looking after him. I know him about 20 years. He came to Pentonville Prison pretty well in health apparently. He came down here in April in the last stage of consumption, and the papers respecting him—I think I am prepared to enter into what I know about his case. It crops up and is identified with my own. I gave evidence at the inquest on his remains here. (Capt. Harris returns.)

6190. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, do you now produce to the Commission, as returned to you from the authorities in London, the paper which contained the application made by Bryon Dillon for documents, with the decision of the authorities as to each?—(Capt. Harris.) I do, my lord.

6191. Will you read those articles, please?—(Capt. Harris.) The first application is "all case sheets or other papers containing the medical history of my illness at Pentonville while under medical treatment" in my cell there."

6192. What is the decision on that?—(Capt. Harris.) With regard to that, he will receive such medical notes as have been furnished to other prisoners; extracts from such notes, such as have been furnished to other prisoners.

6193. That is the decision of the directors?—(Capt. Harris.) Yes.

6194. (Dr. Greenhow.) Has he received them?—(Capt. Harris.) No, he will receive them; the documents only came this morning.

6195. (Chairman.) What is No. 2?—(Capt. Harris.) "All reports and certificates in reference to my health, forwarded by the medical officers of Pentonville and Woking prisons to the Secretary of State, board of directors, and governors of prisons, and the remarks made by the medical officer in Pentonville to the medical officer in Woking on my removal to this prison."

6196. What is the decision with regard to that?—(Capt. Harris.) None of those can be furnished to him, but they will be laid before the Commission.

6197. (Dr. Ligon.) They will be laid before the Commission. Is that what you say?—(Capt. Harris.) Yes.

6198. (Mr. De Vere.) Have they been laid before the Commission?—(Capt. Harris.) They have not.

6199. (Dr. Ligon.) Are they here?—(Capt. Harris.) They are not.

6200. (Chairman.) What is No. 3?—(Capt. Harris.) "Rules of the House Office relative to the release of "invalid convicts." There is a rule in the standing orders of the convict service, which will be laid before the Commission.

6201. (Dr. Greenhow.) That is declined to be given the prisoner?—(Capt. Harris.) Declined to the prisoner.

6202. (Dr. Ligon.) There is such a rule, and it will be laid before the Commission?—(Capt. Harris.) Yes.

6203. (Chairman.) You can easily have put on paper what he will get?—(Capt. Harris.) Yes, my lord.

6204. What is the next?—(Capt. Harris.) The next is—"The dates of my applications for medical relief, the number of days following such application; I was supplied with medicine in the surgery in Woking prison, and at my cell, from April 1868 to this date." These will be furnished, they are now ready.

6205. (Dr. Ligon.) He has not got these yet?—(Capt. Harris.) He has not.—(Prisoner.) I was told I could not get them.

6206. Who told you that you would not get them?—(Prisoner.) The clerk came in and said these were things, in fact these were the papers I could not get.

6207. (Chairman.) But you understand now that you will get them?—(Prisoner.) Yes.

6208. (Mr. Broadrick.) Is it possible to furnish them from the first, from 1868? Do you know that to be possible?—(Capt. Harris.) I believe it has been done.

6209. (Prisoner.) This is not the application which they say they cannot furnish from the first: the dates of my applications for medical relief; it is the dates of my applications to see Dr. Campbell in this office, and the entries he makes in the book, which is a distinct thing from the book in the surgery.

6210. (Chairman.) Do you read, Captain Harris, from the form of application made by the prisoner?—(Capt. Harris.) Yes.—(Prisoner.) I have got the notes of the hospital treatment.

6211. Go on, please?—(Capt. Harris.) "Dates of admission into the hospital at Woking, the case of admission, and the dates of my discharge therefrom."

6212. (Prisoner.) I have received this.

6213. Sixth?—(Capt. Harris.) "All my suppressed letters, and all letters suppressed sent to me by my friends." Those have been issued.

6214. (Prisoner.) I have got that now.

6215. What is the next?—(Capt. Harris.) "Memorial to the Secretary of State, written in August '69, and the certificate or report of the medical officer accompanying the same." That will be furnished for the information of the Commission, but not given to the prisoner.

6216. The next?—(Capt. Harris.) "Reply in full from the Secretary of State thereto." That will also be given for the information of the Commission, but not to the prisoner.

6217. Next?—(Capt. Harris.) "All dates of my applications to see Dr. Campbell, the notes of the applications and his replies thereto entered in Dr. Campbell's application book."

6218. What will be the one with respect to those?—(Capt. Harris.) Those are not forthcoming.

6219. (Dr. Ligon.) Are they to be given?—(Capt. Harris.) No; they are not to be found. They are entered in small books which are destroyed from time to time—sent back to the Stationary Office.

6220. Then they are not forthcoming?—(Capt. Harris.) They are not forthcoming.

6221. (Chairman.) The next?—(Capt. Harris.) "Date of applications to see the director, and date of refusal of Captain Bramley to let me see him." That will be furnished to him.

6222. (Dr. Ligon.) But he has not got it?—(Capt. Harris.) He has not. "Dates of applications to the governor and nature of the applications, including the dates and other particulars of inquiries respecting letters, his replies thereto, and the replies of the clerks and other officials thereto. In order to facilitate the furnishing of these letters, I limit the time of the inquiry to the months of March, April, and May, '64."

6220. What is to be done with these?—(Capt. Harris.) These can be finished, so far as I am aware.—(Prisoner.) I beg your pardon. The dates of the applications to Captain Bessley commenced the 15th September 1867, and there is no account of dates from '66 up to that time.

6221. (Chairman.) But you asked only for those in '68?—(Prisoner.) I asked for letters in '68. You will see by the construction of the sentence that it is quite clear.—(Capt. Harris.) It is so. I see it now.

6222. Is it consistent with the rules of the directors that those shall be supplied?—(Capt. Harris.) I think so: quite.—(Prisoner.) I have received the applications from December the 15th '67, down to the Captain Harris here withdrew.

BRYAN DILLON's examination resumed.

6223. (Chairman.) Well, Sir, the Commission are of opinion that, as you have not had those documents, it is desirable and right that we should postpone your making your statement to a day of which you will receive due notice. In the meanwhile, such of those documents as it is considered right to supply to you shall be placed in your hands; but it must be with this distinct understanding, that we cannot allow any further postponement in consequence of any further application for documents, and that no document will be given which is not applied for by this evening?—By this evening?

6227. And we also wish you to understand, that at our next meeting, when you see you before us next time, it will be the last occasion. We shall not then permit any further postponement. We shall then be prepared to hear your statement; or if, on consideration, you decline to make any statement you refused will be considered that?—In the interim, my lord, will you recollect what I stated about John Lynch; because it may be necessary that any papers or medical cases respecting him should be forthcoming. If you wish I shall send in a requisition. I was put up by the authorities to witness his last moments, and I gave evidence before the coroner to that effect.

6228. (Dr. Lyons.) Does anything that you have to say with regard to his case bear upon your own?—Of course it does.

6229. (Chairman.) How?—Inasmuch as we were subjected to similar treatment.

6230. You can state to us anything that happened to yourself, or anything that you experienced yourself?—He was, in my opinion, done to death, and it will not do to hush it up.

The prisoner withdrew, and after the Commission had deliberated, was again admitted.

6231. (Chairman.) Sir, the Commissioners have decided that under the circumstances of the case they think it better to postpone your examination until you have had an opportunity of seeing such of the documents you have asked for, which will be supplied to you. Care will be taken that no unnecessary delay should occur in supplying them to you. The Commission further think it very important, as you seem to have a written statement there, that they should have an opportunity of reading your statement before they come here to examine you personally. They recognise the propriety of your having those documents a few days before your statement is finally completed; but they think that your statement may be completed by Friday the 15th, that is, to-morrow week; and we wish therefore that you would send that statement to the secretary in London, give it to the governor in short, and the governor will forward it to London. Give it in an envelope. You can seal it up yourself. It will be forwarded to London in order that we may have an opportunity of reading it before we come here?—Up to what date will you give me?

The witness withdrew.

present, but I want the applications from April '66 up to that date.—(Capt. Harris.) We will go so far back: "Copy of report of Messrs. Pollock and Knapp."

6225. That, I think, will not be supplied.—(Capt. Harris.) That will not be supplied. That is all.

6224. Would you be kind enough, Captain Harris, to have made out a copy of the documents asked for by him, writing against each "will" or "will not be supplied"?—(Capt. Harris.) I will, my lord.

6226. And let us also have a copy, which you can put in as evidence?—(Capt. Harris.) Yes, my lord.

Capt. Harris.

7 July 1870.

B DILLON.

6232. (Dr. Greenwood.) Until to-morrow week.—To prepare my statement?

6233. (Chairman.) If you mean to make a statement in writing, you must give your written statement to the governor, in an envelope, so that it may be forwarded to us on Friday; that is, to-morrow week?—What I intended to do was, to read the statement, and comment on it as I went along.

6234. That you can do; but we think it well that we should have an opportunity of reading it before you come up for examination.

6235. (Dr. Lyons.) I think you said that you have 50 pages written?—Yes, 50 pages.

6236. You are prepared to read that now?—I am prepared that now.

6237. (Chairman.) You are distinctly to understand that when we come here to examine you and receive your oral statement, that you will be expected to say freely, whether you will or will not make a statement?—Oh; supposing that I arrive at that conclusion before the time you limit for the preparation of the statement, I presume then I can let you know.

6238. Then you had better write in the same way, in an envelope, through the governor to the secretary, that you have made up your mind not to make a statement. That you can do any time you please. With regard to your application in reference to Lynch's case, the Commissioners desire to inform you, that our duty is to inquire into the cases of certain prisoners in a list which accompanies a letter of instructions, and into whose cases we are to go fully. Lynch's case is not one of those. At the same time, it will be open to you, in making any statement or allegation in reference to your own case, to illustrate that case, if you think it can be so illustrated, by any statement with regard to Lynch's case, so far as it has any bearing on your own?—Well, I thought that I was allowed to speak on matters that will illustrate the system. I think that in your notice to the public you said that you will receive evidence to illustrate the system.

6239. So far as it illustrates your own case or the general question; but we shall not be prepared to go, specially, into Lynch's case?—The authorities put me up to testify on them behind. Five days before Lynch died they treated him very well, and they produced me at the request to prove that during my stay in the hospital, as far as I was capable of judging, he was treated well. Of course I had to state that, but I also stated to the coroner what Lynch had told me and what I knew.

6240. We cannot go into Lynch's case now. I told you the extent to which Lynch's case may be introduced into your statement, which is, so far as it is an illustration, that the treatment experienced by yourself resembled his, and that Lynch's may be said to affect you?—It was I know, for the doctor did not examine him until he fell into consumption, and then he pronounced him to be in consumption.

Capt Harris.

Captain Harris recalled.

7 July 1870.

6241. (Chairman.) Do you wish, Captain Harris, to make a further statement to the Commission in reference to Bencke's case?—Yes, I do, my lord. I find, on referring to a letter received, that the statements to the Secretary of State and the board of directors will be laid on the table for the information of the Commission, but that they will not be placed in the hands of the prisoners.

6242. That is, that he will get neither number 2 nor number 3 of those that he asked for?—No.

6243. (Mr. De Vere.) There are two: one additional statement to the directors, and one to the Secretary of State?—It appears to me that all three are contained in the refusal.

6244. (Chairman.) What was number 1 that you said might be given to him?—That was on the table this morning. It was intended for the Commission; but I did not mean to put it in the hands of the Commission until I had all three.

6245. It was intended for him?—No, it was not; that was a mistake of mine.

6246. (Dr. Lyster.) Did you identify that—once as to which of the three documents it was. There is no date on it?—It is dated in the first column with the words, "April '69," I think. I took a note that it was dated.

6247. That would not correspond with any of the three dates that he gave us?—"April" I think he said, or "about April."

6248. (Dr. Greenhow.) Are such documents to be given to the other prisoners?—No, they are not; but they will be laid before the Commission whenever they have been mentioned.

6249. (Dr. Lyster.) You have not got those three documents yet?—No, I have not. (He withdraws, and returns with a letter.)

6250. (Chairman.) Will you read the letter, Captain Harris, that you received this morning?—This has reference particularly to Dillon's case, but also to others. "Sir,—The enclosed application for the documents named, having been received from the Commissioners for enquiring into the treatment of treason-felony convicts from Bryan Dillon, I am directed by the chairman to inform you that the Secretary of State has decided that such documents are not to be furnished to these prisoners, but that they are to be prepared and handed to the Commissioners."

6251. They do not name the documents?—They do not; but in a previous circular there was a conditional grant made of the petitions to the Secretary of State, but that the replies and remarks on them were in no case to be given.

6252. Will you read it?—"Sir,—I am directed by the chairman to request that, in case applications are made to you in reference to the Commission of inquiry into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons by the prisoners concerned to be furnished with their petitions to the Secretary of State or to the directors, or their suppressed letters, they may be furnished to them, but not in any case "any reports made to superior authority on these cases."

6253. (Mr. Broadbent.) Bryan Dillon's application has reference to a number of documents, some of which came under the first and some under the second head?—So they would; but the Secretary of State has decided that.

6254. Does the second letter mention the names of others besides Bryan Dillon?—It does not.

6255. (Dr. Greenhow.) Let us get it in order.—The first is dated 20 July; "Sir,—I am directed by the chairman to request that, in case applications are made to you in reference to the Commission of inquiry into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons by the prisoners concerned to be furnished with their petitions to the Secretary of State or to the directors, or their suppressed letters, they may be furnished to them, but not in any case any reports made to superior authority on these cases. The letter to be furnished only to the Commissioners. The convicts may also on application be furnished with extracts from the directors and governors' interview books, giving the applications they made and the replies they received. That prisoners who apply may also be furnished by the medical officer with a statement showing the dates of admission to and discharge from hospital, and each statement of his treatment as would be made in ordinary professional practice to a patient. Medical officers in Millbank, Portland, and Woking prisons are also requested to furnish, for the use of the Commissioners, copies or originals of all certificates in reference to the health of treason-felony convict Edward Power, to the governor, directors, or Secretary of State; also reports made by the medical officers to each other on the convict's removal, including that from Monday to Millbank Prison; medical officers, where treason-felony prisoners are now confined, are requested to furnish, for the use of the Commissioners, notes of the case of each prisoner kept by them. Careful registers should be kept of all documents the governor parts with. The friends or advisors of prisoners permitted to assist them in preparing their statements for the Commissioners are to be allowed access of a reasonable hour, and for a reasonable time, and under proper restrictions, until the morning of the day which the Commissioners appoint for the examination of the prisoners in each prison, and not afterwards, unless in any particular case the Commissioners may wish otherwise." Then it gives the date. This date at present determined is for Woking the 26th July, and for Chatham the 18th July.

6256. (Chairman.) In reference to the applications now or recently made by the prisoner Bencke for certain documents, I understand you to say that you think the latter of these two letters so far controls the expression of the first as to lead you to think that you would be acting contrary to the wishes of the directors in supplying these documents to the prisoner?—That is so, my lord.

The witness withdrew.

J. D. Mulcahy.

Dennis Dowling Mulcahy, prisoner, recalled.

6257. (Chairman.) Mulcahy, are you prepared now to place a statement in writing before us, or to make any statement to us?—Well, my lord, I only received the documents—the greater part of them, in fact, I received within the last 24 hours and less. I have not had, in fact, time to do more than read them through. I lost no time in applying for those documents, as you may see by my various applications to the governor, which I will read for you, if you have no objection, to show the delays which occurred in getting those documents.

6258. No. It is not necessary to go into that.—Well, my lord, with regard to the documents that I have been furnished with, they are not those that I exactly applied for. I refer particularly to what are called medical notes.

6259. Have you a list of these that you applied for?—I can tell you those that I received. I received an abstract of the record of prison offences, which is not at all satisfactory, inasmuch as I find have a report under the date of January the 26th, 1870, "improper language at the pump." I cannot reply to such a thing as that, because in the report book that I mean that report occupies more than half a page, and "improper language" might even include bawdy language. It does not specify anything. That is not the meaning of the report. I was not reported simply for improper language. I applied to Captain Harris about this, my lord, and his reply was that it was sufficient. I consider it is not sufficient, that it is not at all sufficient.

6260. What other documents did you receive?—I received this record of prison offences, interviews with the governor of this prison, and applications to the visiting director of this prison; copies of applications to the governor, with replies thereto at Woking Prison; copies of applications to the visiting director, with replies thereto, at Woking Prison; extracts from the applications of prisoners to see the director at Millbank Prison, applications to see the governor at Millbank Prison, applications to see the governor at Pentonville Prison from suppressed letters, from letters suppressed in the prison.

6261. Letters of your own?—Letters of my own; yes, my lord.

6262. (Dr. Lyons.) These are the letters that were suppressed in this prison?—Yes, Dr. Lyons: applications to see the governor at Portland, applications to see the visiting director at Portland.

6263. Are those separate documents?—These are separate documents, Dr. Lyons, belonging to Portland Prison, and this is what is called an abstract of the case sheets in Portland; this one from Portland, what is called the medical case sheet, of the extra treatment that I received while I was there. Then there is an abstract of another case sheet which Dr. Gover makes, but which does not at all contain what I require.

6264. Is this a separate one?—This is a separate one from Millbank. What Dr. Blaker, the medical officer at Portland, gives is satisfactory and enough, inasmuch as he gives day and date for it, and describes the diseases for which he prescribed. But Dr. Gover's is merely a note written; it is not at all an abstract from any book, for he writes here that my "health is tolerably good." I do not remember his saying anything of the kind, and I was not examined by Dr. Gover on the 1st of November; I was simply called into his office, and he said he would see me another time. He made a stethoscopic examination, and he makes no allusion at all to it here. I want the report of his examination to the prison officers, for it was a report of punishment; and on the occasion he said that my left lung was weak and that I had considerable abdominal heaving, and yet he makes no allusion at all to that here.

6265. What was the date of that?—That was in the last days of December '66, or the beginning of January '67.

6266. Dr. Gover examined you?—Dr. Gover examined me stethoscopically.

6267. What did he say to you?—He said that my left lung was a little weak and that I had considerable abdominal heaving.

6268. Did he say that to you?—Yes, he said that to me when he was making the examination. I do not find any allusion at all to that examination here. I find no allusion either to the treatment. That I cannot understand. I complained to him that I could not take the grub after I was sent from Ireland to Millbank. I had a very rough voyage across and I was very sick, and I complained to him. For 10 days I could not take the supper. He makes no allusion to that. I was suffering from neuritis there, and there is no allusion to that. This is not an abstract of my medical case-sheet. There is a document here he calls "Medical history while in prison." It is not a medical history; it is a simple extract from the infirmary book, I think.

6269. What is it?—It is headed "Medical history while at Dartmoor," but it gives no history, but merely the symptoms and treatment. It simply contains the day and the month that I was received and discharged. It states in one place, on allusion to the heat, diarrhoea, and hæmorrhoids; and the observation in the paragraph for observations is, "The prisoner was removed to Woking on medical grounds." I take it that that is not, and cannot be called, a medical history or a medical case-sheet. I applied for the medical documents that accompanied me from one prison to another. He has a paragraph to enter the disease in, but there is no disease marked in any of these charts. It is not sufficient to say merely that I was removed on medical grounds from Dartmoor. I want to know what the grounds were upon which I was removed. I fear that of importance. This is not an abstract of the medical report that accompanied me when I came to Woking. This is not an abstract from the case-sheet. This is a prepared abstract, because it is stated in this abstract that on the 8th June—

6270. Is it called "abstract" or "extract," or what is it called?—It is called "infirmary patient's case." There is no such sheet as this used in the infirmary. I say that this is not a correct abstract, because the days are not correct. There is a statement here on the 8th June, "Made a careful examination of chest; no symptoms of phthisis." Dr. Wilson made no such examination on that day. I do not mean to give this as evidence at present, but I wish to state that these documents are not correct abstracts, and that they are not abstracts at all of the treatment so far.

6271. (Chairman.) Do I understand you to apply for a postponement of your examination on the ground that you have not had time to consider these documents?—I have not got the documents at all, my lord. I applied for a copy of a statement that I made to the directors in September '67, and I have not received it.

6272. A statement made by you?—Yes; a copy of a memorial to the Secretary of State in November '68; a copy of a memorial to the Secretary of State in August '69; statement to the board of directors. I applied for them all before.

6273. You have not received copies of memorials to the Secretary of State?—I will commence it, my lord. Perhaps it would facilitate matters if I commenced these notes.

6274. What is it that you have not received?—With your lordship's permission I will read these notes. On the 27th ultimo I understood the Commissioners to say that they would let me have a copy of the conditions, setting forth the power of the Commission. I have not received that amended copy of the conditions, which I think is most essential altogether.

6275. There is a printed paper stating what we said you should have?—I have not received it, my lord.

6276. You have not received it (His lordship hands the prisoner a copy)?—No, I have not. (Prisoner peruses it) No, I have not received any copy of this document in any shape. The only document that I received a copy of from the Commissioners is one headed, "3131, Denis Dwyer Mulcahy; subjects upon which the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts will permit such prisoners to address them." That was given on the 16th June. The next was the names of the Commissioners, and the next was, "The Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons hereby give notice," headed 3, Parliament Street, 21st June 1870, which the secretary read I believe that day, and which he said was to be published in the Irish newspapers. But this document now headed to me I have never seen before. I have never seen this before.

6277. You have not had it before?—No, my lord.

6278. (Dr. Lyons.) You have not received a copy of the printed regulations?—No, I have not received a copy of the printed regulations, Dr. Lyons.

6279. (Chairman.) You had better keep that copy then?—Very well, my lord.

6280. What else have you not received?—A question that I put to the Commission the last day was with respect to the payment of the travelling and incidental expenses of the witnesses while they are attending the Commission.

6281. That we told you already that we could not make any provision for?—The fee to counsel to assist in preparing our statements, and the facilities that are to be afforded in dispeaving or contradicting the charges of the prison officials.

6282. We have no means of paying a fee to anybody for assisting you; and with regard to the examination of prison officials, we reserve to ourselves the power of making such regulations as we may think fit at the time?—It will perhaps be necessary for me to read for you the letter which I have received from Mr. Butt. I suppose you have seen a copy of it.

6283. Is that a letter addressed to you?—Yes, my lord.

6284. We did not see your letter to Mr. Butt, nor have we seen the reply. You can read it if you like, but I do not see what object it can serve to do so?—My lord, I attach very great importance to any advice coming from so eminent a man as Mr. Butt. I do not know any man in his profession that I have a greater regard for than Mr. Butt. I would attach great importance to anything that he would say.

6285. If it is your own wish to read it you can do so?—Well, then, I will not read it if you do not approve of my doing so.

6286. (Dr. Lyons.) We do not offer any opinion whatever about it. You can read it or not, as you wish?—I had better read those notes at all events, as I had them prepared to read to the Commission. You have no power, my lord, I understand you say, to defray the expenses of the witnesses while they are attending to give evidence in our behalf.

6287. None?—None to fee a counsel for us.

6288. None?—And these are the only regulations that you can give me as amended conditions respecting the mode of carrying on the inquiry.

6289. That is all?—On the morning of the 20th ultimo, Captain Harris, acting governor, read for me a letter to him, dated 26th June 1870, from my sister, stating that Mrs. Thomas Clarke Luby—

6290. Was that a letter addressed to him?—Yes; for I can only receive letters at stated periods, but matters of importance may at other times be communicated to the governor; and on that morning he read for me a letter that she had addressed to him, requesting him to inform me that Mrs. Luby and another friend would call on me in the course of the week.

6291. When was that?—This was on the morning of the 26th June, my lord. It was dated the 26th, and not read to me until the morning of the 29th.

6292. (Dr. Lyons.) Was that the meeting on which we were here?—Yes, Dr. Lyons.

6293. You did not mention that to us on the last day, did you?—Yes, I did. I mentioned it on the last day, but I was not aware of the date of it on that occasion. I made application since to Captain Harris to know the date, because I consider it of importance.

6294. (Chairman.) Go on?—Saying that Mrs. Thomas Clarke Luby would visit me in the early part of the week on her return from Portland, and that another friend, Mr. Hayes, would also visit me in reference to the Commission. I have not yet seen either of those friends. Are the Commissioners aware whether either or both of them have applied for permission to see me, and whether the permission was granted or refused by the Home Secretary?

6295. We are not aware?—I find in a letter handed to me this morning, dated 3rd July, from my sister, that Mr. Hayes applied to the Home Secretary for an order to see me, but that up to last Friday, the 1st of July—a week having then elapsed, he had received no reply.

6296. (Dr. Lyons.) When did Mr. Hayes apply?—My sister says that Mr. Hayes applied to the Home Secretary for an order to see me, but that up to last Friday, the 1st of July—a week—he had received no reply. There was no reply.

6297. (Mr. De Vere.) What was the date of the application?—It must have been, I suppose, about the 23d or 24th June probably.

6298. (Chairman.) We know nothing of it?—I merely wish to mention the fact, my lord, in order to show you that this does not at all facilitate matters. If friends wish to see you and make application for that purpose, and an answer is kept back such a length of time, of course it is throwing great impediments in the way. On the 30th ultimo I applied to see in private, and without the presence of the officials of the prison, the friends named in my sister's letter, and any other friend or friends that may require to see me relative to the preparation of my statement for the Commission. I understood the Commissioners to say that I could see them. Captain Harris stated to me on the 30th ultimo for the first time, that the Commissioners had not noticed to him that I could see any friends so presenting themselves, and that to do so the necessary authority should be applied for and obtained. But I understood the Commission directly to say, that I could see persons presenting themselves for the purpose of advising or assisting me in preparing my statement.

6299. No; what we said was that you would be permitted to see your friends under such regulations and restrictions as the authorities may think necessary to impose, and with the permission of the Secretary of State?—I understood from Dr. Lyons—perhaps I misunderstood what he said though—that I could see them privately. Of course it is very expensive and very embarrassing to our friends to come for the purpose of seeing us, and when they arrive in London to find that they have to wait a week without getting an answer to their applications, though they come under the notice that was published in the newspapers, and which I have here. Of course that is very misleading.

6300. We recommended that access under strict regulations should be permitted to friends desirous of seeing prisoners for the purpose of advising them, or assisting them in preparing their statements. We believe that the arrangement would be that you would see any friends who might so come out of the house of any of the prison officials, but probably within sight. That I believe would be the arrangement, but we have nothing to do with it. With reference to the question asked by you, if we were at all aware whether Mr. Hayes has had an answer from the Home Secretary, we have no information on the subject, nor has Captain Harris?—All I can say is, my lord, that in the letter which was handed to me by Captain Harris this morning it is stated as I tell you, and as you may see; and you may see, my lord, that it is initialed by Captain Harris.

6301. I have not my doubt whatever that it is so stated in your letter?—Of course, my lord, if those impediments are thrown in the way of the prisoners in this manner, it will be a long time before the Commission will come to a conclusion.

6302. It reads with the Secretary of State, and not with us, or with Captain Harris, to say what friends should be permitted to see the prisoners?—Then I respectfully submit in that case, my lord, what evidence I would produce, or the course in fact that I was to take, as I will show you by a telegram I received. I was about reading those notes through, which would explain in a great measure the observations that I would afterwards make. If your lordship has no objection I will read the notes.

6303. Do I understand now that you are going to make a statement which will be part of your case?—No, my lord, I am not making any statement on a part of my case. I am merely trying before your lordship the different applications that I made, in order to show you that every impediment has been thrown in my way since you were here a week ago, with regard to making any progress; because your lordship might otherwise be under the impression, which would be an erroneous one, that the delay was caused by us. It was no such thing. I do not read them as a part of my case, my lord.

6304. Is there any document that you have asked for and not received?—Yes, my lord, several documents.

6305. Other documents besides the memorial to the Secretary of State?—Yes, my lord. Is there any objection to my using a pen, my lord?

6306. No.—And, if you will permit me, to sit down, as I feel weak.

6307. You say—"A copy of memorial to the Secretary of State, and a copy of statement to the directors of prisons." These I have not received, my lord. There is one in October '67; that is the first.

6308. (Mr. Broadbent.) That is to the directors?—Yes, to the directors. The date of it is October 1867, I think. I think it is in October, if I remember correctly.

6309. (Dr. Lyons.) What is the next?—The next is, "Copy of a memorial to the Secretary of State in November '68."

6310. (Chairman.) The next?—A copy of memorial to the Secretary of State in August '68.

6311. The next?—Copy of statement to the board of directors in February 1870.

6312. Are these all in the original list?—These are all in the original list, my lord.

6313. (Mr. Broadbent.) Not that of November '68, was it?—I think it is. You will find it, I think, in a letter that I addressed to Captain Harris in a letter of the 24th June. Yes, it is, "The original or a true copy" of a memorial addressed to the Secretary of State on "or about November '68, and the reply to the same." The letter to Captain Harris is dated 24th June 1870, my lord.

6314. (Chairman.) The last thing you have mentioned that you had not received was, "A copy of a letter to the directors in February 1870?"—February 1870. I have not received any of these, my lord, and Captain Harris told me this morning that I could not receive any of the following documents: "Copy of the medical certificate sent with this statement, the 'memorial'."

6315. No, that you will not receive. The authorities have decided that that shall not be placed in your hands. It will be on the table before the Commissioners, and the Commissioners will have the opportunity of examining from it, and if any point arises from it which in their judgment you cannot satisfactorily deal with from the papers in your hands, it will be the business of the Commission to examine upon it, but the authorities have decided that it shall not be placed in your hands?—Well, my lord, I respectfully submit to the medical gentlemen on the Commission that if—I have applied for other documents which I deem of very great importance. My friend, Mr. Power, has applied to the Secretary of State for a copy of the documents relative to the release of Sir Colling Rodley.

6316. Whether that application shall be accorded to or not rests with the Home Office, not with us?—Just so, my lord.

6317. I have already communicated to you that it is the decision of the authorities that you are not to be supplied with certain documents, and I am not prepared to argue its propriety or otherwise with you; such is the rule?—Would you permit me, my lord, to say what I consider would be essential to me to prove my case, and to give you my reasons for saying that I look upon these documents as essentially necessary to me.

6318. It does not rest with us to alter the regulations?—Then it does not rest with me to prove my case. If you deprive me of the means I cannot go on at all.

6319. You must exercise your own judgment?—Just so, my lord. In the case of Sir Colling Rodley it was stated, I understand, in the House of Commons; it was put to the Home Secretary upon what grounds he was released, and he replied that he was released because he was suffering from chronic bronchitis; and if I show that there was probably a worse disease existing, and that this was the rule of the Home Office, I think that that would be good ground for making the application. Here I am supplied with what is called a medical case sheet, and there is not a word in it as to what the disease is that I am suffering from. I submit that to Dr. Lyons and Dr. Greenhow, and leave them to state, could they consider that any proper grounds of observation are shown in such a document as that. If you have not power, my lord, to do that—6320. We are not prepared to argue, but we are ready to inquire into any case that may be brought before us. It rests, as I already told you, with the authorities to decide what shall and what shall not be given to the prisoners?—If that be so, there is no use in my proceeding further, my lord.

6321. I mentioned to you that the documents will be in our hands, but not placed in yours?—Well, then, my lord, I won't proceed further in the inquiry if I cannot have such evidence as I consider necessary for proving my case; if it is to be directed by the Home Secretary, and with the sanction of the Home Secretary. He has many of these facts already in his possession.

6322. You will exercise your own discretion?—If they deprive me of the documents that are essential I cannot of course make any statement to the Commission.

6323. Do I understand you to wish that we should take that decision as final?—I will read for you, my lord, the letter of Mr. Butt, and my final application on the matter.

6324. It will be quite understood that in reading Mr. Butt's letter you do it at your own request?—Yes, my lord, quite so.

"MY DEAR SIR, Dublin, 4th July 1870.

"I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo. I can only give the same reply to it which I am giving to four other similar letters which have been addressed to me. These letters are obviously written in consequence of a correspondence which has passed between me and the Commission of Inquiry to which they refer. Some time since an application was made by the friends and relatives of prisoners that some one would be permitted to represent them at the intended inquiry. In support of that application I wrote to the Commissioners, offering, if they acceded to the application, to undertake the duty. I urged on the Commissioners the request that I might be permitted to be present at the inquiry, to adduce evidence to the Commissioners, and to put questions to the officials of the prisons. The Commissioners refused that request, and stated their determination not to allow anyone to be present at the investigation to represent the prisoners or their friends. The result of the correspondence was, that while they adhered to this determination they offered to permit me or any other friend of any prisoner to have access to him for the purpose of aiding him in the preparation of a written statement to be laid before the Commission. I declined in reply to this to take any part in the proceedings, and I expressed a strong opinion that it was very objectionable to 'call on any prisoner to place himself in the position of preferring an accusation, unless the Commissioners were prepared to allow him every aid and assistance he might require and give him every opportunity of sustaining it.'"

I say that that has not been given to me.

"I do not consider that opportunity will be afforded by the mode of investigation which the Commissioners propose. I do not think that a prisoner left alone and unaided in the inquiry can either conduct his own case and adduce the requisite evidence, or, above all, put to the prison officials the questions that may be necessary to elicit the truth. After my letter to the Commissioners, and with the strong feelings I entertain on the subject, it would be impossible for me to aid you in preparing any statement while I would not be permitted to assist you to investigate into its truth. It appears to me a very serious consideration whether you ought to consent to proffer an accusation unless you are allowed the usual assistance at the inquiry."

I am not allowed even the usual means of presenting evidence.

"If you decide on doing so, and wish for help in preparing that statement, I have no doubt that your friends outside will be able to obtain for you that help; and if you desire it, I will be the medium of communicating to them your wish. If you proffer a request to the Commissioners that I should be permitted, not only to aid you in preparing a statement, but also to act for you before the Commission when they investigate that statement, and if the Commissioners accede to that request, I would be ready at once to go over and give you every assistance in my power."

"I remain, my dear Sir,

"Very truly yours,

"JESSE BATT."

Well, my lord, I will lay that letter before the Commission in its entirety, and ask the Commissioners if they are prepared to accede to the request made there by Mr. Batt, that he would be allowed to act for me at the investigation. I put in the letter in its entirety.

6325. I understood you to place that letter before us, and to accompany it with the request that we would permit Mr. Batt to come and represent you in this room?—Yes, my lord. I have already addressed to the Commission a letter to that effect, jointly to that effect. There is another document that I would call the Commissioners' attention to, and that is the notice.

(The Commission here deliberated.)

6326. The Commission understood your application to be that stated in Mr. Batt's letter which you have read, namely, that he should be present here to assist you while the legality is going on?—Yes, my lord.

6327. I am to inform you that, as you will observe from the correspondence with Mr. Batt, we have already considered that point, and have decided against it?—Very well, my lord.

6328. And that we adhere to that decision?—Very good, my lord.

6329. You spoke just now of having received very insufficient statements, or extracts, or whatever they may be, of a medical character, and that you are unable to complete your medical case in consequence?—Just so, my lord.

6330. And you have referred to the gentlemen on the Commission who are doctors, asking them whether under such circumstances they could think the documents referred to contain a statement of your case. I am speaking for the Commission; therefore those gentlemen to whom you appealed could not, under the ordinary rules, answer your appeal at that time. But I am anxious to explain to you, that though you have certainly not the whole of some of these documents, still the documents, as a whole, will be laid before us on this table, and they will be accessible to every member of the Commission, and each member in turn will have an opportunity of asking questions founded on those documents, and of supplying therewith any deficiency which you may think yourself, or which you may be unable to bring out in your examination, and that you need entertain no doubt whatever that the medical points will be satisfactorily and fully sifted. The documents will be in our custody, though not in yours?—May I ask your lordship whether the medical portion of the Commission has decided that these documents, as furnished to me, are sufficient?

6331. That is not a question that I can answer. I tell you exactly what the facts will be, that if you have not all the documents in your hands, we shall have all the documents in full. I have mentioned to you already that it rests with other authorities than ourselves to decide what documents you will have and what you will not have. I find the Commission in relation to the prisoners,—I do not feel myself at liberty to make such observations as I would if I were not a prisoner on this matter; and I do not like to pursue this matter, because it is painful to me for many reasons; but I will read for you some most serious objections that have been thrown in the way of this Commission, and which to my mind confirm what I have read from Mr. Batt. I will show you where this objection rests. I want to address nothing to the Commission that is not relevant. It is stated here in a document which was served on me by the secretary of the Commission, that any friend of the prisoner who wishes to have access to him for the purpose of assisting him in preparing for his examination should make application to the Secretary of State. "The Commissioners," it states, "will be also prepared to receive any statement in writing from any friend of the prisoner, or any person acting on his behalf, and to take the oral evidence of any witness—including, if desired, any released prisoner—which may appear relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons." My sister must have been misinformed, for she writes to this effect; no, it is in the telegram it is. The statement in the telegram is, "The Commissioners refuse prisoners a counsel, or evidence of released prisoners;" or evidence of released prisoners.

6332. Do you want to know whether that statement is true or not?—My lord, in this document it is set forth under the heads of the Commission, "The Commissioners will be prepared to receive any statement in writing from any friend of the prisoner, or any person acting on his behalf, and to take the oral evidence of any witness—including, if desired, any released prisoner—which may appear relevant to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons."

6333. We are prepared to receive any evidence of any released prisoners who are produced?—Then there is some misunderstanding in the public mind, my lord.

6334. Well, I tell you now that we are prepared to receive such evidence?—And this document, in order that I may be more correct, I referred my sister, who may not be up on this matter, to a friend in Dublin.

6335. It is unnecessary to go into that, for we have given public notice?—But, my lord, here is a public journalist; I sent my telegram to the man that I thought of all others would be the most correct in the matter, and I referred it to him.

6336. We have given public notice that we are ready to receive, amongst others, released prisoners to give evidence, if their evidence was material?—I will read another matter, my lord, that bears on the subject.

6337. The readiness of the Commission to receive the evidence of any released prisoner was stated in a letter from the Commission to Mr. Batt, which was published in the newspapers?—I will read a letter from my sister which bears on this subject, my lord, to show you that probably the Commission are not aware of the course that has been adopted. Of course you are well aware that I could not send my letter out without passing through the hands of the officials. Mr. Batt says, "Eight lines of the second paragraph of the letter received this morning have been erased." And what were those eight lines that were erased in that document? Though Captain Harris told me he had directed to send on the letter, it was sent to the Secretary of State. I copied out that letter and my letter to Mr. Batt, so that there could be no mistake. I want to the trouble of copying both this and the letter to my sister, and the eight lines, she says, were erased; they were these: "If any of my fellow-prisoners have prepared or published any account of their prison treatment in letter, pamphlet, book, or of letters, relating to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons, send the same by such friends as may visit me. Send also by them any other statement prepared for the Commission relating to the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons." I could not keep within the bounds of your notice more clearly than that, and yet those very things that are most relevant are struck out of that letter as sent, and my letter varied.

6338. Your complaint is that that passage was struck out of your letter?—Yes.

6339. (Dr. Lyons.) How do you show that that was the particular passage b.—That was in the second paragraph.

6340. (Chairman.) How do you know it was that passage?—There were no other lines than those to count eight lines.

6341. It may be other lines?—I do not see any other that it could be except those. If you have no objection I will read it all for you.

6342. If you like you may do so?—Shall I read it, my lord?

6343. What letter is it?—The letter addressed to my sister.

6344. If you please?—

"Waking Convict Prison, Surrey, England,
"My DEAR SISTER, 1st July 1870.

"The acting governor, Captain Harris, in answer to an application which I made to him this morning as to whether I could write to you or to any other friends in Ireland or elsewhere, relative to the preparation of my statement for the Commission appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons, said I could, but that all such letters should pass through the hands of the prison officials and be read by them, and that all letters from you or my friends, or statements bearing on my case sent by you or by them, should pass in the usual way through the hands of the prison officials and be read by them before being handed to me. Under those considerations I would not have you or any friend of mine forward statements relative to prison treatment through prison officials. If any friend should visit me, he or she could bring such documents and hand them to me, if permitted to do so, without passing through the prison officials. If any of my fellow-prisoners has prepared or published any accounts of their prison treatment in letters, pamphlets, book, or others, relating to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons, send the same by such friends as may visit me. Send also by them any other statement prepared for the Commission, and relating to the general treatment of treason-felony convicts in English prisons, in accordance with the following notice which the secretary of the Commission read for me on the 21st June 1870, and which he said would be published in the 'Flag of Ireland' and other Irish newspapers; yet, strange to say, he did not say it would be published in the 'Irishman' or 'Nation'; or have those papers ceased to exist." It must be some portion of that, my lord, for it was divided into two paragraphs; that was struck out. "On the 24th June the acting governor asked me if I wished for assistance in preparing my statement for the Commission. This assistance I subsequently learned meant legal assistance, and when I was so informed, namely, on Sunday the 26th June, I wrote to the following effect to Mr. Butt, Q.C., Dublin." Then I quote Mr. Butt's letter, or at least my letter to Mr. Butt. "Up to this I have never received a letter or telegram from Mr. Butt. Of course the answer is kept back, or my letter has not reached him. When it was stated to the Commissioners that no reply had been received from Mr. Butt, one of them said he might have been on the spot; but I cannot imagine that even if he was he would have allowed our letters—for five of us wrote to him, Mr. Power, Mr. Dillon, Mr. Bourke, Mr. Rossetto, and myself—as remain unanswered. I wish you would call on Mr. Rickards of Dublin, or some other person, who would see Mr. Butt, and ask him if my letter, or any of our letters have reached him. If you could spare time to learn further, you might call on him yourself. The acting governor, Captain Harris, read your letter to him for me on Wednesday the 23rd ultimo, conveying to me the sad intelligence of the death of my very dear friend Mrs. Luby, and the depressing news of the weak condition of my poor father." (Here the prisoner was so overcome by emotion that it was some minutes before he could proceed).

6345. If you wish the letter read the secretary will read it for you?—I will read it, my lord. "Also informing me that Mrs. Thos. Charles Luby would visit me in a week on her return from Portland, which she has not done up to 5 o'clock p.m., 1st July 1870; nor has my friend Mr. Hayes, who you also stated in the same letter would visit me in relation to the Commission. He has not applied at the prison up to the time of writing. I am at a loss to account for this delay, especially as regards Mr. Hayes. Both you and he must know that it was announced in the newspaper I have quoted for you that the Commission would sit, and consequently was at Woking on Monday the 29th instant, at 12 o'clock. I wish you to explain Mrs. Luby's and Mr. Hayes's delay in visiting me. The Commission has been adjourned until Monday next the 6th July. I do not intend to give my statement to the Commissioners until I hear from you. See my friends and understand more fully the purport of the Commission, and the use to be made of my statements. I may make. I wish you to reply to this letter by return of post if possible, if not, as soon as possible; but before doing so, see Mr. Pigots of the 'Irishman,' or any other gentleman you know connected with the press, and ask him to procure for you a copy of a question put in the House of Commons some time last session by some member of the House relative to the release from confinement of convicts; Sir Culling Enderby, the Home Secretary, having it seems followed the rule of the House Officer relative to the release of convicts whose health was likely to be permanently impaired by protracted imprisonment. It is absolutely necessary that I should have your answer to this letter before Monday next, and also that I should see any friends who may wish to visit me on matters connected with the Commission. I feel bound also to tell you that the Commission will not defray the expenses of such witnesses as we may wish to examine to give evidence respecting their treatment in English prisons, and I need not add that treason-felony convicts in English prisons are not in a position to pay the expenses of those witnesses, for do they intend to ask such witnesses to pay their own expenses. The Commissioners also said that they had not retained Mr. Butt, Q.C., and have no power of doing so, that if he were retained it should be at the prisoner's own expense. People possibly conceive in Ireland that the expense would in all three cases be comparatively minimal. It is questionable if it would be wise on the part of our friends to retain Mr. Butt, as we could only have his assistance in preparing our statements, the Commissioners having peremptorily refused to allow him or anybody else but the prisoner to be present when the statements we hand in as evidence goes to the Commission. Send us by Mrs. Luby or Mr. Hayes, or other friends, such letters or pamphlets of any firm as any released prisoners may have prepared of the treatment they received." That is the entire, my lord; and that portion of it, that I believe, my lord, which was most relevant to the inquiry respecting the general treatment of treason-felony prisoners in English prisons was erased; and I have every reason to believe by direction of the Secretary of State or by the board of directors. I need not remark further upon that, my lord. Your lordship has more experience in matters of this kind. It is very embarrassing, to say the least of it, because if the important parts or documents are struck out it is very much calculated to mislead those who have to read them.

6346. We will inquire and see what the fact is upon that point. As I understand, your allegation is that eight lines of your letter to your sister were struck out?—Yes, my lord, eight lines of paragraph 2.

6347. As that those eight lines which have been so struck out you believe were those that specially referred to the opportunity of receiving or transmitting statements to be laid before the Commission made by other prisoners?—Yes, my lord, whether they were written or in print. And, my lord, another difficulty was thrown in the way. I have been very careful in this matter not to unnecessarily occupy your time, and if anything I am asking you think irrelevant I wish you would correct me, so that I may not persevere in bringing it under your notice. I have been very particular in my applications to copy them, and when I received any answer to note it, so as not to depend on my memory. I made this application to the deputy-governor. On the 1st of July I asked him if he would send a telegram to Dublin for me, because I was anxious when you came here to be in a position to give you a decided answer as to whether I would make a statement or not. He replied, "Yes, but he did not think it necessary." I then saw him on the 4th July, when I prepared a telegram for Mr. Richard Pigott to inquire into the matter, and he said that he did not think it was necessary. Then I wrote to the effect that on reconsidering the matter I deemed it of importance to forward this telegram to Mr. Richard Pigott, as I cannot go on until I get a definite answer to the question I put in the telegram. On the 5th July I asked him if he received the telegram, and he said, "Yes." "Did you forward it?" "Certainly not." This surprised me, as on the 4th July he said he would send a telegram for me. When I am told one day that it will go, and the next that it will not, I do not know what course to pursue.

6348. (Mr. Brodrick.) Was it on the 2nd July that he replied, "Certainly not"?—No, on the 3th of July. On the 2nd July I made the application to him to send the telegram.

6349. (Chairman.) Did he say to you on the 2nd July that he would send it?—On the 1st July, my lord, I applied to him. I asked him, "Will you send a telegram for me to Dublin?" "Yes," said he, "yes, but I do not think it necessary."

6350. (Mr. Brodrick.) Did he then ask you what the telegram was to be?—I told him that it was a telegram about Mr. Butt; that I was surprised at having no answer from Mr. Butt. I said I was driven to the last resource; if I sent in a letter, the reply would not be in time for the Commission, so I intended to adopt the course of sending a telegram; and the telegram was to this effect:—

6351. (Chairman.) You did not read it to Captain Harris, did you?—Not at the time. I did, my lord. I read it when he said he did not think it necessary.

6352. At the first time?—Oh, no; but he afterwards said that, my lord. This is the telegram.

6353. The telegram that was sent?—The telegram that was sent, my lord. I enclosed it in an envelope to him, and it was transmitted after some time, but the date is not given. (Half-past 11 o'clock a.m. 4th July 70. Telegram from D. D. Malachy, Irish political prisoner, Woking Convict Prison, Surrey, England, to Richard Pigott, Esqre, Irishman office, Lower Abbey Street, Dublin, Ireland. My sister's letter of 25th June received 29th; no visit from Mrs. Leahy or Mr. Hayes; why? Write Mr. Butt 27th. Did he get letter? Can he come to Woking? Want him or some friend before Commission meets again, 6th July. Would Mr. Nolan come? Write my sister 1st July. See her. Answer by "telegraph to-day, and by evening's post." Captain Harris's answer when I read it was: "I don't think it necessary to send the telegram. Mr. Butt was engaged when he got your letter; that is the reason he did not come. The Commission will adjourn when they come if you are not prepared." Now, my lord, that was most misleading, because the reason Mr. Butt did not come was not that he was engaged, but that he disapproved of the conditions on which the Commission was held. I wrote this note to Captain Harris:—"Sir, (half-past 11 o'clock), on re-considering the matter I deem it of importance to forward this telegram immediately, as I feel I cannot go on with my statement until I get definite answers to questions put in this telegram."

6354. And it was then sent?—It was not sent then, my lord. That telegram I read to him on the 4th, and on the morning—

6355. You say that Captain Harris answered you that Mr. Butt was engaged, was that in writing?—No; he told me so, my lord. He never answered in writing. He comes into, and my application he—sometimes he will answer in a book, "Yes," or "No;" but I am correct, my lord, in taking down the substance of his answers. On the 5th July, my lord, I asked him, Was the telegram sent? His answer was, "Certainly not;" but he did answer afterwards and say that the telegram was sent.

6356. (Mr. De Vere.) When was that?—That was on the 5th July, the day after I read the telegram.

6357. (Mr. Lyons.) Can you state when the telegram was sent?—I cannot, Mr. Lyons. On the 6th July 1870, about a quarter to 1 in the afternoon, Captain Harris came to me and said, "You asked me yesterday about a telegram; it was sent yesterday." That was the 5th when it was sent, according to Captain Harris. "Have you received an answer to it?" I asked, and he said, "No." "Have you received any answer to my letters?" I asked him. "Yes," said he, "your sister has written, but from the tone and observations of her letter they render it out of my power to give it to you;" and that letter I did not receive until this morning; that is the letter from my sister.

6358. That letter from your sister is the one you read to us?—Yes, this morning, my lord, that letter was handed to me by the director's order, I understand, but it was written on the 2nd July, and I did not get it until the 7th. He promised, in fact, when I asked him about my sister's letter being forwarded, because it is not good to allow letters to remain several days without being sent. It is very hard and difficult to understand the regulations of the prison as regards the prisoners. I may be put down as troublesome to ask those questions, and it is not pleasant to put down applications at night to see the governor every morning. Of course that is troublesome, but in business matters a man must be somewhat precise. I asked him, "Did you receive the letter that I wrote to my sister?" He said, "Yes, yes; if there is anything in it requiring an alteration I will send it to you, so as to go by the evening's post." Now it was sent by the evening's post, and there were alterations; or at least it was altered. I asked also on the 5th July, "Can I have the full abstract of the report dated January the 20th, 1870, as this merely states I was reported as 'for improper language of the pump.' Now 'improper language' may mean anything, and that gives no information. The answer was, 'It is the usual abstract made.' I have no doubt Captain Bramley considered it improper language. I saw the answer in the book, and it was, 'It was sufficient,' or something to that effect. I have a note of it somewhere, if I could only lay my hand upon it.

6359. (Mr. Greenock.) Were you punished for the improper language of the pump on that occasion?—No, I was not punished on that occasion, Mr. Greenock; but that requires an explanation, for it has an important bearing on the matters.

6360. (Chairman.) Malachy, I understand that you wish for time before making any statement to us. That is your present position, is it not?—My lord, there are a great many documents before me. I find here conflicting statements. The Commissioners stated that—6361. Will you be kind enough to answer my question? Do you not wish to have more time before you make your statement?—Before I make a final statement, my lord.

6362. You wish for time?—I wish to consider, my lord. I believe there is some misunderstanding with regard to the publication that these statements are to get. I understand they are to be simply published for the Commission. I was under the impression that all the evidence was to be accessible to the public.

6363. It will be our recommendation that it be published?—Oh, then, my lord, I was completely mistaken I find.

6364. It depends of course on the Home Secretary, or it will be in the power of any Member of Parliament to move for it. We request that it shall be made public?—But it is in the power of the Chief Secretary to refuse that, too, my lord. I am a very young man, but I recollect some instances where there were inquiries, and when they were called for the Home Secretary refused them.

6365. All we can say is, that we shall recommend that it shall be published?—That is a matter that I shall require to give very serious consideration to before I make any statement, my lord.

6366. We shall recommend that it be all published. We can give you no promise, because we have not the power of printing. I believe it will be published. I believe and hope that it will.

6367. (Dr. Lyons.) The Commissioners believe that it will be published.

6368. (Dr. Greenham.) We cannot undertake to say that it will be published, but we hope it will?—Will our friends get a copy of the statement?

6369. (Chairman.) I believe and hope it will be all published and open to the public in general?—That is one of the things that I shall take time to consider, my lord. You have distinctly refused to allow Mr. Butt on the conditions he has applied himself. I understand that the Commission refuses to allow Mr. Butt to be present?

6370. We do.—Another point is, my lord, with regard to the publication of the evidence.

6371. I cannot tell you more upon that point than I have already done.—That you merely will recommend, and that you cannot promise the evidence will be published. Upon these two matters I will have to give serious consideration before I can give a final answer.

6372. If you intend to submit to us a written statement it will be desirable that you should send it; in fact it is necessary that you should send it before tomorrow week, so that we may have it before us for

The prisoner withdrew.

Captain Harris recalled.

6382. (Chairman.) Captain Harris, there are one or two questions arising from what the prisoner Malahy has stated to us that we wish to ask you. When did Malahy place in your hands a letter to his sister?—I do not think I can answer that question from memory, my lord. I can ascertain when it was forwarded, but I do not remember exactly the date.

6383. Did you enclose any passage from it?—The letter which was forwarded; yes. I think I can tell you the date of that.

6384. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you wish to refer to any book?—I fear I must; I cannot tell from memory. (Witness withdraws and returns.) It was on the 1st of July.

6385. You received that letter from Malahy?—I received it.

6386. When did you send it?—On that evening.

6387. Did it go to her in the shape in which it was placed in your hands?—It did not. By the authority of the chairman I erased certain passages.

6388. Did you submit it to the chairman?—I did. I took it myself.

6389. You took it yourself to London and submitted it to the chairman of the board of directors?—I did.

6390. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you say to Malahy that if there was anything objectionable in it you would erase it and let him know?—I do not remember saying I would erase it or let him know. I do not remember anything to that effect.

6391. The lines erased were erased by the authority of the chairman?—They were. I did it myself. Do you wish to know what they were?

6392. You may state it.—He asked for any pamphlets which had been published by prisoners who consideration when we come to examine you upon it?—If I send in a written statement I suppose I will have it prepared by that time. I have it prepared, but I may have to write it again.

6373. You have now a week?—Yes, my lord; but I struggle—

6374. I must tell you that your next appearance before the Commission will be the final one?—Yes, my lord.

6375. You will at that time make a statement, or finally say that you will not make a statement?—Yes, my lord; but with regard to the medical notes I asked for, do you refuse to give me those?

6376. The question of giving or withholding them has not rested with us, but with the authorities in London, and we cannot interfere. I have told you that a full statement will be in our possession, but not in yours?—But, my lord, I do not know how it is that I have copies of Dr. Blaker, who, I must say, though I may have something to say otherwise of his disposition; I must say cordially that as a medical man he is afraid of nothing, and he appears to me to give his notes.

6377. We cannot argue with you?—But, my lord, if you have power to get such notes for me as those that are furnished by Dr. Blaker, what is the objection to giving similar notes from the other prisoners?

6378. I cannot enter into an argument on the subject?—My lord, I think when Dr. Blaker gives what is really a medical case short, and other men give back such portions as absolutely amount to nothing, I think Dr. Blaker has given his notes very fairly, taking everything into consideration; but I must certainly say the others are not such as I could pass that comment on.

6379. We will not go into that?—I will not promise to give a statement, my lord.

6380. You will exercise your own judgment?—Yes, my lord. About the visiting and writing business.

6381. We will make inquiries about it?—Very good, my lord.

Capt. Harris.

were released from prison, and requested that any friend that came to visit him would come supplied with them.

6393. (Dr. Lyons.) Did Captain De Cane think that those were documents that ought not to be allowed to be brought in?—He did; pamphlets or statements.

6394. (Chairman.) With regard to the telegram which was sent to Mr. Pigott; he has stated that he applied to you on the 1st of July about sending a telegram bearing reference to Mr. Butt, and that you at first said you would send it, but a day or two afterwards said you could not send it?—My first answer to him was that I would send it if I thought it necessary, but that at the time, as his communication had gone by the post, I did not consider it would be necessary.

6395. Subsequently, did you say anything else?—Yes, subsequently the telegram was submitted. He sent it to me again, I submitted it, and it was sent.

6396. You submitted it to the authorities in London?—I did, my lord.

6397. Did you say at any time to him that Mr. Butt was engaged, and that that was the reason he did not come?—He asked me the question on one occasion why no answer had been received from Mr. Butt, and I said I had reason to suppose that he happened to be engaged at the time he wrote the letter. In fact I knew he was.

6398. (Dr. Lyons.) You knew he was?—I heard he was. He was engaged, I believe, on professional business at that time.

6399. (Chairman.) Was Malahy informed in the usual course that his letter went, but with certain portions of it erased?—Yes, he was; but he was not informed of the erasure.

Capt. Harris.
7 July 1898.

6400. He was not informed that there had been one?—He was not informed that there had been one. It is not customary to inform a man in such cases.

6401. When a letter is received, and a portion of it kept back, it is usual to inform the prisoner of such. Is it not?—It is not always done. The lines crossed are, properly speaking, entered in the governor's journal, but are not of necessity communicated to the prisoner. On the dispatch of a letter he is only told that certain passages have been struck out, but it is not invariably done.

6402. (Dr. Lysons.) Does he not see them struck out in the case of a letter that comes in?—He sees the errors, of course.

6403. Did you say to him on the 3d July when he requested you to send the telegram, "Certainly not"?—No; "On my own authority I may have said, "Certainly not." I do not remember having said "Certainly not," but if he stated it I may have said so.

6404. (Mr. De Vere.) In point of fact, it did go on the 3d July?—Yes, he sent it in again, and I submitted it to the board of directors. I did not think it was at all proper for a prisoner to telegraph in that way. I did not think the circumstances so urgent. He asked me a number of questions, and it is quite possible that I may have said, "On my own authority, certainly not."

The witness withdrew.

W. P. Roanster.

WILLIAM F. ROANSTER, prisoner, recalled.

6410. (Chairman.) The Commission have sent for you, Roanster, in order to learn from you whether you are prepared now to go into any statement, or whether you wish for any further time?—I did not get the documents that I asked for, sir. I got some of them on Monday last—Monday evening last, and others of the documents are withheld from me, my statements to the Secretary of State and board of directors.

6411. (Mr. De Vere.) Can you give day and date for them?—I have given the dates.

6412. (Chairman.) Have you given the dates of those to Captain Harris?—Yes, my lord. I was told that the Commissioners had them and withheld them from me.

6413. We have not got them?—I was told that by the clerk; he told me so. He told me that I would not get them. This morning I asked him.

6414. Roanster, you should understand that we, the Commissioners, have not got any documents before us which we keep back. We have not got them?—I have got all the other documents. I asked the clerk this morning, Mr. Ball, and he said the Commissioners had three statements, but that I would not get them.

6415. (Mr. De Vere.) What statements?—The statement to the Secretary of State in August 1897, and my statement to the board of directors.

6416. (Chairman.) Statements made by yourself?—By myself.

6417. You applied this morning again for them?—I applied this morning again. This morning I was supplied with some of the documents. The clerk said to me, "You have all except the statements; the Commissioners have those statements, and you cannot have them."

6418. (Mr. De Vere.) You made statements to the directors and the Secretary of State?—By memorials to the board of directors and the Secretary of State.

6419. (Chairman.) You will understand that the giving or withholding of documents does not rest with me, but with the directors or prison or the Secretary of State. We will inquire into the circumstances under which those documents have not been given to you, but beyond that we cannot go?—Those are very important documents, because they corroborate the testimony of what I bring forward.

6420. (Dr. Lysons.) Can you tell what the dates of those were?—August 1897, my first statement to the Secretary of State. I have it amongst some of 6405. (Chairman.) We have adopted a resolution to-day. It is quite obvious that some period must be fixed at which the permission to see friends should cease, but we thought that permission should not cease until the commencement of our next examination, which will be a final examination. The resolution will be, that permission to see friends for the purpose of their assisting prisoners to prepare their statements shall not cease until the morning of the day which the Commission may appoint for their final examination, but it leaves the right to you to say what that day is.—Very well.

6406. (Mr. Greenham.) After hearing that resolution you will feel quite justified in declining friends to see the prisoners subject to the regulations?—Yes, subject to the sanction of the Home Secretary. The interviews will take place in my presence, so they have done heretofore, in the governor's office.

6407. (Chairman.) When the authority of the Secretary of State comes, will it be necessary that there should be a special authority in each case?—I think so, my lord. It is a very exceptional case; I should hardly feel justified in granting an interview, unless special authority could be produced.

6408. Is that the function of the directors?—It is.

6409. Roanster has asked for papers, he says, which he has not had?—He has asked for some, my lord.

those documents here, but I do not know which of them now. I think I have it here. Yes; on June the 29th. I applied to the directors for a statement first, and this was the answer: "As he has not petitioned before, he may do so," a suppressed letter—that is simply speaking of a letter that was suppressed.

6421. Continue with your statement of what the documents are that you have not got. You mentioned a statement to the Secretary of State of the date August 1897. Have you got everything else that you want?—And another to the board of directors in February 1898.

6422. (Chairman.) You have already mentioned the dates of them to Captain Harris?—Yes; Captain Harris has all the information about them.

6423. Do I understand that you would wish to defer making any statement to the Commission until you have been supplied with those papers?—Yes, sir; and I have got a letter that Captain Harris gave me on last night from Mr. Butt, in answer to a letter of mine.

6424. Do you wish to read it?—There is a request here that I would wish to proffer to the Commissioners.

6425. What is it?—It is the last paragraph of this letter.

6426. You can read it?—If you prefer a request to the Commissioners that I should be permitted, "not only to add you in making a statement, but also to act for you before the Commissioners when they investigate that statement; and if the Commissioners accede to that request, I am willing to go over and give you every assistance in my power."

6427. Do you make that request for yourself?—I do; for myself.

6428. I am obliged to tell you, as I did one or two others, that the Commission have carefully considered that question, and cannot accede to it?—Well, then, will I have the privilege of replying to Mr. Butt, and telling him that that is the answer of the Commissioners?

6429. Oh, certainly?—Before I lay my statement before you I would wish to have an answer from Mr. Butt, and these other documents.

6430. Very well. Then your examination will be deferred till our next visit. If you wish to send in any written statement it must be sent in to the secret lary by to-morrow week, through the governor. You will put it into an envelope, and hand it to the governor by to-morrow week. If you do not choose to send in any statement you can inform the governor so, and he will inform us at that time. We ask for it by to-morrow week, in order that we may have time to consider it before we see you personally. The next time that you come before us must be understood to be the final examination, and you will necessarily make up your mind as to whether you will make any statement to us or not?—Yes, my lord.

6431. (Dr. Greenhow.) You understand that you may close the envelope, so that the governor may not see your statement?—If I do make a statement, of course I will hold it until you come.

6432. (Chairman.) No. We want you to forward it to us in order that we may consider it. You should send it to us by to-morrow week. What Dr. Greenhow means is, that you should put it in a closed envelope, so that it may come to us as it leaves you?—Mr. Butt

The prisoner withdrew.

EDWARD POWELL, prisoner, recalled.

6436. (Chairman.) Power, when you were here before you asked for various papers and documents; have you received them?—Some of them, my lord.

6437. Will you state what you have received?—“Abstracts from prison books at Millbank, Portland, and Woking, relating to me.”

6438. You have received those?—I have received the abstracts. I may add, though, that I believe them to be imperfect. I believe the abstracts are imperfect.

6439. You have received what profess to be abstracts?—Yes, what profess to be abstracts, my lord. “All suppressed letters written by me in ‘Millbank, Portland, and Woking, with the cause of their suppression, or any other remarks appended by the governor.’”

6440. You have received those?—Yes, my lord, I have also received these.

6441. What else have you received?—I asked for the “case sheets containing medical history of my illness in Portland, Millbank, and Woking.” I have received some case sheets, but I think the only one of them that can properly be called case sheets is the one I got from Portland.

6442. I must tell you, as I have told others, that the Commissioners are not responsible. They have not the documents under their control; and it has been decided by higher authority in London what documents should be supplied?—Yes, but I have been supplied from Portland with a case sheet. There is no harm in my handing in that, to show that it is not a medical case sheet. What I have received here I believe not to be a true copy of the case sheets.

6443. From what prison did that come?—From Woking. I think it is evidently prepared for the occasion.

6444. Extracts from case sheets, is it?—No; I asked for the original case sheets, but I have been furnished with copies. I am satisfied with what I received from Portland. I believe this to be a true copy from Portland. It is the only one that is signed “a true copy.” It is signed by Dr. Blaker “a true copy.” The others have not got that signature.

6445. Go on?—That is all I have received, my lord. There were some others that I asked for that I have not got.

6446. (Mr. Broadrick.) What are those which you asked for and have not got?—“Memorial regarding ‘my health, forwarded by me from this prison to the ‘Secretary of State, with the accompanying medical ‘certificates.’”

6447. Was it written by you?—Written by me to the Secretary of State.

6448. (Dr. Lyeon.) What was the date?—I have a say, here that he has been in communication with the Commissioners since that previous to my letter.

6433. Yes?—And if I was aware of that at the time—if I was told of it—it would facilitate the business of the Commission, not to have them come again; because I would be prepared probably, and would have your answer if I knew Mr. Butt’s answer, so it is not my fault in detaching the business.

6434. (Dr. Lyeon.) I wish to know from you if you distinctly understand that though the Commission cannot hear Mr. Butt as counsel before them, for you, it still is quite open to you to have Mr. Butt, or any person else, to advise with you in private in the preparation of your statement, or any oral evidence that you may have to give?—Yes, this letter tells me that.

6435. But do you understand it distinctly?—Yes, I understand it distinctly. This letter tells me so. But his presence at the investigation is necessary, because I can draw up my own statement, and I have those documents to refer to, and my memory.

copy of the memorial here, which I intend to read further on.

6449. (Chairman.) You say you received a copy?—This is a memorial I forwarded about four months ago. I do not know the exact date of the memorial.

6450. But you have not received it?—I have not received a copy.

6451. (Dr. Lyeon.) About when was it?—I think about four months ago, “with the accompanying ‘medical report, and the reply from the Secretary of State.’” That was also in the application.

6452. (Mr. De Vere.) You complain that you have not got a copy of a memorial written about four months ago?—About that time.

6453. Or of the answer thereto?—Yes, and of the accompanying medical report.

6454. (Mr. Broadrick.) Did you apply for those one memorial of your own?—Only one memorial, sir. It is the only one that I sent from this prison, so there can be no mistake whatever about it.

6455. (Chairman.) Is there anything else that you have not received?—“All certificates in reference to ‘my health, forwarded by medical officers of Millbank, Portland, and Woking prisons to the Secretary of State, board of directors, and governors of ‘prisons; and the reports made by medical officers ‘to each other on my removal from one prison to the ‘other, including that from Monsey to Millbank.” I also applied for “the rule of the Home Office relative to the release of invalid convicts,” and when I made the application, I think, my lord, you said you had not the power to grant it, but that I might memorialize the Home Office. I did memorialize the Secretary of State. This is a copy of the memorial, which I will read for you:—

“Deeming it essential for the due preparation of my statement, and to enable me to lay my case properly before the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the treatment of treason-felony prisoners in English prisons, I applied before the Commission on the 30th ultimo for the rule of the Home Office relative to the release of invalid convicts whose health seemed to be impaired by prolonged imprisonment, as exemplified and carried into effect in the case of Sir Colling Buxley and other criminal convicts. The Commission suggested an application to the Home Office.

I remain, sir,
Your obedient servant,
EDWARD POWELL.

“P.S.—Should this application be complied with, it is necessary I should be furnished with same before the Commission resume their sitting in this prison on Wednesday the 5th June.”

I have had no answer to this, my lord. That is all the applications that I made. I have some of the papers; the others I have not got.

6456. I explained to you before, that it rested with the Government authorities to decide what should be supplied to you and what should not?—With reference to the medical cases?

6457. With reference to these I may tell you that they will be in our hands probably, in full, and the Commissioners therefore will be able from them to examine upon any points which you might not be able to touch on from the abstracts, if they be abstracts, in your hands. It does not rest with us to decide, as I say, what papers shall be placed in your hands or not; that rests with others?—But, my lord, I do not think it proper for the Secretary of State that he should take this matter in his hands. You must be aware that he is on his trial as well as the prison authorities.

6458. I am not going to argue that point with you. I have told you that it does not rest with us but with the directors of prisons and the Secretary of State?—About those medical case sheets, it is absolutely necessary that I should be furnished with them. If you look at that, I was admitted into the infirmary at Portland for phthisis, and I have been 15 months in prison since.

6459. We will consider with the governor whether you are entitled, consistently with the rules laid down by the central authorities, to have any more of those supplied to you. If it be consistent with the rules they will be supplied to you?—Then am I to understand that the Commission has only a limited power?

6460. You are to understand exactly what I have told you, that we have no power to order the production of documents. That rests with the authorities?—Then I do not see the use of going any further in the matter.

6461. You will make up your own mind as to that?—I forwarded a requisition to be examined by the medical gentlemen of the Commission.

6462. Yes; the governor brought that under notice. That will be considered. There is no answer to it now. We will be here another day?—And positively I will not get those documents?

6463. I cannot tell you. That rests, as I say, with the authorities. Some of them you certainly will not

The prisoner withdrew.

Capt. Harris.

Captain HARRIS recalled.

6464. (Chairman.) Resolute has stated to us, Captain Harris, that he has applied for a statement or memorial to the Secretary of State sent in August 1857, and also for a statement sent by him to the board of directors in February 1858. Are those the documents which you mentioned to us to-day?—No; those are not the documents I mentioned to-day, my lord. He applied for copies of applications to see the governor at Pentonville. The suppressed letters that I mentioned he got to-day; the others he has not yet received.

6465. Power stated to us that he wanted a memorial regarding his health, which he sent to the Secretary of State four months ago. Has he asked for that memorial?—He has, my lord, but he had particular stress on the reply.

6470. He will have an answer one way or the other as regards these?—Yes.

6471. He spoke also of the "reports of the medical officers of the three prisons, Millbank, Portland, and Woking, to the Secretary of State, based of directors and governors of prisons, and those made by the medical officers of those prisons to each other" on his removal from one prison to another?—These will be considered.

6472. "The rule of the Home Office relative to the release of invalid convicts?"—That will be laid before the Commission.

6473. (Mr. Brodribb.) Have you received from each prisoner a written statement of the documents which he required?—Some of the prisoners have made application to me verbally; but nearly the whole of the get, because rules have been laid down against giving them in other cases; but I cannot tell you exactly what you will get?—Will I get the medical report that accompanied the memorial to the Secretary of State?

6464. That I cannot tell you. It rests, I must again say, with the Secretary of State and not with us to give or withhold it?—I am not prepared to go on now, at all events, even if I intended to hand in a statement. Some of those papers I only just looked at and some I did not open. I received a letter from Mr. Bent which makes it doubtful whether I ought to make a statement to the Commission at all.

6465. If you do prepare a statement it should be sent through the governor, in a sealed envelope, to the Secretary of this Commission by to-morrow week, in order that we may have an opportunity of considering it before we come here to hear your oral statement. We will fix a subsequent day to hear the oral statement of each prisoner or prisoners as may make statements. If, however, by next Friday you decide to withdraw from the inquiry and not to make any statement, it is open to you to do so, and you would then inform us that you do so. If you send in any statement and when we come again you wish to make an oral statement, you can do so. But then it is to be understood that at our next visit it will be the final examination, and you will accordingly decide whether you will or will not make a statement?—Would the Commissioners compare the case sheets I have received with the originals, and see if this is anything like a copy?

6466. We shall have the papers before us to deal with them, and shall perhaps do that when the investigation goes on. We shall be quite prepared, if you allege, for instance, that the documents you have been supplied with is not a fair representation of your case from the original document, to compare them for our own satisfaction, and to see whether, as far as it went, it was a fair representation?—There is no disease marked in this sheet at all. There is in the Portland one.

6467. We shall be prepared to compare them if necessary.

documents have been asked for on paper as well. Many of them put (in the application book) the question to me, "Can I receive such a document?" and I have on their verbal applications referred one or two questions; but I think the whole have now been put in writing.

6474. It appears material that you should have before you a complete list of what it is they have asked for, with a view to inform them ultimately how many of those documents they can have, and how many of them they are not to receive?—I will take care to have such a list made, and they will be informed accordingly. But until the documents are ready to be given to them you do not wish that they should be informed.

6475. No, I think it is better not?—There may be some delay in copying, but on the receipt of authority for the issue of any document you would wish the prisoners to be informed at once.

6476. Yes. Wherever there is a final arrangement they may be informed?—Very well.

6477. (Chairman.) We have told them that if they submit a written statement they must send it through you in a sealed envelope, which you will be kind enough to forward at once to the Commission?—Certain.

6478. (Dr. Ligon.) You will not think it necessary to open or examine the documents?—Not if they are addressed to the Commission.

6479. (Chairman.) They may be received up to such an hour as to be in time for the post on Friday, so as to reach London on Saturday morning?—Very well, my lord.

6480. If they make any communication at the same time as regards their future intention it would be well to make it known to us?—I shall, my lord.

6481. For instance, if they all had said that they

The witness withdrew.

DENNIS D. MURCAM, prisoner, recalled.

6483. (Chairman.) Do you wish to see us again?—Yes, my lord; I wish to ask one or two questions. You have limited the time for preparing a statement to a week, I believe?

6484. Yes?—But with regard to the time that those documents will be furnished there may be very great delay in giving them to us, my lord.

6485. We have been asking Captain Harris to do what he can to place them in your hands as soon as possible?—If a statement is to be sent, it will be essential to have those memorials and statements embodied in it.

6486. They will be supplied as soon as they can?—Of course I could not go on without them. Is there any objection that I should communicate with Mr. Butt, and state to him the conditions on which the Commissioners propose to proceed; to write to Mr. Butt, my lord, and tell him; is there any objection?

6487. As far as we are concerned, none whatever. Not writing to Mr. Butt any private matter, however?—I mean as to whether a letter will be allowed to pass out from the prison.

6488. If you put into the letter nothing but what is relevant to the inquiry?—What is desired here to-day, my lord, on these terms to be some understanding between the public outside—

6489. We cannot interfere with the governor's discretion; but I presume that it is the wish of the central authorities that communication should be free so far as related to the subject of the inquiry?—Did I understand your lordship to say that the report of Messrs. Pollock and Knox would not be allowed?

6490. It will not?—Well, my lord, I want say that I think that a very important document; for if I gave certain evidence to them, which they have suppressed, I should think it very important and requisite to understand that.

6491. That is no part of our inquiry?—But I have learned from my friends that that report has been made use of repeatedly by the Home Secretary; and I can show you, without going over one line of my own evidence. The question put to me the other day by Dr. Lyons, with regard to the bread and water, was, whether I was particularly sure that I received so many days bread and water. I find I was perfectly accurate, and that I was five days and a half. I wish to show that I have stated many important matters to these Commissioners that were not stated in that report, and that report was used as evidence against us to prove that we were untruthful. Therefore, I consider it very important to have that report, to point out the portions of our evidence that were suppressed.

6492. No, you cannot do that?—Then, my lord, in this case the Secretary of State won't be informed of the true nature of the report in the present instance; because, if I could show that I stated those things to these gentlemen, and that they suppressed them, it would show the Secretary of State that he had done us a great injury.

6493. We cannot go into that?—Very good, my lord.

6494. (Dr. Lyons.) But you can go into anything that you think material in the absence of that report?—Yes; but if I had the report of Messrs. Pollock and Knox I could show that I stated to them two or three very important facts with regard to the bread and water, and the homocystids, and being sent to Dartmoor when it was known—as I can show from the very documents I have here now, which have come from the prison books, and which are the most meagre abstracts had made up their minds not to come before us. We should be glad to be informed of anything of that kind?—I shall inform the Commissioners.

6495. (Dr. Lyons.) You will leave them to exercise their full discretion as to whether they will or will not make a statement to the Commissioners?—I will leave them to themselves altogether.

6496. It is quite right that you should?—For I would be only acting under a misapprehension otherwise. That was the reason that I made application to see your lordship before you left, to see could I have that report of Messrs. Pollock and Knox.

6497. No, you cannot?—There are two or three other matters that I wish to add. I asked for original notes. I have no doubt that it will be said that much of this evidence was concocted, and I wish therefore to have as much corroborative testimony as I can procure; besides there were notes that were found on me in Millbank before I was six months in prison. I was told here that these notes were not forthcoming. They were original notes found on me in Millbank Prison in November 1866, and they had reference to the treatment in the convict prisons of Penzance and Portland at the time, and were made at the very time in prison.

6498. (Mr. Bradbick.) Made by yourself?—Made by myself, at the recollection of the severe punishment I suffered. I would have passed them out if I could.

6499. (Chairman.) Have you asked for them?—I have asked for them, my lord, and I am told that they are not forthcoming; in fact, they say they have not the prison books up to September 1867, my lord.

6500. Do I understand that those were notes made by yourself?—Yes, they were notes made by me, my lord.

6501. To refresh your memory?—No, my lord. In prison you are not allowed to make any copy, but the treatment was so severe that I made the notes.

6502. They were found on your person?—They were found in this way, my lord. I had a scapular, and they were affixed to the back of it by a piece of black stuff which I found in the quarries in Portland. It may be told to you that I opened this scapular; I did not. I found a piece of black lining and stuck it to the back of the scapular to hide these notes. They were found, and they were handed up by the Roman Catholic chaplain at Millbank, the Reverend Father Zenati.

6503. (Dr. Lyons.) In what prison were the notes made?—In Portland Prison, Dr. Lyons.

6504. When were they taken from you?—They were taken from me in December 1866, when I was removed from Dublin to Millbank. They were all made in prison.

6505. Where were they taken from you?—In the prison.

6506. In what prison?—In Millbank Prison. They were handed up by the Reverend Father Zenati, the Roman Catholic chaplain.

6507. How did he come to find them?—The scapular was given to him by the prison authorities, and he opened them and handed them up. You will find an entry made in the caption sheet which refers to them, and it is stated that there was no punishment, but I will explain that there was punishment, for I was sent to Dartmoor in consequence of it. This was the punishment—to be removed to Dartmoor.

6508. You say that you were removed to Dartmoor in consequence of that?—I do. These notes were handed in after Christmas; I think Christmas-day in that year was on Tuesday. It was in 1868, if I remember right. Between the Monday and Saturday the notes were handed in, and on the following Tuesday—whether it was the last day of the old year or the first day of the new year, I think it was the first of the new year—I was brought before Dr. Govan. It is usual there but not here, that before being put on bread and water or penal class diet, you are examined by the doctor: have you are not, unless you are going to be flogged. I was examined by Dr. Govan, and it was on that occasion he made the remark that my left lung was weak, and that I had considerable abdominal breathing. He makes no allusion to that, and that is the reason that I called attention to his abstract of the medical case sheets, which I say is no abstract at all.

Capt Harris.

6509. What extent did the notes run to?—They were considerable. I picked up the small scraps of paper that I could find anywhere—small margins. I had these concealed, and would pass them out to show the mode of treatment.

6510. (Mr. De Vere.) I wish to point out how the original notes taken by the medical officer, and laid before the Commission, will work out in the actual examination, you have stated the fact here of a conversation between you and the medical officer, which you say does not appear in what you call the medical abstract furnished to you?—Yes.

6511. In the course of your examination you will state that fact to the Commission. The Commissioners will immediately refer, not to your medical abstract, but to the original document, which will lie on the table. You may trust the Commission to look carefully to it, and to see whether your statement is well founded or not. In that way, by the combined action of your verbal statement, and of a reference to the original document, which will be before the Commission, I have no doubt a satisfactory conclusion will be arrived at?—I have no reason, Mr. De Vere, at all to doubt the attention that will be given to any case by the Commissioners. I have every reason to believe that they will give it every attention; but what I do complain of, and with great reason, is the mode in which I am not allowed to procure assistance; because I consider it of the first importance that I should know, first of all, what I was invalided from Dartmoor Prison to this prison for. That is stated in the report. You will find that in Mr. Power's case sheet, signed by Dr. Govan. It is marked phthisis. I should say I am perfectly entitled to have that report fully filled up according to the printed headings, and to be told what I was invalided for. I think you will all agree with me, though you may not have the power to remedy it, that in that abstract nothing appears on the face of it to say how long I was spitting blood, or what my complaints, or applications, or treatment were. It is neither a history of the case, nor does it give a description of the treatment.

6512. (Chairman.) Having the document before us, we will supplement that as Mr. De Vere has clearly explained?—But I think, my lord, if I were furnished with the same amount of information relative to my case which was given by Dr. Blaker I would make no complaint; but I have not a list of medical treatment from the doctor at Millbank or this prison. The only one I do not object to is that given by Dr. Blaker, because he gives day and date, and he is satisfied to stand by his treatment. I respect the man that does that; but I do not like a man who says, "This is an abstract of his treatment," which is not. I understand, my lord, that you will let me have these materials as soon as possible.

6513. No; you will just understand, please, that whichever of those papers you have not received, and it is intended to give you, shall be given as soon as possible; but we cannot say how many of those you will have; it rests with the Secretary of State?—You see, my lord, that if they detain those papers to they did the last, and go on until Monday or Tuesday, and as there are several points to be written on, and I cannot write until I get them, it will be useless for me to promise to have the statement ready. I am suffering badly from dyspepsia, and I cannot sit a considerable time over writing.

6514. We will do what we can to expedite your being supplied with such documents as you are to receive?—The reason I make the observation, my lord, is that you should not think I had any object in coming before you on the next occasion, which will be the last, and saying I had not time to prepare a statement. I wish to tell you that the first of these were so given, some yesterday and some to-day; consequently if they are given in the same way next week, of course I cannot promise you the statement.

8 July 1870.

Captain DU CANE examined.

6515. (Chairman.) Captain Du Cane, I think it would be convenient for our future proceedings if I now go through the list of the documents for which prisoners have made application, and learn from you what the views of the Government are as to the granting or withholding of each class. Prisoners have asked for the suppressed letters that have been written by them?—They shall have them without any objection.

6516. They have asked for letters or memorials written by them to the Secretary of State, to the directors, or to other officials?—They can have those.

6517. They have asked to be furnished with written complaints made against the governor or officers of the different prisons, and handed to superior authority.

They will come under the same head as the last. They can have them.

6518. Then in any case of written complaints against the governor or any officer of the prison, they can have them?—They can have them.

6519. "References to prisoners in the record books" of the governor, medical officer, or directors; entries in those books relating to them?—I do not know what he means.

6520. I presume he means the notes made in the report books on the reports?—I think it is objectionable to furnish those.

6521. Not to be furnished?—Not to be furnished to the prisoners, but to be furnished to the Commission.

6522. "Reports made by subordinate officers to the "governor, by the governor to the directors, by the directors to the Secretary of State, and by the Secretary of State to the public, in any way relating to them." Those you will not give?—I should say not, but to the Commissioners certainly.

6523. (Dr. Greenhouse.) As a rule we are to have everything?—Everything.

6524. Then it is not necessary to mention that qualification in every case?—No.

6525. (Chairman.) Official reports and statements made by medical officers in reference to the prisoner?—Not to be given to the prisoner, I think.

6526. Reports transmitted from one prison to another as the prisoner was removed?—Not to the prisoner.

6527. The medical case sheets?—Orders have been given that the prisoner's complaint and prescriptions, such as would be known to an ordinary patient, should be given to him, as requested formerly.

6528. (Dr. Lyons.) There is a passage in a letter of yours that deals with that?—Yes; it was in my circular of the 2nd July. "That prisoners who apply may also be furnished by the medical officer with a statement showing the dates of admission to and discharge from hospital, and such statement of his treatment as would be made in ordinary professional practice to a patient."

6529. (Mr. Broadbent.) The question is, whether medical case sheets should be furnished to the prisoner. You in your reply will be able to limit any account you may give, in such terms as you may think proper. —Well, I should say that such statement as is laid down in the memorandum that was drawn up the last time I was here and embodied in my circular, would be what I should think proper.

6530. (Dr. Lyons.) The question arises in this way, that several prisoners have asked for full, exact copies of their medical case sheets, kept as records of their cases in the several prisons. What we want to know is, what on reference to these documents you, on the part of the authorities, are prepared to allow to be given. I think we must bear in mind that we have already before us the letter of yours of the 2nd July 1870. I put that letter back into your hands, and after that explanation ask you to define what you mean?—I should be prepared to adhere to what is

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. BACON.
STEPHEN E. DE VEE, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENHOUSE.

Mr. WILLIAM PITT BUTTS recalled.

6543. (Chairman.) Mr. Butts, Captain De Cane has forwarded to the Commission a letter containing a report from you to the effect that you had furnished the prisoners all the documents asked for by them which it was decided they should receive?—Yes, all the documents that were allowed by the Secretary of State.

6546. Can you tell us what those documents were in each case? Have you the list of them?—I have, my lord.

6547. Do you now hold in your hand a list of the documents that have been so furnished?—I do, my lord.

6548. Will you be kind enough to hand it in?—Yes, my lord. (Witness hands in a document.)

6549. Among these documents so furnished to the prisoners, are the suppressed letters that have been written by them included?—They are, my lord.

written there; but if that is not sufficiently full in the opinion of the Commission, I should like to ask the medical officers concerned what is their opinion as to what should be given.

6551. (Chairman.) "Rules of the House Office relative to the release of invalid convicts"?—I think you must ask the Secretary of State if he will give that. One man has applied, but no answer has been sent. That is not in my department.

6552. (Dr. Lyons.) That was Power, I think?—I think it was Power, but I am not quite sure. I cannot answer.

6553. (Chairman.) Dates of admission to and discharge from infirmary?—That they have been ordered to be supplied with.

6554. Number and dates of letters written by the prisoners?—Does that mean written and sent out?

6555. Written and intended to be sent out, I suppose?—They may be supplied with those, so far as we know.

6556. Caption sheets?—The caption sheet is the official document which enables us to keep custody of a prisoner.

6557. I presume that that will be handed to us, and not to them?—Certainly.

6558. The report and decision of the governor or director on each complaint?—I must take the decision of the Secretary of State on that.

6559. The character that accompanies the prisoners from prison to prison?—Not to be furnished to the prisoners.

6560. Reports made by subordinate officers in prisons to the governor or director respecting the prisoner?—Not to the prisoners.

6561. Instructions received from the directors by the governor regarding the prisoner?—Not to be furnished to the prisoners.

6562. Reports made by governors to directors, and by directors to the Secretary of State?—Not to be furnished to the prisoners.

6563. Messrs. Knox and Pollock's report; we told them they would not have that?—I should ask the Secretary of State on that point. If the Commission do not request it the question drops.

6564. We told the prisoners that they would not have it?—Then the question drops.

officers in the prison to the governor, by the governor to the directors, by the directors to the Secretary of State to the public, in any way relating to those prisoners, have any such been supplied to them?—No, my lord.

6555. With regard to the documents to which I now refer—namely, reports against the prisoners—have you had any instructions from the directors or the Secretary of State in reference to them?—They have been furnished with copies of their reports and the decisions on them.

6556. (Mr. Bradbick.) The prisoners were?—The prisoners were.

6557. Have they been so supplied?—Yes.

6558. With a copy of the reports?—A copy of the reports; the crimes, and the adjudication on them.

6559. But not of any reports made by the directors to the Secretary of State about them?—No.

6560. (Chairman.) Then, so far as you know, they have copies of all the reports made against them in prison, and the adjudications on them by you or the directors?—They have, my lord, since they have been in prison.

6561. With regard to medical reports and statements, what have been supplied to them?—The medical officer has furnished them with reports of their cases and treatment whilst they have been in hospital under his care.

6562. A statement showing the dates of admission to and discharge from hospital, and a statement of the treatment?—I think that is what they have been furnished with, my lord.

6563. Mr. Bates, have the full case sheets and memoranda of the medical officers on each case been laid on the table for the information of the Commission?—They have been supplied to you.

6564. The dates of admission to and discharge from the infirmary they have been supplied with?—They have been supplied.

6565. (Mr. Bradbick.) When you say "they," I presume you mean those prisoners who have applied?—A copy of their medical cases has been supplied to the Commission, and the prisoners have also been supplied with a statement of their medical treatment, but I cannot say exactly what it is.

6566. With regard to the statements that you have just referred to, have they been supplied to each prisoner, or only to those who have applied for them?—Only to those who have applied for them.

6567. (Chairman.) With regard to the number and dates of letters written and intended to be sent out by the prisoners, has any such information been supplied for by them?—They applied for their suppressed letters, and they were given to them.

6568. What has been done with regard to the caption sheets?—They have not been supplied to them.

6569. "The report and decision of the governor or director on each complaint?" does your former answer apply to that?—As far as punishment went; where they were punished by the governor or director.

6570. (Mr. Bradbick.) And that has been furnished not only to the Commission but to the prisoners?—Yes.

6571. Namely, Ross and O'Connell?—They certainly have had them.

6572. (Chairman.) Is there any document supplied that has not come under the description of any of those I have named?—I think not, my lord. I think that embraces all of them.

6573. (Dr. Ligon.) Are the penal records, or the "caption sheets," as you term them now, forthcoming and placed on the table for the use of the Commission?—They are.

6574. Do you hand in a return of the diets supplied to the treason-felony convicts?—Yes; that is exactly what they get during the course of the week, every day. (Hands in a document.)

6575. For how long have they been getting the diet recorded in this table?—I cannot say exactly. It was before I came here that the diet was altered.

6576. Can you find out the date on which that diet commenced?—Yes, that can be done.

6577. (Dr. Greenleaf.) I see in these sheets records of offences that the prisoners have committed. Do these sheets contain the whole record, or is there anything supplementary?—They do not furnish the evidence.

6578. Where is the evidence?—That is contained in the report sheets.

6579. (Mr. Bradbick.) Does this paper contain the full record of each prisoner's offence and the mode in which it is disposed of?—Yes, it is a copy.

6580. That is an exact copy of the evidence on which the punishment was awarded?—Yes.

6581. In this prison?—Yes, and I believe in the other prisons also. They have got a copy of all their reports; but I do not think the whole evidence of the reports in the other prisons is there, because we could not get it. There is no evidence from the other prisons; it is merely the crime with the punishment. The prisoner Deroy has asked me to give you this. (Hands in a letter.) He thinks that if you read it you will not want him.

The witness retired.

6582. The Chairman read the following letter:—

"To the Commissioners of Inquiry,

"Gentlemen, Chesham, 19th July 1876.

"I will adhere to the opinion expressed in my letter to you of the 2nd instant, that the manner of conducting your inquiry is not such as to give the prisoners a fair chance of proving the truth of their statements. I have asked the advice of my friends "and they entirely approve of my resolution of giving no evidence before this Commission. The reasons I gave for my refusal still appear to me to be good, and I am not aware of any others sufficiently strong to justify me in adopting a different course.

"I am, Gentlemen,

"Yours very respectfully,
"JOHN DEROY."

JOHN DEROY, prisoner, read.

6583. (Chairman.) Deroy, when you were here before you handed in to us a paper in which you expressed your intention of not having anything to do with the Commission, and stated that that was your final resolution?—Yes, sir.

6584. We thought it right then to say, that if you changed your mind by the 19th you might have an opportunity of making any statement to us that you desired. We are now assembled again; are you prepared to hand any statement in to the Commission?—No, sir—no, my lord, I should say; but as you told me that I could communicate with my friends and ask their advice, I consulted of the opportunity, and I found that my friends were of the same opinion as myself, and I just wrote that paper to hand to you.

6585. This is written by yourself?—Written by myself. (Identifies his letter.)

6586. And at your own suggestion?—Yes, anything I wrote is mine.

6587. And you wrote it without the exercise of any constraint on the part of anybody?—Yes, without any constraint on the part of anybody.

6588. And this expresses your final resolution?—Yes, my lord.

The prisoner retired.

J. Deroy.

Mr. WILLIAM P. BUTTS recalled.

6589. (Chairman.) Have you a communication to make, Mr. Butts?—Yes, my lord. Ross has just written that, and sent it to you.

The witness handed in a letter and withdrew.

6590. The Chairman read the following letter:—

"To the Commissioners of Inquiry.

"Chatham Prison,

"GENTLEMEN,

July 18th, 1870.

"I have not made any additional statement owing to the unsatisfactory manner in which I found myself supplied with materials. In my letter to you of June 25th, I mentioned several things that I deemed necessary to see, and of these I have got nine of twelve letters written by me, and a copy of what purports to be the prison records in my case. I regret to have to say that I do not consider this a full or a fair transcript. It cannot be copied from the original books, for I was the words of the accusations in many charges, and in nearly all I miss what the governor used to read, and sometimes need to write as my reply. This is not fair. I will ask you to use your influence to have all books where I am concerned produced; for instance, I distinctly recollect that the governor of Portland Prison read out of a book for me a charge that I was detected writing to another man's wife, and here is the way I find the charge in my copy, with my reply absent:—'6th November 5th. Having letters in his possession for the purpose of obtaining money and tobacco trafficking.' I will also ask you to call for those letters. My wife has visited me, and I intend having her as a witness to give her opinion to you as to whether those letters were written to her or the wife of another man. From the papers she laid before me, I find that Messrs. Knox and Pollock could not even afford to fire my character from this occasion. The Secretary of State knows that since you were here I applied for a copy of Messrs. Knox and Pollock's report, and he leaves my application unattended to as yet. I have been shown by my wife an official statement emanating from that honorable gentleman, and I very reluctantly say that there is something wrong in every paragraph of it. He says my letters to my wife were suppressed because they contained falsehoods. I present to you six of these letters; one absent. I undertake to show you that they do not contain a single falsehood; and with all due respect I ask you to write the Secretary of State to be present. I submit to you four or five pointed letters, printed as for me. I write my name on each to acknowledge the authorship, and I undertake to show you that they contain no falsehood.

"I submit to you a copy of a pamphlet headed, 'Things not generally known,' and I have drawn a line outside at every paragraph regarding the matter of which I feel able to give evidence. I submit to you two memorials to the Secretary of State. The one proposing the Messrs. Knox and Pollock's inquiry contains several things which I was prepared to lay before them. The Government of the day replied that they saw nothing in my memorial to call for interference, but we have a Liberal Government now. I also submit a suppressed letter of Mr. McCarthy Downing, M.P., for Cork, and some correspondence between him and Mr. Bruce relative to my being in chains 25 days, and on this matter it would be most important that both honorable gentlemen would stand as witnesses and hear the evidence on the subject. I apprehend that you will have delays regarding books, witnesses, &c., and as my wife cannot be present at my examination, I hope that while the Commission lasts you will have no objection that I should have any assistance I can derive, by consulting with her during the hours I am discharged with you.

"I remain, Gentlemen,

"Yours very obediently,

"JEREMIAH O'DONOVAN (ROSS).

"P.S.—I desire that all witnesses at the inquiry be examined on oath. As to the suppression of my letters I will submit to you a few words on a very late case. Two months ago I wrote to my wife. The letter contained passages that were considered objectionable, and was suppressed. I re-wrote it, leaving out those passages, and the governor then told me it was all right, and would be sent, and in fact told me it was posted. I learn from my wife now that she never got such a letter."

CHARLES UNDERWOOD O'CONNELL, prisoner, recalled.

6591. (Chairman.) O'Connell, are you now prepared to write and discuss of making any statement to us?—I am not prepared, my lord. I am quite willing, if I get the proper facilities, to make a statement.

6592. We are informed that you have had all each of the documents that you have applied for, as the Government.—My lord, I have not got—6593. You did not hear me finish. We are informed that you have had all each of the documents that you have applied for, as the Government think it right that you should have?—I have only got a few, my lord, and the most important have been withheld from me, and my objections that could be possibly devised have been thrown in my way by the Government authorities.

6594. What documents have you applied for which have not been supplied to you?—I have a copy, my lord, of the requisition that I have made for the various documents. I have been informed by the governor that those documents are in the hands of the Commission, and that I would not be allowed to have them. This is a copy of my requisition:—

"Chatham Prison,

8th July 1870.

"SIR,

"To enable me to prepare a statement of my case for the Commissioners appointed to inquire into our treatment, it is indispensably necessary that I should be furnished with copies of the official documents and records which I have already named and asked for in my application. I again to be furnished with the whole of my suppressed letters; copies of all the reports or charges made against me, and the entries—

6595. Have you not been supplied with your suppressed letters?—Part of them, my lord, not all.

6596. You mean some of the letters?—Some of them I have been supplied with, my lord, but not all.

6597. How many suppressed letters have not been supplied to you?—I cannot say, but I have got seven.

6598. How do you know that there are other suppressed letters beyond that number?—I know that I wrote more than seven letters.

6599. You cannot say how many more you wrote?—I cannot. Letters were received at the prison for me. I was told that letters had come and were suppressed.

6600. That is, letters addressed to you?—Letters addressed to me, my lord.

6601. What is the next?—Copies of all official or unofficial reports and statements, private and public, made by the medical officers, governors, directors, and members of the British Government in reference to me, including orders and instructions of the Home Office and directors of prisons in my case.

6602. With regard to the last, the Government have decided that some of them shall not be furnished to the prisoners. What under that head have you received?—I will lay before you, my lord, the only documents that I have been supplied with. This is what purports to be a copy of what they term my prison offences:—"Record of the prison offences of Charles Underwood O'Connell." It is incomplete and incorrect. I do not feel well able to read.

6603. Sit down. There is a chair.—The first one I got was what purports to be a copy from the application book.

6604. That is the application book for interviews, is it?—A copy of my application, my lord, to the governor of Chatham Prison and to the director.

6603. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you call that Number 2?—Number 2, doctor. Have you taken notice of the first one, sir?

6604. (Chairman.) Yes.

6605. (Dr. Lyons.) The first thing you speak of were my suppressed letters?—Yes, doctor.

6606. Of which you say there are some you have not got?—

6607. (Mr. Bradrick.) How many have you received?—I have received seven, Mr. Bradrick.

6608. (Dr. Lyons.) Was your Number 2 a record of the prison offences?—Yes.

6609. Number 3 is "Copies of applications to the governor of Chatham Prison"?—Yes. I give them to you in the order in which I got them. The next are two documents that I got from the medical officer, and that is the most surprising part of the whole.

6610. What do you call them?—Well, I do not know what to call them, doctor; but for me to think single-handed of condemning any man with such a man as the medical officer of this prison, who is prepared at any moment to say or do anything to order, is more than I can accomplish.

6611. (Chairman.) You complain that that is an unsatisfactory and insufficient statement?—Not alone is what he has given me unsatisfactory and incomplete, but it is grossly false. You will please to recollect, gentlemen, that on a former occasion I read for you one of my suppressed letters.

6612. (Dr. Lyons.) Kindly name for clearness sake the medical officers' reports that you have there. Have you one, or more than one?—I have two.

6613. Of what medical officer?—Dr. Burns.

6614. Are they both from Dr. Burns?—They are both from Dr. Burns. He told me he wrote them with his own hand.

6615. (Dr. Greenham.) Do they refer to this prison only, or to other prisons also?—To this prison only. I have got nothing from the other prisons; nothing whatever. He gives me no date. He states in it that my diet consisted of beef tea, and when I asked him in the presence of one of my fellow-prisoners, "Doctor, how could you state that my diet was beef tea, when you gave it to me only once, for the purpose of stating that I was on beef tea?" "Oh, yes," says he, "once?" and then he runs away and comes back again, and says, "Look, I have it down but once; beef tea once; that day only." He has given me these two documents, and I very much doubt that he has given me correct copies of what the prison books will show.

6616. (Chairman.) We are taking down now what have been supplied to you. What else have you received?—That is all, my lord, that I have been supplied with. I have endeavored to communicate with my friends, and my letters have been suppressed. I wrote to Mr. Molloy, and the letter was suppressed, although I wrote it solely on the subject of the Commission.

6617. (Dr. Lyons.) How do you know that the letter was suppressed?—I was informed by the governor of the prison that the Secretary of State suppressed it, and said that the documents I wanted he did not consider necessary for me.

6618. (Chairman.) When did you write to Mr. Molloy?—I wrote to him, my lord, I think, some time about the 8th. The letter is here. I saw the letter in the governor's hand. It was returned.

6619. Was it returned to you?—Oh no, my lord. I saw it in the possession of the governor, and he told me that the Secretary of State had ordered it to be suppressed.

6620. (Dr. Lyons.) You saw it in possession of Mr. Butts?—Yes, I saw it in the possession of Mr. Butts. I saw Mr. Butts refer to it, and heard him read a part of it.

6621. (Chairman.) That is not one of the series letters you were supplied with?—No, my lord.

6622. Then your statement to us now is, that you are unable to make any statement of your case in consequence of not having had the whole of the documents for which you applied?—Not alone that, my lord, but I have not got anything at all like fair play to make a statement.

6623. In what way have you not had fair play?—Nothing like fair play or honest play. I asked in the first place for various documents, and in the next I require assistance.

6624. We explained to you when we were here before the opportunities you would have of obtaining assistance in making a statement before your examination. Then do I understand that, taking things as they stand, you would decline to make a statement to us now?—Well, if you do not grant me what I consider fair and proper facilities, I see no other alternative for me, my lord. The odds are against me. Here is a letter that I directed to my father on the 12th May. I read it for you on a former occasion. I make certain statements in that letter, and I am prepared solemnly to confirm on oath everything I have written in that letter.

6625. We have no power to administer an oath?—So you told me, my lord. I should tell you that after I wrote this letter—I stated in the letter that there was no hospital or hospital treatment for me. I stated what passed between the doctor and me.

6626. One moment. Are you prepared to repeat these statements and to go into the proof of them, because if you are not prepared to lay them before us formally it is hardly worth while, perhaps, to state them?—I am quite prepared and quite ready, my lord, if I got proper and reasonable fair play to do so. You will allow me in the meantime to mention that, as I told you, I wrote this letter, and I stated those facts in it, and after I had written that letter, and sent it in to the prison authorities to be forwarded, the doctor came to me and he had me weighed, and he came in and commenced to talk to me, and he seemed to know not at all what was the matter with me, although knowing it well during the last 14 months. He put on a face of perfect innocence, and pretended that he wanted to know what was the matter with me. He went away and came back again and said he would change my diet.

6627. What was the date of this?—On the 12th of May.

6628. I mean the date of the interview?—The date of the interview was about a day or two after he had written the letter. He said he would change my food and put me on infusory diet. Well, I may tell you that that change was so nominal and partial as it was possible to be. After he makes that change he goes to work and he writes this statement on the back of my letter. I am told—after two weeks, I think, I am informed that this letter is suppressed, and I ask the governor why it is suppressed, and he tells me that the doctor had denied the statements in it. "The doctor," says he, "denies something that you state on the state of your health." Now, my lord and gentlemen, when the doctor came to me after writing this letter I repeated every word that I have stated. I reminded him of all he said, and so far was he from contradicting it that he said, "Yes, yes, I was not allowed. Yes, yes," says he, "I was not allowed. I state here as."

6629. (Dr. Lyons.) When did he say this?—He said this to me on the 12th May; on the 12th May.

6630. I thought you implied that it was a fortnight after that, that you had this conversation with him?—No, no. A fortnight afterwards I was told that this letter was suppressed. But look, doctor, what he said on it: "This prisoner has been reported as a weak man, subject to palpitations, but he is in better health now than when he came to this prison. He has refused to take his food. The other statements are false. He is at present on special diet of his own choice."

6633. (Chairman.) You either intend to make a statement or you do not. It appears to me you are beginning your statement now. But I understood from you when you first came in that if you did not get documents you would not make a statement. We must have a decision one way or the other. We can give you an answer exactly as to whether you can have any fresh documents or not. Then, if you please, you can make up your mind as to whether you elect to go on or not?—Do you will, my lord, proceed in your determination not to allow me to have the

The prisoner withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM P. BATES resumed.

6635. (Chairman.) The prisoner O'Connell has stated, Mr. Bates, that he has not been supplied with all the suppressed letters. How is that?—He has been supplied with all that we have got, my lord. I thought he had received all that he had asked for.

6636. How has been supplied with all that were in your control?—Certainly, my lord, and others from other persons that were sent here also.

6637. He said that he had been supplied with seven, and that he had written more?—We wrote to all the prisoners for his suppressed letters, and all that have been received have been given to him.

6638. (Mr. Bradrick.) I see here on this first page that four letters are stated as having been given by the governor on the 4th July 1870?—Yes.

6639. Have those been given over to O'Connell?—Yes, those were the letters in this prison; and the others are given to them as they came here. That is not arranged in any order.

6640. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you supply the Commission with an official statement of the number of letters that were suppressed, written for issue outside by O'Connell?—In this prison, I am.

6641. In this prison?—Decidedly.

6642. Could you do that without much delay?—They are all entered in a book. I will get the book for you.

6643. (Mr. Bradrick.) Would it include those that arrived for him and that have not been given to him?—Yes, the whole letters, in and out. (Witness produces a book and points out entries to the Chairman.)

6644. (Chairman.) Mr. Bates, do you produce this as a book containing, amongst other things, a record of all the suppressed letters in the case of Underwood O'Connell?—Yes, my lord, a register of letters. It contains all the letters written by prisoners and letters for them received at this prison.

6645. How many suppressed letters are recorded in this prisoner's case of those sought to be sent out by him?—There are three suppressed letters, as far as I can make out. Shall I read out the list?

6646. Yes, if you please?—Here is the whole account of his letters here. He did not write a reception letter. He was permitted to write in lieu of a reception letter. There is written against that, "Cancelled by the director."

6647. (Mr. Bradrick.) What date is that?—That is 18.4.69.

6648. (Mr. De Vere.) You may suppress a letter that has been written or cancel the leave to write it, which is meant?—I suppose it is cancelled. This is before my time. He wrote another in lieu of that, it appears, on 15.9.69. This letter was suppressed also by the Secretary of State's order. It was to Thomas Nelson Underwood.

6649. (Dr. Lyons.) Was it cancelled or suppressed?—Suppressed. He writes again 15.9.69, wrote on promotion to class; suppressed on director's order.

6650. (Mr. Bradrick.) Was that to his father?—No, that was to Mr. Underwood also. It was suppressed 25.9.69. He wrote a letter in lieu of that, 17.11.69, also to Thomas Nelson Underwood. That appears to have gone.

6651. (Dr. Lyons.) That was sent?—That was sent; at least it appears so from this book. He wrote assistance of Mr. Butt or my cousin if I write for them?

6654. Yes; that is so far as to their being present within this room. The time was fixed before at which the statement was to be completed and handed in. It was mentioned to you that any person, either those gentlemen or anybody else, might come and assist you in preparing a statement before that day?—Yes, my lord. I have communicated with Mr. Butt and Mr. Underwood, and they have refused to have anything to do with the Commission, except on certain conditions.

again 15.9.70, to his father; that was suppressed by the director's order. He wrote again, by the Secretary of State's permission, to Mr. Mosley, United States minister, which was forwarded.

6652. What was the date of that?—16.9.70.

6653. (Chairman.) That was June?—That was June, my lord.

6654. (Dr. Lyons.) That was sent out?—That was sent out; and he wrote to Mr. Butt on the 1st July 1870, which was forwarded. He wrote to Mr. Underwood on the 3rd July 1870, which was forwarded, and he wrote to Mr. Mosley on the 7th July 1870, which was suppressed. The letter he has not got. It was written whilst the inquiry was going on.

6655. (Chairman.) By whose order was the letter to Mr. Mosley suppressed?—By order of the Secretary of State.

6656. (Dr. Lyons.) What was the date of the one to Mr. Mosley?—The 7th July.

6657. (Chairman.) How many does that show to have been suppressed altogether?—All that he has got are down there, and the different dates.

6658. (Mr. De Vere.) Was there any communication made to him as to the reason why the letter to Mr. Mosley was suppressed?—Yes, I sent for him and told him that the Secretary of State refused to forward it.

6659. (Dr. Lyons.) Why was it suppressed?—I can give you a copy of the Secretary of State's letter. I can give you the reasons that were given to me, if you allow me to get the letter. I read the order for the letter being suppressed to him.

6660. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you state any reason to him for the suppression of the letter, or simply made the order?—I simply read the letter. I made no comment on it.

6661. (Dr. Lyons.) Is that suppressed letter amongst those that have been furnished to him?—No, he has not got it.

6662. Why has it not been given to him?—Because it is not one of those that he asked for. He asked for the letters written previously to the sitting of the Commission.

6663. (Chairman.) In point of fact he has had all the suppressed letters for which he asked?—As far as I have been able to get them, certainly.

6664. (Mr. Bradrick.) In what form did he ask for them?—Well, I think he put it on paper. There are so many things that they come up to see me about. I always put down the interview, stating what they want, and it is carried out.

6665. (Dr. Lyons.) He has been in several prisons—Pentonville, Portland, Millbank; and it is possible that he may have written in these some letters which he has not been supplied with?—We wrote to all the prisoners where this prisoner has been, and asked them to forward any suppressed letters they might have of his, which was done.

6666. Does that book in your hand contain a record of all his suppressed letters?—No; only those in this prison.

6667. (Chairman.) Communications have been addressed to the other prisoners for the purpose of receiving any suppressed letters of his that might be there?—They have, my lord.

C. C.
O'Connell
19 July 1870.

Mr.
W. P. Bates

Mr.
W. P. Butt.
12 July 1870.

6658. Have the letters which have come for him been given to him?—Those have not been given to him; that is, any that have been suppressed.

The witness withdrew.

CHARLES UNDERWOOD O'CONNELL, prisoner, recalled.

6659. (Chairman.) O'Connell, the Commissioners instruct me to inform you as follows:—That with regard to the papers for which you have asked, you have already received all the documents which the authorities will allow you to have; that your second letter to Mr. Montley, the United States minister, dated July 7th, was suppressed by order of the Secretary of State, and with that decision we cannot interfere; that we do not recognise what you have said as to the insecurity of the medical returns as sufficient ground for not making your statement, nor will we inquire into it in that respect, but that if you wish:—Pardon me, my lord; may I interrupt you. I did not give that as my reason at all; I only gave it as one of the reasons.

6671. We say that we will not inquire into that statement, but that if you wish to proceed with your allegations as regards the doctor's returns as a part of your general complaint—you understand the distinction—we will now proceed to inquire fully into it; and we have before us documents which have not been supplied to you, which will assist us in so doing. At the same time I am bound to tell you also that you must make up your mind on these intimations as to whether you will or will not lay before us a general statement of complaints, and that your decision on that to-day must be considered as final?—Yes, my lord. Well, when you answer me one question, my lord, I think I will be ready to give you a final answer as to the course that I intend to pursue. Do you adhere, sir, to your resolve not to allow me the assistance of a friend—Mr. Butt or Mr. Underwood—to act for me before your Commission?

6672. Yes?—You do, sir, refuse?

6673. Yes.

6674. (Dr. Greenleaf.) You were told that distinctly several times.

6675. (Dr. Lyons.) In what capacity do you want them to act for you?—To assist me in making out a statement of my case to lay before you, and then to act for me before this Commission, on my proving the allegations that I make in the statement.

6676. In what way to act?—To act for me, doctor.

6677. (Chairman.) To be present in this room?—Yes, my lord.

6678. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you mean to be present as counsel?—To be present as a friend to me—to act for me.

(The Commissioners briefly deliberated.)

6679. (Chairman.) You have asked me two questions, and I will answer both. You have asked me first, whether you would be allowed assistance for the preparation of a statement after this day. The answer that I must give you to that is, that ample time has been already given, that you have had an opportunity of receiving advice and assistance in preparing your statement before this day, and that we can give no further time. You asked me, secondly, whether Mr. Butt or any friend of yours could be present in the room during your examination, and to that I am bound to tell you, as we have already said in public more than once, and as probably has been conveyed to you before, that that will not be permitted. These are the two questions that you have put to me, and these are the answers?—Well, my lord, I was promised certain facilities. I was told that I could communicate and write to any friend on the subject of the inquiry. I applied to the prison authorities here for permission to write to Mr. McMahon, M.P., on the subject of the Commission. I asked on the 9th instant, and I went up again on the 11th. The deputy-governor told me that he had ordered me the paper to write subject to the governor's approval. I never have been furnished 6659. (Dr. Lyons.) None of these have been given to him?—No; they were not asked for, and we had no authority to give them.

Since with the paper, although I made two applications for it to write to Mr. McMahon.

6680. Well, what is your decision?—Well, my lord, as I understand that I can have no assistance—not the assistance of a friend to act for me before the Commission?

6681. No?—Well, my lord, I see nothing for me then but to read, with your permission and the permission of the other gentlemen of the Commission, this document.

6682. Does that document contain your answer?—It does, my lord; my final answer.

“Chatham Prison, 19th July 1870.”

“To the Commissioners appointed to inquire into “the treatment of treason-felony prisoners con“fined in English prisons.”

“GENTLEMEN,”

“When I was officially notified, on the 26th ult., that a Commission was appointed by the Government to inquire into our treatment, I thought I saw in that fact a sign of an intention on the part of the Government to give way to the ordinary rules of justice and fair play. I was told that every facility would be given to me to prepare a statement of my treatment to lay before the Commissioners, and prove the truth of the same. This was what I had desired for a long time, and I rejoiced accordingly. My attorney serves me right, Judge Keogh, in proving sentence on me, and that the object of consigning me to penal servitude was not so much to punish me as to deter others; but I find that to punish me in the fullest manner and at the same time hide it from the world by every possible artifice is the whole aim and object of the British Government. This is why I wish to make my treatment known to the public. I accede to willingly complain of it. For years I have been systematically done to death, at the same time that reports relating to my health—”

6683. Go out a moment.—(The prisoner withdrew, and was after some delay admitted.)

6684. You can go on, O'Connell?—This is why I wish to make my treatment known to the public. I accede to willingly complain of it. For years I have been systematically done to death, at the same time that reports relating to my health and character, of a most ungrateful nature, were put before my friends and the public. Any opportunity that I could get to set myself right with my friends in the outside world would be to me a welcome boon, and I declare that I hailed the appointment of a Commission of inquiry with very great satisfaction. I have not only been misrepresented in various ways, in official reports and statements, but subject to a line of exceptional treatment, carelessly designed to break down my health and reduce me to an early grave. The facts relating to all this I intended to put on paper and lay before you, with proofs that must convince you of their truth. I availed myself of the permission given to write to Mr. Isaac Butt, Q.C., and to my relative, Mr. Thomas Neilson Underwood, barrister-at-law, to represent me before the Commission, and I regret to learn from them that they were refused by the Commissioners the right to be present to act for the prisoners. The Chairman of the Commission informed me on the 4th instant that no representative would be allowed to be present at the investigation and none of the witnesses be examined under the obligation of an oath. These were startling disclosures. What could be the object of holding an inquiry with closed doors, if the facts to be elicited were to be published? If truth was the object of the inquiry,

" why not impose the usual obligations on the witnesses, and subject them to a cross-examination by a competent legal gentleman? There are questions that struck me at once and set me a-thinking. I asked for various documents to enable me to prepare my statement. A few only have been given, the most important withheld, and every obstacle that could be devised thrown in my way by the State authorities. The state of my health is such that I required assistance in making my statement, and more particularly in the conduct of the inquiry before the Commissioners. My friends, who know the purposes of the Government in appointing the Commission, refuse to assist me unless allowed the usual facilities given in such cases. This the Government and the Commissioners refuse, and by doing so prove that my friends are right in having nothing to do with what can appear in no other light than a State show. The whole conduct of the authorities towards myself and companions since the appointment of the Commission betrays a strong desire on the part of the Government to hide rather than develop the truth. Taking, then, into account the fact that the Commission is to act in secret, that witnesses are not to be examined on oath, that only so much of the evidence of the report will be published as the Government may desire, that I will not be allowed any assistance during the inquiry, and that it is the " evident purpose of the authorities to load down my statement with official falsehoods, without giving me the opportunity of drawing out the truth by evidence and cross-examination, I cannot consent to make any statement to the Commissioners. Whenever an open inquiry shall be instituted, where the proper facilities shall be afforded me to prepare a statement and prove the allegations it contains, I shall be ready to make a statement to the public that will convict the British authorities of the most vindictive and exceptional cruelties and deliberate falsehoods towards me. Looking upon this Commission as an institution purposely got up to whitewash the falsehoods of the public officials, I decline to have anything whatsoever to do with it. I consider the Government, who no doubt feel they cannot afford a fair and impartial inquiry, wholly to blame for the state of things which comes me to take this course, and I sincerely hope that you, gentlemen, will not for a moment think that I intend anything personally offensive to any one of you.

" I am, Gentlemen,

" Very respectfully,

" CHARLES UNDERWOOD O'CONNELL."

6685. (Mr. Dr. Burns.) Do you want to hand that in?—I wish to hand that in. (Handed in the paper he had read.)

6686. (Chairman.) You can withdraw, then, if you please.

The prisoner withdrew.

Dr. Burns recalled.

6687. (Chairman.) Dr. Burns, you have prepared a certain paper with the view of its being given to the prisoner O'Connell, I think?—I am not aware, my lord, of the paper you refer to.

6688. Did you not prepare a short paper containing a statement of the treatment to which O'Connell was subjected?—I did, my lord; I did so.

6689. Have you a copy of that paper?—I have not. I gave it to him.

6690. You gave it to him. From what he has said, I must ask you, is it in your judgment a correct statement of the treatment which you thought fit to subject him to?—Certainly, my lord. You have a full statement before you that I have already given in. This is merely an abstract.

6691. Then that in your judgment is a correct abstract of the fuller statement that we have, showing the medical treatment that he received?—It is so.

6692. When did he first come under your care?—You are in possession of the paper. (Witness is handed the paper.) This is a daily statement, my lord.

6693. When did he first come under your care?—On the 12th of May.

6694. (Dr. Greenough.) In what year?—The year '70; this year.

6695. (Chairman.) Will you be good enough to state what your report on him was on that day?—Probably it may be in one of these letters. All the letters are copied. (Selects a letter out of a bundle.) There is a report on the 9th of May, three days previously, to the governor of the prison.

6696. A report from whom?—From myself. I have reported to the governor of the prison three days previously to his entering the infirmary; to the governor respecting his state of health.

6697. What did you report?—This was what I reported:—"In compliance with your request, I have this day examined prisoner 214, Charles O'Connell, and found him complaining of loss of appetite, but he is in his usual state of health. I have weighed him, and found that he has lost one pound. This may be attributed to his having returned to-day two pounds four ounces of bread."

6698. Then you have had him under your care before that time?—I see them every day whenever they complain, and always once a week every one, without they complain. You directed me to have certain reports copied, and this I have, I find.

6699. (Mr. Dr. Fere.) Is the original of this now on the Commissioners' table, Dr. Burns?—I do not know where the original of this can be; I have sent it away, you see, to the governor. It goes from me to the governor on that date.

6700. (Dr. Greenough.) Is that a certified copy?—I am prepared to certify it. It is copied from my letter book.

6701. (Mr. Dr. Fere.) You hand this in as a copy of your report?—I do. (Witness hands it in.) 6702. (Chairman.) Did you, on the 12th of May make any alteration in his diet?—On the 12th of May I did, my lord, I put him on hospital diet.

6703. Did you include beef tea?—You must understand, my lord, when they come into hospital they are not vaccinated in the hospital on the day that they come in, so that they have only the prison diet on that day. He had already been supplied with the day's provisions, I did not wish him to eat that, and I gave him beef tea for that day only.

6704. For that day only?—For that day only.

6705. That was in addition to his ordinary diet?—That was in addition to his ordinary diet.

6706. Subsequently he was on hospital diet?—Then he went on to peaking diet; hospital diet from that day.

6707. How long did he remain on hospital diet?—He was discharged from hospital and hospital diet on the 9th of June.

6708. When did he come into hospital again?—I do not think he has been in hospital since then. He has only been in hospital once, my lord.

6709. Only once in hospital?—Once, yes.

6710. Then he has been on ordinary prison diet since?—He has been on ordinary prison diet from the 9th of June, my lord.

6711. (Dr. Greenough.) Do you recollect how long O'Connell has been in this prison?—I can tell you in a moment, if you will allow me to look at this caption sheet. (Commits a document.) He arrived at this prison on the 13th of March, 1869.

6712. Has he never been in hospital since his arrival here in March '69 until the 12th of May of this year?—Never.

6713. You have not considered him during that period as requiring medical attendance?—I have not.

C. D.
O'Connell
19 July 1870.

Dr. Burns.
16 July 1893.

6714. You examined him when he came to this prison, I suppose?—I did.

6715. Did you find that he had any disease at that time?—I found palpitation. I think it is marked. He is a delicate man.

6716. Did you, when he came here, and you found as you say palpitation, make up your own mind as to what was the cause of the palpitation?—I did.

6717. What did you consider to be the cause of it?—I examined him most carefully, and found that it was owing, as far as I could judge, to irritability of constitution, natural irritability of constitution—of temperament.

6718. Is it in your knowledge that he suffers habitually from palpitation?—He does.

6719. Is he suffering from it to-day?—No; I have visited him, and he has not had any at all.

6720. Have you examined his chest stethoscopically?—I have.

6721. And you found no disease of the heart?—He has no heart, acco.

6722. Have you read the reports which have been sent from Portland and Pentonville with him with regard to his disease?—I really cannot tell. There are so many of these papers, I cannot single out that one.

6723. I see it included in his medical history that at Pentonville there was a note made "condition at present, slight aortic disease," with a query to it?—Yes; it was so that account that I examined his chest.

6724. You do not agree with that?—I do not, I think it was owing to a little irritability, owing to an irritability of habit.

6725. Is it within your medical experience that persons are subject to palpitation for as long as a year from mere irritability of constitution?—I have drawn my conclusions from examination; sometimes I found none whatever. I have on two or three occasions found none whatever.

6726. This man's weight was, I see, on the 25th of May 1893, 134 pounds. Do you know if that was the case?—It was.

6727. Is it during the twelve months between the 25th of May 1893, and the 12th of May in the present year, to 119 pounds?—It did.

6728. What do you consider to have been the cause of that diminution in his weight?—Abstinence from food.

6729. Do you know as a fact that he was abstaining from food during the greater part of that year?—He was.

6730. Do you think that abstinence from food was intentional on his part, or that it was due to deficiency of appetite?—My opinion is that it was intentional, because it occurred after interviews took place with the prisoner.

6731. To what interviews do you refer?—Two gentlemen came here to see him. I think Mr. Moore and another gentleman at that time, and immediately after that he abstained from food, and he had been going on very well before that, and in fact to-day he is in exactly the same way, refusing his food.

6732. Have you looked to the weight of this prisoner from time to time?—I have.

6733. I observe that his weight had varied greatly; that at one time it was 139 pounds, on another occasion 124 pounds; that when he came here it was 129 pounds, and that at one period here it was 119 pounds. Is he fluctuated very much, indeed?—

6734. Do you think that those great fluctuations would be accounted for by his abstinence from food?—It certainly would, because on all those occasions he has abstained from his food.

6735. Besides examining the condition of the heart, have you examined the other organs, the kidneys, for example?—I have.

6736. And you have found no symptoms to account for waste?—None whatever.

6737. There was no albumen in the urine?—I have not examined the urine. My attention was not called to it.

6738. You are not aware of any waste going on through the urine?—I should think not, because he did not make any reference to the subject. I thought it sufficiently accounted for by his abstinence from food.

6739. You do not think it necessary when a prisoner is found to be losing weight considerably, to investigate further as to the possibility of there being a waste in the way I have referred to?—I always do, when my attention is called to the particular point.

6740. In this case you have not done so?—In this case there was no attention called to it. It was not suspected one moment, and he has never complained of any urinary disease. If he had any reason it is the very thing he would do, to complain of it.

6741. Have you observed that this man's weight has increased after he has resumed taking his food?—I have.

6742. Can you point to any particular period when, having previously abstained from taking food, he has again commenced to take food, and his weight has increased?—Yes; I think you will find, that directly he came into hospital his weight increased. The 12th of May, may I ask what the weight was?

6743. One hundred and nineteen pounds. On the 10th of May it was 123 pounds?—He came into hospital on the 12th of May, and I weighed him on the 22d, when his weight was 125 pounds.

6744. What according to that return was his weight on the 12th of May?—119 pounds.

6745. What was it on the 10th?—It is not here. I do not think he was weighed on the 10th.

6746. Is it in your report,—I have the report of his stoppage in diet every day.

6747. I see in this report that on the date, 11th May, O'Connell's weight is stated to have been 121 pounds, and on the 12th of May, 119 pounds?—Exactly, sir; that is the day he came into hospital.

6748. And he lost two pounds in one day?—Yes; he lost it before I took him in; that is the reason I took him in. I found the decrease so rapid that I took him in on the 12th.

6749. What did he complain of when he came into hospital; what did he assign as his ailment?—I have stated here.

6750. I am asking you rather what he complained of himself?—I have not noted, for he made no particular complaint. My attention was called to his nervous temperament and palpitation. He only complained of that and was looking very weak and faint, and he remarked this, and I took him in for that, but there was no disease.

6751. He complained of no symptoms of illness?—No symptoms of illness whatever. I am not aware that it was at his own request or anything of that kind that I took him into hospital. I took him in at my own suggestion. In fact I made the remark, "he appears in his usual health."

6752. (Mr. De Vere.) If he complained of no symptoms of disease, Dr. Burns, how did you know that he had palpitation?—Because I had been in the habit of examining from his first entry into the prison. I knew he was subject to palpitation occasionally.

6753. He did not, you say, complain of palpitation?—He did not complain of it at that time.

6754. You do not think it necessary to make any inquiry into the cause of the diminution of strength and loss in weight which you observe, unless the patient himself complains to you of the existence of disease?—Oh yes, if my attention was called. Whenever a patient in the prison returns his food, does not take the quantity of food that is given to him, a report is made to me daily of the circumstance; and in his case a report was sent in every day of his having returned his food, and my attention was called to him on that account.

6755. I think you stated in answer to Dr. Greenhow that you have not inquired into the existence of any kidney complaint?—I did not inquire.

6756. And I think you also stated that your reason for so doing was, that he had not stated to you his belief in the existence of any disease?—My attention was never called to it by him, or any symptoms that he gave.

6757. Did you, Dr. Burns, in that abstract of a medical case sheet that was furnished to him for the purpose of his statement here represent that when coming into hospital he had been put upon beef tea diet?—I did.

6758. Was that true?—That he had it?

6759. That he was put upon beef tea diet?—No, not beef tea diet. He had beef tea in addition to the diet for the day, but he was not put on beef tea diet at all. There is not such a diet in the hospital as beef tea diet.

6760. Did you state in the first paper that you had before him, that he was put upon beef tea, and did you afterwards amend that by saying "for one day only"?—I know it was on his ticket for one day only, and I know that I have merely copied what was put here. It is in this ticket also. I presume that this is a copy from the original, which original I can show you.

6761. I wish to press my question, whether you stated in the first instance that he was put upon beef tea, and whether upon his remarking so you that that beef tea was for one day only, you then corrected your statement by stating it was for one day only?—I corrected no statement whatever, nor did I put him on beef tea diet. His wish was to go on pudding diet, and I thought on that day because he had not half his dinner, I should give him beef tea to make up for the deficiency he had in the cells. He asked for pudding diet, which he was placed on at once. Had he been put on beef tea diet he would have been put on half diet, meat and beef tea; half a pound of beef made into beef tea.

6762. After receiving your abstract, did he make any remark to you about the beef tea having been given to him only one day?—Lately he did, about a fortnight ago. I gave him a paper stating briefly, "You have been on half diet, low diet, and beef tea," and he said "That looks as if I had all three together," so I said, "I will give it to you separately if you like." I furnished him with a copy of the ticket in the hospital, which shows exactly beef tea that day, and the next day pudding diet. He is in possession of it at this moment.

6763. Did he remark to you on that occasion that the first report was calculated to mislead?—He made no remark to me on the subject until about a week ago. I think it was about a week ago. On giving him this he said, "This looks as if I had all three together, whereas I had that only a day." I do not know that it looked in the paper as if it was for the day only.

6764. Would a person reading your first entry of "beef-tea" have been under the impression that he continued in the reception of beef tea whilst he was in hospital?—No, he would not.

6765. Would a person reading that entry which you gave in that first page be under the impression that beef tea was only for one day?—I do not think they might understand it. It might be understood by him, but if you take it up—it was merely to let him know what he had. I did not know what was the object he wanted to arrive at. I merely put down that he had beef tea and certain things at the hospital, not saying how long he had it. When he came into the hospital he went on pudding diet, and he could not get it that day because there was no impossibility of making it.

6766. To what do you attribute the extraordinarily intense shivering and shaking so evident in him?—I think he is naturally of an irritable temperament—an exceedingly nervous, irritable man. I think very little puts him about. He has a sort of paralysis of the nervous paralysis of the head occasionally, after speaking.

6767. Do those symptoms appear indicative of any organic disease?—Well, I was led to believe from the report that came with him on reception, that he might have some disease of the chest, and I examined him for that purpose; but I do not think he has any organic disease of the heart, even at this moment; even within the last fortnight I felt his pulse, and there was no palpitation whatever.

6768. Have you regulated his discipline, his work, or his diet whilst he has been in this prison with reference to the possible existence of organic disease?—Whilst he is in prison I do not regulate his diet at all. He has a larger amount of food than is probably necessary for him; in fact he has more than he can consume, and I think that his abstinence from it is more than is doing good; but while he is away from me, and not under medical treatment in the infirmary, I have no authority for stopping any portion of his food.

6769. Have you any authority to regulate his exercise, either as to the rapidity with which he does it, or the duration?—None.

6770. If you thought that a man was suffering from chronic disease of the heart, and that the exercise taken in the yard was too quick for him, or in any way unsuitable for him, would it not be your duty to interfere?—I should put him in the infirmary. I should not allow him to work at all.

6771. Is it not your duty to interfere in the regulation of the exercise, with a view to the health of the prisoners?—I do not interfere in any way whatever with the prisoners unless they are in the infirmary; unless I take them away from their work altogether and put them in the infirmary, or to what you call "light labour," which is a lighter description of work—breaking stones, mending stockings, and so on.

6772. (Chairman.) What in point of fact was the labour that this man was put to? At what period?

6773. On his arrival here?—I believe he does nothing at all but goes through the form of mending stockings; but instead of exercising most of the time, he goes away and does not take exercise. None of them take the exercise they should. They do not avail themselves of the opportunities of taking exercise.

6774. (Mr. De Fero.) Has O'Connell ever done any work outside?—No, never.

6775. Should you think it right to put him to work outside?—If he was another prisoner.

6776. I ask the question in reference to his health?—I should put him on light labour.

6777. Why should you put him on light labour?—Because I do not think him capable of doing the heavy labour of this establishment.

6778. What is organically wrong that would prevent him from performing that labour?—I think he is a delicate man, not a strong man, not a man able to bear it. His physical temperament would not stand the heavy work that we have for the prisoners.

6779. (Dr. Lyons.) I would think it very important, Dr. Burns, that you would furnish the Commission with a copy of the return that you made to the prisoner O'Connell?—What two returns?

6780. You made to the prisoner at his request two returns which I cannot very specially define for you, but which he has in his possession?—I do not know that I have the papers of O'Connell here.

6781. I should like to get them now. It would not take five minutes. I mean exact copies of the papers that the prisoner has?—We can have a copy. Would you like to see the reports every morning? I have reports every morning when they do return any provisions.

6782. Yes, I think I asked you that the last day?—Yes.

6783. What is the ordinary rate of O'Connell's pulse?—Well, I do not know that I have made any record of it.

6784. Have you at any time made any entries of the rate of his pulse, at periods when the patient was in a state of quiescence?—I have not.

6785. Have you ever made any entries of the rate of the pulse when the heart was excited and he was complaining of palpitation?—No, I have not. It was extraordinarily frequent. Palpitation is a very common complaint with prisoners.

6786. You are now speaking only from memory?—I am only speaking from memory. That paper is the only record I keep. (Exhibiting an hospital sheet.)

6787. Having in view the journey of the Pontonville return of this prisoner, which points to at least a possible condition of organic disease, I wish to ascertain from you if you have made any inquiries as to the rate of the pulse at any periods when he was in his ordinary habits, and when he was subject to palpitation?—I have made no other enquiries than those you see in that paper. His pulse had never been complained of by him; it has never been the subject of complaint. I do not think he ever complained of palpitation. I do not think he ever mentioned that as his complaint. I found that myself.

6788. During the period in which you observed him from time to time losing weight, did you make any observations with regard to the rate of his pulse?—I made the remark to him that his pulse was getting weak.

6789. Did you record it as weak?—The whole of what I have recorded is in that hospital return that I have given to you.

6790. Do you wish to return it to you to enable you to say if you did or did not record the state of his pulse?—If you please. (Witness is handed the return.) He complained of weakness in the left breast.

6791. I am asking you now particularly with regard to the rate of his pulse?—It is not recorded. His pulse is not recorded there.

6792. Then the records of this institution do not show any entry of the state of this prisoner's pulse at any period?—They do not.

6793. Was there anything evidencing any state of dyspepsia or febrile excitement, during the time that you noticed him to be losing weight?—Slight.

6794. Slight?—Very slight.

6795. In what respect?—Dryness of the skin and flushed face. He got flushing of the face. His face is naturally flushed, but the expression of his face indicated it.

6796. You observed a certain amount of habitual flush about him, with heat and dryness of his skin?—Heat and dryness of his skin; yes.

6797. Did you think that his refusing to take his food was in consequence of this pyrexial condition?—I did not think it was. I think it was induced by his refusing food. That was my opinion at the time.

6798. Did you examine in any way, by ordinary observation or by any mode of chemical testing, the condition of his urine at that time?—I did not.

6799. Did you happen to see it at any time during that period?—I did not.

6800. Are you aware whether there was any diarrhoea present during the period that he has been losing weight?—There was none.

6801. Doctor Greenhow asked you whether you observed any loss by althamen that could account for his losing weight?—There was no reference whatever made to the state of his urinary secretion.

6802. You are aware, of course, that in many instances an extensive drain of urea is a cause of loss of weight. Did you observe that about him?—No, I did not.

6803. Did you look for loss by althamen or urea in any way?—I did not.

6804. Did you, in any manner, try to test how it was that weight was lost by this prisoner?—I thought it sufficiently accounted for by his abstinence from food.

6805. What is the character of the palpitation which you have observed present from time to time?—There is an irritative state of the heart, I think induced from habit. I think he has had it for a very long time, and there is no break at all.

6806. Could you give me any idea of what the character of the palpitation was?—I think it is more nervous excitability.

6807. I mean physical character. Is there excessively rapid action?—No, it is a very slight palpitation, which is common amongst prisoners.

6808. Was there any irregularity of the cardiac action?—No.

6809. Or any intensity of the beats?—No, the beats are regular so far. There is great irritability of the heart, which is induced frequently by close confinement in prison—a nervous irritability.

6810. Was there any visible action of the carotid or radial arteries?—None. There was no swelling or enlargement of any of the vessels.

6811. What treatment did you adopt for this palpitation?—The treatment adopted was, I put him on better diet.

6812. You put him on better diet?—Yes; took him off; he would not take food of any kind. I put him on infusorial diet to which he adhered strictly at once.

6813. Did you think that he was malingering or shamming?—I thought he was.

6814. That was your impression?—That was my impression.

6815. What mode did you adopt professionally of testing whether the prisoner was malingering or not?—I put him on the diet which he required, and watched whether he ate it, and he took to it at once.

6816. That is, you improved his food?—I improved his food.

6817. Did you not make any medical observation to ascertain whether he was shamming or not?—Yes, I did. I was satisfied. He ate the food, and seeing him improve, I thought that enough.

6818. Would you think if a man with dyspeptic symptoms got better on more antiseptic food and ate it, that that was conclusive evidence that he had been shamming?—It was not conclusive evidence, and for that reason I kept him longer in the hospital, to watch the prisoner.

6819. I want to know whether on watching the prisoner you made any medical observations by which the opinion that he was malingering was substantiated?—I think it was substantiated.

6820. By what was it substantiated?—Because he is a very dissipated man, and because afterwards he got dissatisfied with the very diet that he had chosen.

6821. That is not an uncommon thing with respect to dyspeptic patients?—It is not uncommon.

6822. I think not. Have you observed the nervous tremor that he has exhibited from time to time?—I have.

6823. Is it ordinarily as excessive as we have observed it in this case?—I do not know.

6824. Is there a great tremor about his head and hands?—No, not always, but whenever he begins to speak and gets excited this comes on at once, and his head moves, there is an agitated appearance of his body.

6825. You have stated that his mind was unsettled?—Yes, probably. I wrote those things off hand, and might not consider that sufficient if I were writing a legal document, but the impression from that, in my mind, that he was thinking of his affairs, and was excited by having spoken to some friend here.

6826. Did you mean to imply by this record that his reason was involved?—No, not in the least. Those notes are for my own observation.

6827. I quite understand. Do you think him now fit for any of the ordinary work carried on in this prison?—He is not fit for the ordinary labour of the prison.

6828. But is he fit for any of the ordinary work in this prison?—Yes, I think he is.

6829. For what work is he fit?—Some breaking or coal picking; stone breaking, I should say.

6830. In the document furnished to the prisoner, which I now hold in my hand, under the date of May the 12th and the 9th of June, it is stated that his diet consisted of beef tea and pudding diet, half pint, &c. Does that purport to represent strictly accurately a record of the prison diet?—It represents a copy from the column of the diet. That is a document I gave him, and he comprised of the half pint; he said, "It looks as if I was supplied with all these things together."

6831. If I were to read that and to take up the impression that he was constantly getting beef-tee, would I have an erroneous impression?—You would.

6832. This appears to be a supplementary document?—Excuse me, that is the original document, it is the document that was hanging at the head of his bed the whole time.

6833. I find it stated in this document that his diet consisted of beef tea, pudding, &c. I find it stated on May the 12th that the diet was "beef-tee one pint, to-day only." Does that mean that in the whole period between May the 12th and June the 9th he got beef-tee only one day?—It means that on the 12th he had beef-tee, a pint only, and next morning he was placed on pudding diet.

6834. Does it mean that in the whole interval between May the 12th and June the 9th he got beef-tee one day only?—He never had it but one day.

6835. The day of admission?—The day of admission.

6836. Is the statement in the other document incorrect respecting the diet, for it states that his diet consisted of beef-tee?—The representation is quite correct, inasmuch as I thought what he wanted to know was what were the articles he partook of while he was in hospital, and beef-tee was one of them; but he could not partake of full diet, low diet and half diet altogether as it is mentioned there.

6837. "His diet consisted of beef tea, pudding a diet, with one pint of milk, in lieu of tea at breakfast," afterwards two plates in lieu of tea at breakfast and "supper, and meat mutch." That appears to be the whole entry in reference to his diet. I asked you, Dr. Burns, if I took up the impression upon reading that paper, that he was constantly getting beef-tee while he was in hospital, would I take up an erroneous impression?—You would, because at the head is the name of the diet, and below the additions to it—pudding diet.

6838. (Mr. Dr. Burns.) I see, Dr. Burns, where the change was made, you say, "Pudding diet, half pint," with half a pint of milk in lieu of tea at breakfast, "and afterwards two plates in lieu of tea at breakfast and supper." Then when a change was made you put in the word "afterwards." "Afterwards" means after change of diet, does it not?—No, he had a pint of it to begin with, and he liked it, so it was increased.

6839. Then there was a change of diet?—There was, on the 14th.

6840. Then why, when the beef-tee was discontinued on the 14th, did you not put in "afterwards, pudding diet" as you did in the second instance?—Because on the 14th he goes on half diet, and this half diet is not with soup—he had it meat. This will come on until the diet is changed again. He stops on half diet the whole time he is in.

6841. It was change of diet from beef-tee to pudding diet?—No sir, it was not. He never entered on any diet scale until the second day in the hospital.

6842. He got a different kind of food the first day from that on the second?—He had; because he had the beef-tee to compensate the first day for the loss of food he could not take in the separate class. He had abstained from food there.

6843. If he got beef-tee the first day, and you having made a change the second day, put him on other food, why did you not insert the word "afterwards" as you did subsequently?—It was only changing his diet from one thing to another. Well, on the 13th he was on this pudding diet and did not like it, so that the next day I gave him this half diet again, and it is marked here.

6844. (Chairman.) The question is, why did you not put in the word "afterwards" as you did in the other instance?—I thought it would; perhaps I made a mistake. He had only one pint of milk a day first, but afterwards he had two pints.

6845. (Dr. Greenhow.) You mean that he had one pint of milk for breakfast instead of tea, and that when you found he liked the milk you afterwards gave him two pints in a day instead of tea. The word afterwards referred only to the milk?—Only to the milk.

6846. (Dr. Lyons.) I asked you the last day, Dr. Burns, to put in a return of the conditions on which the prisoner O'Connell returned food. Have you done so?—I have. He began to return food as early as the 16th August.

6847. Of last year?—Yes (Witness heads in a dejected way).

6848. Are those the returns which you hold in your hand, showing the food which has been supplied to him and which he has not consumed?—These are returns sent to me in the mornings respecting this prisoner daily.

6849. Could you get made an abstract from these returns, which are too voluminous in their present shape, of the pounds and ounces of food that he returned?—I can. I can give it to you any day on which you return to this.

6850. I wish for a return in full of the full amount of food he returned since he began?—I will try and get it made for you. I think a long time he took his food.

6851. I wish to see in tabular form and according to dates the occasions on which he returned food, with the amount and kind of food that he returned. It can easily be drawn up in tabular form from those papers in your hand?—I could supply it.

6852. You will be good enough to supply it in tabular form?—Yes.

6853. (Chairman.) I think you told me before, Dr. Burns, that it is not the practice to weigh patients periodically here?—We weigh them when they come into the prison, and if I see any reason to do so they are weighed again.

6854. They are not weighed as a matter of course here periodically?—They are not.

6855. Are you aware that it is done in any prison?—I am not aware that it is done so.

6856. (Dr. Greenhow.) Did I understand you to say that the prisoners are not put on hospital diet on the day of their admission to hospital?—There is a scale of diets on purpose, and we put them on a reduced diet.

6857. Please to answer my question. Are prisoners put on hospital diet on the day of their admission into hospital?—No, they are not.

6858. But this man on his admission into hospital on the 12th of May had one pint of beef-tee ordered for him?—He had.

6859. For what reason?—Because I thought he was fasting and he required it so much.

6860. Then it was an unusual thing?—An unusual thing, yes.

6861. I hold in my hand the two documents that you supplied to the prisoner, one of which is the bed-head ticket, and the other an abstract of his case?—Yes.

6862. At the bottom of this abstract you have put what you conceive to be an abstract of the diets in hospital?—Yes.

6863. You intended that this abstract should include all the several diets that he received in hospital?—Yes. I intended to show merely to the prisoner the articles of consumption that had been issued to him.

6864. But you meant this to show a fair account of the diet he had during the whole period that he was in hospital, from the 12th of May to the 9th of June?—I did.

6865. Had this prisoner applied to you for medical relief at any former period since he came here, before his admission into hospital on the 12th of May?—I think not. Oh, on the 11th of August they first began to refuse their soup.

6866. (Chairman.) You say they; whom do you mean?—He, with others.

6867. (Dr. Greenhow.) Confine yourself to O'Connell at present, if you please. Had he applied for medical relief to you before the 12th of May?—He had on the 30th of August.

6868. What did he then complain of?—He experienced loss of appetite and nervousness.

6869. Did he then complain of palpitation?—No, he did not.

6870. You have said us that you examined his chest stethoscopically?—Yes.

6871. Did you examine the position of the heart?—I did.

6872. Where was the apex found to be beating?—It was beating in its usual position.

6873. You did not think it was at all displaced?—I did not think it was.

6874. It was neither to the right nor the left of its normal position?—No.

6875. Did you examine the heart by percussion as well as by auscultation?—No, sir. I examined him where I put the stethoscope, I think; it is so long ago now that I cannot recollect.

6876. You do not recollect determining the area of cardiac dullness?—No, I do not; no, I do not remember. I did not think it worth while even to make a note of the circumstance.

6877. Do you think that you examined the area of cardiac dullness?—Well, I think I percussed so far as to see if there was any dullness about the lung at that side, but I do not think that I paid particular attention to the cardiac dullness.

6878. He was complaining of palpitation and came here with a history that he had possible insipient aortic disease?—He did.

6879. But you did not try was there any extensive cardiac dullness on percussion?—I thought the sounds were normal. First I thought it was from rheumatism or some inflammation possibly around. From his flushed face I suspected there ought to be found some little effusion of the lung.

6880. Has O'Connell complained of his diet?—He has.

6881. What has he stated respecting it?—He has constantly refused his pudding. In fact he has found fault with nearly everything, I think.

6882. He said that his diet was not suitable to him?—He has.

6883. And when you have changed his diet he has afterwards complained?—He did in the infirmary, but I cannot say that his diet has been changed at every time. He would take it a little time and then give it up. He called the pudding, which I consider very good, he called it "putty." He always refused it.

6884. Have you from time to time ordered alterations in his diet?—No, I did not consider it necessary. I thought that the pudding could easily be done without, and that he could take the bread without injury to his health. In fact he has a great deal too much now.

6885. (Mr. De Vere.) Is this document which you laid before the prisoner extracted from the documents respecting his case which were in your hands?—It is a brief abstract from this document. You are in possession of every memorandum I have made.

6886. Would you be so good as to tell me, Dr. Burns, how you attribute the uselessness of the chest to abstinence from food?—It produces a nervous excitement, and if there was palpitation before, I think that probably it would be increased by it. There is not sufficient power of the heart.

6887. Could you mean by uselessness of the chest palpitation of the heart?—I did. The uselessness he complained of was attributable to palpitation, and in this remark here is, I think, the very term that you use. I saw it. I think "uselessness" is the expression I used here.

6888. And do you attribute the uselessness of his chest, amounting to palpitation of the heart, to his frequent abstinence from food?—I do; I do; and I have seen it many, many times in consequence of abstinence myself.

6889. And not in consequence of any organic disease?—And not in consequence of any organic disease of the heart.

6890. (Mr. Bradick.) Did you on any occasion, Dr. Burns, say to Underwood O'Connell that medicine was not what he wanted, but food, better food, and that that you were not allowed to give him? Did you ever say that to him, or anything to that effect?—No; but he has suggested that idea to me. He has, for instance, put it to me whether better food and other food would be better for him, and I have told him "Certainly, I think it would."

6891. And have you ever gone on to say that he required better food than you were allowed to give him?—Well, I think it very likely that I have done so. I do not remember the circumstance.

6892. Have you ever said to him that you could cure him if you had him outside free, but that you were not allowed to give him what would cure him?—I have never said anything of the kind.

6893. You are certain of that?—I am positive that I never said anything of the kind.

6894. But you may have told him that he required better food than it was consistent with the rules of the prison to allow him?—He has put it to me in that way, and may have deduced that answer from the answer I have given him.

6895. Have you ever said, "The Secretary of State has positively refused to allow any change in your 'food or treatment'?"—I have not, because that would be contradicted at once by the Secretary of State having given the permission for an alteration in his diet.

6896. I believe O'Connell with the other transitory convicts is confined in a punishment cell?—He is by night and at meals.

6897. Do you consider what is called a "punishment cell" to be more or less dry than an ordinary cell?—It is more airy, the punishment cell that he occupies.

6898. Do you call it a "penal cell" or a "punishment cell"?—A punishment cell.

6899. And do you consider it more favourable or less favourable to health to be confined in a penal cell?—I think it is more favourable to health to be in a punishment cell than in one of the ordinary cells of the prison.

6900. (Dr. Greenhow.) Why do you consider it so?—Because there is more air—a better circulation of air in the cell.

6901. (Chairman.) The punishment cell is larger?—Yes, the ordinary prison cell is small, average about 200 cubic feet, whereas the penal cells are 540. I make them, and I see the clerk of works makes them 560.

6902. (Mr. De Vere.) Did I understand you, Dr. Burns, to say in answer to Mr. Bradick, that the diet you are enabled to give him under the prison regulations was not the diet required by his state of health?—I think that I might have, as far as medical treatment is concerned, and as far as I were outside, I suppose he drew that conclusion from it, that I would not put a patient of mine outside on the diet he was getting, because the patient outside would have a different mode of life from what he had in here, where he has no exercise, he could obtain from any quantity of food that he chose. There is not anything in the diet to excite or produce a disposition to palpitation.

6903. I must remind you of an answer which you gave just now. You said that it was true that you had stated to O'Connell that what he wanted was better and other diet. Now I ask you whether the diet that he received in the jail was in your opinion suitable to the state of his health?—I think there is nothing objectionable in anything he has in prison in the state of his health.

6904. May I ask if there was nothing objectionable to the state of his health, why it was that you said he required other and better diet to cure him?—But I made no mention of the kind to him: he extracted such an answer, that is certainly possible. I did not know what his purpose was then. He may have drawn that conclusion.

6903. I understood you to say that he did extract that answer from you?—He may have extracted it, but it is by putting the question to me. It was not voluntary on my part to give such information, nor can I remember at this moment that I did.

6906. Supposing you gave him that information, would it have been true?—Well, I think it was. If he was a patient of mine, and I would not have given him the treatment and diet he was enjoying in this prison.

6907. Then it is your opinion that the diet in prisons was not the diet suitable to his state of health?—There was nothing injurious in the diet of the prison for the disease he was suffering from.

6908. Was it calculated to set right what was wrong in his case?—I think it was.

6909. If it was, why did you say that what he required was other and better diet; how do you reconcile those?—Because I cannot reconcile the diet of a prisoner with the diet of a freeman. I think many things we enjoy would be denied to a prisoner, and that it would be improper for me to grant without reason for doing so.

6910. Did you ever represent to the authorities that he required other and better diet?—I had no occasion to do so, because when I found that he actually did need it, I took him out of his cell and treated him in the infirmary when the occasion arose, and gave him other diet—beef tea and those other matters.

6911. Beef tea the first day?—Beef tea one day; then he had pudding diet which he chose himself.

6912. How long before this conversation with him, in which you may have told him that what he required was other and better diet, did you take him in?—I do not remember the conversation at all.

6913. But you think it likely to have occurred, because you now believe the statement to be true?—No, I would not draw that conclusion at all, I believe if he were outside as a private individual, I should treat him probably differently from what I would as a convict, although there may be nothing objectionable in either treatment.

6914. (Chairman.) The diet has been adequate to the maintenance of his health, though to a free man health might have been promoted more directly?—Yes, my lord.

6915. (Mr. Bradick.) In the case of a free man you might recommend him to go to the sea side or something else that would be quite inapplicable to the condition of a convict?—This gentleman has asked me about the alteration in diet. The alteration I should make would be a change that he would not like at all, that would be to take half the diet away. That would involve that the diet would be only half, and he would consider himself greatly aggrieved.

6916. (Chairman.) Looking at the state of health he was in when he first came here, is it your opinion that his health has suffered?—His health has not materially altered in any way whatever, and I think of late materially improved. I think to-day he obtained.

6917. It has been stated to me by O'Connell, that shortly after his arrival from Millbank here, he found that a boat that he was wearing was too heavy for him; do you recollect that circumstance?—I have some distinct recollection of such a thing, my lord.

6918. It was shortly after March 1837?—I do not recollect the circumstances respecting it. I do believe there was something about a boat, and that it was referred to the governor and corrected.

6919. It was stated to me that on his complaining to you, you said, "When the boat has worked a score, I will endeavour to mend it;" that he then asked, "Is not prevention better than cure," and that you answered, "I am not allowed to prevent anything of that sort in certain cases?"—Well, my lord, it is very likely, the statement of the prisoners about prevention, for when there is no appearance of anything I am not bound to attend to a mere suspicion that there is something of the kind.

6920. How much of it do you recollect?—I do not remember anything about it. It is quite possible that the conversation has taken place. I think it is quite correct. It is quite possible that there was no injury.

6921. Are you likely to have said, "I am not allowed to prevent disease"?—It is very likely I did. I am not allowed to interfere unless there is some appearance of injury. Certainly I would never do it to a prisoner.

6922. You produce some letters?—I do, my lord.

6923. What are they?—Letters copied from my letter book with reference to the Foulton prisoners.

6924. Will you be kind enough to hand them in?—Yes, my lord. (Witness hands in 25 letters.) There are certain things you called for on the last occasion that I can furnish you with now. I was asked the last time about the date of the alteration in diet. I find it was 1864, and the commission on diet 1866—the last alteration. And about seeing the prisoners in three-quarters of an hour, I find that the largest number on Sunday was seen between 30 minutes past 8 o'clock, and 10 o'clock a.m. must be 222. I am not quite certain that they are seen in that time, but there have been 80 or 90 in three-quarters of an hour.

6925. (Dr. Leguer.) Looked for the maximum and mean numbers?—I have them.

6926. Are you prepared to hand them in now?—I am not prepared to hand them in just now, but they are ready in the other room.

6927. (Chairman.) You stated before in answer to a question in regard to the ventilation, that it had been improved of late, but that it might be further improved. In what particular wards and parts of the prison would you suggest further improvement?—I think the latest improvement has been made in the prison itself, in F ward.

6928. When you say it may be further improved to what parts do you point?—The cells, the close cells.

6929. The ordinary cells?—No, the dock cells.

6930. (Dr. Greenleaf.) By the dock cells do you mean the penal cells?—The penal cells; both the dock cells.

6931. (Chairman.) Have you observed any evil effect on the health of the prisoners from it?—No, because they are never detained more than three days there.

6932. (Dr. Greenleaf.) Are not the treason-felony convicts in penal cells?—They are in the penal cells, but not the dock cells. Rooms, I believe, is the only man who ever occupied one of them. Only one man besides him ever occupied them.

6933. (Dr. Leguer.) What is the name of the man that had charge of the meat on the last day that we were here?—I think you were very much mistaken about that. That meat was cooked for the infirmary, and had no smell whatever. I can assure you that it had no smell.

6934. Do you mean to say that that particular meat to which I called attention was afterwards cooked?—It was.

6935. Are you quite positive that that meat which was pointed out as being bad, was cooked for the infirmary?—It was, and there was nothing bad about it.

HENRY SHAW, prisoner, recalled.

6936. (Chairman.) Henry Shaw, when you were before us on a former occasion you stated that you would decline to make any statement whatever to us. As we have now visited Chatham prison again, the Commission are desirous of learning from you whether you still adhere to that determination, or whether you have changed your mind on the matter. If you have changed your mind, it is open to you to make a statement to us. If you refuse to make a statement you will probably tell us so?—Yes, my lord. Well, availing myself of the facilities which you provided me the day you were here last, I communicated with my friends, and I learned from them their opinions as to how I should act in the matter; and as I do not intend making any statement, I have written a letter which, with your permission, I will read.

6937. If you please:—

* Chatham Convict Prison,
* July 18th, 1870.

* To the Commissioners of inquiry into the treatment of treason-felony prisoners confined in English prisons.

* GENTLEMEN,

* On receiving from your secretary official notice that there was to be an inquiry into the treatment of political prisoners, my first intention was, assuming the inquiry to be a public one, to do all that lay in my power to aid and assist the Commissioners in eliciting the truth. But on receiving further notice that the inquiry was to be a private one, and that the prisoner was to confine himself to what was relevant to his condition as a convict undergoing penal servitude, and to point out if he had received exceptional treatment, and in what or how, thus obliging me, who cannot be acquainted with all the rules of the establishment, to show what was exceptional and what was legal. Keeping this in view, I, after calm, careful, and deliberate consideration, came to the conclusion that I could not, consistently with the duty which I owe to myself, do otherwise than respectfully decline to make any statement. Yet fearing that I might be acting precipitately, and as you, gentlemen, considered it prudent to adjourn the investigation from the 5th to the 19th instant, thus affording me time to consult my friends, and learn from them if I were acting in conformity with their wishes; for after scouring the approbations of his own conduct, a man's next one should be, if possible, to have those approbations confirmed by the opinions of his friends. After making the best use I could of the facilities allowed me, and communicating with my friends, I am led to believe that in consulting my own wishes I shall not be acting repugnant to theirs. Of course, gentlemen, I am fully aware how wisely futile it would be for me to pretend, or even to seem to dictate to you how you should conduct the inquiry in order to elicit the whole truth. But while I recognise the fact that I am addressing gentlemen of the highest respectability, and who bring to this Commission talents of the very highest order, I cannot forbear reminding that the inquiry appears to me to be altogether wanting in character—character which even yours, unimpeachable as they may be, cannot lend it—the character, gentlemen, of impartiality. I have no intention, gentlemen, of unnecessarily intruding on your time, but I wish to say that if you examine me as to the truth or falsehood of any allegations that may have been made in public regarding my treatment, I am wholly at your disposal; and while I shall respectfully decline to volunteer any statement, I solemnly assure you, gentlemen, that I am actuated solely by the conviction—and I say it with all due deference to you, gentlemen—that I should be but aiding and abetting a delusion in acting otherwise, as I am convinced that nothing but a full, fair, and public inquiry will ever succeed in eliciting the whole truth. If I have said anything in this letter calculated to give offence, I crave pardon, as nothing could be further from my intention. I intend to be as truthful as I know how, and at the same time to be concise without being obscure. Trusting that you will give me credit for that intention,

* I have the honour to be,

* My lord and gentlemen,

* Very respectfully yours,

* HENRY SHAW (Milledale).*

The prisoner withdrew.

J. McClure.

JOHN McCLEURE, prisoner, recalled.

6938. (Chairman.) McClure, when we were here last you said that you were not then prepared to make your statement, and consequently your examination was deferred until to-day. The Commission are now desirous of knowing whether you are prepared and disposed to make any statement, or give evidence before them?—Well, my lord and gentlemen, I have come to the conclusion that I shall make no statement. I have a few words that I wish to read, if you permit me.

6939. Read it, if you please:—

* Chatham Prison, July 18th, 1870.

* To the Commissioners for inquiring into the treatment of prisoners confined in England for political offences.

* GENTLEMEN,

* TAKING into account the privacy with which the Commission of inquiry which I have now the honour of addressing is being conducted, and your objection to the attendance of Mr. Butt or any like person during my examination, and having in view the unsatisfactory result of the private Commission for the same purpose in 1869, I feel compelled in justice to myself, to decline to take part in the present proceedings, in consequence of experiencing a want of confidence in the impartiality and completeness of the present investigation. I may, I think, with propriety add here, that a torturing and living death, with every circumstance specially adapted to render life miserable, has been an alternative which the public and my Government were led to believe was a singular act of clemency, when in 1867, the Government of England awarded penal servitude for life in exchange for an unexpired, but speedy death. I regret to be obliged to say that three years experience of this merciful alternative, gives me every reason to view that apparent act of clemency in a totally different light, and strongly induces me to look upon a power that could thus torture men as being—

* Too merciful in public gaze to take our lives away.

* The sentence here in print is as the rest of life's day.*

There has been a want of that magnanimity which is so much admired in and expected from a generous and humane victor towards a fallen adversary, who through reverse of fortune finds himself a prisoner in his power. To treat me as if I had been guilty of some degrading or ignominious crime is hardly deserved. Such a proceeding but degrades the power that can inflict on innocent men the infamous punishments allotted to the thief and vile outcasts of society.

* I am, gentlemen,

* Very respectfully,

* JOHN McCLEURE.*

6940. You had that in as your final answer?—Yes.

The prisoner withdrew.

MR. WILLIAM FITZ BUTTS recalled.

6941. (Chairman.) The four prisoners John McClure, Henry Shaw, O'Connell, and Derry, have finally declined to make any statement to us. A letter has been handed to us from O'Donovan Rossa in which he makes certain allegations as to the documents that he asked for, upon which I should like to ask you one or two questions. He says that out of 12 letters written by him he has only got 9?—He has got all the letters, my lord, that have been in my possession, and I have written to the other prisons where he has been located and they have sent me, I suppose, all that they had.

6942. You have handed to him all that have ever been sent to you from other prisons or been in your own custody?—Exactly, my lord.

6943. He says also that he has received a copy of what purports to be the prison records in his case, and he does not consider this a full or fair transcript, and that it cannot have been copied from the original books. Have you directed that a full and fair copy should be made of them?—I did.

6944. He illustrates it by reference to Portland. You can only answer for the books of this prison?—That is all.

6945. (Mr. De Vere.) Have you compared the abstracts with the originals, Mr. Butts?—I have compared the abstracts with the penal records.

6946. And they are correct?—They are perfectly correct, as far as this prison is concerned.

6947. And do you mean to say that in all matters in which the prisoner was entitled to receive a copy, you can say that a copy was fully and fairly made from the prison records?—It was.

6948. You saw it yourself?—I saw it myself and compared it.

6949. (Chairman.) With reference to a letter which he alleges has been suppressed and addressed to Mr. McCarthy Downing, member of Parliament for the county of Cork, are you aware of the fact of its having been suppressed?—Our letter was forwarded to McCarthy Downing to which he got an answer. I cannot say positively whether he wrote another to him, but I can tell you immediately on reference to the prison register of letters.

The witness withdrew.

The Commission adjourned.

Chatham Prison, Wednesday, 20th July 1870.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. BOOTHBY.
STEPHEN E. DE VERE, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENHOW.

JEREMIAH O'DONOVAN (Ross), prisoner, recalled.

6950. (Chairman.) O'Donovan Rossa, the Commissioners have had under their careful consideration a letter which you have addressed to them this morning, and have come to the following resolution, which I am to communicate to you: "That the Chairman of the Commission be requested to state to O'Donovan Rossa, in reply to his application now received, that 'they have no control over the manner in which the interviews between prisoners and their friends are conducted, such interviews being regulated by the Secretary of State.' I am further to inform you that some time ago the Commissioners passed a resolution to the effect that prisoners shall be permitted to receive the visits of their friends and advisors for the purpose of assisting them in the preparation of their statements, but that such permission should cease on the morning of the day the Commission appointed for the examination of such prisoner. We reserved to ourselves in passing that resolution the opportunity in any particular or special case of slightly modifying or extending it. In your case, I am to inform you, that under the special circumstances of your case, and your position in reference to your wife, we have as far departed from the resolution which we have hitherto acted on, as to enable me to inform you that you will be allowed to see your wife again to-morrow. This is the answer that I am to give you, and I am to remind you that in giving you the opportunity of saying your wife yesterday, we also departed from that resolution?—To-morrow, my lord, will be the last day?

6960. To-morrow will be the last day, so far as this resolution goes?—But I told you, my lord, that she was to attend as a witness.

6961. We shall be glad to see her and receive any

The prisoner retired.

W. Halpin.

WILLIAM HALPIN, prisoner, recalled.

6962. (Chairman.) Halpin, your examination was adjourned at our last meeting in order to give you an opportunity of preparing any statement that you may wish to submit. Are you prepared now to submit a statement?—I am not; I have not the statement entirely completed, my lord; in consequence of the obstructions that I met with since you were here before; and whether I will be able to furnish a statement to the present Commission, will entirely depend on the Commission itself, I presume, my lord; and in order to understand my exact position, I will, with your permission, ask a few questions.

6963. You may ask your questions?—The first question is, do the Commissioners still adhere to the resolution to conduct the inquiry in private, and refuse the prisoners to be represented by counsel?

6964. Yes?—Are the Commissioners sworn to inquire into the treatment of the transatlantic prisoners with strict impartiality with a view to elicit the whole truth?

6965. No. Of course we shall conduct the inquiry with a view to justice as we think best?—But as to being sworn, my lord?

6966. We are not sworn?—Will the witnesses be examined under the obligation of an oath?

6967. No; we have no power to administer an oath?—Will the whole of the evidence be published as given before the Commission?

6968. It rests with the Government to decide that. We shall recommend that it shall be printed?—Will I be furnished with the official orders and reports which I required of the Secretary of State on the 26th June, and of the Commissioners on the 4th of July?

6969. We understand that you have received all the papers which the Government think it right that you should have?—The governor told me that much.

6970. Yes?—These orders that I speak of now are the orders which I asked in my application to the Secretary of State, and which I repeated here on the 4th of July.

6971. Of the documents which have been asked for by you the Government think it right that you shall have some, and that you shall not have others. We inquired yesterday, and we believe that you have had all those for which you asked which the Government authorize to be given to you?—Well, I think that you are mistaken there, my lord, perhaps in consequence of misapprehension. There is one here which I have asked for. I have asked for the written complaints that I made against the surgeon and the late governor. I got one complaint that I made against the surgeon, but I did not get any of the other two. There are two complaints against the surgeon, and one against the governor.

6972. What is it that you state you have not had?—The second written complaint that I made against Dr. Burns, and another against the late governor.

6973. (Mr. De Vere.) Can you state the dates of them?—No, I cannot, sir. I do not recollect the dates.

6974. Or the year?—I think it was in last year some time.

6975. (Chairman.) We will inquire how it is that you have not had the other complaint that you made against the doctor, or that that you made against the governor of the prison?—The late governor, my lord.

6976. Captain Perrell?—Captain Perrell.

6977. (Mr. De Vere.) Were the two complaints evidence that she may wish to tender as a witness. We propose not to take you immediately, but to see another prisoner first, so that you have an opportunity of seeing your wife this afternoon if you like. She will probably come to you in the course of the day, if she is not in the prison at present?—Thank you, my lord.

made at the same time; did they hear about the same date?—I think that one of the complaints against the doctor and the complaint against the governor were written about the same time, or pretty close to the same time. I have got one of the complaints that I wrote against the doctor.

6978. Is the complaint against the doctor that you have not received the complaint that was written about the same time that you made the complaint against the governor?—That I could not say, sir, whether it is the one I have got now or the other one.

6979. (Mr. Broadrick.) Can you give us any indication of the date?—I cannot, sir.

6980. In what year was it?—Last year.

6981. (Chairman.) There are two complaints, one against the governor and the other against the doctor?—Yes, my lord. You understand that I have got one of the complaints that I made against the doctor, and that I did not get the other that I made against him.

6982. You made two against the doctor?—Yes, I made two.

6983. (Dr. Greenhow.) What does the one that you have got refer to?—I have one; I have it here, sir.

6984. Could you tell what the subject of it is?—Yes, I think; yes, I recollect now. It was a statement that the doctor made to the two members of Parliament who were down here last July, I think just about a year ago, Mr. McCarthy Dowling and Mr. Binko. It was in consequence of a misrepresentation and misstatement the doctor made to those gentlemen that I wrote that report, which I have got.

6985. That report you have got?—That I have got.

6986. Did the other refer to your bones and sinners?—Well, it refers to a good many subjects, I think.

6987. (Chairman.) We will inquire?—I wrote a letter to the Commissioners on the 9th of the present month, asking this question, amongst others, my lord, whether I would be allowed to make a copy of my statement for the information of the United States Government. I got no answer to that letter.

6988. (Dr. Lysons.) When do you say that you wrote that letter?—That letter was written on the 9th. I have a copy of the letter here. Perhaps I had better read it.

6989. (Chairman.) Wait one moment?—The 8th it is; written on the 8th.

6990. (Dr. Lysons.) On the 8th of July?—On the 8th of July.

6991. (Chairman.) Was it to ask for leave to have a copy made?—For leave to make a copy of my statement for the information of the United States Government.

6992. (Mr. Broadrick.) Was it addressed to the Commission?—It was. I have a copy of it here, which I will read if you permit me.

6993. (Chairman.) No. We are at present dealing with the matter of the application.

6994. (Mr. Broadrick.) For what purpose was the letter?—The first request I made in the letter was to be permitted to make a copy of the statement that I was then preparing.

6995. (Dr. Lysons.) To whom was the letter addressed?—To the Commissioners.

6996. To whom did you give that letter?—I gave it to the governor, and he sent it forward.

6997. (Dr. Greenhow.) Did you put it in an envelope?

hope?—No, sir, I did not. The governor has to read everything that I write, and I sent it to him through the officer of the ward.

6998. (Chairman.) You have nothing more to say about the letter?—I would prefer to read the letter, because there are other things in the letter.

6999. No; that will come when you make your statement. I understand you are now dealing with difficulties which you find in making your statement. You say that one difficulty is, that you had no answer to that letter?—I had no answer whatsoever.

Mr. Wm. P. Burts recalled and confronted with the prisoner.

7000. (Chairman.) Mr. Butts, the prisoner Halpin tells us that he wrote a letter on the 8th of July to the Commission asking for leave to make a copy of a statement that he was then preparing for us, for the purpose of laying that copy before the United States Government. Did he place that letter in your hands, and what did you do with it?—(Mr. Butts.) What letter was it? Was it on your side?—(Prisoner.) No, sir, it was written. (Mr. Butts.) I sent it to Parliament Street, my Lord.

7001. To the directors?—(Mr. Butts.) To the directors, to the best of my belief. I do not know what it was.

7002. It was on the 8th of July a letter addressed to us.

7003. (Mr. Brodrick.) Could you by reference to your book tell us?—(Mr. Butts.) I could. I will refer. (Prisoner.) I have a copy of the letter here. (The prisoner hands a document to Mr. Butts.)

7004. (Dr. Greenhouse.) Did you read that letter addressed to us?—(Mr. Butts.) I have read a letter like this, but Halpin has written a good many. I will find out.

Mr. Butts withdraws.

7005. Now if you wish to say anything more to us, you can do so?—I wish to say, my lord, that I wrote three letters under the instructions that I received when I was before you before, in reference to the Commission. One of those letters was addressed to Mr. Motley, the United States minister; another of them was addressed to the only friend that I have on this side of the Atlantic, Mr. John F. O'Donnell; and the other was addressed to Mr. Collan, M.P. for Dundalk. I have copies of the three letters here, which I would like to read. These three letters, I may say, have been suppressed by the Secretary of State.

7006. Have you been so informed?—I have been so informed by the governor. He read the Secretary's order.

7007. (Mr. Brodrick.) Were those letters written since the last interview with us?—Yes, sir. The letter to Mr. Motley was dated the 7th.

7008. (Chairman.) The way you put it to us now is, that not having received any answer to those letters has introduced difficulties in the way of making your statement?—No, sir, that is not it; but having letters suppressed, and the Secretary of State refusing me the right you granted me here before.

7009. (Dr. Lyons.) Were you informed that those letters were suppressed by the authority of the Secretary of State?—I was, sir.

7010. (Chairman.) Do I understand you to say that this suppression of the letters you have specified interferes with your making your statement to the Commission?—It does, sir; Mr. O'Donnell was one gentleman I wrote to, and was the gentleman that I wished to assist me in making the statement.

7011. (Chairman.) We must take a note of these grounds.

7012. (Dr. Lyons.) Is he a professional man?—He is not, sir.

7013. (Chairman.) Have you anything else to state as a reason why we should not require you now to make your statement to the Commission?—Should I? I think, no, sir?

7014. No, not now?—I think it would be very material for me to show you that the Secretary had no—

7015. Go on with your next point. We will ask, Mr. Butts on that?—Would it not be well, my lord, to see the letters the Secretary of State thinks proper to refuse?

7016. We are not here to judge of the Secretary of State's conduct in the case.—But I understood you, distinctly, when I was here before, on the 4th of July, to say to me that I had free permission to write to my friends on subjects solely connected with the Commission, and so have the assistance of any friend I thought proper to assist me in making out my statement. These letters were written under these instructions, and the Secretary of State steps in and takes away the right which you conferred. That is what I complain of, my lord.

Mr. Butts returns.

7017. (Mr. Butts.) I cannot state positively, my lord, whether it has been sent on or not, but to the best of my belief it has.

7018. (Chairman.) To Parliament Street?—(Mr. Butts.) Yes. I made it a point to forward everything, but I do not see this particular letter specified.

7019. You have no doubt that according to your usual practice you have sent it?—(Mr. Butts.) Yes.

7020. With regard to the letters which he says were suppressed by the Secretary of State, addressed to Mr. Motley, to Mr. O'Donnell, and to Mr. Collan respectively, are you cognizant of those letters?—(Mr. Butts.) I am, my lord.

7021. Have they been suppressed by direction of the Secretary of State?—(Mr. Butts.) Yes; I read to Halpin the Secretary of State's letter about it. (Prisoner.) I told the gentlemen so.

7022. You sent them to the directors, and the directors hid them before the Secretary of State?—(Mr. Butts.) Yes, they hid them before the Secretary of State.

Mr. Butts withdraws and the Commission deliberated.

WILLIAM HALPIN'S EXAMINATION RESUMED.

7023. (Chairman.) The Commissioners are of opinion, Halpin, that it does not rest with them to go into the question whether the Secretary of State acted rightly or wrongly in suppressing those letters. When you make your statement if you see grounds of complaint in those letters being suppressed, it will be open to you to refer to it. But at present you are simply considering whether the grounds you allege are or are not sufficient grounds to prevent your making your statement?—Am I at liberty to have the letters read before you?

7024. The letters will properly be read when you make your statement. At present you are giving us reasons why you should not now make your statement?—My position is simply to claim the right you gave me before.

7025. We cannot go into an investigation into the cause of having those letters suppressed?—My lord, you will consider that the question involves making my statement, if the action of the Secretary of State has disqualified me from making a statement at all.

7026. (Mr. Brodrick.) If you consider that, you may state it. If on this ground you decline to make a statement, we will take it down. It is for you to consider whether it is a ground on which to decline to make a statement to the Commission.

7027. (Dr. Lyons.) You can subsequently put in the letters as part of your grounds of complaint, and read the letters if you choose. Do you understand that?—I do, sir.

7028. (Chairman.) Is there any other reason that you wish to lay before us?—There is another reason, my lord, which is even of more importance in my opinion than that. You tell me that the witnesses are not to be examined under the obligation of an oath.

W. Halpin.
30 July 1870.

7038. Yes?—I have now two papers which I received from the medical officer of this prison. If you will permit me to read them they will explain themselves, to show the necessity of having the prisoners sworn.

7039. But we cannot administer oaths. We have no power to swear witnesses, so there is no use in your going into that question.

7041. (Mr. De Vere.) If we were to administer an oath we would be doing an illegal act, for which we might be indicted?—Yes; but, gentlemen, if you allow me to read the letters that I want to read, you will see that in one of them, which is very recent, I asked Mr. Callan, to that letter I wrote to him, to endeavour to have that power conferred on you.

7043. (Chairman.) I have told you that we cannot go into that?—No, my lord; I am simply explaining it.

7043. Have you any other reason to put forward why you should not now make your general statement of complaints?—I allege as another reason, that the witnesses are not to be sworn.

7034. Go on. Have you any other?—Another reason, that my friend, whom I asked to assist me, has been denied me, and prevented by the Secretary of State. That was entered in the first question, if you understand it properly, gentlemen.

7035. (Dr. Ligon.) Who is that friend that you wished to assist you?—Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. John F. O'Donnell.

7035. (Chairman.) Without going into the substance of the letter that you wrote to Mr. O'Donnell, will you state, did it contain a request that he would come and assist you?—Simply a request, sir. That was the whole substance of the letter. It was a very short letter. If you wish I will read it to you.

7037. No. Have you any other reason to allege?—I have these medical papers. Can I read them, my lord?

7048. In reference to the medical papers that you mention, do I understand you to allege that you have not had all the papers for which you asked, and that therefore that is an additional ground for your not being able now to make your statement to us?—I do; I allege that.

7038. Then I must ask you, for what medical papers have you asked that you have not had?—I have asked for the reports of the medical officers, and the order that be received in reference to them.

7040. These are placed on the table for the use of the Commissioners, but they could not be supplied to you?—But having them on the table does not enable me to make my statement, my lord.

7041. That is the only answer that I can give you. I hold in my hand a paper showing what papers it is intended should be given to the prisoners and what should not be given to them, and the reports made by medical officers, for medical purposes, are not to be furnished to prisoners, but to be furnished to the Commissioners. This paper which I hold in my hand contains a statement with regard to every class of paper asked for by prisoners, specifying what are to be given to the prisoners and what are not to be given to them but to the Commissioners. This is drawn up by superior authority, with which we have no power to interfere?—Well, my lord, I of course do not know what course you think proper to adopt, or the authorities think proper to adopt, but I know this, that without the papers I asked for it is utterly impossible for me to make a complete statement.

7042. That will be a matter entirely for you to consider; I can only tell you that the authorities have laid down certain rules, and the papers which you now specify do not come within any of the classes that are to be furnished to the prisoners?—Well, those two papers that I have received from the medical officer, my lord, I would wish to read, so as to show the Commission the necessity that exists, in my opinion, to have the witnesses sworn, to enable me to be fairly dealt with. I know that you have already decided you have no power.

7043. I have already told you that we have no power to administer an oath, and that we therefore cannot do it?—Well, my lord, can I read the papers?

7044. No, not unless you wish to bring them forward as a part of your general complaint by-and-by?—I have other records here furnished by the authority of the governor, from the books kept by the governor and the directors, and I would ask for the originals of those papers in order that I may compare them; knowing that these, if they are perfect, fair copies of the originals, then the originals are all false, and it is necessary for me to have the originals to compare these with.

7045. (Mr. De Vere.) With regard to these medical reports that have been furnished to you, the accuracy of which you impugne, do you not perceive that at a future period you have an opportunity of making their inaccuracy a part of your case and impeaching them, and that we will be able to test their accuracy by comparing them with the original documents placed on our table?—I understand that perfectly, sir; but it is not with that view that I alluded to them at all now, but to show you the necessity of having the medical officer sworn; because these papers sufficiently contradict themselves—two papers handed to me by the medical officer himself, and they contradict themselves so fully that whereas reads them cannot fail to see it.

7046. (Chairman.) We shall have an opportunity, as Mr. De Vere has stated, of comparing them with the originals, but under the rules of the authorities you cannot have the originals?—But how, my lord, am I to tell these are true copies unless I get the originals to compare them with?

7047. The comparison is to be made by us, not by you?—Then I am not to see the originals?

7048. No?—Then how am I to complete my statement is now mysterious than ever. I am very anxious to make a statement to the Commission, but how I am to do it, with all the obstacles that are thrown in my way by the Commission and the Government, I find more difficulty than ever. I would ask, my lord, for a little time to consider, to see whether I would make a statement.

7049. You quite understand, Halpin, that the motions to which you now refer you are quite at liberty to go into if you make your complaint. We should then inquire, for instance, what is the reason that you have not had a copy of a written complaint made by you against the governor, and of another made by you against the doctor. We should inquire if you complain, how it is that you have had no answer to your letter written to the Commissioners. We should inquire how it is that these three letters have been suppressed. We should inquire into those three points, and we should also inquire into that which you now state, the alleged inaccuracy of what has been supplied to you as copies of your medical history?—I do not say the medical papers are inaccurate as far as the originals are concerned. I only say that the medical papers disagree with themselves. But I say the papers furnished to me from the record books of the governor are inaccurate, and not only inaccurate but—well, I won't use the word.

7050. You ask for time to make up your mind as to whether you will or will not make a statement to the Commission. You can withdraw now. You must be prepared by 2 o'clock to tell us whether you will or will not make a statement.

The prisoner withdrew, and after the lapse of half an hour was recalled, having in the interval forwarded the following paper to the Commission:

"To the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the "Treatment of Twicken-Felony Prisoners in "English prisons.

"Chatham Prison,
30th July 1870.

"GENTLEMEN,
"When I first heard that a Commission was "appointed to inquire into the treatment of prisoners
"under sentence for political offences, I hoped that "the inquiry would be public, conducted by sworn Commissioners, and the facts verified or denied by sworn witnesses. I now learn, with much regret, that such is not and will not be the case; that the Commissioners are acting singly on their 'knoes,' and that the witnesses will be allowed to make any loose statements they please, without the obligations of an oath or the fears of the pains and penalties of perjury. From my knowledge of the capacity of some of the witnesses that should, and very likely will be, examined by the Commissioners, to make false reports and lying statements in reference to the class of prisoners whose treatment is to be inquired into, I have no hesitation in saying that such witnesses will not tell the truth, except under oath, and through a strict cross-examination.

"With a view to have a perfect statement prepared for the Commission, I applied to the Home Secretary on the 25th of June for copies of all orders issued and reports made in reference to our conduct and treatment in prison, as well as various other documents necessary to complete the same. I made a similar application to the Commissioners on the 4th instant, and wrote to the same body on the 8th instant, on the same subject; and now, up to the 14th, the moment of writing, I have been unable not only to get the papers required, but even a reply. I wrote to Mr. Butt on the 1st of July; he very kindly replied on the 2nd, but that reply was kept from me until the afternoon of the 7th. I wrote to Mr. Motley on the 16th of June and on the 7th of July on matters connected with the Commission, and up to this moment I cannot learn whether my letters were sent to him or not. I wrote to Mr. O'Donnell on the 7th instant to come to assist me to make out my statement, and to Mr. Callan, M.P., on the 8th, and I cannot learn if my letters have been forwarded to these gentlemen. I was told by the Commissioners on the 4th instant that I could correspond freely with my friends on the subject of the Commission, and your dearest promises to the prisoners such facilities as appear fair. But, gentlemen, with the above facts before me, I cannot avoid the conclusion that your oral promises, as well as those of your clerks, are meant more for the public eye than the accommodation of prisoners. You say that we are entitled to have all the records and published statements in reference to our treatment sent to us; yet in the face of this statement, papers enclosed to Ross in a letter a few days ago were abstracted by the authorities, and refused to be given up, and others brought by his wife yesterday, taken from him by order of the Home Secretary. The facilities you promised have been denied by the State authorities, whose shuffling, quibbling, and delays have retarded our operations, and now prevent us from completing our statements.

"Whatever faith I had in the honesty of the Government has been destroyed by the conduct of the State officials, and the evident unwillingness of the Commissioners to give such facilities as would enable us to lay the facts before the public. I did not, from the beginning, believe that the Government would appoint a Commission to prove its own public statements untrue, or that it could afford such an investigation as would unveil the facts, and lay the official score open to the public view, and I find that the action of the State authorities and the Commissioners since their appointment justify this conclusion. First, the Commission is to be a secret investigation, acting in the dark, refusing not only "the representatives of the press admission to its chamber, but even allowing counsel to act on the part of the prisoner. The prisoner is required to make his statement, and let the Commissioners cover it over, behind his back, with official falsehoods. He is to have no opportunity of meeting these falsehoods in open court, and whatever testimony will be allowed to reach the public must first percolate through the fingers of the State authorities. Then every just facility is denied the prisoner to prepare his statement, while the State authorities know all the records, and have been for months peeping at their contraband. Every artifice that cunning could suggest has been resorted to to keep us in the dark, and keep us from even knowing the cause of this inquiry. If the Government desired that the public should know the truth, would this be the case? Would we not be furnished with every means to enable us to lay the facts before the Commissioners and the public? Certainly we would, and the contrary conduct of the Government in withholding from us the necessary documents, shutting the doors of the Commission, refusing the presence of a representative of the American Government, and all legal assistance in the conduct of the inquiry, and the delays and obstructions resorted to, prove to me, beyond the possibility of a reasonable doubt, that the intention is to wrinkle the public again, and make the personal character of the Commissioners, and the title of Lord Devon, cover the fraud.

"With this knowledge in my possession, and these convictions in my mind, I decline to make any statements before this Commission unless it offers the safeguards of publicity, and affords all the requisite facilities to enable me to make and prove my statement.

"Since writing the above, the governor read for me a letter from the Home Secretary, positively refusing to allow my letters to Mr. Motley, Mr. Callan, and Mr. O'Donnell to be forwarded to those gentlemen. Such are the facilities allowed by Mr. Bruce; such is the sham attempted to be foisted on the public. To comment on such acts would be a waste of time. The Commissioners give me permission to write to my friends on the subject of the Commission; Mr. Bruce takes that permission away. The Commissioners tell me I can have the assistance of a friend in making up my statement; Mr. Bruce says I cannot. What a mockery. What a sham is this whitewashing Commission appointed by the Home Secretary to cover up his falsehoods and his frauds! The orders of the Commission, as well as those of the Home Secretary, are plainly meant for the public eye. They are intended to deceive; they are too shallow to deceive anyone but those who get them up. They pretend to confer rights in public which are taken away in private; like fairy gifts, they recede from the gray in the dark, and vanish before the advancing light. Perfidy has long been the characteristic of England's rulers, and it appears they have no intention of shaking it off.

"I am, gentlemen,

"Respectfully,

"WM. G. HALPIN."

7051. (Chairman.) Halpin, an officer has just put this document from you into my hand. Is it intended to be handed in by you as an expression of your final resolution in respect to your making any statement to the Commission?—It is, my lord.

7052. Then you can withdraw, if you please.

The prisoner withdrew.

Mr. W. F. BURNES recalled.

7053. (Chairman.) Mr. Burns, the prisoner Halpin has stated that he has not had a copy of a written complaint that was made by him against Captain Powell, the late governor of this prison, or of a complaint that was made by him against the doctor. He has had a copy of one complaint against the doctor, but not of another complaint; he made two complaints against the doctor?—(No reply.)

7054. (Mr. Brodribb.) These two complaints were made last year, and one of those complaints, as we understood him to say, arose out of a visit paid to the treason-felony prisoners, or at all events to himself, by

W. Halpin.

20 July 1879.

Mr.
W. F. BURNES.

Mr.
W. F. Bates.
20 July 1870.

Mr. McCarthy Downing and another gentleman last year?—I thought they were to have the complaints they made against the government.

7045. (Chairman.) "Written complaints made against the governor or officers of the prison, and handed to superior authority," were to be supplied. Here, out of three written complaints it appears that one was supplied and the others were not?—I will make inquiries if you like, and ascertain if there was such a document.

7046. (Dr. Greenwood.) Just look over that and see if you can explain it. (Hands the witness a paper)?—It does not say any more here than are written complaints or not, as far as I can see. I will go and find out if there are any written complaints.

7047. (Dr. Lygon.) That be good enough to go and look at the book, and bring the book here?—Yes. (The witness withdraws and returns with a book.)

7048. (Chairman.) Mr. Bates, can you explain the discrepancy that exists as regards that entry?—On reference to the letter book I find that he has made a statement. It was written by the director's order; he asked the director for permission and the director said if he remained of the same mind three days he might make it, and he did make it. By reference to the letter book I find that he did write it. He asked me for a statement he made against the governor and medical officer, and I gave it to him.

7049. (Dr. Lygon.) On the 20th April 1869 the nature of his application is recorded here, "Wishes to prefer charges against the governor." Then there is entered here, "By order of the director, if he continues in this mind, at the end of three days he is to be allowed to put the matter in writing, the statement to be sent up to the directors"?—Yes; he eventually was of the same mind. He wrote to the directors; and here are two charges that he made against the Roman Catholic clergymen and the governor.

7050. (Chairman.) Of that he has not had a copy?—He has not had a copy. I did not know of its existence until now. If he applied for a copy he would have had it.

7051. Does the reply recite the nature of the complaint?—This is the governor's reply forwarding his complaint. His letter is in Parliament Street. That is the reason I have not got it.

7052. That is the written complaint made against the governor?—It is, my lord.

7053. Of which he has not had a copy?—Of which he has not had a copy.

7054. Then the complaint is in point of fact in the director's office?—It ought to be; it is not here at all events.

7055. Will you be kind enough to write for this written complaint?—I will, my lord.

7056. (Mr. De Vere.) There is also a written complaint which he made against the medical officer which he says he did not get.

7057. (Chairman.) You stated just now that three letters written by the prisoner Halpin to Mr. Motley,

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. F. O'Donnell, and Mr. Callan, were suppressed by order of the Secretary of State?—They were, my lord.

7058. Are you in possession of the Secretary of State's letter announcing that they were to be suppressed?—I am.

7059. Has that letter been communicated to the prisoner?—It was, my lord.

7060. Have you any objection in your official position to produce that letter?—Not at all, my lord.

7061. Will you be kind enough to produce it if you please?—Yes.

7062. Is it not marked confidential?—Oh, not at all.

7063. Will you read it?—There are two letters; one referring to his letter written to Mr. Callan, and the other referring to his letters to Mr. O'Donnell, and Mr. Motley the United States Minister. Number one is dated.

" Sir, Whitehall, 12th July 1870.

" I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, forwarded three letters written by transatlantic convicts W. G. Halpin and C. U. O'Donnell, in Charleston prison, and inquiring whether they may be despatched as addressed. In reply I am to acquaint you that, with regard to the first letter, from Halpin to Mr. Motley, the Minister for the United States in this country, that the convict may be informed that the decision of the Commissioners that each convict may have the assistance of a friend to aid him in the preparation of any statement he may have to make as to his treatment in the convict prisons, is not to be interpreted as a general permission to him to write to his friends; that the question of the contents being represented before the Commissioners by Mr. Butt has already been decided by the Commissioners, who have determined that statements on either side shall be made to them directly, and that counsel shall not appear, either on one side or the other; that an application to the American minister to interfere in a matter already decided by the Commissioners cannot be allowed, neither can reports made by one government to the other be of any assistance in the preparation of a statement as to the treatment of individual convicts in a convict prison. For these reasons Mr. Bruce must decline to allow this letter, number one to be forwarded, nor can he permit letter number two, from Halpin to Mr. O'Donnell, and number three from O'Donnell to Mr. Motley, to be sent, and they must be destroyed."

That was the first letter. That is dated the 12th of July. The next is dated "Whitehall, 13th July." They are both to the governor. It says:

" Sir,

" I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, and to acquaint you that he cannot permit the accompanying letter from William Halpin to Mr. Callan, M.P., to be forwarded to him."

JEREMIAH O'DONOVAN (ROMA) recalled.

7074. (Chairman.) Are you prepared now, O'Donovan, to say a statement before the Commission?—No, my lord. I am prepared to answer any questions you are pleased to ask me upon anything that I submitted to you.

7075. You would rather that that course were taken?—Any course that you prefer to take, my lord. The letter that I gave you on yesterday morning, my lord, of course I will not on that letter. I sent it to you, my lord, that you may have as early notice as possible.

7076. We hold in our hands a printed copy of a letter addressed by you to us on the 30th of June. You state in that that you were 35 consecutive days in this prison with your hands tied behind your back?—Yes, my lord.

7077. You see the necessity of being particular as to dates. When did that occur?—Well, the first day, my lord, that I was put in irons, was about the 17th of June.

7078. June the 17th you were put in irons?—Yes, my lord.

7079. (Dr. Greenwood.) What year was it. Was it last year or the year before?—'68, my lord.

7080. (Chairman.) Will you state how were the irons put on you. Were they fastened on the hands or the legs?—Behind my back, my lord.

7081. The two hands?—The two hands handcuffed, tied behind my back, my lord.

7082. Were you told for what offence it was done?

J. O'Donovan
(Rome).

—No; my lord; but it was for an offence that I committed the day before.

7063. What was the offence?—Throwing some water that I had in my cell pot through the spits of the cell at the governor.

7064. Was that water from your chamber?—Part from the chamber, my lord, and part not.

7065. Was that the then governor here, Captain Powell?—Captain Powell, my lord.

7066. After you were put in irons, were you moved into a different cell from that in which you had been before?—I was, my lord; not I think on that day, some days afterwards.

7067. When were your hands unloosed after the time of being first put behind your back?—At the dinner hour, my lord. I was put in irons between 10 and 11 o'clock.

7068. At what time of the day, morning?—The morning, my lord. The hands then were unloosed first at dinner time, and I was tied in front.

7069. Were you allowed to see your hands in dining?—The hands were tied in front, my lord, and brought forward from behind my back.

7070. When the hands were tied in front, could you use them to feed yourself?—Yes, my lord.

7071. When you say your hands were tied, do you mean tied with handcuffs?—Handcuffs, and a chain of a few inches between the handcuffs. I beg your pardon, my lord, but I will be guided by you whether I will make a few remarks that I have to make with respect to witnesses in this matter. I have a copy of a report of an inquiry organised by the directors to know whether this was correct or not, and all that gave evidence, meant to say that I was not in irons for more than three days.

7072. We will go into that afterwards. The hands were unloosed that first day at dinner time, that you may be allowed to feed yourself, the hands being a few inches apart, but confined by a chain?—Yes, my lord.

7073. After dinner were they tied again?—They were tied again behind my back, my lord.

7074. How long did they so remain tied behind your back?—Until some time after 7 o'clock in the evening, before bed time, a quarter to 8. Between 7 o'clock and a quarter to 8, they were taken off for the evening.

7076. Did the tying of your hands behind your back, and the unloosing of them, and your having free disposal of them, occur the following day?—I have not given you one full day, my lord, for it commenced at 10 o'clock.

7077. (Dr. Lysons.) Have you finished the first day?—Mr. Lysons. I have only given a part of the first day, for the hands were not tied until 11 o'clock the first day.

7078. (Chairman.) Give us the first whole day?—The irons are put on, my lord, sometimes about half-past 5 o'clock in the morning, just after I get my breakfast.

7079. (Dr. Lysons.) After your breakfast?—I am not sure whether it was sometimes before breakfast or after it, but if the officer had put them on before breakfast, he opened them while I was at breakfast. Any way, breakfast hour is about half-past 5 o'clock; it does not make much difference.

7100. (Dr. Lysons.) Do you remember distinctly whether irons were on you at breakfast on any day?—I never wore the irons at breakfast or any meals; but the time of putting on the irons is breakfast hour, and the officer might put them on before I would get the breakfast, and then they would be taken off.

7101. (Chairman.) The second day they were put on at half-past 5 o'clock in the morning. Whether it was after breakfast or before it you do not know; but if they were put on before breakfast they were taken off to allow you to feed yourself?—That is correct, my lord.

7102. Whatever the irons which cased your hands behind your back were taken off, the hands were confined in front with a small chain between them?—Yes, my lord.

7103. (Dr. Greenhouse.) But the irons were actually on while you were taking food?—Yes.

7104. (Chairman.) When they were put on after breakfast how long did they remain on?—Until dinner hour. There is an exercise hour during the day, and I might get that hour before dinner or after dinner. If it came before dinner the irons were taken off while I was putting on my shoes and trousers. Going out for exercise the irons would be taken off while I would be dressing, and then they would be put on again.

7105. They were taken off to enable you to put on your shoes?—Yes, and put on again.

7106. (Dr. Greenhouse.) Were they taken off altogether?—Not altogether.

7107. Were your hands brought in front when you wanted to dress?—Yes.

7108. (Dr. Lysons.) At what hour was the exercise?—There was no particular hour.

7109. (Mr. De Vere.) You say that the irons were taken off to enable you to dress for exercise?—Yes.

7110. Were they altogether taken off or were they merely transferred from behind your back and put in front?—No; my hands were ironed behind my back. The officer would come and unloose the irons. Sometimes he would take the irons off both hands and let me dress then; sometimes he would take it off one hand. I believe the officer is bound to take off the iron entirely, lest a man might strike with the iron on one hand; but on a few occasions I dressed with the iron on one hand and let the officer hold it and I would not strike him.

7111. Were you required to dress with the two hands tied by handcuffs in front of you?—No, I could not do that.

7112. (Dr. Lysons.) Then you are not sure whether upon some occasions the handcuffs were not altogether taken off while you were dressing, and on other occasions left partly on one hand while you were dressing?—Yes, on a few occasions only.

7113. (Dr. Greenhouse.) Were they taken off altogether at night?—Yes, altogether.

7114. You had no handcuffs on at night?—Not these 84 days. The handcuffs at night occurred at Millbank.

7115. (Chairman.) We have got this, that the handcuffs were sometimes taken off altogether while you were dressing, and that they were always taken off at night?—Yes, my lord.

7116. During the period of the day when you were not at exercise or at meals, where were you and what were you doing?—I was in my cell, my lord.

7117. You have represented to us now what happened with regard to those irons for one day. Was the same course carried out the following days, and if so for how many days?—One thing you have not, my lord. When I required to go to the closet they were taken off.

7118. And when you wanted to make water did you ask to have them taken off?—I did not like to give trouble to the officer and I used to manage to make water without taking them off.

7119. Does that represent the state of things which existed during a certain number of days, and if so, how many?—It represents the state of things that existed for 35 days, each day following the other.

7120. Are you quite sure that that was the number of days during which you remained in that state?—I am, my lord.

7121. Was there or was there not any mark on your wrist from those irons?—Yes, my lord. One day I counted eight marks, five from the iron, eight marks that left blood.

7122. There were on my right marks that left blood?—Yes, my lord.

7123. Did you remain in the same cell during those 35 days that you had been in before?—No, my lord.

7124. Where were you removed to?—The cell in

J. O'Donnell
(Exam.)
20 July 1859.

J. O'Donovan
(Prisoner).

22 July 1876.

which I committed the offence I was removed out of some days after the offence was committed.

7123. And where were you placed?—I was placed in a cell some six cells further down in the ward.

7124. A cell of the same class?—A cell of the same class, my lord.

7125. (Dr. Lyons.) How soon after the commission of the offence were you removed?—I cannot exactly say, sir.

7126. (Chairman.) You were removed, you say, to another cell of the same class?—Yes, my lord.

7127. And at the end of 35 days were you released from iron?—Yes, my lord. I was brought back to the same cell in which I committed the offence before the irons were taken off my hands. Captain Hardy, the deputy governor, before I was released from the irons, read a paper which he said came from the board of directors regarding the punishment which I was to receive. After reading the paper Mr. Allison who accompanied him asked would he remove the irons.

7128. (Mr. Brodick.) Mr. Allison was a principal warder, was he not?—He was principal warder. He asked him would he remove the irons; Captain Hardy said yes.

7129. (Chairman.) And were the irons then removed?—The irons were then removed, my lord.

7130. By Allison?—By Allison.

7131. You then returned to the same state that you were in before you committed the offence?—Yes, my lord; but one day, the day after, I think—I am not sure now as to the time—but on the day after Mr. Allison came and put on the irons again.

7132. In Mr. Allison here now?—He is not, my lord; and they were left on for two days in the same manner in which I wore them before; that makes 37 days.

7133. At the end of those two days were they taken off?—Yes, my lord.

7134. In the presence of the deputy governor or governor?—No; in the presence of neither of them. Mr. Allison took them off and I have not seen them since.

7135. (Mr. De Vere.) Had there been any further report or complaint against you in the period between when the irons were taken off and put on again?—Yes, sir; I am going to tell you that.

7136. (Chairman.) What further offence was there?—When I was absent from the cell, a water-closet had been constructed in it with a flag, a slab covering it, and no lid to cover the aperture; I had examined of a tap that was inside to let water to this, and I used it; so I did not like the affair, and after seeing it I kept the water running; kept it running.

7137. Was that an offence for which you were punished?—That was an offence for which I was punished, my lord. I was removed from the cell during those two days, and when I returned to it after those two days—yes, I think after the two days—the tap was moved to the outside so that I had not command of it then, but when I used the closet I should ring the bell and tell the officer to turn the tap and let the water on.

7138. (Dr. Lyons.) Was it for that offence that you were treated the second time?—Yes.

7139. (Chairman.) Is that so?—It is so. I must be particular; I am here it is said I was violent, very violent. I must be particular, my lord, in bringing before you the necessity of examining witnesses as to what violence they saw me use, for I used no violence.

7140. What document is that which you hold in your hand now?—Oh, my lord, this is what purports to be a report of the examination here by Mr. Stappford as to my being in irons these 35 days.

7141. Where is that extracted from?—It is read by Mr. Bruce. It is from the "Irishman" newspaper. It purports to be read in the House of Commons by Mr. Bruce in reply to Mr. Moore.

7142. What is the date of it?—August the 14th, 1869, my lord.

7143. It purports to be read by Mr. Bruce, you say?—It is Mr. Bruce's reply to Mr. Moore's speech, 7144. What statement is there in it that you wish to comment on?—That I was violent.

7145. Just read the extract please?—Mr. Bruce said, that as this was a question affecting the character of public servants, he hoped that by the indignance of the House he might be allowed to address them again on a motion for adjournment. He was anxious first of all that it should be clearly understood that this punishment, whether excessive or otherwise, was inflicted upon Ross for an act of insubordination only. The complaint was that he had his hands tied behind his back for 35 days, and it was added in the Irish newspaper that he had been manacled day and night, so that at meal times he had to lap up his food like a dog. In reply, he, Mr. Bruce, said that this was not true; that the prisoner had to be manacled for an act of insubordination, but was manacled only during a part of the day and not at all at night or when he had his meals. In consequence, however, of the statement made by his honorable friend, he ordered an inquiry by one of the directors of prisons. Major Farragher, the deputy governor, who was present at the interview between his honorable friend and the prisoner, said that the latter gave a somewhat account to that given by his honorable friend. Major Farragher said that 'the prisoner stated that he had his hands handcuffed behind his back for the greater portion of 35 days, and that he had frequently to eat on his belly like a dog, and he gave the exact dates. Mr. Blake and Mr. Dowling then expressed themselves satisfied with everything concerning the prisoner's treatment, with the exception of this one point, viz., the mode and duration of his being handcuffed.' The governor was then called upon to explain what had actually occurred and what was really the punishment inflicted upon this man. He would read the questions and answers:

"Did you give an order that the convict O'Donovan should be placed in handcuffs after he had committed the assault on the 10th of June 1869, and if so, state the circumstances under which it was given?"

It was not the 10th of June, it was the 16th of June, my lord.

7146. (Mr. Brodick.) You believe it was the day before you were manacled that you committed the assault?—That I committed the assault, yes.

7147. (Chairman.) Now go on?—This is Captain Farragher's answer:—"The day after the assault was committed I went on leave for three days, giving over charge to Captain Harvey, who requested to know before I left whether I would authorize his placing O'Donovan Ross in handcuffs with his hands behind him, the prisoner being then in such an excited state that some severe measure of restraint seemed requisite. I authorized his doing so provided they were taken off at night."

"Do you remember how long he was restrained by being handcuffed behind his back?—As I was absent on leave I cannot say, but on being called upon to state in May last the length of time passed by Ross with his hands behind him, I sent for the warder who had been doing duty in the separate cells, who stated that to the best of his belief it was only for one day."

7148. Who was that warder do you know?—I do not know, my lord, he is not given here. I suppose Mr. Allison, the warden in charge of the cells.

7149. Go on?—"To convince myself of the truth of this statement I desired him to bring me his 'separate cell book,' which confirmed his statement. I also sent for the 'chief warder's occurrence book,' which corroborated the entry in the 'separate cell book.' I then felt no further doubt on that subject and considered the evidence thus produced quite conclusive."

"On subsequent visits after the assault, was the prisoner handcuffed behind his back?—I have no recollection of ever having seen him with his hand-

" cuffs behind his back. No order was given by me for him to be handcuffed behind his back between the 16th of June and 23rd of July 1868, nor has he ever been so restrained more than a few hours at a time, except on the occasion above referred to."

" The chief warder was asked: 'Were you in charge of the separate cells on the 16th of June 1868 when the convict O'Donovan Rossa was confined for an assault on the governor?'—Yes."

" Was he placed in irons on reception at the separate cells?—To the best of my belief he was not."

" Was he ever handcuffed with his hands behind his back?—He was."

" How often and when?—I cannot exactly say, but whenever the governor's order was given for the use of the handcuffs it was invariably entered in the separate cell book. It is so long ago that I cannot exactly say how long he was handcuffed."

" Was he handcuffed behind for so long a period as one month?—Oh no, I doubt whether the period extended to three days."

" Were the handcuffs invariably removed at meal times and at night?—Yes."

" Do you remember the prisoner's being placed in handcuffs on the morning of the 17th June 1868, and who gave the order?—I cannot give the exact date, but it was on the morning the governor went on leave after the assault, Captain Harvey gave me a verbal order personally, but I cannot remember whether he specified the hands being behind the back or not."

" Would you place the handcuffs behind without an order to that effect?—No."

" Is it customary to record in the "separate cells book" all cases of prisoners handcuffed behind?—Yes, in all cases."

" You cannot state the exact time the prisoner was kept in handcuffs behind. Do you think it could have been a week, of course assuming that they were removed at night?—I do not."

" Captain Hardy, the deputy governor, was asked: 'Were you on duty as deputy-governor on the 16th of June 1868 at this prison, and do you remember the convict O'Donovan Rossa being under punishment in the separate cells for an assault on the governor?—I was on duty on the 17th and 18th and remember the occurrence. I think I visited the prisoner in the separate cells on the 16th."

" Was O'Donovan Rossa then in handcuffs?—Yes, with his hands behind his back."

" Did you visit him after that?—Not daily, but alternately, day by day with Captain Harvey."

" Did you see him more than once with his hands behind his back?—Not more than once and that was on the 18th."

" Mind, my lord, this gentleman is the same gentleman who I said came after the 35 days and ordered the irons to be taken off me. He said he only saw me on the 18th."

" 7162. Captain Hardy or Captain Harvey?—Hardy, my lord, I understood he is in Gibraltar now."

" After the third day following the assault can you say with confidence whether the prisoner had his hands behind his back, during the remaining portion of his punishment?—I am confident he had not."

" During the time the prisoner was handcuffed behind were the handcuffs ever removed?—Yes, at night and at meal times."

" He admitted that some doubt existed as to the length of time that the prisoner had been handcuffed, whether that period was not 35 but one, two, or three days."

" 7163. Who admitted that? Is that Mr. Bruce's speech or Captain Hardy's evidence?—The deputy governor, I think, my lord. (Hands the paper to the Chairman.)

" 7164. Oh, this is an observation of Mr. Bruce's."

The marks of quotation are put behind and before?—Yes, my lord, I did not observe that. (Witness gets back the paper.)

" He admitted that some doubt existed as to the length of time during which the prisoner had been handcuffed; whether that period was not thirty, but one, two, or three days. Then came the evidence of Dr. Burns, the medical officer, who was asked:—

" Did you visit the prisoner daily while he was under confinement?—Answer: 'I did.'

" When you visited him was he handcuffed?—He was."

" How was he handcuffed, with his hands behind his back or in front?—Part of the time in front: part of the time behind his back."

" Did you often see him handcuffed behind his back?—Answer: 'No.'

" How often did you see him so handcuffed?—Three days."

" Did the three days you speak of follow immediately after month?—Yes."

" How was he handcuffed for the remaining portion of the time?—With his hands in front."

" Do you think that as a means of restraint it was necessary to handcuff him behind?—Answer:—

" Yes, he was in a very excited state for some time."

" There was also the evidence of chief warder Turner, who being asked whether he saw the prisoners?—It should be prison?—handcuffed behind answered in the affirmative, adding, in reply to the question 'how often,' 'I cannot say the exact time, whether one, two, or three days; there is only one entry of the prisoner being handcuffed behind, and that was on the 17th of June, the day after the assault.'

" Then there was the following note of Captain Stephen: 'The books are examined, and I find only one entry of the prisoner being handcuffed behind, and that was on the 17th of June 1868. There are other entries of his having been handcuffed, but not behind. It appears to be the invariable practice to enter all prisoners handcuffed behind as a matter of restraint in this book.' That is the speech, my lord."

" 7165. Having read that, and observed what was stated then, do you still remain of opinion, and are you prepared to tell us that it was for 35 days?—Yes, my lord."

" 7166. (Mr. De Vere.) And that those days were following on another?—Yes, Mr. De Vere."

" 7167. (Dr. Lyons.) Why do you remember so distinctly that the number of days was thirty-five?—I fixed them in my memory at the time, and the suffering that I endured, and the acts on my hands and everything, made a very vivid impression on my memory; and, my lord, at the expiration of those 35 days, 26 days' bread and water commenced. The date of the commencement of the bread and water must be in the prison books, and from the time I committed the offence until I got the bread and water, until the director's order was read for my punishment, I was in irons all the time."

" 7168. After the 35 days you were put on bread and water?—Yes, Mr. Lyons."

" 7169. (Chairman.) You say that the commencement of the 26 days' bread and water would be recorded in the prison books?—I think so, my lord. I think all these punishments should be recorded in the prison books."

" 7160. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you state anything else which makes you remember so distinctly that the period of time was 35 days?—No, I cannot, Mr. Lyons."

" 7161. Could you refer to the testimony of anybody to corroborate your own statement that you were handcuffed with your hands behind during 35 consecutive days?—The officers who handcuffed me and who used to change the irons. I have, I think, in my memory the names of a dozen officers who were near me at the time."

" 7162. Will you name them?—Yes."

J. O'Donovan
(Rossa).
20 July 1870.

J. O'Sullivan
(Witness).
20 July 1876.

7163. (Chairman.) I suppose Alison was too?—Yes, he was the acting officer of the watch, my lord. Officer Alison put the irons on the first day.

7164. (Dr. Lyons.) Did he take them off the last day?—He took them off the last day.

7165. Who else?—Officer Brown used to put them on every morning nearly. Another officer might come when he would be off duty; but this officer Brown I remarked was the officer that put them on early in the morning; officer Douglas in the evening nearly.

7166. Took them off?—Changed them at supper time from rear to front.

7167. Who else?—Officer Good occasionally took me to exercise, and changed them for dressing, officer Marshall the same way—for exercise.

7168. Who else?—Occasionally at dinner time, and other occasions which I cannot particularise, Cranstoun.

7169. (Chairman.) Is he also a wander?—He is an assistant wander, I believe, my lord. Cranstoun, Hilbert, Thompson, Robertson, Roland, Penniford, Norton, Giddings; that is all I have, but there are a few who I think changed them, but their names I cannot remember.

7170. (Mr. De Vere.) All those that you have mentioned were occasional attendants?—Occasional attendants. All these I am sure had something to do with it.

7171. (Mr. Bradrick.) How many of those that you have mentioned are still in this prison?—I understood from my wife here before that officer Douglas had resigned.

7172. (Chairman.) Do I understand that you mention these names as the names of persons whose evidence you would wish to be taken in support of the statement you have?—Yes, my lord, if any statement is contradicted.

7173. (Dr. Lyons.) Now I want to know from you, can you name any other persons, prison officers, prisoners, or any other persons, who in any way can testify to what you allege, that you were during a period of 35 days in irons?—I can Mr. Lyons. The first or second day that I had them on, the second day I think, the reverend Mr. O'Sullivan, the chaplain visited me in company with another priest who was chaplain of Portland prison. But then they all agreed that I had the irons on this day. That was the 17th or 18th of June. It would be unnecessary to bring the priest of Portland prison, for this was the day he came and there is no question of that day, so that there is no necessity for bringing him.

7174. (Chairman.) That is not one of the days disputed?—It is admitted, my lord.

7175. Did I not understand you to say that Mr. O'Sullivan may only speak of one day?—The chaplain of Portland prison, my lord.

7176. (Dr. Lyons.) Can Mr. O'Sullivan speak of other days? Can he speak of any of the days that are in dispute?—Yes; I recollect that after the committal of the offence, Mr. O'Sullivan was absent some weeks, perhaps between two and three weeks. He came in one day after his absence. He said the directors was coming that day and that if I would express regret, or would make an apology, or say that I was very sorry, in fact, express my regret, that it would all end in nothing, and I said I could not; and I would see the director and see what he would say on the matter.

7177. (Mr. Bradrick.) Who said that?—Father O'Sullivan.

7178. (Dr. Lyons.) You say that Mr. O'Sullivan saw you when three weeks of the hand-cuffing had elapsed?—About three weeks. Yes; and on this day also, the director visited the prison.

7179. On what day?—The day Mr. O'Sullivan was with me; so that that date must be on record in the books—the date of the director's visit to the prison.

7180. Who was the director?—Captain De Caze.

7181. He visited you the same day?—He visited the prison and I was taken before him; but the irons were taken off before I was brought before him, and put on again after I came from him.

7182. The irons were taken off before you were carried before Captain De Caze, and they were put on again after you were brought back?—Yes.

7183. Where else do you refer to?—Another day I distinctly recollect Father O'Sullivan coming in, and from the blood that had trickled from the marks on my wrists, I had written on the door, "Night I not cry out blood for blood?"

7184. How did you write it?—I wrote it by scratching.

7185. (Chairman.) Was that before you went into the presence of the director?—I think it was after it, my lord.

7186. (Dr. Lyons.) Could you fix the date of it in any way?—I could not.

7187. How long had you been manacled at that time?—I might have been three weeks manacled at that time.

7188. (Mr. De Vere.) What were the words that you wrote?—"Night I not will cry out blood for blood." He took out—7189. Who took out?—Mr. O'Sullivan, a white pocket handkerchief, and said he "That must not be there, that is awful," and he was taking his handkerchief to wipe it out. "Oh, sir," said I, "I would not have you soil your handkerchief," so I said I would wipe it out. He asked me would I wipe it out, and I said I would, and I wiped it out after it was left the cell. I mention this, for I think he must recollect the circumstance.

7190. (Dr. Lyons.) Then it was not seen or reported by any of the warders?—No, it was not, Mr. Lyons.

7191. Can you in any way fix the date on which Father O'Sullivan saw the blood?—I cannot.

7192. (Mr. De Vere.) Was it before or after the visit of Captain De Caze?—I think it was after, Mr. De Vere, but I cannot be positive. I think it was after.

7193. What reason had you to fix in your mind that it was about three weeks after the man-cuffing had commenced?—Because Father O'Sullivan was absent for a long time after the man-cuffing commenced, and I have nothing to guide me, only that he could not have seen it until he came back.

7194. (Dr. Lyons.) When you speak of blood flowing from your wrists, was the blood fresh?—I thought the blood could be put on without lifting me, and some officers used to put them on without hitting me, but some used to put their hands and press the iron and they would bite. The officers who bit used to let the iron hang on the wrist.

7195. I asked you was there much blood, or were you much cut by the irons?—A few of them cut me very severely.

7196. Are there any marks of the irons, remaining still?—There is one mark there (showing the back of his wrist), but I cannot say there are marks, except marks that are small. In fact I may say they are nothing.

7197. Did you suffer much from the cuts or scrapes?—No, they did not fester. I did not care much for cuts, only the animals that I thought was displayed in treating me so.

7198. Have you any other names to mention of persons who could testify anything in regard to this matter?—I mentioned Captain Hardy and Captain Harvey. Captain Harvey was the governor in charge when Mr. Powell went. I understand he is in Portland now.

7199. What was Captain Harvey, or Captain Hardy testify to?—They were in the prison all the time during the 35 days, and one of them I think used occasionally visit every day. There is one officer I did not mention, the chief officer of the prison, Turner. I would not wonder if the Protestant chaplain saw me sometimes during those days.

7200. (Chairman.) Is it the same gentleman who is now Protestant chaplain? Yes, the Reverend Mr. Duke, my lord. I am not positive. I recollect something about books. I do not know was it at this time he visited me. If he came, he saw me in iron. But his scripture reader used to come about every week to change books, and he must have seen me during those five weeks. On Fridays he used to come.

7201. (Dr. Lyons.) What is his name?—Mr. Lake.

7202. Are there any other persons who can give testimony on this point?—I do not recollect any others.

7203. Are there any prisoners who could testify anything in regard to it?—No prisoners; they had no opportunity of seeing me. I think there is an officer, and I was asking his name to-day. I do not know his name, but I know him by appearance. I think he used to exercise me sometimes. Take down his name as LYMAN, and you can inquire.

7204. What class officer is he?—He is an assistant warder.

7205. You are doubtful as to his name?—I am doubtful as to his name, and I am not positive as to his having seen me.

7206. Would you recognise the person whom you suppose by name to be LYMAN?—Yes, Mr. LYMAN. Now, other officers perhaps can be found, who saw me in the iron by the prison records; because officers from the prison come to this punishment ward on day or Sundays. They are not there on week-days, but come on Sundays when men have their Sunday on leave consequently an officer of those must have seen me. The records of the prison must tell who these officers were, who were on duty those days.

7207. They on Sundays relieved the men who were on duty during the week days?—Yes, and some of those must have seen me.

7208. But you cannot name any of them?—No, but the prison book I expect will have a record of their names.

7209. Could you recognise any of them?—I could if I saw them now, but I cannot bring them to memory.

7210. Could you recognise them if you saw them?—Well, some I think I could. I think I could.

7211. Now, could you recognise the iron which were used in your case?—I had two. The iron I had for the two days were heavier than the iron that I had for the 35 days.

7212. Were the iron that you had on for the 35 days the same, from the beginning to the end of the period?—I could not say that either, Mr. LYMAN. I am not sure of that. But I think that the iron I had during the 35 days were not changed at all from the first to the last day. No, I think not.

7213. Would you recognise the iron that were on you for the 35 days?—Well, I might; but possibly there are many others in the prison from the same mould.

7214. Is it the fact that when you were manacled with your hands behind your back, you had at any time to take your food out of a vessel by stooping down and lapping it up?—No, sir; that occurred in Millbank; that is a separate thing.

7215. I want to know did it occur here?—No, it did not occur here.

7216. It did not occur here?—It did not occur here.

7217. Did any difficulty occur here about your taking your meals, in consequence of your being manacled?—No, but that my hands were tied, and I had to lay the vessel on the table.

7218. That is occasionally, when the handcuffs were not off?—The handcuffs were in front when I was taking my meals.

7219. What is the length of the chain?—It is perhaps about four inches—about four inches or something that way.

7220. (Mr. Broadrick.) I see that you say in the latter part of your statement that shortly before this offence was committed the governor came to you in your cell, and on your refusing to salute him that he used the expression "I treat you with contempt?"—That was not in the cell, sir. I was manacled; I was taken before him for refusing to salute him. It is put down as insubordinate conduct towards the governor.

7221. Then you were brought up before the governor for that offence of refusing to salute him?—Yes. When the governor would come, and when I saw the way they were treating me, I would take no notice of him but stand, and for not going to "salute" I was accused of insubordinate conduct.

7222. What passed upon that occasion, when you were taken before him on this charge?—I said that I did not mean to be disrespectful towards him, or any officer of the prison, but that I understood that I was made to see, that some of the authorities were ill-treating me and that I could not conscientiously be paying salutes to authorities that were assaulting me—or something that way.

7223. (Chairman.) That you would not pay salutes to authorities that were assaulting you?—Yes, to authorities that were assaulting me. I used the words "assaulting." At the same time I said it was not through disrespect to him, and he said, "I treat you with contempt."

7224. (Mr. Broadrick.) You are quite sure that he used the expression, "I treat you with contempt?"—I am quite sure he did.

7225. (Chairman.) That was Captain Powell?—Captain Powell, my lord.

7226. (Mr. Broadrick.) What happened after that?—I thought he would treat me with contempt to be said, but he came after that to my cell, and I just remained in the same position. Whatever position I was in when he came I remained in it, and for doing so I was again cited before him for highly insubordinate conduct and treating him with disrespect, and he gave me two days' bread and water for that, after saying he would treat me with contempt. That was not treating me with contempt; so that when the officer came again and called on me to salute the governor, I committed the offence that is stated.

7227. Had the officers before you committed that offence used violence to bring your hands into the attitude of "attention"? Had they attempted to make you use the salutes?—Yes, they had; three of them before the governor in his office.

7228. (Dr. Lyons.) Will you exhibit the ordinary salute?—Well, I have not been drilled, Mr. LYMAN, but it is to stand that way when the governor appears (stands in the attitude).

7229. What is the salute?—In Portland and Millbank, besides standing, to raise the hand.

7230. (Chairman.) What did the officers do?—One of the officers, ALISON, came behind me and caught me, another officer came to this hand and another to this hand, and kept me down. I went to the governor and first sized this way (standing upright) before him, and that was highly contemptuous. I should stand in this position ("attention") to be addressed upon.

7231. (Dr. Lyons.) Is the mode of saluting in this prison different from that in other prisons?—I am not asked in this prison to salute with the hand, but in Millbank and Portland I was asked to salute with the hand besides standing to attention.

7232. All that you were asked at this prison was to stand to attention?—Yes; that is what I call the salute.

7233. (Mr. Broadrick.) After the commission of the offence, what is the next you heard of it?—The next day I was put in iron. I was taken before Captain HARVEY and charged with the offence.

7234. Was that the day following the offence?—I am not exactly sure. It was the day following the offence, I think; the evening of that day, and he referred the matter to the directors. He said I would have paper to make a statement, but I got no paper to make a statement.

7235. He told you that he should refer it to the director?—Yes; and that if I chose to make a statement, I would get paper to enable me to do so. I got no paper to make a statement to the director.

7236. On the following day were you brought up before the director?—No, sir; the director did not come until about two or three weeks afterwards.

7237. Then you were placed in irons without having had any interview with the director?—Certainly.

7238. You state that you believe it was done by order of the board of directors that it was done?—I do, sir.

7239. Why do you believe that it was done by order of the board of directors?—My experience in this prison. I have often heard the governor say, "Your case is entirely taken out of our hands; we act according to the board of directors; we take our orders" and our instructions from the board of directors." I saw 23 hours sleeping from the time of my commitment of the offence, about 12 o'clock in the day until about 10 or 11 the next day, when the mail is generally delivered here from London. I calculated that they had time to communicate with London.

7240. But it was never announced to you that you were sentenced to undergo so many days' hard labour?—No, sir. No, sir; never.

7241. When the handcuffs were put on you, were you told for how long it was to be?—No, sir; I was never told how long it was to be.

7242. Were you told at the time for what offence you were so punished?—No, they did not tell me of the offence, but I understood it myself very well.

7243. Was anyone present but Alison when the handcuffs were put on you?—I cannot recollect, sir.

7244. Did the deputy-governor accompany him and order him to put on the handcuffs?—The deputy-governor did not accompany him, but my opinion is that someone came. Oh, yes; there was some officer come with Alison to put the irons on. The deputy-governor did not accompany him the first day, but there was some officer with him, for generally to offend was no insult, and this day there was an officer. Yes, I am sure there was an officer the first day the irons were put on.

7245. Did you remain in ignorance from that day forward how long they would be kept on?—Yes; I was never told how long they would be kept on anything, only when I was asked to give my hands out. Sometimes I gave them out through the bars of the gate when only one officer was there, and they would not open the gate.

7246. Did you at that time express a wish to apply to the director or the Secretary of State on the subject?—No, I did not. No, during the time I did not.

7247. When Captain Du Cane came to the prison during that time, so you inform us that he did, did you not appeal to him against that sentence?—I did not, sir. Oh no, I did not. I knew I had committed the offence, and I took the punishment without making any appeal against it.

7248. Do you remember on what account it was that you did come before him on that occasion?—I came before him. I was charged with this offence. He read out the offence for me, and he asked me what I had to say. I said, I had nothing to say; that I committed it. "Well," says he, "it is getting worse instead of better you are; it is very brutal conduct." "It is just a reflex," said I, "of the treatment I received." I was sent back to my cell.

7249. Did he thereupon say that you were sentenced to so many days' further hard labour?—He did not. He did not say anything more. That is all that he said.

7250. And you never expressed a wish to petition the Secretary of State on the subject?—No, sir.

7251. Did the officers at any time during that period attribute the injury to your wrists to your own violence?—They did not; but I recollect that one day I just showed one of my wrists to Captain Harvey; no, it was to Dr. Burns; and I said to the doctor, "These 'hose might be put on, doctor, without loosening any 'heads.'" Alison was with him, and he said, "I assure you, doctor, the greatest cure is taken in putting them on. I myself often slip him, and I have no desire to do so."

7252. Was the injury to your wrists, of which you complain, the result of accident or the result of violence?

—No, it was the result of the manner in which the officers put them on, in baiting them long that way and pressing down the spring, and the spring going into the mortise; one was setting into the other caught me.

7253. (Chairman.) Did you, in point of fact, use violence when those irons were being put on you?—Never, during those 25 days.

7254. After throwing the water on the governor, what else did you do?—Nothing else.

7255. You did not shut your cell door in his face?—After throwing the water I shut the door in again. The gate was closed. You know these cells, my lord. The gate remained locked. The officer opened the door. The door was shut in, and I was inside, so when the officer called to inform the governor I did not stir, and the second time he called I committed the offence and shut out the door.

7256. You did?—I did.

7257. That was on the 16th of June?—I think it was, my lord.

7258. (Mr. Broadrick.) Did I clearly understand you to say that after the commission of the offence you had no opportunity given you of making your defence on the subject, before the punishment was inflicted?—No, sir.

7259. (Dr. Greenham.) Do you mean to say that you were put in irons without being asked what you had to say in your defence?—Yes, sir.

7260. On the very day that the offence was committed?—No, sir; the day after.

7261. Did Captain Du Cane not see you that day before you were put in irons?—No, sir.

7262. Did he never see you about it?—No, until about three weeks after.

7263. Can you recollect the date that Captain Du Cane saw you?—No, I cannot recollect.

7264. Did he ask you what defence you had to the charge?—Yes, he asked me what I had to say, and I said I had nothing. They told me that they would give me paper to make a reply, and they did not, and I had experience enough of what I would say not being taken down.

7265. (Mr. Broadrick.) It was then you said that it was a reflex of the treatment that you received?—Yes, when he said it was brutal conduct.

7266. (Dr. Greenham.) What food were you on at that time?—Light-labour food. An ounce of the meat, and some ounces of the bread less than the ordinary labour diet.

7267. You were not on penal diet?—No, I was not on penal diet.

7268. Between the day when you threw the water in the governor's face, and the day that you saw Captain Du Cane—which I saw was the 1st of July—did you ever refuse to put on your jacket?—Yes.

7269. Did you on several occasions refuse to do so?—Yes.

7270. Did you tell the warden that he might do it himself?—Yes. "You can put it on, officer." I felt uneasy with the jacket on, and wanted to keep it off. I said, "You can put it on if you wish; I have more freedom without it." That is officer Brown if he makes that report. It is officer Brown, for none of them asked me to put on the jacket but him.

7271. That occurred four days. On the 24th of June you refused to put on your jacket, and you did the same on the 25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th of June according to this record?—That will corroborate that I had the irons on those three days.

7272. Did Captain Du Cane when he saw you tell you what he should recommend to be done in your case?—He did not.

7273. Had you ever been punished by a director's order before?—Yes, but I never was told by a director what the punishment would be.

7274. After the director saw you, what diet were you on?—The same diet.

7275. Light-labour diet?—Light-labour diet.

7276. Then you were not on penal diet?—No.

7277. Then why were you put on bread and water again?—For the execution of his sentence. It was then the director's application came, and it was read for me 28 days' bread and water, and six months' separate confinement.

7278. (Mr. Brodribb.) When was it read for you?—It was read for me on the 27th June.

7279. (Dr. Greenock.) You were on light-labour food until the director saw you?—Yes.

7280. When the director saw you was there any change at all?—No, sir.

7281. How long after the director saw you was your diet changed?—The day the bread was taken off the diet was changed.

7282. Are you quite sure that you were in bread during 35 days?—I am quite sure.

7283. How do you know that it was 35 days?—I counted every day of them at the time, and they fixed themselves in my memory.

7284. Are you quite sure that during the whole of that 35 days you were on light-labour diet?—Yes, sir; I am.

7285. You think your memory does not deceive you about it?—Not in the least.

7286. And during those 28 days that you were on bread and water you were not in bread at all?—No, sir.

7287. I suppose, that by being 28 days on bread and water, you do not mean that you had it continuously all those 28 days?—I do, sir.

7288. Do you mean that you had bread and water for each of the 28 days and nothing else?—I do, sir.

7289. Do you mean to say that you had no change of food every fourth or fifth day?—Oh, yes; you are right, every fourth day.

7290. You were sentenced to 28 days' bread-and-water diet, but every fourth day you would change?—Oh, yes, penal-class diet.

7291. You told Lord Devon that after committing that offence your cell was changed?—Yes.

7292. Was the cell in which you were put then at all different from the previous one?—No.

7293. It was exactly the same?—Exactly the same.

7294. And you were changed back to your former cell as soon as the 35 days expired?—Yes, and it was changed in the interim. A closet was made in it, and the bed-board was also changed.

7295. At the end of the 35 days during which you were handcuffed you say that you were again handcuffed for two days additional?—Yes, sir.

7296. With heavy irons?—Yes.

7297. What was the interval between the 35 days and the two days?—Well, I think there was not more than a day.

7298. There was a day's interval?—I am not sure; but any way there was not much time between them, for when I saw what kind of a cell it was I did not like it, and I let the water run. It might be the very same day I was released; but any way there was not much time between them.

7299. Were you brought up before the governor, or any one on the second occasion before you were handcuffed?—No, sir.

7300. Were you not brought up before the governor the following day?—No, sir.

7301. You were handcuffed two days without having been brought before the governor?—Yes, sir.

7302. There was no investigation?—No investigation.

7303. You are quite confident of that?—No investigation.

7304. Are you quite sure of that?—I am quite sure of it.

7305. When the handcuffs were put on you, were you perfectly quiet?—I was perfectly quiet.

7306. You never resisted?—I never resisted.

7307. You allowed them to be put on and you were perfectly quiet?—I was perfectly quiet, and I allowed them to handle me in any way they pleased.

7308. But you did refuse to put on your jacket on several occasions?—Yes, that is so.

7309. (Chairman.) On the occasions when you refused to put on your jacket were there prisoners by?—No, my lord.

7310. Who were by?—The officers who came to put on the irons. Two generally came to put on the irons.

7311. It was within your cell you usually refused to put on the jacket?—Within my cell.

7312. On all occasions?—Yes; except that I might meet the officer at the door, and I would perhaps just say I felt better without it; that the weather was warm and he could put it on if he liked, and if he wished to put it on I would let him put it on.

7313. (Dr. Greenock.) I will now read to you the sentence which was passed on you in consequence of your throwing water in the governor's face, and then we shall try to reconcile the discrepancy that exists between it and what you state to us. The defence of the prisoner is recorded: "I decline to make any statement except in writing." This is the sentence on the 1st of July 1838: "This prisoner is without doubt guilty of the very rude and nasty conduct alleged in the charge. The governor of Chatham prison is, as is well known, no temperate and judicious a person as it is possible to find. The officers in the immediate charge of the department in which the prisoner is, are selected for their judgment and fidelity. Nevertheless, he is as stated in the evidence, and as his misconduct sheet shows, constantly guilty of acts of insubordination against the prison officers, and every allowable punishment has been tried in his case without any effect, nor does kindness seem to have any better influence on him." "I did not get much of it."

7314. "He would in an ordinary case be punished for the offence he has committed by flogging, but it is thought this punishment should not be inflicted without special authority. If it should not be thought advisable to inflict that, I can only recommend that he should be sentenced to 28 days' punishment diet in close confinement, and be placed in penal class for six months; also that to prevent the chance of his repeating tricks of this description on officers of the prison who are obliged to visit him, all movable articles and animals be removed from his cell, that whenever it necessary be made a fixture, and that he be kept in handcuffs in the daytime." That is the sentence. Therefore, Captain Du Cane on the 1st of July 1838, exactly a fortnight after you committed the offence, recommended this, which was confirmed by the board of directors in London; and it appears to me that Captain Du Cane that day ordered you to be put on 28 days' bread and water, and therefore, that you are subject to the fact of having handcuffs on 35 days, or else that you must have had handcuffs on and were on bread and water at the same time. There is an evident contradiction in your statement you see?—In my statement, sir.

7315. I mean that there is a contradiction with regard to this point. You say that you were not on bread and water within the period that you were handcuffed, but that the bread and water commenced after the handcuffing. I read the sentence to show you that you were ordered bread and water on the 1st of July; therefore, according to that, you could only have been three weeks handcuffed: "And that he be kept in handcuffs in the daytime;" that is specially ordered?—During what time, sir?

7316. During the 28 days?—I was not kept in handcuffs during the bread and water.

7317. By the sentence it appears that you must have had the two together. You had been in handcuffs before under the authority of the governor apparently, by your own statement. The record is, "That he shall not be flogged, but that he shall be sentenced to 28 days' punishment diet in close confinement, and be placed in penal class for six months; also that to prevent the chance of his repeating tricks of this description on the officers of the prison who are obliged to visit

(Prisoner.)
20 July 1876.

"him, all movable articles and utensils be removed from his cell, that whatever is necessary be made a fixture, and that he be kept in handcuffs in the day time."

7318. (Chairman.) Having heard the official record read to you of the sentence which is stated to have been then passed, do you still remain of the same opinion and still make the same statement to us, namely, that you were during 35 consecutive days in handcuffs before the bread-and-water diet commenced?—Yes, my lord. I adhere to my statement. It is true.

7319. (Mr. De Vere.) Are you prepared to say, O'Donovan Rossa, that at any time when you refused to take off or to put on your jacket you were in irons?—In the morning generally, those days that I felt warm, that I would feel uneasy with the coat on, I would refuse to put on the coat.

7320. It has been stated that on several occasions you refused to put on or take off your coat when you were required to do so?—I do not know, Mr. De Vere, about taking it off, because my desire was to have it off.

7321. On several occasions you were required to put it on?—I used not put it on.

7322. You told them that they might do it themselves if they wished to do so?—Yes.

7323. I want to know whether on each of those occasions you were in irons?—This was in the mornings, before the irons were put on.

7324. I want to know was it within the period of 35 days that you describe as being your period of being in irons?—Oh yes, sir; within that period of 35 days that affair occurred about my not desiring to put on the coat.

7325. During those 35 days, were you under punishment or under report?—I understood I was under report, that is was not considered punishment, that being in those irons was not considered punishment.

7326. When did you get notice that you were to be tried for this act of insubordination?—I believe the day after the commission of the offence that I was taken before Captain Harvey, and he told me that the matter would be referred to the director, and I would get paper to make a statement.

7327. Who told you that you should have paper to make a statement?—Captain Harvey did.

7328. Did you subsequently ask for paper?—No, I did not, but I told the priest this day that he came in and was speaking about the director, that they told me I was to get paper and I did not get it.

7329. When you were brought before Captain De Cuse did you tell him how long you had been handcuffed?—I did not, sir.

(Mr. Butts and principal warder King here brought in handcuffs.)

7330. (Chairman.) Rossa, look at those handcuffs, and see which of these kind of handcuffs was put on you. Are those all the patterns of handcuffs used in the prison?—(Mr. Butts.) Yes, my lord. (Prisoner.) These are the kind that were on me the 35 days.

(Principal warder King puts the handcuffs indicated by the prisoner on Dr. Lyons with the hands in front.)

7331. (Chairman.) Now Rossa, show how it was that your wrist was wounded?—(Prisoner.) If he pressed the spring this way it would catch, but if he pressed it this way it would not catch. If he made the pressure below it would not be fair.

7332. (Dr. Lyons.) If in closing the spring he held up the hand?—Yes, it would catch then.

7333. Did I understand you to say that you were obliged to take off your jacket while you had the handcuffs on?—No, certainly not.

7334. (Dr. Lyons, with irons on his wrists, pours water into a glass and drinks it.)—(Prisoner.) You, you could eat and drink with the handcuffs comfortably enough.

(The handcuffs were here taken off and put on again with the hands in front.)

7335. (Dr. Lyons.) For how many hours at a time, Rossa, were you manacled with the hands behind your back?—From half-past 5 o'clock in the morning until dinner hour, and from a quarter past 1 after dinner hour. Oh, by the bye, often when I used to get up from my dinner and the officer would see me taking a move about he would put them on.

(The handcuffs were removed from Dr. Lyons, and Mr. Butts and principal warder King withdrew.)

7336. (Dr. Lyons.) For how many consecutive hours were you manacled with your hands behind your back?—From between six and seven hours in the morning, that is from half-past 5 to 12 o'clock, and from about half-past 12 or a quarter-past 1 to about a quarter-past 7 in the evening. That was something about 13 hours.

7337. Did you find it excessively fatiguing, or painful, or very distressing?—Oh, certainly, sir.

7338. (Chairman.) You say they were on about 12 or 13 hours in the day?—About 13 hours a day, my lord.

7339. In two or three periods?—In two periods, my lord, from breakfast till dinner, and from after dinner until bed time.

7340. (Mr. De Vere.) You state that for 35 days, while you were under report and not under punishment, you were handcuffed?—Yes, sir; it is considered that I was not under punishment during this time, but under report awaiting sentence. That is the technical prison term "under report." Under report I was when I had these handcuffs on. The sentence was not read for me until about the 17th of July.

7341. (Dr. Greenhow.) It was not read to you?—Never, until the 17th of July, the day Mr. Harvey came to read it and take the handcuffs off, and that was the day the 28 days' bread and water commenced. The punishment commenced only then.

7342. (Mr. De Vere.) During the 35 days that you were handcuffed, you were "under report," and not "under punishment"?—Yes that is I believe what it is technically called in prison.

7343. Is not the meaning of being under report this, that the prisoner having committed the offence is not yet tried, but is under observation, or under report until he is tried?—Yes, that is the meaning of it, Mr. De Vere.

7344. Now I ask you, O'Donovan Rossa, whether your punishment during the period of 35 days that you were under report, was more severe or less severe than the punishment that you had to undergo after your sentence?—Well, it was as severe; it was more physically severe, but I did not feel the hunger that I felt in the 28 days' bread and water.

7345. You were not subjected to any irons after the sentence being pronounced?—No, when the bread and water commenced I had no irons.

7346. Was the sentence read to you?—The sentence was read to me about the 28 days' bread and water, and then the irons were taken off.

7347. Did you notice that part of that sentence would involve putting you in irons again?—There was not a word about taking off or putting on irons.

7348. You have heard the sentence read to-day?—Yes, but that sentence was not read to me.

7349. (Chairman.) That part of the sentence in which the irons is mentioned has been read to you for the first time to-day?—For the first time to-day, my lord.

(The Commission deliberated for some time.)

7350. (Dr. Greenhow.) Rossa, after being handcuffed and put upon punishment diet for 28 days, you were placed for six months in penal class?—Yes, penal class diet commenced, a punishment of six months, but I was released from that punishment about the 24 of October, I think.

7351. And during the time that you were in penal class, what diet had you?—I had dry bread in the morning and some gruel, gruel that was supposed to be boiled with milk; no milk came with it as we use it.

Ireland, and dry potatoes and dry bread at dinner, and dry gruel and bread again at supper.

7352. (Dr. Lyons.) Can you remember distinctly what your sensations were when you were put on the bread-and-water punishment? On the first day that you were put on the bread-and-water diet, what were your sensations as to hunger or otherwise?—Oh, I felt so hungry that I began to think of books that I read in my youth about men being pushed into places and eating rats and mice, and I recollect well the feeling I had in youth about men eating those things. I thought men could not do it, but I thought then that I could do it myself.

7353. Was that the sensation you experienced the first day?—Oh, not the first day, but often while I was in prison.

7354. Can you remember what your sensations were the first day?—I could not, Mr. Lyons.

7355. Were you hungry the first day?—No, not hungry the first day.

7356. You were not very hungry the first day?—No. Of course I was after the light-labour diet, and I was not very hungry, but I suppose I felt some slight hunger before the 28 days were over.

7357. I want to know whether you can give me any information as to your sensations when you were on the bread-and-water diet?—I cannot remember, Mr. Lyons.

7358. Were you as hungry on the second day as on the first, or more hungry?—I could not tell you.

7359. Were you more hungry or less hungry on the third day than the second?—I recollect during the time I was on bread and water at this time particularly, when I felt myself punished on a charge of libelness, although I did my work, and feeling it punishment to spend my time in dark cells, I used to make this noise.

7360. This is going into another matter?—It is not, Mr. Lyons. I beg your pardon for an apparent contradiction, it is not meant as a contradiction. I recollect I used to have some of this bread spared, even the 16 ounces that I used to take to the dark cell I used to bring back again.

7361. Was not that because you did not find the sensation of hunger?—I do not know how it was. I could spare it I thought, and from the recollection I would feel of the hunger, or not having an inclination to eat, I used to reserve it when I could spare it, when I had not a greedy appetite, for I used not to force myself to eat. In fact I can't see it any time, but I used to spare, for I used in general to think that a worse feeling would grow on me.

7362. I want to know, can you remember when you were several days on bread-and-water diet in succession, whether the sensation of hunger increased day by day, or what happened to you in that regard?—Well, I could not tell you, Mr. Lyons. I could not.

7363. Can you tell me whether at the end of the period of 28 days on bread and water you felt as hungry, or more hungry, or less hungry, than you did at the commencement of the period?—Well, I could not say, Mr. Lyons.

7364. (Chairman.) You cannot give us any information on that point?—No, I cannot, my lord.

7365. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you feel weak?—Yes, I felt weak.

7366. Did you feel your appetite impaired?—Yes, I recollect that when the other diet came, when I would get an hour's exercise I would rather not go and take the hour's exercise. I would rather not leave the cell, and I used to feel some very reluctant to take the exercise. I would rather remain in my cell, and sometimes I would remain in my cell.

7367. Did you eat all your bread in the last days of your punishment?—Yes.

7368. In the last days?—Yes, sir. My lord, in a letter yesterday I said I would lay the papers before you. I suppose I need not lay them before you now.

7369. (Chairman.) We have looked at your letter, I believe you have received all the papers which under the authority of the Government you are permitted to receive. We shall proceed to-morrow to go into the other points which are mentioned in this paper and to hear your statement on them, and then we shall proceed to examine any witnesses you may desire?—Can I be present, my lord, at the examination of the witnesses?

7370. I think not. We shall ask questions framed upon what your statement is?—Won't I, my lord, have an opportunity of directing what points to ask upon, or what questions to ask the witnesses?

7371. We think it unnecessary. We shall put such questions as we think ought to be asked. At any rate we shall hear your statement first.

The prisoner withdrew.

The Commission adjourned.

Chatham Prison, Thursday, 21st July 1870.

PRESENT :

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DEVON IN THE CHAIR.

THE HON. GEORGE C. BRODRICK.
SHERIFF E. DE VREE, Esq.

DR. LYONS.
DR. GREENHOW.

MR. WILLIAM P. BUTTS recalled.

7372. (Chairman.) Do you produce three books, Mr. Butts?—Three books, my lord, yes.

7373. Is one of them termed "the Chief Warden's Daily Report Book"?—Yes, my lord.

7374. Is another of those books called "the Separate Cells' Book"?—Yes.

7375. And is the third "the Governor's Journal"?—Yes.

7376. In whose custody, and by whom is "the Chief Warden's Daily Report Book" kept?—By the chief warden.

7377. Who is the chief warden of the prison at present?—Turner.

7378. Was he here from the 1st of June 1868 to the last day of August of the same year?—I cannot state that he was here at the time, but he was chief warden of the prison. He may have been on leave.

7379. He was responsible for keeping this book?—He was, unless he was on leave.

7380. With regard to the "Separate Cells' Book," by whom is it kept?—By the officers in charge of the separate cells.

7381. Who, during the three months that I speak of, June, July, and August 1868, was the officer in charge of the separate cells?—I could not tell you, my lord. It is signed every day by the officer in charge.

7382. With regard to the governor's book, that is in the custody, I presume, of the governor or acting governor?—Yes, my lord.

7383. (Mr. Brodrick.) Are you acquainted with the handwriting of Captain Powell?—Yes, I know it quite well.

7384. And are you also acquainted with the handwriting of Captain Harvey?—No, I am not acquainted with his handwriting.

7385. (Chairman.) These books, Mr. Butts, contain various entries in respect to the prisoner Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa between the 17th of June and the end of August. We should be glad if you will have a copy made in a tabular form of all those entries beginning the 16th June, and up to the 31st of August, in each of these three books, first the Separate Cells Book, second, the Chief Warden's Daily Report Book, and third the Governor's Journal; a column for each book, and the date at the side. Will you be kind enough to have a copy made out for us of the entries in these three books, each under the heads I have now given relating to O'Donovan Rossa, and, as far as possible, where they belong to the same day, putting them in the same line? (The shorthand clerk stands the witness a form.)—Exactly, my lord. You want them side by side.

7386. We observe that in two at least of these books, namely "the Separate Cells Book," and "the Chief Warden's Daily Report Book," the entries regarding this prisoner, O'Donovan Rossa, with very few exceptions, are marked with a cross in black ink. Are you able to tell us by whom and when those marks were made?—I cannot, my lord. I never saw the books until I gave them to you to-day. They were sent down to me and I looked them up, and unlocked them this morning.

7387. Will you specify in an additional column of observations the entries that are so marked with a cross?—I will, my lord.

7388. These are books which you have received this morning from the custody of the directors?—No; they were sent down to me some weeks ago.

7389. From whom were they sent to you?—From the directors.

7390. (Mr. Brodribk.) Does that apply to the Governor's Journal as well as to the other two books?—These three books came down together.

7391. (Dr. Lyons.) Do these books belong to the arrangements of this prison?—They do.

7392. Then they were for some temporary purpose at the central office in London?—They were; at least, I suppose so.

7393. Can you state how long they were out of this prison?—I cannot.

7394. Is there no record in this prison of the period in which they were sent out?—Most likely. I should say there is a letter asking for them.

7395. Is it usual to take or get a receipt for such materials when they are sent out?—I cannot say.

7396. (Chairman.) Perhaps you will see if there is any letter from the directors, requesting that these prison books should be sent up to them?—I will, my lord.

7397. (Dr. Lyons.) And also you will be good enough to ascertain if they were more than once out of the prison during the last two years?—Yes. (The witness retired for a short time.) I think the deputy governor took them up himself and left them. I think that possible. Please let me look.

7398. (Chairman.) There is no record of it here?—I will look in the journal, my lord. (Witness returns after a short absence.) No, my lord, I cannot find any record. It appears that the deputy governor took them up himself and left them there, and that they were there since. Why they were sent down I cannot say.

7399. (Mr. Brodribk.) Is there any record of that?—It ought to be entered in this journal.

7400. (Chairman.) Mr. Butts, you stated that you have recently received those three books from the office of the directors in London?—Yes, my lord.

The witness withdrew.

7401. Are you able to inform us under what circumstances, and when they were sent from this prison to that office?—I find so entry, my lord, in the Governor's Journal on the 18th of August 1869, by Major Farquharson, deputy governor. He says:—"I gave over charge of the prison for a few hours this afternoon to Mr. Turner, the chief warden, from 3.42 p.m., having received a telegram from Captain Stophard, the director, to proceed to Parliament Street as soon as possible. After my interview with the director, and having left with him the 'Governor's Journal Book,' the 'Chief Warden's Occurrence Book,' and the 'Separate Cells Occurrence Book' for June 1869 I returned to Chatham by the 6.35 p.m. train from Victoria."

"JAMES G. FARQUHARSON, Deputy Governor."

7402. (Dr. Greenwood.) What date was that?—This was on the 18th of August 1869 when he took them up.

7403. (Mr. De Vere.) Are those three books from which you are now asked to make some returns, books for the authenticity of which the prison authorities are responsible?—Certainly.

7404. They are kept by three different persons; by the governor, the warden in charge of the cells, and the chief warden?—Yes.

7405. Do they come under the inspection of the principal governor?—The governor examines all the books, and is responsible for every book in the prison.

7406. The governor for the time being is therefore responsible for the authenticity of these three records which have been produced here to-day?—Certainly.

7407. I think you said you would have a column of observations in the return you are going to furnish, so as to show therein the entries which are marked in these books with a cross?—I will.

7408. (Chairman.) We shall be obliged to you if you give an exact verbatim copy of every entry?—Yes.

7409. (Dr. Lyons.) Have those books been since the 18th of August '69 in London, until the period when you say they were recently transmitted back again?—I cannot state positively.

7410. Can you inform yourself in any way from the prison books whether they were or not?—I will try and find out. I can only tell the day they were sent up. I knew I received them the other day in a parcel.

7411. What day did you get them?—I cannot tell you, but I will examine and try to find out.

7412. Would you be good enough to examine and endeavour to find out whether the books were kept in London until they recently came back, or whether they were received back before the last occasion on which they were returned to you?—I will. Mr. Turner, the chief warden, is here. He was chief warden I think at the time.

7413. Who is responsible for this "Separate Cells Book"?—The warden in charge of the separate cells.

7414. Was he here at that time?—Yes; he is not here now, he is at Woking.

7415. (Mr. Brodribk.) Was it Alison, or who was it?—It was Alison, he is now chief warden at Woking.

7416. (Dr. Lyons.) Who is now in charge?—Principal warden King, I think.

EDWARD TURNER EXAMINED.

7417. (Chairman.) You are the chief warden of this prison, I believe?—Yes, my lord.

7418. How long have you been so?—Eight years and one month, my lord.

7419. Have you been chief warden for that time?—Yes, my lord.

7420. For the last eight years and one month?—About that, a few days more or less.

7421. Is it a part of your duty to keep this book, "the Chief Warden's Daily Report Book"?—It is, my lord.

7422. Are the entries in this book in your own handwriting?—The majority of them, my lord.

7423. At any rate you are responsible for them all?—Only those in my writing.

7424. With the exception of those days when the handwriting is different from yours you are responsible for the entries made?—Yes, my lord.

7425. Were you keeping this book in the months of June, July, and August 1868?—I beg your pardon, my lord.

7426. In the months of June, July, and August '68, was this book in your charge?—The principal part of that period.

7427. And was it your duty to make entries in it at that time?—It was, my lord.

7428. Did you make all the entries that were entered in it during that time?—I could not tell without referring to the book, my lord. Of course I might be on leave or something of that kind. I could easily tell on reference from day to day whether it is in my handwriting.

7429. Is this in your handwriting, "July 22nd, J. O'Donovan Rossa placed in handcuffs at 6.45?"—It is, my lord.

7430. Is this in your handwriting, "June 17th, J. O'Donovan Rossa placed in handcuffs?"—It is, my lord.

7431. Are all the entries made in that handwriting in your writing?—All in that handwriting are mine, my lord. There are some during those months in Mr. Scrutton's writing.

7432. (Dr. Lyons.) How are you cognizant that the prisoner O'Donovan Rossa was put in handcuffs when you made the entries?—Sometimes it would be sent by the principal warder, at other times by Warder Brown, and from frequent visits, not daily, but during the period he was in handcuffs. I received it from them, a memo. on a scrap of paper, "Rossa" placed in handcuffs at a certain period, and released "at a certain period," a copy of which I placed in my journal.

7433. Do you know how long he was in handcuffs?—I do not not know without reference to the book. I could not state positively.

7434. (Dr. Greenock.) Have you any means of ascertaining how many days his handcuffs were placed with his hands behind his back?—I have not, sir, except by reference to the book.

7435. I hold in my hand "the Separate Cells' Book" for the same period, and I observe on Wednesday the 17th of June the following entry: "J. O'D. Rossa" placed in handcuffs behind by order of the governor?"—Yes, sir.

7436. I observe in this same book an entry that O'Donovan Rossa was released from handcuffs. It records then each day that he was handcuffed again at a certain hour in the morning, but I do not see that on any subsequent occasion it is mentioned that the handcuffs were placed behind him. Now in these any means of proving whether that was so or not?—Does this entry imply that they were always put behind him?—Will you allow me to explain. I think the rule in the service is this: the governor if he directs a prisoner to be placed in handcuffs, that means handcuffs in front; but if the governor wishes to place them behind he would give directions to that effect, and a note would be made in the Separate Cells' Book. I think that is the rule throughout the service, to show the difference between placing handcuffs in front and behind.

7437. That is entered here one day, the 17th of June 1868, but entries without that go on from that time until he was finally released from handcuffs?—Well, as I did not hear the order given, or receive the order, I am unable to say, sir. I know nothing of who gave the order or who received it.

7438. (Mr. Bredrick.) Did you personally see O'Donovan Rossa during the last half of June, or the first half of July '68?—I did, frequently.

7439. Did you see him handcuffed behind?—If I gave my evidence without reference to that book, if I had to recollect the matter, I should have said that I saw O'Donovan Rossa only in front behind, one, or two, or three days.

7440. Is it your belief that you did see him during that period with his hands handcuffed behind his back?—Only on one occasion, sir; because I have such faith, sir, in my own book, I felt satisfied he has been only that one day, because it would be shown if he had been more. Even if I had to give evidence without that book before a body of gentlemen, as you are, I should have thought the matter over, and said, "Gentlemen, he was perhaps two or three days handcuffed behind;" but from the supervision it seems to me the books are correct, both the Separate Cells' Book, and the Warders' Book. Warder Brown is a very correct man, a regular correct man. He is the person that made the entries there for the principal warder, who was at the time assigned photographing.

7441. (Chairman.) When you speak of "the entries," it is the entries in the Separate Cells' Book you allude to?—Yes, my lord.

7442. (Dr. Lyons.) Will you look at this book, please. Do you identify that entry as Warder Brown's writing?—To the best of my knowledge, sir, it is. I think I could almost—

7443. Look carefully at it, and tell me?—To the best of my knowledge, sir, that is Warder Brown's handwriting, I think. That is principal warder Alison's, who is now chief warder at Woking. I could swear that that is his.

7444. That is, Thursday the 18th of June 1868?—That is chief warder Alison's, sir, and that also, sir. I am almost prepared to swear that is chief warder Alison's, sir.

7445. (Chairman.) Besides Alison and Brown, was there any other warder who had to keep a portion of that book during those three months of June, July, and August 1868?—I could not say, my lord, without reference. In fact I know two Sundays out of the four, my lord, Mr. Brown would be absent on leave, and therefore the book was kept by other officers.

7446. Are you quite sure that Alison and Brown would be the two men who would keep the larger portion of those entries?—Certainly, my lord.

7447. (Dr. Lyons.) There is another entry here, on the 19th of June, "Jermiah O'Donovan Rossa, handcuffs replaced;" whose writing is that?—I should imagine that is Warder Brown's, sir.

7448. Are you positive that this is Warder Brown's writing?—Well, I think it is, sir.

7449. Do you undertake to identify it?—Well to the best of my knowledge it is Warder Brown's, sir.

7450. Here is another entry on Sunday the 12th of July 1868, "J. O'D. Rossa placed in handcuffs;" whose writing is that?—Well, that is not exactly the same as this, sir, on Sunday the 19th. Mr. Brown was on alternate Sundays absent. Now that is not precisely the same writing.

7451. Whose writing is that, do you know?—That is Mr. Brown's, sir.

7452. That on the 18th?—On the 19th it is Mr. Brown's, but not the other, sir.

7453. (Chairman.) Can you identify the other?—It is two years ago. Let me see, who was in charge Mr. Brown no doubt could tell, but I am inclined to think it was Warder Douglas.

7454. (Dr. Lyons.) Is Warder Douglas in this prison now?—No, he resigned I think twelve months ago.

7455. But this entry of the 17th of July 1868 is not in the handwriting of Alison or of Brown?—I am sure it is not Alison's, sir, for he has a better style of writing.

7456. (Mr. Bredrick.) Is it not a rare thing to handcuff a prisoner with the hands behind his back?—It is, sir.

7457. Would it or would it not be likely to attract your attention, if you saw the prisoner with his hands handcuffed behind his back?—Well, sir, as I mentioned before, sir, I certainly think perhaps two or three days

E. Foster,

21 July 1876

I should have said, if I had not any reference to the book; but as a rule they are handcuffed in front.

7452. Would it not be likely to attract your attention if you saw a man with his hands handcuffed behind?—I should think it would, sir.

7453. Is it or is it not your impression, without thinking of the book, that you did see O'Donovan Rossa on more than one occasion with the hands handcuffed behind him?—Without reference to the book, if called expressly, I should have said perhaps two or three times.

7454. Would it be the duty of the warden to copy into the Separate Cells' Book an entry of the fact of the hands being handcuffed behind?—Most undoubtedly it is his duty; it was his duty to have done so, sir; if handcuffed behind to have written the word "behind" to distinguish it.

7455. Then does your doubt as to whether O'Donovan Rossa was handcuffed behind arise from your confidence in the accuracy of the men who kept that book?—Yes, sir, and my own; yes, sir, it does.

7456. You have no other reason to doubt his hands having been handcuffed behind his back but your confidence in the warden, who were in charge of him?—Well, I certainly think that if he was handcuffed behind during the whole period he was in London I should have been aware that such was the fact.

7457. How should you have known it?—From conversation, from hearsay. I visit the cells.

7458. How often do you visit the cells?—I am not able to say the precise time he was handcuffed, but I have no doubt that I visited him four or five and twenty times during that period, during the period of the time that he was in handcuffs.

7459. You have stated that your own impression, without reference to the book, would have been that you saw him two or three times with the hands handcuffed behind. Can you recollect whether those occasions of which you are now thinking were two or three consecutive days, or that they were at longer intervals?—Well, sir, I really could not say, but I do not think it could have been at intervals. I think it must have been consecutive if it was at all. I do not think at intervals; no, sir. I must have thought the matter over since the excitement of the matter, sir, and certainly I should not say whether it was consecutive or at different periods; but I am inclined to think the book is correct, and that he was only placed in handcuffs as Brown wrote.

7460. (Chairman.) Are there any persons besides Alison and Brown who could give us information?—There are, my lord.

7461. Who else?—Assistant warden Crumson. He did duty in the separate cells I think at the time.

7462. (Dr. Lyons.) Is he here now?—He is, sir; I saw him not a quarter of an hour ago. Will you allow me to state, my lord, no two individuals living can throw such light on the matter as Alison and Brown; Alison, because he received the order, and no doubt carried it out. Allow me to say one thing, I being chief warden, chief warden I think since the treason-felony man were specially located to the penal cells, I have not on any occasion from their reception to the present moment received any instructions respecting them; all orders have been given to the principal warden in charge, as he was immediately on the spot. I had to visit the public works twice, and all orders have been given to the principal warden in charge of the cells.

7463. (Dr. Greenleaf.) Take your own book, the Chief Warden's Book, look at it, and tell me if you can ascertain from it whether O'Donovan Rossa was handcuffed with the hands behind or in front. Begin with the 17th of June 1868?—The 17th of June 1868, sir, Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa placed in handcuffs behind by order of Captain Harvey, and they were removed at 7.30 p.m.

7470. Look to the 18th?—Placed in handcuffs at 5.45 a.m., and removed at 7.30 p.m.

7471. Does that mean behind or in front?—In front, sir.

7472. You are quite sure that the second entry on the 18th means that they were placed in front?—Yes, sir.

7473. (Mr. Brindley.) Might it not very well happen that inasmuch as the order for handcuffing behind was duly recorded on June the 17th, the expression "handcuffed" in subsequent entries might mean the same thing, namely "handcuffed behind"?—I think not, sir. Mr. Alison received the order, sir. The officer giving the order and the officer receiving it possibly may throw light on it. I think it possible, if Alison received instructions on the morning of the 18th, or on the evening preceding, that he received his instructions whether it was in front or behind.

7474. (Chairman.) But you are speaking on supposition?—Supposition, my lord.

7475. In point of fact the persons who can tell us Mrs. Alison, Brown, and Crumson?—Yes, my lord; and Captain Harvey is a most important witness.

7476. (Dr. Greenleaf.) Is Captain Harvey here now?—No, sir; he is gone to Portsmouth. It states there distinctly that the order was given by Captain Harvey.

7477. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you ever see the handcuffs actually in process of being put on O'Donovan Rossa?—Never in my life, sir; or yet removed, sir.

7478. I suppose in the course of your life you often had to put on handcuffs?—I have nearly 21 years' experience, sir.

7479. Is it possible that in putting on handcuffs there may be an injury done, or a hurt done to the wrist?—It is, sir, if there is not caution exercised on the part of the officer; if the prisoner is at all violent or makes resistance.

7480. Will you explain how the injury or hurt may be done?—By the snapping of the handcuffs; the point of the handcuffs in doing the spring would come in contact with the flesh if the prisoner resisted; but I see no necessity for any injury if the prisoner held up his hands.

7481. Would the effect of the injury be to produce a wound, or to draw blood?—Nothing very great, I should imagine.

7482. I do not speak of an injury of a severe character?—A slight mark.

7483. An abrasion?—An abrasion of the skin might be caused, sir.

7484. If continued for a great number of consecutive days, would it produce a great amount of injury?—It would, sir, if allowed, but the medical officer would step in. Those under punishment are visited by the medical officer, and they make complaints to him if necessary.

7485. Are they examined?—I cannot say they are examined. The doctor visits the prisoners.

7486. Does he ask questions of the prisoners individually?—Well, I could not say, sir.

7487. You said just now that the infliction of an injury in putting on the handcuffs would depend on whether the prisoner was refractory?—It would, sir.

7488. Might it not also depend upon the carelessness, or perhaps the inexperience of the warden who put the handcuffs on?—Well, I should attribute it rather to the inexperience, sir, of the officer. We are not all so cool, and the officer might be a little nervous. I would attribute it rather to inexperience or want of nerve for the moment.

7489. The heavier handcuff is lighter than the rest?—Slightly, sir.

7490. There is what is called a freedom between the handcuff and the wrist?—There should be if the proper size is applied.

7491. Then if in putting on the handcuff it was allowed to rest on the upper part of the wrist, and was not supported from below, would the effect be the production of a hurt or injury to the surface of the wrist?—Not if the prisoner kept steady, and the officer knew how to put them on. There are many officers in this prison that never put on a pair of handcuffs.

7492. Would the possibility of an injury resulting depend in any degree on the carelessness or the humanity of the officer who put on the handcuffs?—It would, sir, carelessness; but the two combined I am led to think is most likely to cause it, that is the officer and the prisoner being a little uneasy, sir. Would you allow me to mention one thing, my lord?

The witness withdrew.

MR. WILLIAM P. BUTTS recalled.

7494. (Witness.) These books were sent about the 4th of June, my lord.

7495. (Dr. Lyons.) Did you ascertain whether they were out of the prison all the time?—I cannot say that; I cannot tell where they have been.

7496. Have you ascertained whether they were out of the prison all that period?—There is no record.

The witness withdrew.

JAMES CRAWFORD examined.

7499. (Chairman.) Are you an assistant warden in this prison?—Yes, sir.

7500. How long have you been so?—Since the 23rd of October 1868, sir.

7501. What officer did you hold in June, July, and August 1869?—Assistant warden, sir.

7502. In what part of the prison did your duties place you at that time?—In the penal cells, sir.

7503. Do you recollect the occasion on which, by order of the governor, the treason-felony prisoner O'Donovan Rossa had handcuffs placed on him?—I do, sir; it was by order of the deputy-governor then.

7504. By the order of Captain Harvey?—Captain Harvey, sir.

7505. Did you receive the order?—I did not, sir.

7506. To whom was the order given?—I believe it was given to principal warden Alison at the separate cells.

7507. Were you present when the handcuffs were put on O'Donovan Rossa?—I was, sir.

7508. State in detail how they were put on?—They were put on behind, sir.

7509. Behind?—Yes, sir.

7510. That was the first day that they were put on?—Yes, sir.

7511. Did you see them taken off that night?—Yes, sir.

7512. Did you see them put on next morning?—I was not present; not next morning when they were put on.

7513. The next morning after that were you present when they were put on?—No, sir. I never see them but once. I was there afterwards, a little after his breakfast. I was employed to go and attend on him.

7514. When you saw him next after the first day, how were the cuffs put on him? Were they then behind him?—Yes, sir.

7515. The second day, that was the 14th?—The 17th, my lord.

7516. The 17th they were put on first?—No, the 16th, in the evening, about half-past 3 o'clock, the same day he committed the offence.

7517. Then on the 17th, in the morning, when you saw him he had his hands handcuffed behind his back?—Yes, my lord.

7518. Did you see him on the 18th?—Yes, my lord.

7519. How were the handcuffs then?—Behind.

7520. Behind?—Behind.

7521. Did you see him on the 19th?—Yes, my lord.

7522. How were his handcuffs then?—Well, I couldn't positively state how he had them then, but to the best of my knowledge they were three or four days behind.

7523. Do I understand you to say distinctly that the hands were handcuffed only three or four days behind?—I would not say; but perhaps about a month after, when he destroyed his cell window and broke 7498. (Chairman.) Does it bear upon this?—It does. There is an officer here named Good; he was here this morning, and he superintended the exercise on several occasions. While Rossa was in handcuffs he took him out to exercise, my lord.

about them. There is an entry in the Governor's Journal that they left on such a day, but I do not know where they have been all the time.

7497. I want to know when they got out of the prison all that time?—To the best of my knowledge they were.

7498. (Mr. Dr. Fere.) Your clerk could tell perhaps?—I have asked him, and he does not know.

The witness withdrew.

part of the cell, I think then they might have been behind.

7524. (Dr. Greenhow.) You only think they might have been?—Yes, sir.

7525. You are not sure?—I could not be sure.

7526. All you are sure of is three or four days?—I could not say three or four; I say three.

7527. It might be longer, but you are not sure?—It might be three or four days, sir.

7528. (Chairman.) That was at the commencement?—At the commencement, my lord.

7529. Did you take part in placing the handcuffs on the hands and putting the handcuffs behind at all?—I generally used to take them off to exercise him.

7530. All you are sure of is three or four days?—I brought him down at 9 o'clock in the morning. He had not his trousers on, nor his stock, nor boots, nor cap. When you bring him down dressed out of the cell, the officer comes to exercise him.

7531. Then you take the handcuffs off, sir, allow him to put on his trousers, his shoes, and his stock and his cap, and undo his feet; take the handcuffs off him, let him put them on, then put the handcuffs on in front, and the officer goes to let him have exercise. When he returned I stood there, received him from the officer; took off the handcuffs, let him undress, put them off before, put them on behind.

7532. Do you recollect any occasion on which he complained of any injury to his wrists from the mode in which the handcuffs were put on?—I think it was the first morning, about the 17th, that he said, "Oh, don't pinch me"; that was the time assistant warden Douglas put them on.

7533. Are you able to say whether or not there was blood on his hands?—No, I never seen no blood. "Don't pinch me" was what he said. There was no blood at the time. I was almost always present when they were taken off—the time they were taken off.

7534. Were you always present at the time the handcuffs were taken off and put on during those four or five days?—He could not have them on at all times.

7535. Do you mean that he could not have them on during four days?—Not the whole of the time, sir; I mean during the whole of the time, sir. He had them on some portion of the time in front, and some time behind.

7536. Did you take part in putting them on or taking them off during the whole time that he had them on, whether they were behind or in front?—I was, sir.

7537. Are you able to tell us whether on any occasion you saw blood on the hands of the prisoner?—Never saw it; never saw blood on his hands nor on his wrists.

7538. (Dr. Greenhow.) Are you quite sure that the handcuffs were put on O'Donovan Rossa on the 16th?—I am, sir. I was present, sir.

7539. At what hour was it?—It was at half-past 3, sir. Mr. Alison put them on. He was principal officer in charge of the cells, and Mr. Pearson came in; then he ran and put them on at half-past 3 in the afternoon.

7538. On the 16th of June '68?—Right, sir.

7539. Were they then put on in front or behind?—Behind, sir.

7540. (Mr. De Vere.) By whose order were the handcuffs put on on the 16th?—Captain Harvey, the deputy governor, sir.

7541. Was it a written order, or merely a verbal order?—A written order. I believe it was written, sir, but I could not be sure. I was employed in the penal cell. Mr. Alison came across, and said he had to put them on by order of Captain Harvey. I could not say whether it was a written or verbal order, but I had to pay attention, for he was my superior officer.

7542. Who put them on at that time?—Mr. Alison, sir. I generally put them on after.

7543. On what day was it that you heard his complaint of being hurt, and say, "Don't pinch me"?—I think it was next morning, either after exercise, or when he was dressing himself for exercise. The officer was putting them on, and he said, "Don't pinch me." I do not think he said anything more about it.

7544. Is this the first time that you have been examined with regard to the putting of the handcuffs on O'Donovan Rossa?—I was before Captain Stopford, sir. Captain Stopford asked me something of the same questions, sir.

7545. (Dr. Lysons.) At what hour were the handcuffs taken off on the 16th of June '68?—At half-past 7, sir.

7546. Did you see them taken off?—I was there present, sir.

7547. Did you assist in taking them off?—I was there present. There was only one taking them off.

7548. By whom were they taken off?—I do not know was it Alison or Douglas, sir.

7549. They were taken off by either Alison or Douglas?—I believe so; or I may myself. I cannot say. I have often taken them off and put them on.

7550. Are you positively certain that he was handcuffed on the 16th?—Yes, I am positive. I was present.

7551. (Chairman.) What day of the week was it?—I could not say what day of the week it was, sir.

7552. (Mr. De Vere.) Are you quite sure that he was handcuffed the same day that he committed the offence?—Yes, sir.

7553. (Dr. Lysons.) At what hour of the day did he commit the offence?—I believe it was 12 or 1 o'clock, sir.

7554. What fixes it in your mind that he was handcuffed at half-past 3 o'clock that day?—I was present, sir.

7555. How comes it that you remember the hour?—Because Captain Harvey—; it was entered in the book, I believe.

7556. In what book was it entered?—The Separate Cells' Book, I believe. Anything that occurred ought to have been in that. I was there at the time, sir, and there is the clock placed at the window.

7557. (Mr. Broadbent.) After the three days of which you have spoken, did you frequently see O'Donovan Rossa?—Every day, sir, except three days I was on leave: during the time I was at the cells.

7558. Just recollect yourself for a moment and consider, did you ever see him with the hands handcuffed in front?—Yes, sir.

7559. Was that at meal times?—No, sir. When he had his handcuffs behind I generally changed his hands from behind to front before he got his dinner; about 20 minutes to 15 I went to his cell, and took the handcuffs from off his hands, brought the hands in front and fastened them in front.

7560. Was that for his meals?—That was for his meals, sir. At a quarter past 12 I went back and put them behind again, and the same at 20 minutes to 5.

7561. How long do you remember doing that for him?—About three days, sir.

7562. Did you see him at meals all that time?—Yes, sir, up to the 27th of July I think. I left. I was employed there from the 18th of May to then.

7563. Were you in the habit of bringing his meals after that time?—Yes, sir.

7564. Are you positive that after that time it was not necessary to remove his hands from behind to front?—He did not have them on behind, sir.

7565. You are quite certain that after that time his hands were already in front?—After about three days, sir.

7566. And that it was not necessary to shift them for his meals?—To take them off altogether, sir.

7567. (Chairman.) To bring them from rear to front?—I always did that the first three days, sir.

7568. Not afterwards?—He never had them on but three days.

7569. (Dr. Greenleaf.) If he had had the handcuffs on behind, would it have been your duty to remove them?—Yes, sir.

7570. After the three days, if he had had the handcuffs behind, would it have been your duty to remove them for his meals?—Mine, or anyone else.

7571. Not yours specially?—No, sir.

7572. (Mr. Broadbent.) You are certain that you did not see him with the hands handcuffed behind after the first three or four days?—No, sir; I do not think he had, sir.

7573. Who was the officer in charge during the day?—Alison, Douglas, and Wender Brown.

7574. After O'Donovan Rossa was released from handcuffs altogether, was he not handcuffed again?—He had them on behind and in front sometimes, because I reported him twice for breaking his cell utensils. When they chained him to another cell, whether he had them in front or behind I cannot say.

7575. How long was that after the last punishment?—That was before he was punished, sir. He was awaiting punishment this time. He was from the 16th of June '68 to the 22d July, I believe, until he got his punishment.

7576. You think that on the 22d of July he was released from handcuffs?—He hadn't them on some time before that.

7577. After he was released altogether from the handcuffs was he handcuffed again?—Yes. He hadn't them on I think after the first three or four days, when he had them removed. Then he had them a little time in front. Then I think they were removed.

7578. They had to remove him out of the cell he was in to another cell, and then put the handcuffs on.

7579. How long do you think he had the handcuffs on in front? After his hands had been released from behind, how many days had he the handcuffs on in front?—They were on, two, or three times, so that you could not exactly tell. It is two years since I was employed there, sir.

7580. You told us that he had his hands handcuffed behind three or four days, and you told us that he then had his hands handcuffed in front. How long did that measure of restraint last?—A very short time; perhaps three, or four, or five days, to the best of my knowledge.

7581. Very well. When that period ceased, I think you told us that something else happened which led to his being handcuffed again?—Yes, he was in his cell, and he broke the dove-wood in the cell. The water-tap was in his cell, and when we came in one day we found the water flowing. I went to inquire. We went to Rossa's cell. "I turned it on," he said, and he would not turn it off. He was put into another cell while the tap was removed from the inside to the outside of the cell, and then he came back again. The next day he broke the imperfection hole, the boards, the wires, the rings, the handle of the bell. Then we had to remove him to another cell. I think they did put the handcuffs on again.

7582. Are you certain, whether they were then put on in front or behind?—I would not be certain, sir.

The witness withdrew.

MR. WILLIAM P. BUTTS recalled.

7582. (Dr. Lyons.) Mr. Butts, we have had it put in evidence that O'Donovan Rossa was handcuffed on the 16th of June 1868, at 8.30 p.m., and that the handcuffs were removed at 7.30 p.m. on the same day. I have examined these three books which should contain an official record or entry of such an occurrence, and I fail to find as yet any entry that on that day O'Donovan Rossa was handcuffed. Will you be good enough to look at the entries in each of these books on that day?—On the 16th?

7583. On the 16th of June?—You say that he was placed in handcuffs on that day.

7584. It has been put in evidence that he was placed in handcuffs on the 16th of June 1868 at 8.30 p.m., and that those handcuffs were removed at 7.30 p.m. on the same day. Is there any entry to that effect in the Separate Cells' Book?—No, none on the 16th in the Separate Cells' Book.

7585. Now will you kindly take in your hands the Chief Warden's Daily Report Book and examine it?—Just once in the Chief Warden's Report Book; no record of it in the Chief Warden's Report Book.

7586. Now will you kindly take the Governor's Journal and examine it in like manner?—There is no entry there.

7587. Now, Mr. Butts, I wish to ask you, is there any other book, or any other form of prison record, by which it can be shown whether O'Donovan Rossa was put in handcuffs on the 16th of June 1868?—No, I do not know of any other book that would show it.

7588. What would be the form of authority issued to the prison officials to put him in handcuffs on that day?—The governor's order.

7589. Would that be a written order or a verbal order?—A verbal order and used likely.

7590. Would there be so record kept in the prison of that verbal order?—The Governor's Journal; and the record in the Chief Warden's Report Book ought to show it.

7591. They ought to record it?—They ought to record it.

7592. (Mr. Broadrick.) If you order a prisoner to be handcuffed to-day should you think it your duty to enter it in your Journal for this day?—Certainly.

7593. (Dr. Lyons.) Is there any other book or record by which we can test the accuracy of the statement that O'Donovan Rossa was put in handcuffs on the 16th of June, that you are acquainted with?—No, I cannot think of any just now. I do not know of any.

7594. (Dr. Greenhalgh.) Do you think it likely that after committing the offence which he is stated to have committed, he would as a matter of course be put in handcuffs immediately?—Oh dear, no, not at all.

7595. He would not?—Not at all.

7596. (Mr. De Vere.) If an order were given by the governor to put him in handcuffs, with his hands placed behind him, would that order to be so handcuffed continue from day to day during the time he continued in handcuffs, or would it be only understood to apply to that one particular occasion?—It would continue until the governor ordered them to be taken off.

7597. If an order were given on the 16th of June to put on handcuffs behind the man's back, and if it turned out that that man was kept in handcuffs from day to day for a considerable number of days after, would the original order that the handcuffs should be put behind him continue in force, or would it not?—I fancy that the governor would give his order if they were to be removed, or if the handcuffs were to be altered in any way.

7598. (Mr. Broadrick.) If the governor did not give the order, would it be the duty of the warden to apply the handcuffs in the mode originally ordered, and until ordered to the contrary?—The warden should carry out the governor's order, whatever it might be.

7599. Supposing the governor ordered him to handcuff a man behind?—The warden would handcuff him behind.

7600. Well, then, the following morning what would he do next?—He would handcuff him behind unless ordered to the contrary.

7601. Would it be necessary to have a fresh order to authorize handcuffing at all the second day?—That depends on how the order was given in the first place.

7602. (Mr. De Vere.) If the order was to be a continuing order, the handcuffing to be continued from day to day until further orders, and if the first order was to put the hands behind the back in the course of the punishment, would the hands be handcuffed behind the back until the punishment ceased?—Unless ordered to the contrary, exactly.

7603. (Dr. Lyons.) Would you look at the record in the separate cell book of the 17th of June 1868?—"J. O'D. Rossa, placed in handcuffs behind by order of the governor."

7604. Would you now look at the entry made of the removal of those handcuffs?—"Handcuffs removed from behind by order of the governor."

7605. Look at the entry on the next day, the 18th of June?—"J. O'D. Rossa placed in handcuffs by order of the governor."

7606. Do you think that when the handcuffs were put on him, on the 18th of June, they were put on in the same manner as is shown to have been the case by the first entry there on the 17th of June?—I could not say. In my opinion I think it ought to have been stated whether they were put on behind or before. My opinion is that they were not put on behind, but I cannot say.

7607. From that out, the entries in the book only state that the handcuffs were put on, but it is not stated whether the hands were placed behind or before?—Exactly.

7608. Now as under the first order the handcuffs were put on behind, I want to know whether you think it was in accordance with prison discipline that the handcuffs were always put behind until specially ordered to the contrary. Just look at the entry?—I have looked. That has already struck me.

7609. Well, is it your opinion that the order was carried out, or should have been carried out, in accordance with what was done on the first occasion, by putting the hands behind the back on any subsequent occasion, though it is not stated whether they were put behind or before?—It is my opinion that the governor's original order ought to have been carried out unless the contrary was ordered.

7610. (Chairman.) And is it your opinion that if it were carried out, the word "behind" ought to have been repeated in each entry?—I think it ought.

The witness withdrew.

WILLIAM GOAD examined.

7611. (Chairman.) You are a warden in this prison?—Yes, sir.

7612. How long have you been a warden here?—I have been 12 years in the prison, sir. I was a warden before I came here. I was transferred from Dartmoor Prison.

7613. You have been warden here for the last 12 years?—Yes, sir.

7614. Do you recollect whether in the months of June, July, and August 1868 you were here?—I was here, sir, of course.

7615. Do you recollect where your duties placed you during those months that I have mentioned?—I could not exactly say, sir, because I do not bear date of anything.

7616. Were you during that time in the prison?

G g 3

Mr.
W. P. Butts.
1st July 1870.

- W. Gould. cells?—I went there occasionally, sir, when I was near some certain days.
7617. How many days a month?—I did not go there seven days altogether.
7618. Do you mean seven days during those three months?—Yes, sir.
7619. On how many of the seven days that you went did you see the prisoner O'Donovan Rossa?—But the seven days I was there, sir; I went there for the purpose to exercise him, sir.
7620. You went to exercise him?—Yes, sir.
7621. Since what you did on those occasions?—I received him from the principal warder, and exercised him, and returned him back again to his cell.
7622. At the time that you received him from the principal warder was he under any restraint?—He was handcuffed.
7623. How?—In front, sir, when I received him.
7624. Did you see him handcuffed in the opposite way?—I did not, sir. I was not at the cell.
7625. Do you distinctly say that you never saw him handcuffed except in front?—Never, sir.
7626. Can you tell me what was the first day that you went to exercise him?—I could not, sir. It was some days, four or five days; four to the best of my recollection after he made the assault on the governor, but I could not say what date it was.
7627. Can you say positively that it was four or five days after?—It was the fourth or fifth day, sir, but I could not say positively.
7628. Did anybody else take him to exercise but you at that period?—I could not say that, sir.
7629. You were sent to exercise him?—I was sent to exercise him, sir.
7630. You cannot tell us the day of the month?—No, sir.
7631. Or in what month it was?—No, sir.
7632. You were never present at any time of the handcuffs being changed?—No, sir; I only received him from the principal warder, with his handcuffs

The witness withdrew.

JEREMIAH O'DONOVAN ROSSA, prisoner, recalled.

7637. (Chairman.) You told us yesterday, O'Donovan Rossa, with reference to the time when you state that you were put in handcuffs, that it was on the 17th. Can you state to us on what grounds you think it to have been the 17th June 1868?—Well, it remained in my memory, my lord. I had no opportunity of keeping a note of it.
7638. It has been stated here by other testimony that it was on the 16th?—I think, my lord, as far as I recollect what has fixed in my memory, that it was on the 16th I committed the offence, and on the 17th I was put in handcuffs.
7639. Then they were not put on until the day following the offence?—They were not, my lord.
7640. They were not put on the day you committed the offence?—They were not, my lord.
7641. What time were you put in irons?—Between 10 and 11 o'clock.
7642. And you committed the offence about 12 o'clock?—About 12 o'clock the preceding day.
7643. You think that you committed the offence on the 16th, and that you were not put in irons until the 17th?—That is what I think, my lord.
7644. We did not quite understand yesterday, but have some little doubt as to whether, when you took exercise under the charge of Warder Gould or whoever it might be, your hands were fastened behind you or before?—Behind, my lord.
7645. Are you quite sure of that?—I am, my lord.
7646. In taking exercise?—In taking exercise.
7647. You are quite distinct in your recollection of that?—I am quite distinct. I recollect it.
7648. Was that uniformly the case?—Uniformly the case, my lord.
7649. (Dr. Lyons.) When you committed the offence of throwing the water on the governor what before; received him, exercised him, and then returned him to his cell.
7650. Who was the warder from whom you received him?—Principal warder Allison, sir.
7651. The handcuffs remained on during exercise, I suppose?—Yes, sir. I never touched them myself.
7652. Did he complain of them or say that they were hurting him?—Nothing whatever, sir; not to me.
7653. Did you observe any blood on his hands at any time?—I did not, sir.
7654. (Mr. De Vere.) At what hour of the day did you take him out to exercise?—Something after 9, sir; perhaps five minutes after 9, when I would go there in the morning to exercise him for an hour, sir.
7655. Was it immediately after any hour for meals?—No, sir; none whatever, sir.
7656. (Dr. Lyons.) Do you know whether the handcuffs were changed before he was given to you to exercise him?—I could not say, sir, because I was never with the prisoner, only just to receive him and take him out, exercise him, and bring him in again.
7657. Where did you receive him?—In the passage from the cell to the yard, sir.
7658. Were you not in view of the cell when he was brought out of it?—No, sir, I was not. I only received him in the passage.
7659. (Mr. Bradwell.) Did he ever complain to you of having been handcuffed with the hands behind?—He did not, sir; he did not make any complaint whatsoever to me.
7660. (Dr. Lyons.) Was he quiet and peaceable?—He was, sir. I exercised him, sir, and I never spoke a word to him, sir, nor he to me. I exercised him far on hour.
7661. What do you mean when you say that you exercised him?—I had charge of him, sir.
7662. That is, you watched him?—Yes, sir. I did not say anything to him, nor he to me.
7663. You did not observe him violent or making any noise?—He did not, sir; none whatever, sir.

J. O'Donovan
(Rosa).
21 July 1870.

7668. Is it possible that you could have been handcuffed that day at half-past 3 o'clock, and remained so up to 7 o'clock, and forget it?—It is impossible, sir. Few were not handcuffed that day: I was not handcuffed that day.

7669. You were not handcuffed that day?—No, sir.

7670. (Mr. Woodcock.) You stated yesterday that you were not called up to answer any charge about that offence until you were called up before Captain Du Cane?—I was called up before Captain Harvey, I think I said, on the evening of the following day, and he referred me to the director. Do you recollect, sir, I said that someone told me I could have paper to make out my defence, but I got no paper?

7671. That occurred when you were called up before him?—Yes, sir.

7672. You were called up to the governor's room?—Yes, to answer the charge of having committed the offence.

7673. Was that on the evening of the 16th or 17th?—I think it was on the 17th.

7674. And on that occasion you were sentenced to have the handcuffs put on or not?—If it was on the 17th, I think I was in the handcuffs at that time. I cannot be particular about those things as to the day, as to the same day of the offence, whether I was called up that evening, but I am almost sure it was in the evening I was called up, a special sitting; and if I could take choice of the two my opinion is that when I got to the office of the governor that I had the irons on.

7675. You believe that you were handcuffed when you were called up?—Yes, I think so.

7676. Was there any evidence given against you?—No evidence; but Captain Harvey said, "You will have paper to make your defence; the master is so serious it is referred to the director, and I cannot deal with it."

7677. Do you think you were handcuffed before that?—I cannot say positively, sir.

7678. Were you asked what you had to say to the charge?—No, I think not, sir, because he had determined that the charge was too serious to adjourn himself upon it, and then perhaps he did not ask me what I had to say.

7679. Do you remember having admitted the charge of throwing the water at the governor, but denying that you had slammed the door?—Yes, I might have done that; slamming the door violently in his face. I recollect distinctly there was throwing the water, and then slamming the door out, "in his face" it is technically called, but there was a gate between the door and the governor.

7680. Are you sure that you were not on that occasion sentenced to be handcuffed?—I am sure that I was not on that occasion sentenced to be handcuffed.

7681. Are you sure also that when you came before Captain Du Cane nothing was said about the handcuffs?—I was not in handcuffs before Captain Du Cane. I was taken out of the handcuffs about half an hour before I saw him.

7682. When you were taken before Captain Du Cane was anything said about your having been handcuffed?—Not a word.

7683. Or as to your continuing to be in handcuffs after that?—Not a word.

Assistant warder CRANSTON recalled and cross-examined with the prisoner.

7684. (Chairman.) As your statement, O'Donovan Rosa, differs from Cranston's we think it right to call you together. Cranston has stated to the Commission that he was frequently on duty in the penal cells at the time between the 17th of June and the middle of August, and in answer to questions put to him by us, he has expressed his belief that you were not for more than three or four days with your hands handcuffed behind you. Now that being his statement, differing from yours, we think it right that you should have an opportunity of putting to him, through me, any questions that you might wish to ask him, which you think might tend to show that your version is correct, and that he is under a mistake. It is his statement that you were not for more than three or four days with the hands manacled behind you. That is a correct statement of what you told us, is it not?—(Cranston.) Behind, sir.

7685. Do you believe that he was not for more than three or four days with his hands handcuffed behind?—(Cranston.) Yes.

7686. Do you wish to put any question upon that statement through me?—(O'Donovan Rosa.) Ask him, my lord, if you please, how often did he take off or put on the handcuffs.

7687. How often did you take off or put on the handcuffs during the period referred to?—(Cranston.) Frequently during this time to take his food and exercise. (Rosa.) Please, my lord, to ask him could he make a guess at the number of times.

7688. When you say "frequently," can you define the number of times, 10, or 20, or 30, or how often?—(Cranston.) Not exactly the number of times, sir. You will have to change him first at going to exercise, then change him again when he comes in again and let him have his dinner, then after dinner, then at supper time, then remove him back, and then take them off at half-past 7.

7689. Those were the times one day?—(Cranston.) Those were the times one day, sir.

7690. But you cannot tell the number of times the handcuffs were so changed?—(Cranston.) No, not exactly, sir. (Rosa.) Ask him, my lord, did he change them six times during the whole time.

7691. Did you change them six times?—(Cranston.) Yes, more than that. (Rosa.) Ask him did he change them 10 times, my lord.

7692. Did you change them 10 times?—(Cranston.) Well, I might say I have.

7693. How many weeks were you on duty there?—(Cranston.) I began duty in the penal cells on the 18th of May, and came away on the 27th of July.

7694. Who was on duty at the same time?—(Cranston.) Warder Brown, Mr. Allen, and Mr. Douglas.

7695. Good only came to take him to exercise?—(Cranston.) That is all. (Rosa.) Ask him did he change them 12 times, my lord.

7696. Do you think that you changed them 12 times?—(Cranston.) I cannot say exactly. (Rosa.) Is he sure of 10 times, my lord?

7697. Are you sure of 10 times?—(Cranston.) Yes, I say 10 times.

7698. You have no doubt of 10?—(Cranston.) No, my lord. (Rosa.) I ask these questions for the purpose of having the same questions asked of them all, for the whole lot could be taken and then the sum divided by the number of times a day.

7699. You used the word "change," what do you mean by it; do you mean changing the handcuffs from rear to front, or taking them off altogether?—(Cranston.) Changing from rear to front, perhaps eight or nine times a day, sir.

7700. Then you think you changed them from rear to front 10 times?—(Cranston.) I should think so. I should say that number.

7701. When you did not change them, who did it?—(Cranston.) Mr. Douglas, I expect; warder Douglas.

7702. Were you in the halls of seeing Rosa every day?—(Cranston.) Yes, sir, excepting three days when I was on leave. I think I was three days on leave during that time. (Rosa.) Ask him, my lord, at what particular time of the day used he to change the handcuffs; was it in the morning, or at dinner, or in the evening.

7703. State again at what particular times you changed them?—(Cranston.) They were changed; sometimes I would take them off for exercise, and allow him to exercise. When he came in from exercise they would be taken off for the purpose of undressing, that is taking off the braces and stock. Then they were changed at 20 minutes to 12 o'clock from behind to front to allow him to have dinner, and at a quarter past 12 they would be put on again. Then at 20 minutes to 6 they would be changed to have supper. In half an hour after, or 35 minutes, perhaps, they were put back again. Then at half-past 7 they were removed when he went to his cell to get his bed. (Rosa.) In the 30 times that he changed the hand-cuffs, my lord, how many times did he change them at the dinner hour?

7704. How many of those 10 times, when you changed the handcuffs from rear to front took place at the dinner hour?—(Crawston.) I think I done it twice or three times after dinner.

7705. Out of the 10 times?—(Crawston.) Out of the 10 times, my lord.

7706. Twice out of the 10 times after dinner?—(Crawston.) Yes, my lord.

7707. (Mr. Bradrick.) Are you quite sure that you changed them at other times excepting after dinner?—(Crawston.) Oh, yes, before he went to exercise, either Mr. Douglas or me, and again for supper time.

7708. Are you sure that all the times you changed them were not after dinner?—(Crawston.) No, sir; I changed them to allow him to dress himself for exercise. I changed them again to let him undress himself. Then I changed them for dinner time, and twice at supper time, and then when they were taken off for the night. I did not always take them off, Mr. Douglas did sometimes.

7709. Can you tell us how often you changed them after dinner?—(Crawston.) It is two years ago, sir, now.

7710. (Dr. Greenham.) Can you recollect how many days Rosa was handcuffed with his hands behind his back?—(Crawston.) About three days, sir; three or four days, sir.

7711. You saw him every day, and you distinctly say that his hands were not handcuffed behind his back for more than three days?—(Crawston.) I was on leave three days, sir.

7712. You were on duty during the greater part of the time that the prisoner O'Donovan Rosa was undergoing punishment?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7713. You saw him, with very few exceptions, every day?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7714. And you distinctly state that you do not think his hands were handcuffed behind his back more than three or four days?—(Crawston.) No, sir, except once, I would not be sure of the time, he broke his cell window. When he broke the closed affair and the spy-glass, and smashed the handle off the bell, he was put into another cell, but whether he was put in handcuffs I cannot say.

7715. When was that?—(Crawston.) Some time in July.

7716. But from the 17th of June up to some time in July you saw him nearly every day?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7717. And during that time you believe that he was handcuffed only three or four days with the hands behind?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7718. That is your distinct statement?—Yes, sir.

7719. (Mr. De Vere.) How soon after the 17th of June did he get exercise?—(Crawston.) He got exercise one hour every morning, sir.

7720. Then his exercise began from the commencement of the punishment?—(Crawston.) He was awaiting punishment then, sir. He did not get punishment until a month after, sir.

7721. He got exercise then?—(Crawston.) He did, sir.

7722. (Chairman.) You did not exercise him?—(Crawston.) Not at first, I did after. I could not be sure.

7723. When you were exercising him were his hands behind his back or not?—(Crawston.) His hands were never behind him to my knowledge.

7724. Not at exercise?—(Crawston.) No, sir.

7725. Can you tell us positively whether or not you exercised him at that period?—(Crawston.) Well, I could not be sure, sir, about that time.

7726. (Mr. De Vere.) From the time that his exercise commenced on the 17th of June he had his hands fastened behind his back, by your account, three or four days?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7727. When he was going to dress for the purpose of going out to exercise the handcuffs would be removed?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7728. Would they be replaced as soon as he was dressed for exercise?—(Crawston.) I think they were the first day, sir. I think they were the first day, sir, but I cannot be sure. I think they were the second day. I think he had them the second day.

7729. Supposing a man was under the punishment of having his hands tied behind him, and was taken out to exercise, would he be exercised with the hands tied behind his back or not?—(Crawston.) I have never seen a case of that sort, sir.

7730. I do not think you understand the question. If a man was under sentence to have his hands tied behind his back, and if he was taken out to exercise, what position would his hands be in while at exercise?—(Crawston.) I have never seen a case of that sort, a prisoner to be handcuffed behind his back and then taken out to exercise.

7731. Am I right in saying that you stated that for three or four days his hands were tied behind his back?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7732. And you have also stated that during that time he got exercise?—(Crawston.) I believe he did.

7733. I want to know did he get the exercise during those three or four days with the hands behind or not?—(Crawston.) I could not say.

7734. What would be the rule of the prison?—(Crawston.) I do not think there is a rule. I did not see a prisoner with his hands handcuffed behind his back except in restraint, except a man got handcuffed that committed some offence.

7735. (Dr. Lysons.) You stated awhile ago that O'Donovan Rosa was handcuffed on the 16th of June at half-past 3 o'clock?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir, I believe so, to the best of my knowledge.

7736. Are you positive about it?—(Crawston.) It is two years ago, sir. I should think it was the 16th.

7737. On the 16th, when he was in handcuffs, according to your statement, between half-past 3 and half-past 7 o'clock, were his hands behind his back or in front?—They were put on behind, sir, at half-past 3, and at 80 minutes to 6 they were placed to the front for supper, and in half an hour after he had the supper, they were placed behind and taken off at 7 for bed.

7738. Can you state that he was handcuffed with the hands behind the back first?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7739. (Mr. Bradrick.) Are you positive that he was first handcuffed on the day he committed the offence?—I think, to the best of my knowledge, it was on the 16th, at half-past 3, sir. (O'Donovan Rosa.) Why does he so particularly recollect half-past 3, my lord?

7740. (Chairman.) What time that hour in your recollection?—(Crawston.) Because I came from my dinner and did not know anything about it until I came in. It was a startling affair, and that fixed it in my recollection. (Rosa.) What was the startling affair, my lord?

7741. What was a startling affair?—(Crawston.) Throwing the contents of his chamber-pot at the governor.

7742. At what hour did that take place?—(Crawston.) It was between 12 and 1. (Rosa.) Was the occurrence between 12 and 1, my lord?

7743. This affair occurred you say between 12 and 1 o'clock?—(Crawston.) Yes, my lord.

7744. And you say that being a startling affair you retained in your recollection that the handcuffing which followed it was at half-past 3 o'clock that day?—(Crawston.) Yes, my lord. (Rosa.) Ask him, if you please, my lord, where did he first see me.

7744. Where did you see O'Donovan Rossa upon your coming in that day after dinner?—(Crawston.) Mr. Allison told me, "Stand you there and don't move," at half-past 8 o'clock. He brought Mr. Jones at the gate, and we went upstairs. Rossa was called out, and he told him, "I have had orders to place handcuffs on you."

7745. (Dr. Ligon.) Who is Jones?—(Crawston.) The gate-keeper at the gate.

7746. Is he here still?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir.

7747. (Chairman.) He is not one of those men you named?—(Rossa.) No, my lord. I never saw him at the cell.

7748. (Dr. Ligon.) You said that he was present on the 16th when O'Donovan Rossa was handcuffed at half-past 8 o'clock?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir. (Rossa.) Did he see me in handcuffs before the governor that day, or the following day?

7749. (Chairman.) Did you see him in handcuffs before the governor that day, or the following day?—(Crawston.) The governor was on leave, sir.

7750. Before Captain Harvey?—(Crawston.) I believe he went in first to Captain Harvey the next day with them on.

7751. Did you see him?—(Crawston.) I must have seen him.

7752. Did you see him, can you recollect?—(Crawston.) I must, unless it was one of the days I was on leave.

7753. On that 16th or 17th, whichever it was, did you see him in handcuffs before Captain Harvey?—(Crawston.) No, sir; I did not go in. (Rossa.) Did he ever see me in handcuffs in one cell or two cells; which cell did he see me in handcuffs?

7754. Which was the cell that you saw him in?—(Crawston.) In number 6, I believe, to the best of my ability now. It was a corner cell, sir, inside the adjutant's room, the corner cell where the closet was put, and he was removed out of that and put into another. (Rossa.) Did he ever handcuff me himself in any other cell, down about 12 or 13?

7755. Did you ever handcuff him in any other cell than the one to which you have just referred?—(Crawston.) That is the cell I say. He must have been moved into that cell.

7756. Did you handcuff him there?—(Crawston.) I do not recollect, sir. (Rossa.) Does he not recollect coming in one day after dinner and having the handcuffs at the opening of the gate, and asking me to put out my hands through the gate, and saying, "You will ruin me," because he was a bit late.

7757. Do you recollect that?—(Crawston.) No, sir. (Rossa.) He had the handcuffs so put them from front to rear, and put my hands from front to rear. He should have put them back each other.

7758. Did such an observation pass from you?—(Crawston.) No, sir; because first there was the general time to give him his dinner, and from that time we went to our dinner, a quarter past 12 o'clock or so, Mr. Allison always said, "Give him time before you 'have your own dinner; go have your own dinner and 'go and handcuff him,' which I always did." (Rossa.) My lord, will you ask him did he ever see me before the governor, and hear me saying something to the governor about assassination on repeating the charge.

7759. Did you ever see him before the governor when he made an observation about assassination?—(Crawston.) Yes, sir, before the director. I think it was after the time. This was after leaving the cell. I marched him in by order of the chief warder. Before the director there was something about knocking him down and keeping his clothes off, but that was not during the time I was there.

7760. Did you hear anything said about assassination before the director?—(Crawston.) Before the director; no, sir. (Rossa.) Before Captain Powell, my lord, ask him.

7761. Did you hear such an expression as that used before Captain Powell?—(Crawston.) Not so the best of my knowledge. If he mentioned any particular case, perhaps I might refer back to it.

7762. (Mr. Roddick.) Do you remember his saying that he could not bow down and pay any homage to persons who were assassinating him?—(Crawston.) I have heard him use the word for a man to salame, and he said, "All you want from me is the salame, and unless I salame I cannot do anything."

7763. Did you hear him say to Captain Powell that he could not pay a salame to persons who were assassinating him?—(Crawston.) I did not, sir, not in those words. (Rossa.) Did he ever hear Captain Powell saying to me, "I treat you with contempt?"

7764. (Chairman.) Did you hear Captain Powell say to O'Donovan Rossa, "I treat you with contempt?"—(Crawston.) Never, my lord.

7765. You have been present when Captain Powell has seen him?—(Crawston.) Yes, my lord.

7766. And you never heard that expression used?—(Crawston.) No, my lord.

Assistant-warder CRAWSTON here withdrew.

EXAMINATION OF JEREMIAH O'DONOVAN (ROSSA) RESUMED.

7767. (Chairman.) I presume that in sending us this letter on the 30th of June, advertising to various notices, you wish us to understand that you desire an inquiry should be instituted into them?—Yes, my lord; but there is one matter, my lord, one which my wife is concerned about, as to the witnesses. She only learned something yesterday about the man named Douglas. This is a letter she got about it. If you desire to have him as a witness, she has endeavored to get his address; at least she knows where his wife is. This is part of his evidence. Mr. George Henry Moore spoke of him. I did not read this yesterday, because I had not the assurance that I would have him as a witness.

7768. We cannot say at present whether we shall want Douglas or not?—I will leave that until to-morrow, my lord. I would not interfere with you; but we were speaking yesterday about my wife, and this being the last day, and I would submit to your consideration that she be allowed to come in to-morrow, my lord.

7769. We have carefully considered that, and delayed your examination?—Yes, my lord; but you said if there were any further questions—

7770. We have considered and cannot depart from what I told you. This is the last time that you are to meet during the investigation. After the investigation it does not rest with us.—What about her own examination, my lord? Would you have that letter produced as to my being intriguing with another man's wife?

7771. Do you wish that to be examined into?—I would, my lord; and she is being, of course, driven off now. I told her that I would speak about this matter.

7772. You will make the statement first, and will then have her to support it?—Yes, my lord.

7773. The next triple that we have to go into is this letter of yours. Now what have you to state?—I beg your pardon, my lord, for putting a question in reply to a question. Have you a copy of the letter which was seized going out surreptitiously, on which is based my report?

7774. No.—That is one I want to have my wife see.

7775. That was one of your suppressed letters, was it?—No, my lord. I wrote the letter and sent it out surreptitiously.

7776. You wrote a letter when you were at Portland for the purpose of sending it out surreptitiously. To whom was it addressed?—To "Mrs. Mary Moore, for Mrs. O'D., in the corner."

7777. Now state what happened with regard to it?—Have you a copy of that letter, my lord?

7778. No.—Well, that is a letter that it would be most important to show my wife, that she may give you her opinion whether it was written to herself or to Moore's wife; because the charge is that I was intriguing with Moore's wife; and my wife on seeing what was stated in the letter could say whether the passages in it applied to her condition.

7780. When were you informed that it was suppressed?—It was seized, my lord.

7781. When were you informed that it had been seized?—(The prisoner refers to a document.)

7782. (Mr. Bradrick.) How did you first hear about that letter. You tried to pass it out, I suppose?—Yes.

7783. After it left your hands when did you first hear anything about the letter?—The day after.

7784. (Chairman.) From whom did you hear about it?—From the governor of the prison, my lord.

7785. Mr. Clifton?—Yes.

7786. He told you that the letter had been seized?

—Yes, I was charged. Here is the date, November the 5th. It is down here, "having letters in his possession for the purpose of obtaining money, and tobacco trafficking." This is one of the reports put down about me, and it was read in a different manner from the book by Mr. Clifton.

7787. What is the date of it?—November the 5th, 1866.

7788. Two days after you wrote the letter the governor informed you that it was seized?—Yes, my lord, one day after I left it out of my hands; the day following I passed it out of my hands.

7789. Can you tell the Commission the words that the governor used when he so informed you of the seizure of that letter?—He used, certainly, the words that this letter was carrying on a correspondence, writing a letter to the wife of another man. He read the charge from the book, writing a letter to the wife of another prisoner.

7790. You say that there was an entry in the book which he read out to you from the book, that you were charged with writing a letter to the wife of another prisoner?—Yes, my lord, these words were in it, and possibly also for getting money, trafficking, and tobacco.

7791. (Dr. Lyons.) Was it on that occasion that Mr. Clifton used the word "intrigue"?—Well, I do not recollect, Mr. Lyons.

7792. (Chairman.) Did any further conversation then pass between you and Mr. Clifton?—Well, I do not recollect, my lord. I do not know did I on this day, my lord, tell him that the report was not correct in the books. I think I did, and he asked me. Was I to dictate to him how he was to make a report?

7793. Were those his words? We want, as far as possible, the exact words that were used?—Well, my lord, these words passed between us; but I do not know was it this day or a subsequent day, for I made repeated efforts to have the matter corrected, and I got myself into punishment by doing so.

7794. To what punishment were you subjected, and how soon was it after this conversation had passed between you and Mr. Clifton?—I was subjected to three days' bread and water, my lord.

7795. How soon after this conversation that you have referred to were you subjected to three days' bread and water?—That day, my lord. He adjudicated I think on the case that day.

7796. And what were you told was the charge on which you were subjected to the three days' bread and water?—For having tried to send it out, my lord.

7797. For trying to send the letter out surreptitiously?—Yes, my lord.

7798. Did you tell him that the letters "Mrs. O'D." were put in the corner of the letter?—Yes, I told him that on one occasion, my lord.

7799. Was it on the first occasion that you told him that?—It was not, my lord.

7800. We will do the best we can to get that letter. The letter is not in our custody. Did anything further pass? When you told him that the letters "Mrs. O'D." were in writing in the corner of the letter, what did he say?—Well, that occurred particularly upon a day that he spoke—the matter was introduced; I think I put down my name and made application to see him, to see would he correct the matter, and this conversation then occurred. I recollect his words. He said, "I did not until yesterday see the words 'Mrs. O'D.' in small letters in the corner of your letter; but I believe that was a subterfuge, and I told the Secretary of State so," and I told the board of directors so. "Then," said I, "you told them what was false." He ordered me immediately to the punishment cells. I was taken there immediately for 24 hours, and brought before him the next day.

7801. The next day did any conversation pass between you and Mr. Clifton when you were brought before him?—Yes, some conversation passed that day, my lord, but I do not recollect particularly what it was. He fined me some marks. He gave me no punishment, but fined me the marks, except keeping me 24 hours in separate confinement. The record of the punishment I suppose will tell the day, my lord.

7802. You must have been aware that in endeavouring to send out a letter surreptitiously you were breaking the prison rules of course?—I was, my lord.

7803. What do you complain of in reference to that occasion; is it that you were punished for a breach of the rules of the prison, or that you were punished for any other circumstance?—I do not complain, my lord, of being punished for the offence. What I complain of is, that in trying to rectify the way the charge was put in the books I got that subsequent punishment.

7804. Then what you complain of, as I understand, is that the governor did not give full credit to your statement, that the letter was not intended for Mrs. Mary Moore, but for your own wife?—Yes, my lord; and that he would not give my reply in my own words, but in his own words. He would expound what I said, and say the prisoner here gave a rambling statement.

7805. How do you know that?—He read it to me, my lord. If the books are examined I think you will find that observation. "The prisoner here entered into a rambling statement." I have not that, my lord, though I wanted him to give me a copy of the prison records.

7806. (Dr. Lyons.) About what time was it?—This is some time subsequent to the 5th of November, Mr. Lyons; this affair of my being in punishment continued then two or three months.

7807. (Dr. Greenwood.) Can you refer to it on your own paper?—No, I cannot, sir, because this is just only a note—I do not know what to call it. It cannot at all be a copy from the books.

7808. (Chairman.) Was this matter inquired into by Messrs. Knox and Pollock?—Yes, they asked me a few questions about it, my lord. Mr. Lyons, if you look at the date, December the 14th, you might see what answer is given by me.

7809. (Dr. Lyons.) I cannot find it in the records now before us.

7810. (Mr. De Vere.) Did you apply to the board of directors to have those papers destroyed?—I sent a letter to the board of directors requesting that they would have the matter taken off record. I did not get that memorial to the board of directors, or that letter.

7811. Did they not give you any reply to it?—The reply was that the directors would do what to them seemed proper in the matter. Have you a report, sir, December 14th, there?

7812. (Dr. Greenwood.) Yes. "Insolence when in front of the governor"?—Do I give any answer to that?

7813. There is no answer given here; simply the punishment awarded.—Is my answer to any of these reports, December the 7th, December the 14th?

7814. There is no answer given here.—Well, he read this answer out of the book for me; he dictated part for me, and finished off the rest with his own observations.

7815. (Chairman.) Have you told us all that passed between you and the governor with reference to this letter?—Oh, I have not, my lord.

7816. Is there anything further that passed between you which you wish to state respecting it?—I made repeated efforts to have it settled in the book and could not succeed. I applied three times to the director, Mr. Fagan, on the matter, but these three times I happened to be in punishment, and Mr. Fagan's reply was that while I was in punishment he could not see into anything concerning me.

7817. You applied personally to the director?—Yes, personally.

7818. My question rather referred to whether any further conversation passed between the governor and you on the subject of this letter?—I do not recollect any particular conversation, my lord.
